Darius I was king of Persia 521–486 B.C.E. The story of his faithful servant Zopyrus was told in Herodotus's Histories 3.153–60 and repeated in Justin's Histories 1.10. Somewhat similar stories (see the two following sentences) are recounted by the Roman historian Livy (concerning the last of the Tarquin kings and his son) in From the Foundation of the City 1.53–54 and in Xenophon's Cyropaedia 6.1.38–44, 6.3.14–20 (though about Cyrus and one Araspas—not, as Sidney has it, Abradatas).
Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Likes.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Outcome.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: In Odyssey 5.291–387.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Euripides (as reported by Plutarch, How to Study Poetry 4).Return to reference 1
- Note 2: That is, a deterrent.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Athenian general and architect of victory at Marathon over the Persians, later imprisoned by the Athenians.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Athenian general and statesman executed for treason because he opposed ill-advised opposition to Athens' Macedonian conquerors.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Emperor Lucius Septimius Severus, noted for ruthlessness.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Emperor Alexander Severus, a reformer slain by his troops.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Political rivals who brought unrest and destruction to Rome for two decades.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: The great orator, killed at Mark Antony's command. Pompey the Great, defeated by Caesar at Pharsalia and slain in Egypt.Return to reference 8

- Note 9: Cato the Younger committed suicide after his party failed to defeat Caesar.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: When Sulla resigned (“put down”) his dictatorship, Caesar joked that he was illiterate (litteras nescivit), since he left the dictatura (which means both “dictatorship” and “dictation”) to others.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: With reference to.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: They [tyrants] must be killed.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Four famous tyrants of the classical world: the first two were from Corinth, Phalaris was from Agrigentum, and Dionysus the Elder was from Syracuse.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Succeed.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: That is, poetry.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Arguable.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: A lover of philosophers.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Not knowing but doing (Nicomachean Ethics 1.3).Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Painstaking effort.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Considering that by nature.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Natural understanding, as opposed to the philosophers’ special vocabulary (“words of art”).Return to reference 3
- Note 4: This is the task, this is the work to be done (Virgil, Aeneid 6.129).Return to reference 4
- Note 5: As opposed to divine. “Sciences”: branches of learning.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Two bitter purgatives: aloe and rhubarb.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: That is, would rather have their ears boxed than take the medicine.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Congruity; suitability.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Poetics 4.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: A chivalric romance of Spanish origin, which became extremely popular in a French translation.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Aeneid 12.645–46: “Shall this land see Turnus in flight? Is it so bad a thing to die?” The Italian king Turnus is Aeneas’s worthy rival, killed by the epic hero in the poem’s closing lines.

Aeneas carries his father, Anchises, away from burning Troy in 2.705–44.Return to reference 2

- Note 3: Virtue. “Saving”: except. The (satiric) point is that wrangling over standard philosophical questions is unlikely to move anyone other than the wrangling philosophers themselves.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: In an earlier passage not included here, Sidney argued that the beauty of Plato’s work depended on “poetry” (that is, fiction). The Consolation of Philosophy of Boethius (476–524 C.E.) is cast as a dialogue between himself and Lady Philosophy, and alternates prose and verse.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: To follow one’s natural inclination.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: That is, come accidentally.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Roman consul in 503 B.C.E. The story of his parable was first related by Livy, From the Foundation of the City 2.32.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Far-fetched.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: A medieval tradition held that over the door of Plato’s Academy was written: “No man untaught in geometry should enter.”Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Except on that occasion. “Only words”: words alone.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: By killing the husband of his mistress, Bathsheba. For the deed, and Nathan’s rebuke, see 2 Samuel 11–12.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Cruelly.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: The first cause was God’s intention to bring David to repentance.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Psalm 51, in which David pleads for God’s mercy. “Glass”: mirror.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: That is, to the argument weighing poetry by its “works.”Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Congenial, suitable. “End”: aim, objective.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: This final paragraph constitutes the peroratio of Sidney’s judicial oration: though it includes a brief recapitulation of arguments, the main function of the peroration is, like that of the exordium, to work on the audience's feelings, leaving it well-disposed toward the speaker and the speaker's client.Return to reference 8

- Note 9: False poets, who mimic ("ape") the real ones.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Early Greek poet whose Theogony recounts myths of the birth and warfare of the gods and the origin of the world. For Aristotle, compare Metaphysics 3.4.12. Bembus (Pietro Bembo) was an Italian cardinal and grammarian. For Scaliger, see p. 526, n. 7. Conrad Clauser was a German scholar who translated a Greek treatise by Cornutus, a Stoic pedagogue of Nero's time.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: What not?Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Christoforo Landino, Florentine humanist who developed this argument in his edition of Dante's Divine Comedy (1481).Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Divinely inspired frenzy.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Born of a freed-slave father (Horace, Satires 1.6.6).Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Offspring of Hercules.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: If my songs are of any avail (Aeneid 9.446).Return to reference 7
- Note 8: That is, in Paradise with Dante's beloved or in the Elysian Fields with Aeneas's honored father.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Resembling the music of the spheres, most beautiful of all music. According to Cicero (Dream of Scipio 5), the noise of the waterfalls in the upper Nile deafened those who lived nearby.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: God of ridicule, son of Night; hence, a critic. "Mome": dunce.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: He was given ass's ears because he preferred Pan's music to Apollo's (Ovid, Metamorphoses 11.146–79).Return to reference 2

- Note 3: Bupalus, an ancient Greek sculptor who, according to an apocryphal story, hanged himself when his works were satirized by the poet Hipponax. Sidney fuses the two names.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Irish bards were thought to be able to cause death with their rhymed charms.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Because you are unable to write a sonnet.Return to reference 5

Astrophil and Stella Sidney was a jealous protector of his privacy. "I assure you before God," he had written once in an angry letter to his father's private secretary, Molyneux, "that if ever I know you do so much as read any letter I write to my father, without his commandment or my consent, I will thrust my dagger into you. And trust to it, for I speak it in earnest." Yet in Astrophil and Stella he seems to hold up a mirror to every nuance of his emotional being. For its original coterie audience, Sidney's sonnet sequence must have been an elaborate game of literary masks, psychological risk-taking, and open secrets. The loosely linked succession of 108 sonnets and eleven songs, with its dazzling display of technical virtuosity, provides tantalizing glimpses of identifiable characters and, still more, a sustained and remarkably intimate portrait of the poet's inner life.

Much biographical speculation has centered on Sidney's ambiguous relationship with Penelope Devereux, the supposed original of Stella. A marriage between the two had been proposed in 1576 and was talked about for some years, but in 1581 she married Lord Robert Rich, and two years later Sidney also married. (At their high social rank, marriages were negotiated in the interests of the powerful families involved, not of the individuals.) Some of the sonnets contain sly puns on the name Rich, and it seems likely that there are autobiographical elements in the shadowy narrative sketched by the work. At the same time, however, the "plot" of the sequence—full of trials, setbacks, much suffering on the part of the lover, and occasional encouragement on the part of the lady—is highly conventional, derived from Petrarch and his many Italian, French, and Spanish imitators.

Poets in this tradition undertook to produce an anatomy of love, displaying its shifting and often contradictory states: hope and despair, tenderness and bitterness, exultation and modesty, bodily desire and spiritual transcendence. Sidney, in the role of Astrophil, protests that he uses no standard conventional phrases, that his verse is original and comes from his heart. This protest is itself conventional, and yet Sidney manages to infuse his sonnets with an extraordinary vigor and freshness. Certain of the sonnets have, within their narrow fourteen-line bounds, the force of the drama: "Fly, fly, my friends, I have my death-wound, fly" or "What, have I thus betrayed my liberty?" Others, in their grappling with insistent desire, have the probing, psychological resonance of private confession: "With what sharp checks I in myself am shent" or "Who will in fairest book of Nature know." Still others ask crucial questions about the whole project of self-representation: "Stella oft sees the very face of woe." Virtually all of them manifest the exceptional energia—forcibleness—that Sidney, in The Defense of Poesy, says is the key ingredient of good love poetry.

From Astrophil and Stella

1<sup>1</sup>

Loving in truth, and fain<sup>o</sup> in verse my love to show, That the dear She might take some pleasure of my pain,
Pleasure might cause her read, reading might make her know,
Knowledge might pity win, and pity grace obtain,
    I sought fit words to paint the blackest face of 5     woe,
Studying inventions fine, her wits to entertain,
Oft turning others' leaves, to see if thence would flow
Some fresh and fruitful showers upon my sunburned brain.
    But words came halting forth, wanting Invention's stay;<sup>2</sup>
10    Invention, Nature's child, fled step-dame Study's blows,
And others' feet still<sup>o</sup> seemed but strangers in my way.
Thus great with child to speak, and helpless in my throes,
    Biting my truant pen, beating myself for spite,
    "Fool," said my Muse to me, "look in thy heart and write."

Endnotes

- Note 1: One of six sonnets in the sequence written in hexameters.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: That is, lacking the support of Invention, his words moved haltingly.Return to reference 2

Notes

- °: desirousReturn to reference °
- °: continuallyReturn to reference °

Not at first sight, nor with a dribbèd<sup>3</sup> shot Love gave the wound, which while I breathe will bleed,
 But known worth did in mine<sup>4</sup> of time proceed,
 Till by degrees it had full conquest got.
 I saw and liked, I liked but lovèd not,
 5 I loved, but straight did not<sup>5</sup> what Love decreed;
 At length to Love's decrees, I, forced, agreed,
 Yet with repining<sup>o</sup> at so partial<sup>o</sup> lot.
 Now even that footstep of lost liberty
 10 Is gone, and now like slave-born Muscovite,<sup>6</sup>
 I call it praise to suffer tyranny;
 And now employ the remnant of my wit<sup>o</sup>
 To make myself believe that all is well,
 While with a feeling skill I paint my hell.

Endnotes

- Note 3: Ineffectual or at random.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Tunnel dug to undermine a besieged fortress.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Did not immediately do.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Inhabitant of Muscovy, Russian principality ruled from Moscow; 16th-century travel books describe Muscovites as contented slaves.Return to reference 6

Notes

- °: complaining Return to reference °
- °: unfair Return to reference °
- °: mind Return to reference °

You that do search for every purling<sup>o</sup> spring
 Which from the ribs of old Parnassus<sup>7</sup> flows,
 And every flower,<sup>8</sup> not sweet perhaps, which grows
 Near therabout, into your poesy<sup>9</sup> wring;
 You that do dictionary's method bring
 5     Into your rhymes, running in rattling rows;
 You that poor Petrarch's long-deceased woes
 With new-born sighs and denizenèd wit<sup>o</sup> do sing:
 You take wrong ways, those far-fet<sup>o</sup> helps be such 10     As do bewray a want of inward touch,<sup>1</sup>
 And sure at length stolen goods do come to light.
 But if (both for your love and skill) your name
 You seek to nurse at fullest breasts of Fame,
 Stella behold, and then begin to indite.<sup>o</sup>

Endnotes

- Note 7: Mountain near Delphi in Greece, sacred to the Muses.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Also, poetic figures ("flowers of rhetoric").Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Also, a nosegay (posy).Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Reveal a lack of innate talent.Return to reference 1

Notes

- <sup>o</sup>: murmuringReturn to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: naturalized ingenuityReturn to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: far-fetchedReturn to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: compose, writeReturn to reference <sup>o</sup>

With what sharp checks<sup>o</sup> I in myself am shent,<sup>o</sup>
 When into Reason's audit I do go,
 And by just counts myself a bankrout<sup>o</sup> know
 Of all those goods, which heaven to me hath lent:
 Unable quite to pay even Nature's rent,
 5 Which unto it by birthright I do owe;
 And which is worse, no good excuse can show,
 But that my wealth I have most idly spent.
 My youth doth waste, my knowledge brings forth toys,<sup>2</sup>
 10 My wit<sup>o</sup> doth strive those passions to defend,
 Which for reward spoil it with vain annoys.<sup>o</sup>
 I see my course to lose myself doth bend:<sup>o</sup>
 I see and yet no greater sorrow take,
 Than that I lose no more for Stella's sake.

Endnotes

- Note 2: Trifles; that is, these poems. Return to reference 2

Notes

- <sup>o</sup>: rebukes Return to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: shamed Return to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: bankrupt Return to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: intellect Return to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: troubles Return to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: turn Return to reference <sup>o</sup>

Fly, fly, my friends, I have my death-wound, fly;
 See there that boy, that murth'ring<sup>o</sup> boy, I say,
 Who like a thief hid in dark bush doth lie
 Till bloody bullet get him wrongful prey.

5        So tyrann<sup>o</sup> he no fitter place could spy,
 Nor so fair level<sup>o</sup> in so secret stay,<sup>o</sup>
 As that sweet black<sup>o</sup> which veils the heav'nly eye;
 There himself with his shot he close<sup>o</sup> doth lay.
 Poor passenger,<sup>o</sup> pass now thereby I did,
 And stayed, pleased with the prospect of the place,
 10        While that black hue from me the bad guest hid:
 But straight I saw motions of lightning grace,
 And then descried<sup>o</sup> the glist'ring<sup>o</sup> of his dart;<sup>o</sup>
 But ere I could fly thence, it pierced my heart.

Notes

- °: murdering Return to reference °
- °: tyrant Return to reference °
- °: aim Return to reference °
- °: stopping place Return to reference °
- °: pupil Return to reference °
- °: secretly Return to reference °
- °: passerby Return to reference °
- °: saw Return to reference °
- °: glittering Return to reference °
- °: arrow Return to reference °

Because I oft, in dark abstracted guise,
 Seem most alone in greatest company,
 With dearth of words, or answers quite awry,
 To them that would make speech of speech arise,
 They deem, and of their doom<sup>o</sup> the rumor flies,
 5 That poison foul of bubbling pride doth lie
 So in my swelling breast that only I<sup>o</sup>
 Fawn on myself, and others do despise.
 Yet pride, I think, doth not my soul possess,
 Which looks too oft in his unflatt'ring glass;<sup>o</sup>
 10 But one worse fault, ambition, I confess,
 That makes me oft my best friends overpass,<sup>o</sup>
 Unseen, unheard, while thought to highest place
 Bends all his powers, even unto Stella's grace.<sup>o</sup>

Notes

- <sup>o</sup>: judgment Return to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: that I do nothing but Return to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: mirror Return to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: pass by, ignore Return to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: beauty, elegance; favor Return to reference <sup>o</sup>

You that with allegory's curious frame<sup>o</sup>
 Of others' children changelings use<sup>o</sup> to make,
 With me those pains for God's sake do not take:
 I list not<sup>o</sup> dig so deep for brazen fame.
 When I say Stella, I do mean the same
 5 Princess of beauty for whose only sake
 The reins of love I love, though never slake,<sup>o</sup>
 And joy therein, though nations count it shame.
 I beg no subject to use eloquence,<sup>3</sup>
 Nor in hid ways to guide philosophy;
 10 Look at my hands for no such quintessence,<sup>4</sup>
 But know that I in pure simplicity Breathe out the flames which burn within my heart,
 Love only reading unto me this art.

Endnotes

- Note 3: That is, I don't ask for a topic simply as an excuse to display my rhetorical skills.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: The mysterious "fifth element" of matter (supplementary to earth, air, fire, and water), which alchemists labored to extract.Return to reference 4

Notes

- °: intricate contrivanceReturn to reference °
- °: are accustomedReturn to reference °
- °: I don't care toReturn to reference °
- °: slackReturn to reference °

With how sad steps, O Moon, thou climb'st the skies,
 How silently, and with how wan a face!
 What, may it be that even in heavenly place
 That busy archer<sup>o</sup> his sharp arrows tries?
 5 Sure, if that long-with-love-acquainted eyes
 Can judge of love, thou feel'st a lover's case;
 I read it in thy looks: thy languished grace,
 To me that feel the like, thy state describes.<sup>o</sup>
 Then even of fellowship, O Moon, tell me,
 10 Is constant love deemed there but want of wit?<sup>o</sup>
 Are beauties there as proud as here they be?
 Do they above love to be loved, and yet
 Those lovers scorn whom that love doth possess?
 Do they call virtue there ungratefulness?<sup>5</sup>

Endnotes

- Note 5: That is, is the lady's ingratitude considered virtue in heaven (as here)? Also, is the lover's virtue (fidelity) considered distasteful in heaven (as here)? Return to reference 5

Notes

- <sup>o</sup>: Cupid Return to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: reveals Return to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: lack of intelligence Return to reference <sup>o</sup>

Come, let me write. "And to what end?" To ease
 A burdened heart. "How can words ease, which are
 The glasses<sup>o</sup> of thy daily vexing care?"
 Oft cruel fights well pictured forth do please.
 "Art<sup>o</sup> not ashamed to publish thy disease?"
 5 Nay, that may breed my fame, it is so rare.
 "But will not wise men think thy words fond ware?"<sup>o</sup>
 Then be they close,<sup>6</sup> and so none shall displease.
 "What idler thing, than speak and not be hard?"<sup>o</sup>
 What harder thing than smart,<sup>o</sup> and not to speak?
 10 Peace, foolish wit;<sup>o</sup> with wit my wit is marred.
 Thus while I write I doubt<sup>o</sup> to write, and wreak<sup>o</sup>
 My harms on Ink's poor loss: perhaps some find Stella's great powers, that so confuse my mind.

Endnotes

- Note 6: Let them (my words) be kept private.Return to reference 6

Notes

- <sup>o</sup>: mirrorsReturn to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: are youReturn to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: foolish trinketsReturn to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: heardReturn to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: feel painReturn to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: reason; intellectReturn to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: hesitate; fearReturn to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: avengeReturn to reference <sup>o</sup>

Having this day my horse, my hand, my lance
 Guided so well that I obtained the prize,
 Both by the judgment of the English eyes
 And of some sent from that sweet enemy France;<sup>7</sup>
 5     Horsemen my skill in horsemanship advance;<sup>8</sup>
       Townfolks my strength; a daintier<sup>o</sup> judge applies
       His praise to sleight,<sup>9</sup> which from good use<sup>o</sup> doth rise;
 Some lucky wits impute it but to chance;
       Others, because of both sides I do take 10     My blood from them who did excel in this,<sup>1</sup>
       Think Nature me a man of arms did make.
 How far they shoot awry! The true cause is,
       Stella looked on, and from her heavenly face
       Sent forth the beams which made so fair my race.<sup>2</sup>

Endnotes

- Note 7: Sidney took part in several jousting tournaments between 1579 and 1585 with French spectators present, but the one in May 1581 was devised specifically to entertain French commissioners.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: That is, put forward as the reason for my triumph.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Skill, dexterity.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Sidney's father and grandfather and his maternal uncles, the earls of Leicester and Warwick, were frequent participants in tournaments.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Course in a tournament.Return to reference 2

Notes

- °: more discerningReturn to reference °
- °: experienceReturn to reference °

Stella oft sees the very face of woe
 Painted in my beclouded stormy face,
 But cannot skill to<sup>o</sup> pity my disgrace,<sup>o</sup>
 Not though thereof the cause herself she know.<sup>3</sup>
 Yet hearing late a fable which did show,
 5 Of lovers never known, a grievous case,
 Pity thereof gate<sup>o</sup> in her breast such place
 That, from that sea derived, tears' spring did flow.
 Alas, if fancy,<sup>o</sup> drawn by imaged things,
 10 Though false, yet with free scope more grace<sup>o</sup> doth breed
 Than servant's wrack, where new doubts honor brings,<sup>4</sup>
 Then think, my dear, that you in me do read
 Of lover's ruin some sad tragedy:
 I am not I; pity the tale of me.

Endnotes

- Note 3: That is, even though she knows she herself is the cause of it.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: That is, than the ruin of her lover ("servant"), caused by the new scruples ("doubts") her honor brings up.Return to reference 4

Notes

- °: is unable to Return to reference °
- °: misfortune Return to reference °
- °: got Return to reference °
- °: fantasy Return to reference °

- °: favor Return to reference °

What, have I thus betrayed my liberty?
 Can those black beams such burning marks°
 engrave
 In my free side? or am I born a slave,
 Whose neck becomes° such yoke of tyranny?
 Or want° I sense to feel my misery?
 5 Or sprite,° disdain of such disdain to have?
 Who for long faith, though daily help I crave,
 May get no alms but scorn of beggary.<sup>5</sup> Virtue awake! Beauty but beauty is;
 I may, I must, I can, I will, I do
 10 Leave following that which it is gain to miss.
 Let her go. Soft, but here she comes. Go to,<sup>6</sup>
 Unkind, I love you not. O me, that eye
 Doth make my heart give to my tongue the lie.°

Endnotes

- Note 5: That is, scorn for [my] begging.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: An emphatic expression, like "I tell you."Return to reference 6

Notes

- °: brands of slaveryReturn to reference °
- °: is suited toReturn to reference °
- °: lackReturn to reference °
- °: spiritReturn to reference °
- °: contradict my tongueReturn to reference °

I on my horse, and Love on me doth try
 Our horsemanships, while by strange work I prove
 A horseman to my horse, a horse to Love;
 And now man's wrongs in me, poor beast, descry.°
 The reins wherewith my rider doth me tie
 5 Are humbled thoughts, which bit of reverence move,
 Curbed in with fear, but with gilt boss° above
 Of hope, which makes it seem fair to the eye.
 The wand° is will; thou, Fancy, saddle art,<sup>7</sup>
 10 Girt fast by Memory; and while I spur
 My horse, he spurs with sharp desire my heart;
 He sits me fast,° however I do stir,
 And now hath made me to his hand so right
 That in the manage<sup>8</sup> myself takes delight.

Endnotes

- Note 7: That is, you, Fancy (imagination), are the saddle.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Training or handling of a horse.Return to reference 8

Notes

- °: discoverReturn to reference °
- °: gold studReturn to reference °
- °: whipReturn to reference °
- °: tightlyReturn to reference °

Because I breathe not love to every one,
 Nor do not use set colors for to wear,<sup>9</sup>
 Nor nourish special locks of vowed hair,<sup>1</sup>
 Nor give each speech a full point<sup>2</sup> of a groan,
 The courtly nymphs, acquainted with the moan
 5 Of them who in their lips Love's standard<sup>o</sup> bear,
 "What, he?" say they of me, "now I dare swear
 He cannot love; no, no, let him alone!"
 And think so still, so<sup>3</sup> Stella know my mind.
 Profess indeed I do not Cupid's art;
 10 But you, fair maids, at length this true shall find,
 That his right badge<sup>4</sup> is but worn in the heart:
 Dumb swans, not chatt'ring pies,<sup>o</sup> do lovers prove;<sup>5</sup>
 They love indeed, who quake to say they love.

Endnotes

- Note 9: Am not accustomed to wear colors associated with a particular woman.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: That is, lovelocks: long, flowing locks characteristic of amorous courtiers.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Final punctuation, period.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Go on thinking so, provided only that.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: True badge, livery.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Prove to be (true) lovers.Return to reference 5

Notes

- °: ensignReturn to reference °

- °: magpies Return to reference °

Fie, school of Patience, fie, your lesson is Far far too long to learn it without book:°
 What, a whole week without one piece of look,<sup>6</sup>
 And think I should not your large precepts miss?°
 When I might read those letters fair of bliss,
 5 Which in her face teach virtue, I could brook°
 Somewhat thy leaden counsels, which I took
 As of a friend that meant not much amiss.
 But now that I, alas, do want° her sight,
 What, dost thou think that I can ever take 10 In thy cold stuff a phlegmatic° delight?
 No, Patience, if thou wilt my good, then make
 Her come and hear with patience my desire,
 And then with patience bid me bear my fire.

Endnotes

- Note 6: Without the briefest glimpse of her.Return to reference 6

Notes

- °: by memoryReturn to reference °
- °: forgetReturn to reference °
- °: bearReturn to reference °
- °: lackReturn to reference °
- °: sluggishReturn to reference °

O joy, too high for my low style to show,
 O bliss, fit for a nobler state than me!
 Envy, put out thine eyes, least<sup>o</sup> thou do see
 What oceans of delight in me do flow.
 5 My friend, that oft saw through all masks my woe,
 Come, come, and let me pour myself on thee:
 Gone is the winter of my misery;
 My spring appears; O see what here doth grow.
 For Stella hath, with words where faith doth shine,
 10 Of her high heart given me the monarchy:
 I, I, O I may say that she is mine.
 And though she give but thus conditionly
 This realm of bliss, while virtuous course I take,
 No kings be crowned but<sup>o</sup> they some covenants<sup>z</sup> make.

Endnotes

- Note 7: Solemn coronation oaths taken by English monarchs, promising to protect the laws and the people. Return to reference 7

Notes

- <sup>o</sup>: lest Return to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: unless Return to reference <sup>o</sup>

Who will in fairest book of Nature know
 How Virtue may best lodged in beauty be,
 Let him but learn of Love to read in thee,
 Stella, those fair lines, which true goodness show.
 There shall he find all vices' overthrow,
 5 Not by rude force, but sweetest sovereignty
 Of reason, from whose light those night-birds<sup>8</sup> fly;
 That inward sun in thine eyes shineth so.
 And not content to be Perfection's heir
 Thyself, dost strive all minds that way to move,
 10 Who mark<sup>o</sup> in thee what is in thee most fair.<sup>9</sup>
 So while thy beauty draws the heart to love,
 As fast<sup>o</sup> thy Virtue bends that love to good;
 "But, ah," Desire still cries, "give me some food."

Endnotes

- Note 8: The owl, for example, was an emblem of various vices.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: That is, her virtue, which is fairer even than her beauty.Return to reference 9

Notes

- °: perceiveReturn to reference °
- °: at the same rateReturn to reference °

Desire, though thou my old companion art,
 And oft so clings to my pure Love that I
 One from the other scarcely can descry,<sup>o</sup>
 While each doth blow the fire of my heart,
 Now from thy fellowship I needs must part:
 5     Venus is taught with Dian's<sup>1</sup> wings to fly;
       I must no more in thy sweet passions lie;
 Virtue's gold now must head my Cupid's dart.
       Service and honor, wonder with delight,
 10    Fear to offend, will worthy to appear,<sup>2</sup>
       Care shining in mine eyes, faith in my sprite:<sup>o</sup>
 These things are left me by my only dear.
       But thou, Desire, because thou wouldst have all,
       Now banished art. But yet alas how shall?

Endnotes

- Note 1: Diana, goddess of the moon and patron of chastity. Venus, goddess of beauty and love, mother of Cupid. Return to reference 1
- Note 2: The phrase can mean either "the wish to appear worthy" or "desire that is worthy to appear [that is, not shameful]." Return to reference 2

Notes

- °: distinguish Return to reference °
- °: spirit Return to reference °

I never drank of Aganippe well,<sup>3</sup>
 Nor ever did in shade of Tempe<sup>4</sup> sit;
 And Muses scorn with vulgar<sup>o</sup> brains to dwell;
 Poor layman I, for sacred rites unfit.

5       Some do I hear of poets' fury<sup>o</sup> tell,
 But God wot,<sup>o</sup> wot not what they mean by it;
 And this I swear by blackest brook of hell,<sup>5</sup>
 I am no pick-purse of another's wit.

10       How falls it then that with so smooth an ease
 My thoughts I speak, and what I speak doth flow
 In verse, and that my verse best wits doth please?
 Guess we the cause. "What, is it thus?" Fie no.
 "Or so?" Much less. "How then?" Sure thus it is:
 My lips are sweet, inspired with Stella's kiss.<sup>6</sup>

Endnotes

- Note 3: The fountain at the foot of Mount Helicon in Greece, sacred to the Muses.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Valley beside Mount Olympus, sacred to Apollo, the god of poetry.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: The most binding of all oaths were those sworn by the river Styx.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: A kiss he stole from Stella when he caught her napping (Second Song).Return to reference 6

Notes

- °: commonReturn to reference °
- °: inspirationReturn to reference °
- °: knowsReturn to reference °

O kiss, which dost those ruddy gems impart,
 Or<sup>o</sup> gems, or fruits of new-found Paradise,
 Breathing all bliss and sweet'ning to the heart,
 Teaching dumb lips a nobler exercise!

5 O kiss, which souls, even souls, together ties
 By links of Love, and only Nature's art,
 How fain<sup>o</sup> would I paint thee to all men's eyes,
 Or of thy gifts at least shade out<sup>o</sup> some part.

But she forbids, with blushing words she says
 She builds her fame on higher-seated praise.
 10 But my heart burns, I cannot silent be.

Then since (dear life) you fain would have me peace,<sup>7</sup>

And I, mad with delight, want wit<sup>8</sup> to cease,
 Stop you my mouth with still still kissing me.

Endnotes

- Note 7: You want me to be silent.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Lack the mental faculties.Return to reference 8

Notes

- °: eitherReturn to reference °
- °: gladlyReturn to reference °
- °: sketchReturn to reference °

Fourth Song<sup>9</sup>

Only joy, now here you are,
Fit to hear and ease my care;
Let my whispering voice obtain
Sweet reward for sharpest pain:
Take me to thee, and thee to me.
5 "No, no, no, no, my dear, let be."

Night hath closed all in her cloak,
Twinkling stars love-thoughts provoke,
Danger hence good care doth keep,
Jealousy itself doth sleep:
10 Take me to thee, and thee to me.
"No, no, no, no, my dear, let be."

Better place no wit can find,
Cupid's yoke to loose or bind;
These sweet flowers on fine bed, too,
15 Us in their best language woo:
Take me to thee, and thee to me.
"No, no, no, no, my dear, let be."

This small light the moon bestows
Serves thy beams but to disclose,
20 So to raise my hap<sup>o</sup> more high;
Fear not else, none can us spy:
Take me to thee, and thee to me.
"No, no, no, no, my dear, let be."

That you heard was but a mouse,
25 Dumb sleep holdeth all the house;
Yet asleep methinks they say,
"Young folks, take time while you may."
Take me to thee, and thee to me.

30 "No, no, no, no, my dear, let be."
 Niggard<sup>o</sup> Time threats, if we miss
 This large offer of our bliss,
 Long stay<sup>o</sup> ere he grant the same;
 Sweet, then, while each thing doth frame,<sup>o</sup>
 35 Take me to thee, and thee to me.
 "No, no, no, no, my dear, let be."
 Your fair mother is abed,
 Candles out, and curtains spread;
 She thinks you do letters write:
 40 Write, but first let me indite:<sup>o</sup>
 Take me to thee, and thee to me.
 "No, no, no, no, my dear, let be."
 Sweet, alas, why strive you thus?
 Concord better fitteth us.
 45 Leave to Mars the force of hands;
 Your power in your beauty stands:
 Take me to thee, and thee to me.
 "No, no, no, no, my dear, let be."
 Woe to me, and do you swear
 50 Me to hate? But I forbear.<sup>o</sup>
 Cursèd be my destines<sup>o</sup> all,
 That brought me so high to fall:
 Soon with my death I will please thee.
 "No, no, no, no, my dear, let be."

Endnotes

- Note 9: Like Petrarch, Sidney intersperses songs (eleven of them, in various verse forms) in his sequence. Some of them incorporate Stella's voice. This song appears between sonnets 85 and 86. Return to reference 9

Notes

- °: good fortuneReturn to reference °
- °: stingyReturn to reference °
- °: waitReturn to reference °
- °: serveReturn to reference °
- °: dictateReturn to reference °
- °: desistReturn to reference °
- °: fatesReturn to reference °

When I was forced from Stella ever dear,
 Stella, food of my thoughts, heart of my heart,
 Stella, whose eyes make all my tempests clear,
 By iron laws of duty to depart,
 5     Alas, I found that she with me did smart:°
 I saw that tears did in her eyes appear;
 I saw that sighs her sweetest lips did part,
 And her sad words my saddened sense did hear.
 For me, I wept to see pearls scattered so,
 I sighed her sighs, and wailed for her woe,
 10     Yet swam in joy, such love in her was seen.
 Thus while th' effect most bitter was to me,
 And nothing than the cause more sweet could be,
 I had been° vexed, if vexed I had not been.

Notes

- °: sufferReturn to reference °
- °: would have beenReturn to reference °

Now that of absence the most irksome night
 With darkest shade doth overcome my day,
 Since Stella's eyes, wont<sup>o</sup> to give me my day,
 Leaving my hemisphere, leave me in night,
 5 Each day seems long, and longs for long-stayed<sup>o</sup>
 night,
 The night, as tedious, woos th' approach of day;
 Tired with the dusty toils of busy day,
 Languished with horrors of the silent night,
 Suffering the evils both of the day and night,
 10 While no night is more dark than is my day,
 Nor no day hath less quiet than my night,
 With such bad mixture of my night and day
 That, living thus in blackest winter night,
 I feel the flames of hottest summer day.

Endnotes

- Note 1: A sonnet with only two rhyme words, night and day.Return to reference 1

Notes

- <sup>o</sup>: accustomedReturn to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: long-delayedReturn to reference <sup>o</sup>

Stella, while now by Honor's cruel might
 I am from◦ you, light of my life, mis-led,
 And that fair you, my sun, thus overspread
 With absence' veil, I live in Sorrow's night,
 5 If this dark place yet shew,◦ like candlelight,
 Some beauty's piece,<sup>2</sup> as amber-colored head,
 Milk hands, rose cheeks, or lips more sweet, more red,
 Or seeing jets,<sup>3</sup> black, but in blackness bright,
 They please I do confess, they please mine eyes;
 But why? because of you they models be;
 10 Models such be wood-globes of glist'ring◦ skies.<sup>4</sup>
 Dear, therefore be not jealous over me,
 If you hear that they seem my heart to move:
 Not them, O no, but you in them I love.

Endnotes

- Note 2: Some beauties in other women.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: That is, jet-black eyes.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Wooden globes of the heavens, with painted constellations and planets.Return to reference 4

Notes

- ◦: away fromReturn to reference ◦
- ◦: showReturn to reference ◦
- ◦: glitteringReturn to reference ◦

O absent presence, Stella is not here;
 False flattering Hope, that with so fair a face
 Bare me in hand, ° that in this orphan place
 Stella, I say my Stella, should appear.
 5 What say'st thou now? Where is that dainty cheer °
 Thou told'st mine eyes should help their famished case?
 But thou art gone, now that self-felt disgrace
 Dost make me most to wish thy comfort near.
 But here I do store ° of fair ladies meet,
 Who may with charm of conversation sweet
 10 Make in my heavy mold ° new thoughts to grow:
 Sure they prevail as much with me, as he
 That bade his friend, but then new-maimed, to be Merry with him, and not think of his woe.

Notes

- °: deceived me Return to reference °
- °: countenance; food Return to reference °
- °: abundance Return to reference °
- °: earth Return to reference °

When Sorrow (using mine own fire's might)
 Melts down his lead into my boiling breast,
 Through that dark furnace to my heart oppressed
 There shines a joy from thee, my only light;
 But soon as thought of thee breeds my delight,
 5 And my young soul flutters to thee, his nest,
 Most rude Despair, my daily unbidden guest,
 Clips straight<sup>o</sup> my wings, straight wraps me in his
 night,
 And makes me then bow down my head and say,
 10 "Ah, what doth Phoebus'<sup>o</sup> gold that wretch avail, Whom iron doors do keep from use of day?"
 So strangely (alas) thy works in me prevail,
 That in my woes for thee thou art my joy,
 And in my joys for thee my only annoy.<sup>o</sup>

1582? Endnotes

1591, 1598

- Note 5: In many sonnet sequences, as here, the final poem brings no resolution. Return to reference 5

Notes

- °: immediately Return to reference °
- °: god of the sun Return to reference °
- °: trouble, pain Return to reference °

MARY (SIDNEY) HERBERT, COUNTESS OF PEMBROKE 1562–1621

When her brother, the celebrated courtier and author Philip Sidney, died in 1586, Mary Sidney, the Countess of Pembroke, became the custodian not only of his writings but also of his last name. Though her marriage in 1577 to Henry Herbert, the second Earl of Pembroke, represented a great social advance for her family—her offspring would be among the nation's tiny hereditary nobility—throughout her life the Countess of Pembroke held on to her identity as a Sidney.

She had good reason to do so. The Sidneys were celebrated for their generous support of poets, clergymen, alchemists, naturalists, scientists, and musicians. The Pembroke country estate, Wilton, quickly became a gathering place for thinkers who enjoyed the countess's patronage and shared her staunch Protestant convictions and her literary interests. Books, pamphlets, and scores of poems in the 1590s and thereafter were dedicated to her, as well as to her brother Robert (whose country house, Penshurst, is praised in a well-known poem by Ben Jonson). Nicholas Breton and Samuel Daniel in particular benefited from her support, as did her niece, goddaughter, and frequent companion, Mary Wroth.

In one of the dedicatory poems to Salve Deus Rex Judaeorum, Aemilia Lanyer praises Mary Sidney not only for her generosity toward poets but also for those “works that are more deep and more profound.” These include her translations: she joins Anne Bacon, Margaret Tyler, and Anne Locke as a notable female translator of the era. Part of her translation of Robert Garnier’s neoclassical French tragedy Marc Antoine is provided below; she also translated the religious tract A Discourse of Life and Death by the French Protestant Philippe de Mornay. She knew Italian too: her translation of Petrarch’s Triumph of Death was the first in English to maintain the original terza rima (a particularly challenging rhyme scheme for an English versifier). She also dared to write in her own voice. Two of her main themes are her love for her brother Philip Sidney and for Queen Elizabeth—among her original poems was a powerful elegy for Philip and a short pastoral entertainment for the queen; both themes come together in the text provided below, “To the Thrice-Sacred Queen Elizabeth,” in which the psalms she co-wrote with her now dead brother are dedicated to the queen.

Mary Sidney was best known for having prepared a composite edition of Philip Sidney’s Arcadia and for contributing the larger number (107) of the verse translations of the 150 biblical psalms that her brother had begun. Her very free renderings re-create the psalms as English poems, using an amazing variety of stanzaic and metrical patterns and some strikingly effective images. Widely circulated in manuscript, this influential collection was an important bridge between the many metrical paraphrases of psalms in this period and the works of the great religious lyric poets of the seventeenth century, especially George Herbert. Donne’s poem “Upon the Translation of the Psalms by Sir Philip Sidney and the Countess of Pembroke His Sister” testifies to that importance: “They tell us why, and teach us how to sing.”

To the Thrice-Sacred Queen Elizabeth In

this complex poem, preserved in two manuscripts, Mary Sidney dedicates her completed translation of the psalms, begun by her brother Philip Sidney, to Queen Elizabeth. She mourns her brother while also maintaining that he and she together have, through their translations, made the psalms and their writer, King David, English. She praises Queen Elizabeth and King David both as artists and as rulers and celebrates the queen's—and England's—political and international successes.

To the Thrice-Sacred Queen Elizabeth

Even now, that care which on thy crown attends<sup>1</sup>—
And with thy happy greatness daily grows—
Tells me, thrice-sacred queen, my muse offends,
And of respect to thee the line outgoes.<sup>2</sup>
One instant will (or willing) can she<sup>o</sup> lose
5 I say not reading, but receiving rhymes,<sup>3</sup>
On whom in chief dependeth to dispose<sup>o</sup>
What Europe acts<sup>o</sup> in these most active times?

Yet dare I so: as humbleness may dare Cherish some hope<sup>o</sup> they<sup>o</sup> shall acceptance find;
10 Not weighing less thy state, lighter thy care,
But knowing more thy grace, abler thy mind.
What heavenly powers thee highest throne assigned,<sup>4</sup>
Assigned thee goodness suiting that degree,<sup>o</sup>
And by thy strength thy burthen so defined,
15 To others toil, is exercise to thee.<sup>5</sup>

Cares, though still great, cannot be greatest still,
Business must ebb, though leisure never flow.
Then these the posts of duty and goodwill
20 Shall press<sup>o</sup> to offer what their senders owe;<sup>6</sup>
Which once in two, now in one subject go,<sup>7</sup>
The poorer left, the richer reft away:<sup>o</sup>
Who better might (oh "might"! ah word of woe)<sup>8</sup>
Have given for me what I for him defray.<sup>o</sup>

How can I name whom sighing sighs extend,<sup>o</sup>
25 And not unstop my tears' eternal spring?

But he did warp, I weaved,<sup>9</sup> this web to end;
The stuff<sup>o</sup> not ours,<sup>1</sup> our work no curious<sup>o</sup> thing;
Wherein yet well we thought the Psalmist King—<sup>2</sup>
Now English denizenèd,<sup>o</sup> though Hebrew born—30 Would to thy music undispleasèd<sup>o</sup> sing,
Oft having worse, without repining,<sup>o</sup> worn.

And I the cloth in both our names present,
A livery robe<sup>3</sup> to be bestowed by thee:
Small parcel of<sup>o</sup> that undischargèd<sup>o</sup> rent,
35 From which nor pains, nor payments can us free.
And yet enough to cause our neighbours see
We will our best, though scantèd<sup>o</sup> in our will:
And those nigh<sup>o</sup> fields where sown thy favors be Unwealthy do, not else unworthy, till.<sup>o</sup> 40

For in our work what bring we but thine own?
What English is, by many names, is thine.
There humble laurels,<sup>o</sup> in thy shadows grown
To garland others, would themselves repine.<sup>o</sup>
45 Thy breast the cabinet, thy seat the shrine
Where Muses hang their vowèd memories:
Where wit, where art, where all that is divine
Conceivèd best, and best defended lies.

Which if men did not (as they do) confess,
And wronging worlds would otherwise consent:
50 Yet here who minds<sup>o</sup> so meet<sup>o</sup> a patroness
For authors' state or writing's argument?
A king should only to a queen be sent.
God's lovèd choice unto his chosen love:
Devotion to devotion's president:
55 What all applaud, to her whom none reprove.<sup>4</sup>

And who sees ought, but sees how justly square<sup>o</sup>
His haughty ditties<sup>o</sup> to thy glorious days?

How well beseeming thee his triumphs are?
 His hope, his zeal, his prayer, plaint,<sup>o</sup> and praise, 60 Needless thy person to their height to raise;
 Less need to bend them down to thy degree;
 These holy garments each good soul assays,<sup>o</sup>
 Some sorting<sup>o</sup> all, all sort to none but thee.

For even thy rule is painted<sup>o</sup> in his reign:
 65 Both clear in right; both nigh<sup>o</sup> by wrong oppressed;
 And each at length (man crossing<sup>o</sup> God in vain)
 Possessed of place, and each in peace possessed.
 Proud Philistines did interrupt his rest;
 70 The foes of Heaven no less have been thy foes.<sup>5</sup>
 He with great conquest; thou with greater blessed;
 Thou sure to win; and he secure to lose.

Thus hand in hand with him thy glories walk.
 But who can trace them where alone they go?
 75 Of thee two hemispheres on honor talk,<sup>6</sup>
 And lands and seas thy trophies jointly show.
 The very winds did on thy party blow,
 And rocks in arms thy foemen eft<sup>o</sup> defy.<sup>7</sup>
 But soft my muse: thy pitch is earthly low;
 80 Forbear this heaven where only eagles fly.

Kings on a queen enforced their states to lay;
 Mainlands for empire waiting on an isle;
 Men drawn by worth a woman to obey;
 One moving all, herself unmoved the while:
 85 Truth's restitution,<sup>o</sup> vanity exile,
 Wealth sprung of want, war held without annoy,<sup>o</sup>
 Let subject be of some inspirèd style,
 Till then the object of her subjects' joy.

Thy<sup>8</sup> utmost<sup>o</sup> can but offer to her sight
 Her handmaid's task,<sup>9</sup> which most her will endears;

90 And pray unto thy pains life from that light<sup>1</sup>
 Which lively lightsome<sup>o</sup> court and kingdom cheers,
 What wish she may (far past her living peers
 And rival still to Judah's faithful king<sup>o</sup>)
 In more than he and more triumphant years,
 95 Sing what God doth, and do what men may sing.

1599

Endnotes

- Note 1: Trouble that accompanies having a crown.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: The poetic line exceeds its bounds (that is, meter is broken).Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Can she, or will she, lose a single instant receiving (I won't say reading) rhymes.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: The heavenly powers that appointed you to the highest throne.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: What is drudgery to others is customary to you.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: These poems will offer you what we, the senders of these poems, owe you: duty and goodwill.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Because Philip Sidney, her brother and co-translator, is dead.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: A reference to Philip Sidney's Astrophil and Stella 33: "I might! Unhappy word: O me, I might . . ." Return to reference 8
- Note 9: He laid the lengthwise and I the crosswise yarns.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Because the original biblical text is by David.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: David, original author of the psalms.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Uniform worn by household retainers.Return to reference 3

- Note 4: The king here is King David (God's loved choice, devotion, and the one whom all applaud); it is appropriate to send his psalms to a queen (God's chosen, the patron of devotion, the one whom none reprove).Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Just as the Philistines (the enemies of the Israelites in the Bible) warred against David, so the enemies of heaven (that is, the Spanish) have opposed you.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Land and sea, but also the Old and New worldsReturn to reference 6
- Note 7: A reference to the defeat in 1588 of the Spanish Armada, which was damaged when the wind changed and drove the ships against the rocks.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Sidney is still addressing her muse.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Herbert's task as a servant (translating the psalms).Return to reference 9
- Note 1: That is, Queen Elizabeth.Return to reference 1

Notes

- °: that is, the queenReturn to reference °
- °: controlReturn to reference °
- °: doesReturn to reference °
- °: nurse the hope Return to reference °
- °: the poemsReturn to reference °
- °: station, rankReturn to reference °
- °: push forwardReturn to reference °
- °: plucked awayReturn to reference °
- °: pay forReturn to reference °
- °: belongReturn to reference °
- °: material Return to reference °
- °: ingeniousReturn to reference °
- °: naturalizedReturn to reference °
- °: pleasinglyReturn to reference °
- °: complainingReturn to reference °
- °: part of Return to reference °

- °: not paidReturn to reference °
- °: diminishedReturn to reference °
- °: nearReturn to reference °
- °: cultivateReturn to reference °
- °: the crown given to victorsReturn to reference °
- °: complainReturn to reference °
- °: recalls Return to reference °
- °: suitableReturn to reference °
- °: harmonize; fitReturn to reference °
- °: lofty songsReturn to reference °
- °: lamentReturn to reference °
- °: tries onReturn to reference °
- °: fittingReturn to reference °
- °: represented; prefiguredReturn to reference °
- °: closelyReturn to reference °
- °: opposingReturn to reference °
- °: againReturn to reference °
- °: restorationReturn to reference °
- °: harmReturn to reference °
- °: greatest skillReturn to reference °
- °: happyReturn to reference °
- °: DavidReturn to reference °

Psalm 52

Tyrant, why swell'st thou thus,
Of mischief vaunting?
Since help from God to us
Is never wanting.

5      Lewd<sup>o</sup> lies thy tongue contrives,
Loud lies it soundeth;
Sharper than sharpest knives
With lies it woundeth.

10      Falsehood thy wit<sup>o</sup> approves,
All truth rejected:
Thy will all vices loves,
Virtue neglected.

15      Not words from cursèd thee,
But gulfs<sup>o</sup> are pourèd;
Gulfs wherein daily be Good men devourèd.

20      Think'st thou to bear it<sup>o</sup> so?
God shall displace thee;
God shall thee overthrow,
Crush thee, deface<sup>o</sup> thee.

The just shall fearing see
These fearful chances,
And laughing shoot at thee
With scornful glances.

25      Lo, lo, the wretched wight,<sup>o</sup>
Who, God disdaining,

His mischief made his might,
His guard his gaining.°

30 I as an olive tree
Still green shall flourish:
God's house the soil shall be
My roots to nourish.

35 My trust on his true love
Truly attending,
Shall never thence remove,
Never see ending.

40 Thee will I honor still,
Lord, for this justice;
There fix my hopes I will
Where thy saints' trust is.

Thy saints trust in thy name,
Therein they joy them:
Protected by the same,
Nought° can annoy° them.

Notes

- °: vileReturn to reference °
- °: mindReturn to reference °
- °: abysses, yawning chasmsReturn to reference °
- °: bear it off, triumphReturn to reference °
- °: destroyReturn to reference °
- °: creatureReturn to reference °
- °: richesReturn to reference °
- °: nothing Return to reference °
- °: harmReturn to reference °

Psalm 119: O<sup>1</sup>

Oh, what a lantern, what a lamp of light
Is thy pure Word to me
To clear my paths and guide my goings right!
I swear,<sup>o</sup> and swear again,
5 I of the statutes will observer be,
Thou<sup>o</sup> justly dost ordain.

The heavy weights of grief oppress me sore:<sup>o</sup>
Lord, raise me by thy Word,
As thou to me didst promise heretofore.
And this unforcèd praise
10 I for an off'ring bring, accept, O Lord,
And show to me thy ways.

What if my life lie naked<sup>2</sup> in my hand,
To every chance exposed?
Should I forget what thou dost me command?
15 No, no, I will not stray
From thy edicts, though round about enclosed
With snares the wicked lay.

Thy testimonies, as mine heritage,
I have retainèd still,
205 And unto them my heart's delight engage—
My heart which still doth bend,
And only bend to do what thou dost will,
And do it to the end.

Endnotes

- Note 1: The 176 lines of Psalm 119 are divided into twenty-two sections of eight verses each, with the sections headed by, and their initial verses beginning with, successive letters of the Hebrew alphabet. Mary Sidney adopts the analogous procedure in English and also uses a different stanzaic form for each of the twenty-two sections.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: That is, exposed to danger.Return to reference 2

Notes

- °: sworeReturn to reference °
- °: which youReturn to reference °
- °: sorely, severelyReturn to reference °

Psalm 139

O Lord, in me there lieth nought
But to thy search revealed lies:
For when I sit
Thou markest it;°
No less thou notest when I rise;
5 Yea, closest closet° of my thought
Hath open windows to thine eyes.

Thou walkest with me when I walk;
When to my bed for rest I go,
I find thee there,
10 And everywhere:
Not youngest thought in me doth grow,
No, not one word I cast° to talk
But yet unuttered thou dost know.

If forth I march, thou goest before,
15 If back I turn, thou com'st behind:
So forth nor back
Thy guard I lack,
Nay, on me too thy hand I find.
Well I thy wisdom may adore,
20 But never reach with earthy mind.

To shun thy notice, leave thine eye,
O whither might I take my way?
To starry sphere?
Thy throne is there.
25 To dead men's undelightsome stay?°
There is thy walk, and there to lie
Unknown° in vain I should assay.°

O sun, whom light nor flight can match,
Suppose thy lightful flightful wings
30       Thou lend to me,
          And I could flee
          As far as thee the ev'ning brings:
Even led to west he would me catch,
35       Nor should I lurk<sup>o</sup> with western things.

Do thou thy best, O secret night,
In sable veil to cover me:
Thy sable veil
Shall vainly fail;
40       With day unmasked my night shall be,
For night is day and darkness light,
O father of all lights, to thee.

Each inmost piece in me is thine:
While yet I in my mother dwelt,
All that me clad
45       From thee I had.
Thou in my frame<sup>o</sup> hast strangely dealt:
Needs in my praise thy works must shine,
So inly them my thoughts have felt.

Thou, how my back was beam-wise laid,
50       And raft'ring of my ribs, dost know;
          Know'st every point
          Of bone and joint,
How to this whole these parts did grow,
In brave<sup>o</sup> embroid'ry fair arrayed,
55       Though wrought in shop both dark and low.

Nay, fashionless, ere form I took,
Thy all and more beholding eye
My shapeless shape

60            Could not escape:
              All these, with times appointed by,<sup>1</sup>
              Ere one had being, in the book
              Of thy foresight enrolled did lie.

              My God, how I these studies prize,
              That do thy hidden workings show!
65            Whose sum is such
              No sum so much:
              Nay, summed as<sup>o</sup> sand they sumless grow.
              I lie to sleep, from sleep I rise,
              Yet still<sup>o</sup> in thought with thee I go.

70            My God, if thou but one<sup>2</sup> wouldst kill,
              Then straight would leave my further chase<sup>3</sup>
              This cursèd brood
              Inured to blood,
              Whose graceless taunts at thy disgrace
75            Have aimèd oft, and hating still Would with proud lies thy truth outface.<sup>o</sup>

              Hate not I them, who thee do hate?
              Thine, Lord, I will the censure be.<sup>4</sup>
              Detest I not
80            The cankered knot
              Whom I against thee banded see?
              O Lord, thou know'st in highest rate
              I hate them all as foes to me.

              Search me, my God, and prove my heart,
85            Examine me, and try<sup>o</sup> my thought;
              And mark in me
              If ought<sup>o</sup> there be
              That hath with cause their anger wrought.
              If not (as not) my life's each part,
90            Lord, safely guide from danger brought.

- Note 1: With appropriate times indicated (for each step of the work of creation). Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Only one (wicked man). Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Then immediately [the wicked] would stop pursuing me. Return to reference 3
- Note 4: That is, I leave it to you to censure them. Return to reference 4

Notes

- °: you note it Return to reference °
- °: most secret private chamber Return to reference °
- °: resolve Return to reference °
- °: place Return to reference °
- °: (to thee) Return to reference °
- °: attempt Return to reference °
- °: hide Return to reference °
- °: form Return to reference °
- °: splendid Return to reference °
- °: like Return to reference °
- °: always Return to reference °
- °: defy Return to reference °
- °: test Return to reference °
- °: aught, anything Return to reference °

Robert Garnier's Marc Antoine (Mary Sidney's Tragedie of Antonie)

Mary Sidney's decision to translate a French play into English is a testament to her own approach and beliefs—in the face of those of her brother, Philip Sidney, whose Defense of Poesy is ambivalent about the theater. She picked a drama, Robert Garnier's Marc Antoine (1578), that had a strong female heroine and translated it into the homely iambic pentameter of conventional staged English dramas (the French text, by contrast, is in twelve-syllable lines called "alexandrines"). Though her play was unperformed, it was made to be in dialogue with other printed dramas of the time. A popular text (printed in 1592 as Antonius, a tragedie; reprinted in 1595 as The Tragedie of Antonie), this was the first play to be published under a woman's name. It directly influenced Samuel Daniel, whose Cleopatra (1594) was written as a sequel to it—and probably also Shakespeare, whose emotional characterization of Antony and Cleopatra in the play of that name echoes Mary Sidney's own.

From Robert Garnier's Marc Antoine

ERAS All things do yield to force of lovely face.

CLEOPATRA My face, too lovely, caused my wretched case.<sup>o</sup>

My face hath so entrapped, so cast us down,
That for his conquest Caesar<sup>1</sup> may it thank,
Causing that Antony one army lost;
5 The other<sup>o</sup> wholly did to Caesar yield.
For not enduring (so his amorous sprite<sup>o</sup>
Was with my beauty fired) my shameful flight,
Soon as he saw—from rank<sup>o</sup> wherein he stood
In hottest fight—my gallies<sup>o</sup> making sail,
10 Forgetful of his charge<sup>o</sup> (as if his soul Unto his lady's soul had been enchained)
He left his men, who so courageously
Did leave their lives to gain him victory,
And careless both of fame and army's loss,
15 My oarèd gallies followed with his ships,
Companion of my flight, by this base part
Blasting<sup>o</sup> his former flourishing renown.

ERAS Are you therefore cause of his overthrow?

20 CLEOPATRA I am sole cause: I did it, only I.

1592, 1595

Endnotes

- Note 1: Octavius Caesar, grandnephew and adopted son of Julius Caesar, was brother to Octavia, wife of Antony. Octavius Caesar instigated the battles that are the subject of this play partly because Antony continued his love affair with Cleopatra, despite being married to Octavia.Return to reference 1

Notes

- °: situationReturn to reference °
- °: that is, armyReturn to reference °
- °: spiritReturn to reference °
- °: battalionReturn to reference °
- °: warshipsReturn to reference °
- °: responsibilityReturn to reference °
- °: destroyingReturn to reference °

CHRISTOPHER MARLOWE

1564–1593

The son of a Canterbury shoemaker, Christopher Marlowe was born two months before William Shakespeare. In 1580 he went to Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, on a scholarship that was ordinarily awarded to students preparing for the ministry. He held the scholarship for the maximum time, six years, but did not take holy orders. Instead, he began to write plays. When he applied for his master of arts degree in 1587, the university was about to deny it to him on the grounds that he intended to go abroad to join the dissident English Catholics at Rheims. But the Privy Council intervened and requested that because Marlowe had done the queen "good service" he be granted his degree at the next commencement. "It is not Her Majesty's pleasure," the government officials added, "that anyone employed as he had been in matters touching the benefit of his country should be defamed by those that are ignorant in the affairs he went about." Although much sensational information about Marlowe has been discovered in modern times, we are still largely "ignorant in the affairs he went about." The likeliest possibility is that he served as a spy or an agent provocateur against English Catholics who were conspiring to overthrow the Protestant regime.

Before he left Cambridge, Marlowe had probably already drafted his tremendously successful play Tamburlaine. Tamburlaine dramatizes the exploits of a fourteenth-century Mongol warrior who rose from humble origins to conquer a huge territory that extended from the Black Sea to Delhi. Marlowe's hero is the vehicle for the expression of boundless energy and ambition, the impulse to strive ceaselessly for absolute dominance. Tamburlaine's conquests are achieved not only by force of arms but also by his extraordinary mastery of language, his "high astounding terms." The English theater audience had never before heard such resonant, immensely energetic blank verse. The great period of Elizabethan drama was launched by what Ben Jonson called "Marlowe's mighty line."

From the time of his first theatrical success, when he was twenty-three, Marlowe had only six years to live. It is remarkable how much he managed to accomplish in so brief and turbulent a time. (Had Shakespeare died in the same year, we would scarcely remember him.) In a raw new entertainment industry, with no strong English models to imitate, Marlowe produced a succession of brilliant plays. In a culture devoted to recovering the ancient classics, he was the first English translator of Ovid's erotic poems, the Amores, poems deemed so scandalous that the authorities ordered all copies of his translation burned. In a literary environment that produced many fine lyrics, he was the author of the lyric poem most widely celebrated by his contemporaries, "Come Live with Me and Be My Love." And in an age of wonderful long love poems, he was the author of one of the most wonderful of them all, Hero and Leander.

In 1591 Marlowe lived in London with the playwright Thomas Kyd, who later, under torture, gave information to the Privy Council accusing his former roommate of atheism and treason. On May 30, 1593, an informer named Richard Baines submitted a note to the council that, on the evidence of Marlowe's own alleged utterances, branded him with atheism, sedition, and homosexuality. Four days later, at an inn in the London suburb of Deptford, Marlowe was killed by a dagger thrust, purportedly in an argument over the bill. Modern scholars have discovered that the murderer and the others present in the room at the inn had connections to the world of spies, double agents, and swindlers to which Marlowe himself was in some way linked. Those who were arrested in connection with the murder were briefly held and then quietly released.

Hero and Leander Marlowe's mythological poem is a free and original treatment of a classic tale about two ill-fated lovers. The story derives from a version by the Alexandrian poet Musaeus (ca. fifth century C.E.), but in its blend of poignancy and irony Hero and Leander is closer to that of the Roman poet Ovid, who briefly recounts the story in two epistles of his Heroides.

Hero and Leander is a rich and elusive poem: it is comic, decorative, cruel; now swiftly narrative, now digressive; playful and yet, in a light way, philosophical. Filled with free-floating erotic energy, both heterosexual and homosexual, it at once celebrates the power of language and calls attention to its irresponsibility and deceptiveness. The characters are evidently not intended to be consistent or psychologically credible; they inhabit a world of fancy, of strange contrasts between innocence and the wild riot of amorous intrigues among the gods that is Ovid's subject matter. Hero is paradoxically a nun vowed to chastity and a devotee of Venus, the love goddess; Leander is both a sharp, sophisticated seducer and a sexual innocent. The deadpan asides, with their irony, hyperbole, and cynicism mingling with exuberant delight in the body's instinctual freedom, heighten the poem's elusiveness, its cunning evasion of all fixed categories.

Hero and Leander cannot be precisely dated. Marlowe's translations of Ovid, to which the poem is closely related in spirit, are generally thought to be from the later 1580s. But, alternatively, Marlowe may have been participating in a vogue for brief erotic epics (epyllia, as they are sometimes called) that dates from the early 1590s, when Shakespeare composed his contribution to the genre, Venus and Adonis. Most striking, in either case, is the capacity for innovation. Just as Marlowe's plays displayed an unprecedented dramatic power in their blank verse, Hero and Leander manifested for the first time the sophisticated eloquence and tonal range of the heroic couplet.

Marlowe left his poem unfinished; George Chapman, the playwright and translator of Homer, undertook to complete it.

Chapman's moralizing, weightily philosophical continuation was published in 1598, shortly after Marlowe's fragment. The work is printed here without Chapman's additions.

Hero and Leander

On Hellespont,<sup>1</sup> guilty of true-loves'° blood,
In view and opposite, two cities stood,
Sea-borderers, disjoined by Neptune's might;
The one Abydos, the other Sestos hight.°
5 At Sestos Hero dwelt; Hero the fair,
Whom young Apollo courted for her hair,
And offered as a dower his burning throne,
Where she should sit for men to gaze upon.
The outside of her garments were of lawn,<sup>2</sup>
10 The lining purple silk, with gilt stars drawn;
Her wide sleeves green, and bordered with a grove
Where Venus in her naked glory strove
To please the careless and disdainful eyes
Of proud Adonis, that before her lies,<sup>3</sup>
15 Her kirtle° blue, whereon was many a stain,
Made with the blood of wretched lovers slain.<sup>4</sup>
Upon her head she wore a myrtle wreath,
From whence her veil reached to the ground beneath.
Her veil was artificial flowers and leaves,
Whose workmanship both man and beast deceives;
20 Many would praise the sweet smell as she passed,
When 'twas the odor which her breath forth cast;
And there for honey, bees have sought in vain,
And, beat from thence, have lighted there again.
About her neck hung chains of pebble-stone,
25 Which, lightened° by her neck, like diamonds shone.
She wore no gloves, for neither sun nor wind
Would burn or parch her hands, but to her mind°
Or° warm or cool them, for they took delight

To play upon those hands, they were so white.
30 Buskins<sup>o</sup> of shells all silvered usèd she,
And branched with blushing coral to the knee,
Where sparrows perched, of hollow pearl and gold,
Such as the world would wonder to behold;
Those with sweet water oft her handmaid fills,
35 Which, as she went,<sup>o</sup> would chirrup through the bills.
Some say, for her the fairest Cupid pined,
And looking in her face, was strooken blind.
But this is true: so like was one the other,
As he imagined Hero was his mother;<sup>o</sup>
40 And oftentimes into her bosom flew,
About her naked neck his bare arms threw,
And laid his childish head upon her breast,
And with still<sup>o</sup> panting rocked, there took his rest.
So lovely fair was Hero, Venus' nun,<sup>5</sup>
45 As Nature wept, thinking she was undone,
Because she took more from her than she left
And of such wondrous beauty her bereft;
Therefore, in sign her<sup>o</sup> treasure suffered wrack,<sup>o</sup>
Since Hero's time hath half the world been black.
50 Amorous Leander, beautiful and young
(Whose tragedy divine Musaeus<sup>6</sup> sung),
Dwelt at Abydos; since him dwelt there none
For whom succeeding times make greater moan.
His dangling tresses that were never shorn,
55 Had they been cut and unto Colchos<sup>7</sup> borne,
Would have allured the vent'rous youth of Greece
To hazard more than for the Golden Fleece.
Fair Cynthia<sup>o</sup> wished his arms might be her sphere;<sup>o</sup>
Grief makes her pale, because she moves not there.
60 His body was as straight as Circe's wand;<sup>8</sup>
Jove might have sipped out nectar from his hand.
Even as delicious meat is to the taste,
So was his neck in touching, and surpassed

65 The white of Pelops' shoulder.<sup>9</sup> I could tell ye
How smooth his breast was, and how white his belly,
And whose immortal fingers did imprint
That heavenly path, with many a curious dint,<sup>o</sup>
That runs along his back; but my rude<sup>o</sup> pen
Can hardly blazon forth the loves of men,
70 Much less of powerful gods; let it suffice
That my slack<sup>o</sup> muse sings of Leander's eyes,
Those orient<sup>o</sup> cheeks and lips, exceeding his
That leapt into the water for a kiss
Of his own shadow,<sup>o</sup> and despising many,
75 Died ere he could enjoy the love of any.<sup>1</sup>
Had wild Hippolytus<sup>2</sup> Leander seen, Enamored of his beauty had he been;
His presence made the rudest peasant melt,
That in the vast uplandish country dwelt;
80 The barbarous Thracian soldier, moved with nought,
Was moved with him, and for his favor sought.
Some swore he was a maid in man's attire,
For in his looks were all that men desire:
A pleasant smiling cheek, a speaking<sup>o</sup> eye,
85 A brow for love to banquet royally;
And such as knew he was a man, would say,
"Leander, thou art made for amorous play;
Why art thou not in love, and loved of<sup>o</sup> all?
Though thou be fair, yet be not thine own thrall."<sup>o</sup>
90 The men of wealthy Sestos every year,
For his sake whom their goddess held so dear,
Rose-cheeked Adonis, kept a solemn feast.
Thither resorted many a wandering guest
To meet their loves; such as had none at all 95 Came lovers home from this great festival;
For every street, like to a firmament, Glistened<sup>o</sup> with breathing stars, who, where they went,

Frighted the melancholy earth, which deemed Eternal heaven to burn, for so it seemed 100 As if another Phaëton<sup>3</sup> had got
The guidance of the sun's rich chariot.
But far above the loveliest, Hero shined,
And stole away th' enchanted gazer's mind;
For like sea nymphs' inveigling harmony,
105 So was her beauty to the standers by.
Nor that night-wandering pale and watery star<sup>o</sup>
(When yawning dragons draw her thirling<sup>4</sup> car<sup>o</sup>
From Latmos' mount<sup>5</sup> up to the gloomy sky,
Where, crowned with blazing light and majesty,
110 She proudly sits) more over-rules<sup>o</sup> the flood<sup>o</sup>
Than she the hearts of those that near her stood.
Even as when gaudy nymphs pursue the chase,<sup>o</sup>
Wretched Ixion's shaggy-footed race,<sup>6</sup>
Incensed with savage heat, gallop amain
115 From steep pine-bearing mountains to the plain,
So ran the people forth to gaze upon her,
And all that viewed her were enamored on her.
And as in fury of a dreadful fight,
Their fellows being slain or put to flight,
120 Poor soldiers stand with fear of death dead-strooken,
So at her presence all, surprised and taken,
Await the sentence of her scornful eyes;
He whom she favors lives, the other dies.
There might you see one sigh, another rage,
125 And some, their violent passions to assuage,
Compile sharp satires; but alas, too late,
For faithful love will never turn to hate.
And many, seeing great princes were denied,
Pined as they went, and thinking on her, died.
130 On this feast day, oh, cursèd day and hour!
Went Hero thorough<sup>o</sup> Sestos, from her tower
To Venus' temple, where unhappily,

As after chanced, they did each other spy.
So fair a church as this had Venus none;
135 The walls were of discolored<sup>o</sup> jasper stone,
Wherein was Proteus<sup>7</sup> carved, and o'erhead
A lively<sup>o</sup> vine of green sea-agate spread,
Where, by one hand, light-headed Bacchus<sup>8</sup> hung,
And with the other, wine from grapes out-wrung.
140 Of crystal shining fair the pavement was;
The town of Sestos called it Venus' glass;<sup>o</sup>
There might<sup>o</sup> you see the gods in sundry shapes, Committing heady<sup>o</sup> riots, incest, rapes:
For know that underneath this radiant floor
145 Was Danaë's<sup>9</sup> statue in a brazen tower,
Jove slyly stealing from his sister's<sup>1</sup> bed
To dally with Idalian Ganymed,<sup>2</sup>
And for his love Europa bellowing loud,<sup>3</sup>
And tumbling with the rainbow in a cloud;<sup>4</sup>
150 Blood-quaffing Mars heaving the iron net
Which limping Vulcan and his Cyclops set;<sup>5</sup>
Love kindling fire to burn such towns as Troy;
Sylvanus weeping for the lovely boy<sup>6</sup>
That now is turned into a cypress tree, 155 Under whose shade the wood-gods love to be.
And in the midst a silver altar stood;
There Hero sacrificing turtles'<sup>7</sup> blood,
Vailed<sup>o</sup> to the ground, veiling her eyelids close,
And modestly they opened as she rose;
160 Thence flew love's arrow with the golden head,<sup>8</sup>
And thus Leander was enamored.
Stone still he stood, and evermore he gazed,
Till with the fire that from his countenance blazed,
Relenting Hero's gentle heart was strook;
165 Such force and virtue<sup>o</sup> hath an amorous look.
It lies not in our power to love or hate,

For will in us is overruled by fate.
When two are stripped, long ere the course<sup>o</sup> begin
We wish that one should lose, the other win;
170 And one especially do we affect<sup>o</sup>
Of two gold ingots, like in each respect.
The reason no man knows, let it suffice,
What we behold is censured<sup>o</sup> by our eyes.
Where both deliberate, the love is slight;
175 Who ever loved, that loved not at first sight?<sup>9</sup>
He kneeled, but unto her devoutly prayed.
Chaste Hero to herself thus softly said,
"Were I the saint he worships, I would hear him,"
And as she spake those words, came somewhat near 180 him.
He started up; she blushed as one ashamed,
Wherewith Leander much more was inflamed.
He touched her hand; in touching it she trembled:
Love deeply grounded hardly<sup>o</sup> is dissembled.
These lovers parlèd<sup>o</sup> by the touch of hands;
185 True love is mute, and oft amazèd stands.
Thus while dumb signs their yielding hearts entangled,
The air with sparks of living fire was spangled,
And Night, deep drenched in misty Acheron,<sup>1</sup>
Heaved up her head, and half the world upon 190 Breathed darkness forth. (Dark night is Cupid's day.)
And now begins Leander to display
Love's holy fire, with words, with sighs and tears,
Which like sweet music entered Hero's ears,
And yet at every word she turned aside
195 And always cut him off as he replied.
At last, like to a bold sharp sophister,<sup>2</sup>
With cheerful hope thus he accosted<sup>o</sup> her:
"Fair creature, let me speak without offense;
200 I would my rude<sup>o</sup> words had the influence

To lead thy thoughts as thy fair looks do mine;
Then shouldst thou be his prisoner, who is thine.
Be not unkind and fair—misshapen stuff<sup>o</sup>
Are of behavior boisterous and rough.
O shun me not, but hear me ere you go;
205 God knows I cannot force<sup>o</sup> love, as you do.
My words shall be as spotless as my youth,
Full of simplicity and naked truth.
This sacrifice, whose sweet perfume descending
From Venus' altar to your footsteps bending,<sup>o</sup>
210 Doth testify that you exceed her far
To whom you offer and whose nun you are.
Why should you worship her? Her you surpass
As much as sparkling diamonds flaring<sup>o</sup> glass.
A diamond set in lead his worth retains;
215 A heavenly nymph, beloved of human swains,<sup>o</sup>
Receives no blemish but oftentimes more grace;
Which makes me hope, although I am but base—
Base in respect of<sup>o</sup> thee, divine and pure—
Dutiful service may thy love procure;
220 And I in duty will excel all other,
As thou in beauty dost exceed Love's mother.<sup>o</sup>
Nor heaven, nor thou, were made to gaze upon;
As heaven preserves all things, so save thou one.
A stately builded ship, well rigged and tall,
225 The ocean maketh more majestic:
Why vowest thou then to live in Sestos here,
Who on Love's seas more glorious wouldst appear?
Like untuned golden strings all women are,
Which, long time lie untouched, will harshly jar.<sup>3</sup>
230 Vessels of brass, oft handled, brightly shine;
What difference betwixt the richest mine<sup>o</sup>
And basest mold,<sup>o</sup> but use? for both not used
Are of like worth. Then treasure is abused
When misers keep it; being put to loan, 235

In time it will return us two for one.
Rich robes themselves and others do adorn;
Neither themselves nor others, if not worn.
Who builds a palace and rams up the gate
Shall see it ruinous and desolate.
240 Ah, simple Hero, learn thyself to cherish;
Lone women, like to empty houses, perish.
Less sins the poor rich man that starves himself
In heaping up a mass of drossy pelf,<sup>o</sup>
245 Than such as you: his golden earth remains,
Which after his decease some other gains.
But this fair gem, sweet in the loss alone,
When you fleet hence can be bequeathed to none.
Or if it could, down from th' enameled<sup>o</sup> sky
All heaven would come to claim this legacy,
250 And with intestine<sup>o</sup> broils the world destroy
And quite confound Nature's sweet harmony.
Well therefore by the gods decreed it is,
We human creatures should enjoy that bliss.
One is no number;<sup>4</sup> maids are nothing then 255 Without the sweet society of men.
Wilt thou live single still? One shalt thou be,
Though never-singling Hymen<sup>5</sup> couple thee.
Wild savages, that drink of running springs,
Think water far excels all earthly things;
260 But they that daily taste neat<sup>o</sup> wine despise it.
Virginitie, albeit<sup>o</sup> some highly prize it,
Compared with marriage, had you tried them both,
Differs as much as wine and water doth.
Base bullion for the stamp's sake<sup>6</sup> we allow:<sup>o</sup> 265 Even so for men's impression do we you;
By which alone, our reverend fathers<sup>7</sup> say,
Women receive perfection every way.
This idol which you term Virginitie,
Is neither essence,<sup>o</sup> subject to the eye,

270 No, nor to any one exterior sense,
 Nor hath it any place of residence,
 Nor is 't of earth or mold<sup>o</sup> celestial,
 Or capable of any form at all.
 Of that which hath no being do not boast:
 275 Things that are not at all are never lost.
 Men foolishly do call it virtuous:
 What virtue is it that is born with us?<sup>8</sup>
 Much less can honor be ascribed thereto:
 Honor is purchased by the deeds we do.
 280 Believe me, Hero, honor is not won
 Until some honorable deed be done.
 Seek you for chastity, immortal fame,
 And know that some have wronged Diana's name?<sup>9</sup>
 Whose name is it, if she be false or not,
 285 So she be fair, but some vile tongues will blot?
 But you are fair, aye me! so wondrous fair,
 So young, so gentle, and so debonair,<sup>o</sup>
 As Greece will think, if thus you live alone,
 Some one or other keeps you as his own.
 290 Then, Hero, hate me not, nor from me fly
 To follow swiftly-blasting<sup>o</sup> infamy.
 Perhaps thy sacred priesthood makes thee loath.
 Tell me, to whom madest thou that heedless oath?"
 "To Venus," answered she, and as she spake,
 295 Forth from those two tralucent cisterns<sup>o</sup> brake
 A stream of liquid pearl, which down her face Made milk-white paths whereon the gods might trace<sup>o</sup>
 To Jove's high court. He thus replied: "The rites
 In which Love's beauteous empress most delights
 300 Are banquets, Doric music,<sup>1</sup> midnight revel, Plays, masques, and all that stern age counteth evil.
 Thee as a holy idiot doth she scorn;
 For thou, in vowing chastity, hast sworn

305 To rob her name and honor, and thereby Commit'st a sin far worse than perjury—
Even sacrilege against her Deity,
Through regular and formal purity.
To expiate which sin, kiss and shake hands;
Such sacrifice as this Venus demands.”
310 Thereat she smiled and did deny him so
As, put<sup>o</sup> thereby, yet might he hope for mo.<sup>o</sup>
Which makes him quickly reinforce his speech
And her in humble manner thus beseech:
315 “Though neither gods nor men may thee deserve,
Yet for her sake whom you have vowed to serve,
Abandon fruitless, cold Virginity,
The gentle Queen of Love's sole enemy.
Then shall you most resemble Venus' nun,
When Venus' sweet rites are performed and done.
320 Flint-breasted Pallas<sup>2</sup> joys in single life,
But Pallas and your mistress are at strife.
Love, Hero, then, and be not tyrannous,
But heal the heart that thou hast wounded thus,
Nor stain thy youthful years with avarice;<sup>3</sup>
325 Fair fools delight to be accounted nice.<sup>o</sup>
The richest corn<sup>o</sup> dies, if it be not reaped;
Beauty alone is lost, too warily kept.”
These arguments he used, and many more,
Wherewith she yielded, that was won before.
330 Hero's looks yielded, but her words made war:
Women are won when they begin to jar.<sup>o</sup>
Thus, having swallowed Cupid's golden hook,
The more she strived, the deeper was she strook.
Yet, evilly<sup>o</sup> feigning anger, strove she still 335 And would be thought to grant against her will.
So having paused a while, at last she said:
“Who taught thee rhetoric to deceive a maid?
Aye me, such words as these should I abhor,

And yet I like them for the orator.”
340 With that, Leander stooped to have embraced her,
But from his spreading arms away she cast her,
And thus bespake him: “Gentle youth, forbear
To touch the sacred garments which I wear.
“Upon a rock, and underneath a hill,
345 Far from the town, where all is whist<sup>o</sup> and still,
Save that the sea, playing on yellow sand,
Sends forth a rattling murmur to the land,
Whose sound allures the golden Morpheus<sup>4</sup>
In silence of the night to visit us,
350 My turret stands, and there, God knows, I play
With Venus’ swans and sparrows<sup>5</sup> all the day.
A dwarfish beldame<sup>o</sup> bears me company,
That hops about the chamber where I lie
And spends the night, that might be better spent, 355 In vain discourse and apish<sup>o</sup> merriment.
Come thither.” As she spake this, her tongue tripped,
For unawares “Come thither” from her slipped;
And suddenly her former color changed
And here and there her eyes through anger ranged.
360 And like a planet, moving several<sup>o</sup> ways,<sup>6</sup>
At one self<sup>o</sup> instant, she, poor soul, assays,<sup>o</sup>
Loving, not to love at all, and every part
Strove to resist the motions of her heart;
And hands so pure, so innocent, nay, such 365 As might have made heaven stoop to have a touch,
Did she uphold to Venus, and again
Vowed spotless chastity, but all in vain.
Cupid beat down her prayers with his wings;
Her vows above the empty air he flings.
370 All deep enraged, his sinewy<sup>o</sup> bow he bent,
And shot a shaft that burning from him went,
Wherewith she, strooken, looked so dolefully
As made Love sigh to see his tyranny.

375 And as she wept, her tears to pearl he turned,
And wound them on his arm, and for her mourned.
Then towards the palace of the Destinies,<sup>o</sup>
Laden with languishment and grief, he flies,
And to those stern nymphs humbly made request
Both might enjoy each other and be blessed.
380 But with a ghastly dreadful countenance,
Threatening a thousand deaths at every glance,
They answered Love, nor would vouchsafe<sup>o</sup> so much
As one poor word, their hate to him was such.
Harken a while, and I will tell you why:
385 Heaven's wingèd herald, Jove-born Mercury,
The selfsame day that he asleep had laid
Enchanted Argus,<sup>7</sup> spied a country maid
Whose careless hair, instead of pearl t' adorn it,
Glistered with dew, as one that seemed to scorn it;<sup>8</sup>
390 Her breath as fragrant as the morning rose,
Her mind pure, and her tongue untaught to glose.<sup>o</sup>
Yet proud she was, for lofty pride that dwells
In towered courts is oft in shepherds' cells,<sup>o</sup>
And too-too well the fair vermilion knew,
395 And silver tincture of her cheeks, that drew
The love of every swain.<sup>o</sup> On her, this god
Enamored was, and with his snaky rod<sup>9</sup>
Did charm her nimble feet and made her stay;
The while upon a hillock down he lay,
400 And sweetly on his pipe began to play,
And with smooth speech, her fancy to assay,<sup>o</sup>
Till in his twining arms he locked her fast,
And then he wooed with kisses, and at last,
As shepherds do, her on the ground he laid,
405 And tumbling in the grass, he often strayed
Beyond the bounds of shame, in being bold
To eye those parts which no eye should behold;
And, like an insolent commanding lover,

Boasting his parentage, would needs discover 410 The way to new Elysium;<sup>1</sup> but she,
Whose only dower was her chastity,
Having striven in vain, was now about to cry
And crave the help of shepherds that were nigh.
Herewith he stayed his fury,<sup>o</sup> and began 415 To give her leave to rise. Away she ran;
After went Mercury, who used such cunning
As she, to hear his tale, left off her running.
Maids are not won by brutish force and might,
But speeches full of pleasure and delight.
420 And knowing Hermes<sup>2</sup> courted her, was glad
That she such loveliness and beauty had
As could provoke his liking, yet was mute,
And neither would deny nor grant his suit.
Still vowed he love; she, wanting<sup>o</sup> no excuse
425 To feed him with delays, as women use,<sup>o</sup>
Or thirsting after immortality
(All women are ambitious naturally),
Imposed upon her lover such a task
As he ought not perform, nor yet she ask.
430 A draft of flowing nectar she requested,
Wherewith the king of gods and men is feasted.
He, ready to accomplish what she willed,
Stole some from Hebe (Hebe Jove's cup filled)
And gave it to his simple rustic love,
435 Which being known (as what is hid from Jove?)
He inly stormed and waxed more furious
Than for the fire filched by Prometheus,
And thrusts him down from heaven. He, wandering
here,
In mournful terms,<sup>o</sup> with sad and heavy cheer,<sup>o</sup>
440 Complained to Cupid. Cupid, for his sake,
To be revenged on Jove did undertake;
And those on whom heaven, earth, and hell relies

(I mean the adamantine<sup>3</sup> Destinies)
He wounds with love and forced them equally 445 To dote upon deceitful Mercury.
They offered him the deadly fatal knife
That shears the slender threads of human life;<sup>4</sup>
At his fair feathered feet the engines<sup>o</sup> laid
Which th' earth from ugly Chaos' den upweighed.<sup>5</sup>
450 These he regarded not, but did entreat
That Jove, usurper of his father's seat,
Might presently<sup>o</sup> be banished into hell
And agèd Saturn in Olympus dwell.
They granted what he craved,<sup>o</sup> and once again
455 Saturn and Ops began their golden reign.
Murder, rape, war, lust, and treachery
Were with Jove closed in Stygian empery.<sup>o</sup>
But long this blessed time continued not;
As soon as he his wishèd purpose got,
460 He, reckless of his promise, did despise
The love of th' everlasting Destinies.
They seeing it, both Love and him abhorred,
And Jupiter unto his place restored.<sup>6</sup>
And but that Learning, in despite of Fate,
465 Will mount aloft and enter heaven gate,
And to the seat of Jove itself advance,
Hermes had slept in hell with Ignorance.
Yet as a punishment they added this,
That he and Poverty should always kiss.<sup>7</sup>
470 And to this day is every scholar poor;
Gross gold from them runs headlong to the boor.<sup>o</sup>
Likewise the angry sisters, thus deluded,
To venge themselves on Hermes, have concluded
That Midas' brood<sup>8</sup> shall sit in Honor's chair, 475 To which the Muses' sons are only heir.
And fruitful wits<sup>o</sup> that inaspiring<sup>9</sup> are Shall discontent run into regions far;

And few great lords in virtuous deeds shall joy,
But be surprised with<sup>o</sup> every garish toy,<sup>o</sup>
480 And still<sup>o</sup> enrich the lofty servile clown,<sup>o</sup>
Who, with encroaching guile, keeps learning down.
Then muse not<sup>o</sup> Cupid's suit no better sped,
Seeing in their loves the Fates were injured.

By this, sad Hero, with love unacquainted,
485 Viewing Leander's face, fell down and fainted.
He kissed her and breathed life into her lips,
Wherewith, as one displeased, away she trips.
Yet as she went, full often looked behind,
And many poor excuses did she find 490 To linger by the way, and once she stayed
And would have turned again, but was afraid
In offering parley to be counted light.<sup>o</sup>
So on she goes, and in her idle flight
Her painted fan of curlèd plumes let fall,
495 Thinking to train<sup>o</sup> Leander therewithal.
He, being a novice, knew not what she meant,
But stayed, and after her a letter sent,
Which joyful Hero answered in such sort
As he had hope to scale the beauteous fort 500 Wherein the liberal Graces<sup>1</sup> locked their wealth,
And therefore to her tower he got by stealth.
Wide open stood the door; he need not climb,
And she herself before the pointed<sup>o</sup> time
Had spread the board,<sup>o</sup> with roses strewed the 505 room,
And oft looked out, and mused<sup>o</sup> he did not come.
At last he came; O who can tell the greeting
These greedy lovers had at their first meeting?
He asked, she gave, and nothing was denied;
Both to each other quickly were affied.<sup>o</sup> 510 Look how<sup>o</sup> their hands, so were their hearts united,
And what he did, she willingly requited.

(Sweet are the kisses, the embracements sweet,
When like desires and affections meet,
For from the earth to heaven is Cupid raised,
515 Where fancy is in equal balance peised.°)
Yet she this rashness suddenly repented
And turned aside and to herself lamented,
As if her name and honor had been wronged
By being possessed of him for whom she longed.
520 Ay, and she wished, albeit not from her heart,
That he would leave her turret and depart.
The mirthful god of amorous pleasure smiled
To see how he this captive nymph beguiled,°
For hitherto he did but fan the fire
525 And kept it down that it might mount the higher.
Now waxed she jealous° lest his love abated,
Fearing her own thoughts made her to be hated.
Therefore unto him hastily she goes
And, like light Salmacis,² her body throws
530 Upon his bosom where, with yielding eyes,
She offers up herself a sacrifice
To slake his anger, if he were displeased.
O what god would not therewith be appeased?
Like Aesop's cock,³ this jewel he enjoyed,
535 And as a brother with his sister toyed,
Supposing nothing else was to be done,
Now he her favor and good will had won.
But know you not that creatures wanting sense°
By nature have a mutual appetite,⁴
540 And wanting organs to advance a step,
Moved by love's force, unto each other leap?
Much more in subjects having intellect
Some hidden influence breeds like effect.
Albeit Leander, rude° in love and raw,
545 Long dallying with Hero, nothing saw
That might delight him more, yet he suspected

Some amorous rites or other were neglected.
Therefore unto his body, hers he clung;
She, fearing on the rushes<sup>5</sup> to be flung, 550 Strived with redoubled strength; the more she strived,
The more a gentle, pleasing heat revived,
Which taught him all that elder lovers know.
And now the same gan so to scorch and glow,
As, in plain terms, yet cunningly,<sup>o</sup> he craved<sup>o</sup> it.
555 (Love always makes those eloquent that have it.)
She, with a kind of granting, put him by it,
And, ever as he thought himself most nigh it,
Like to the tree of Tantalus,<sup>6</sup> she fled,
And, seeming lavish, saved her maidenhead.
560 Ne'er king more sought to keep his diadem
Than Hero this inestimable gem.
Above our life we love a steadfast friend;
Yet, when a token of great worth we send,
We often kiss it, often look thereon,
565 And stay the messenger that would be gone.
No marvel then, though Hero would not yield
So soon to part from that she dearly held.
Jewels being lost are found again, this never;
'Tis lost but once, and once lost, lost forever.
570 Now had the Morn espied her lover's steeds,<sup>7</sup>
Whereat she starts, puts on her purple weeds,<sup>o</sup>
And, red for anger that he stayed so long,
All headlong throws herself the clouds among.
And now Leander, fearing to be missed,
575 Embraced her suddenly, took leave, and kissed;
Long was he taking leave, and loath to go,
And kissed again, as lovers use<sup>o</sup> to do.
Sad Hero wrung him by the hand and wept,
Saying, "Let your vows and promises be kept."
580 Then, standing at the door, she turned about,

As loath to see Leander going out.
And now the sun that through th' horizon peeps,
As pitying these lovers, downward creeps,
So that in silence of the cloudy night,
585 Though it was morning, did he take his flight.
But what the secret trusty night concealed,
Leander's amorous habit<sup>o</sup> soon revealed.
With Cupid's myrtle<sup>8</sup> was his bonnet<sup>o</sup> crowned;
About his arms the purple riband<sup>o</sup> wound
590 Wherewith she wreathed her largely spreading hair;
Nor could the youth abstain but he must wear
The sacred ring wherewith she was endowed
When first religious chastity she vowed;
Which made his love through Sestos to be known,
595 And thence unto Abydos sooner blown
Than he could sail, for incorporeal Fame,
Whose weight consists in nothing but her name,
Is swifter than the wind, whose tardy plumes
Are reeking water and dull earthly fumes.<sup>9</sup>
600 Home when he came, he seemed not to be there,
But like exilèd air thrust from his sphere,
Set in a foreign place, and straight from thence,
Alcides-like,<sup>1</sup> by mighty violence
He would have chased away the swelling main<sup>o</sup>
605 That him from her unjustly did detain.
Like as the sun in a diameter<sup>2</sup>
Fires and inflames objects removèd far,
And heateth kindly, shining lat'rally,<sup>3</sup>
So beauty sweetly quickens<sup>o</sup> when 'tis nigh, 610 But being separated and removed,
Burns where it cherished, murders where it loved.
Therefore, even as an index to a book,
So to his mind was young Leander's look.
O none but gods have power their love to hide:
615 Affection by the count'nance is descried.<sup>o</sup>

The light of hidden fire itself discovers,
And love that is concealed betrays<sup>o</sup> poor lovers.
His secret flame apparently<sup>o</sup> was seen;
Leander's father knew where he had been,
620 And for the same mildly rebuked his son,
Thinking to quench the sparkles new begun.
But love, resisted once, grows passionate,
And nothing more than counsel lovers hate.
For as a hot, proud horse highly disdains
625 To have his head controlled, but breaks the reins,
Spits forth the ringled<sup>o</sup> bit, and with his hooves
Checks<sup>o</sup> the submissive ground; so he that loves,
The more he is restrained, the worse he fares.
What is it now but mad Leander dares?<sup>4</sup>
630 "O Hero, Hero!" thus he cried full oft,
And then he got him to a rock aloft,
Where, having spied her tower, long stared he on 't
And prayed the narrow toiling Hellespont
To part in twain, that he might come and go;
635 But still the rising billows answered "No!"
With that he stripped him to the ivory skin,
And crying, "Love, I come!" leapt lively in.
Whereat the sapphire-visaged god<sup>o</sup> grew proud,<sup>5</sup>
And made his capering Triton<sup>6</sup> sound aloud;
640 Imagining that Ganimed,<sup>7</sup> displeased,
Had left the heavens, therefore on him seized.
Leander strived; the waves about him wound
And pulled him to the bottom, where the ground
Was strewn with pearl, and in low coral groves
645 Sweet singing mermaids sported with their loves
On heaps of heavy gold and took great pleasure
To spurn in careless sort<sup>o</sup> the shipwreck treasure;
For here the stately azure palace stood
Where kingly Neptune and his train<sup>o</sup> abode.
650 The lusty god embraced him, called him love,

And swore he never should return to Jove.
But when he knew it was not Ganimed,
For under water he was almost dead,
He heaved him up, and looking on his face,
655 Beat down the bold waves with his triple mace,<sup>8</sup>
Which mounted up, intending to have kissed him,
And fell in drops like tears because they missed him.
Leander being up, began to swim,
And, looking back, saw Neptune follow him;
660 Whereat aghast, the poor soul gan to cry,
"O let me visit Hero ere I die!"
The god put Helle's bracelet<sup>9</sup> on his arm,
And swore the sea should never do him harm.
He clapped his plump cheeks, with his tresses
665 played,
And, smiling wantonly, his love bewrayed.<sup>o</sup>
He watched his arms, and as they opened wide,
At every stroke betwixt them he would slide
And steal a kiss, and then run out and dance
And, as he turned, cast many a lustful glance
670 And throw him gaudy toys to please his eye,
And dive into the water and there pry
Upon his breast, his thighs, and every limb,
And up again and close beside him swim,
And talk of love. Leander made reply,
675 "You are deceived; I am no woman, I."
Thereat smiled Neptune, and then told a tale
How that a shepherd, sitting in a vale,
Played with a boy so lovely fair and kind,
As for his love both earth and heaven pined;
680 That of the cooling river durst not drink,
Lest water nymphs should pull him from the brink;
And when he sported in the fragrant lawns,
Goat-footed satyrs and up-staring fawns<sup>1</sup>
685 Would steal him thence. Ere half this tale was done

"Ay me!" Leander cried, "th' enamored sun
That now should shine on Thetis' glassy bower<sup>2</sup>
Descends upon my radiant Hero's tower.
O that these tardy arms of mine were wings!"
And as he spake, upon the waves he springs.
690 Neptune was angry that he gave no ear,
And in his heart revenging malice bare.
He flung at him his mace, but as it went
He called it in, for love made him repent.
The mace returning back, his own hand hit,
695 As meaning to be venged for darting it.
When this fresh bleeding wound Leander viewed,
His color went and came, as if he rued<sup>o</sup>
The grief<sup>o</sup> which Neptune felt. In gentle breasts
Relenting thoughts, remorse, and pity rests;
700 And who have hard hearts and obdurate minds
But vicious, harebrained, and illit'rate hinds?<sup>o</sup>
The god, seeing him with pity to be moved,
Thereon concluded that he was beloved.
(Love is too full of faith, too credulous, 705 With folly and false hope deluding us.)
Wherefore Leander's fancy to surprise,<sup>o</sup>
To the rich ocean for gifts he flies.
'Tis wisdom to give much; a gift prevails
When deep persuading oratory fails.
710 By this<sup>o</sup> Leander, being near the land,
Cast down his weary feet and felt the sand.
Breathless albeit he were, he rested not Till to the solitary tower he got,
And knocked and called; at which celestial noise
715 The longing heart of Hero much more joys Than nymphs and shepherds when the timbrel<sup>o</sup> rings,
Or crooked<sup>3</sup> dolphin when the sailor sings.
She stayed not for her robes, but straight arose

720 And, drunk with gladness, to the door she goes;
Where, seeing a naked man, she screeched for fear
(Such sights as this to tender maids are rare)
And ran into the dark herself to hide.
Rich jewels in the dark are soonest spied.
Unto her was he led, or rather drawn 725 By those white limbs which sparkled through the lawn.°
The nearer that he came, the more she fled,
And, seeking refuge, slipped into her bed.
Whereon Leander sitting, thus began,
Through numbing cold, all feeble, faint, and wan:
730 "If not for love, yet, love, for pity's sake
Me in thy bed and maiden bosom take;
At least vouchsafe° these arms some little room,
Who, hoping to embrace thee, cheerly° swum.
This head was beat with many a churlish billow,
735 And therefore let it rest upon thy pillow."
Herewith affrighted Hero shrunk away
And in her lukewarm place Leander lay;
Whose lively heat, like fire from heaven fet,°
Would animate gross clay, and higher set
740 The drooping thoughts of base declining souls
Than dreary° Mars° carousing nectar bowls.
His hands he cast upon her like a snare;
She, overcome with shame and sallow fear,
Like chaste Diana when Actaeon<sup>4</sup> spied her,
745 Being suddenly betrayed, dived down to hide her,
And as her silver body downward went,
With both her hands she made the bed a tent,
And in her own mind thought herself secure,
O'ercast with dim and darksome coverture.
750 And now she lets him whisper in her ear,
Flatter, entreat, promise, protest, and swear;
Yet ever as he greedily assayed°

To touch those dainties, she the Harpy<sup>5</sup> played,
And every limb did, as a soldier stout,
755 Defend the fort and keep the foeman out.
For though the rising ivory mount he scaled,
Which is with azure circling lines empaled,<sup>o</sup>
Much like a globe (a globe may I term this,
By which love sails to regions full of bliss),
760 Yet there with Sisyphus<sup>6</sup> he toiled in vain,
Till gentle parley did the truce obtain.<sup>7</sup>
Wherein Leander on her quivering breast, Breathless spoke something, and sighed out the rest;
Which so prevailed, as he, with small ado,
765 Enclosed her in his arms and kissed her, too.
And every kiss to her was as a charm,
And to Leander as a fresh alarm,<sup>o</sup>
So that the truce was broke, and she, alas,
Poor silly<sup>o</sup> maiden, at his mercy was.
770 Love is not full of pity, as men say,
But deaf and cruel, where he means to prey.
Even as a bird which in our hands we wring
Forth plungeth and oft flutters with her wing,
She trembling strove; this strife of hers, like that 775 Which made the world,<sup>8</sup> another world begat
Of unknown joy. Treason was in her thought,
And cunningly to yield herself she sought.
Seeming not won, yet won she was, at length.
(In such wars women use but half their strength.)
780 Leander now, like Theban Hercules,
Entered the orchard of th' Hesperides,
Whose fruit none rightly can describe but he
That pulls or shakes it from the golden tree.<sup>9</sup>
And now she wished this night were never done,
785 And sighed to think upon th' approaching sun,
For much it grieved her that the bright daylight

Should know the pleasure of this blessed night,
And them like Mars and Erycine<sup>1</sup> displayed,
Both in each other's arms chained as they laid.
790 Again she knew not how to frame her look
Or speak to him who in a moment took
That which so long so charily<sup>o</sup> she kept;
And fain<sup>o</sup> by stealth away she would have crept
And to some corner secretly have gone,
795 Leaving Leander in the bed alone.
But as her naked feet were whipping out,
He on the sudden clinged her so about
That mermaid-like unto the floor she slid:
One half appeared, the other half was hid.
800 Thus near the bed she blushing stood upright;
And from her countenance behold ye might
A kind of twilight break, which through the hair,
As from an orient<sup>o</sup> cloud, glims<sup>o</sup> here and there,
And round about the chamber this false morn
805 Brought forth the day before the day was born.
So Hero's ruddy cheek Hero betrayed,
And her all naked to his sight displayed,
Whence his admiring eyes more pleasure took
Than Dis<sup>2</sup> on heaps of gold fixing his look.
810 By this Apollo's golden harp began
To sound forth music to the Ocean,
Which watchful Hesperus<sup>3</sup> no sooner heard
But he the day's bright-bearing car prepared,
And ran before, as harbinger of light,
815 And with his flaring beams mocked ugly Night
Till she, o'ercome with anguish, shame, and rage,
Danged<sup>o</sup> down to hell her loathsome carriage.

Desunt nonnulla.<sup>o</sup>

1598

Endnotes

- Note 1: The Dardanelles, in Turkey, a strait that forms part of the boundary between Europe and Asia.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: A kind of fine linen or thin cambric.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Venus's love for the young hunter Adonis and his death in a boar hunt are recounted by Ovid, and by Shakespeare in Venus and Adonis.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: The extravagant claim is made that many "wretched lovers" had committed suicide at her feet because Hero would not have them.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: The connotations of these two words are contradictory. Hero is a maiden in attendance at the temple of Venus, who is, of course, the goddess of physical love.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: The author of the Greek poem on which Hero and Leander is remotely based. Though he lived in late antiquity (ca. 5th century C.E.), he was sometimes confused with a legendary early Musaeus, supposed son of Orpheus; hence Marlowe calls him "divine."Return to reference 6
- Note 7: The country in Asia where the Argonauts ("the vent'rous youth of Greece"; line 57) found the Golden Fleece.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: The wand with which Circe, in the Odyssey, turned men into beasts.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Pelops, according to Ovid, had a shoulder of ivory.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: An allusion to Narcissus.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Like Adonis, he preferred hunting to love.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: A son of the sun god, he drove his father's chariot erratically across the sky and almost burned up the world.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Flying like a spear.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: The mountain where the moon visited her lover, Endymion. Return to reference 5
- Note 6: The centaurs, fathered by Ixion on a cloud. For his presumption in loving Juno, Ixion was chained to a wheel, hence “wretched.”Return to reference 6

- Note 7: A sea god, who could change his shape at will.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: God of wine and revelry.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Imprisoned in a tower, Danaë was visited by Jove in the form of a shower of gold.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: That is, Juno’s. She was Jove’s wife.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Ganymede was a beautiful youth whom Jove kidnapped from Mount Ida, hence “Idalian.”Return to reference 2
- Note 3: To abduct Europa, Jove took the form of a bull.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Jove as Jupiter Pluvius, god of rain, frolicking with Iris, goddess of the rainbow. But no such tryst is found in classical mythology.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Vulcan used a net to trap Venus (his wife) and Mars, “blood-quaffing” god of war, in the act of love. “Cyclops”: probably plural; members of this one-eyed race worked as Vulcan’s assistants.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Cyparissus, beloved of the wood god Sylvanus.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Turtledoves, symbolic of constancy in love.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: The “golden head” of some of Cupid’s arrows produced love; he had others, of lead, that produced dislike.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Shakespeare quotes this famous line in As You Like It (3.5.83).Return to reference 9
- Note 1: One of the rivers of Hades.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: A sophist is a person skilled in arguments, especially specious ones.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: That is, instruments not played will be out of tune and harsh.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: A traditional concept, going back to Aristotle.Return to reference 4

- Note 5: God of marriage. "Never-singling": that is, one who never separates, but always joins.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: For the impression that makes metal ("bullion") into a coin.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Ancient philosophers, like Aristotle.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: That is, a virtue is not a virtue unless it is acquired.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: That is, no fame for chastity is secure. Even Diana, goddess of chastity, has been slandered.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: A solemn, military mode. Leander would more appropriately have said "Lydian" (as in Milton's "L'Allegro," line 136); Lydian music was soft and sensual.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Athena, a rival goddess of war and wisdom, usually portrayed in armor.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: That is, by hoarding the treasure of her beauty.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: God of sleep. "Golden slumbers" was a common expression.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Venus was often portrayed in a chariot drawn by swans, and sparrows were associated with her because of their traditionally reputed lechery.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: In Ptolemaic astronomy each planet moved in its own orbit or sphere but was also carried along in the motion of the surrounding spheres.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Mercury (or Hermes), the messenger god with winged feet, put to sleep Argus, the hundred-eyed monster whom Juno had placed as a guard over Io, with whom her husband, Jupiter, was in love. The myth that follows is Marlowe's invention.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: That is, pearl or other jewelry.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: The caduceus (now the symbol of medicine).Return to reference 9
- Note 1: In classical mythology, the paradisaal home of the favored dead; also known as the Islands of the Blessed.Return to reference 1

- Note 2: Marlowe uses the names Mercury and Hermes interchangeably, according to the requirements of meter.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Of extreme hardness (so called because the Destinies'—or Fates'—decrees were irrevocable).Return to reference 3
- Note 4: According to classical mythology, the Fates spun and cut the thread that measures each life.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: The Fates also controlled the supports that had held up ("upweighed") the earth since it arose out of Chaos, the yawning abyss from which all things came.Return to reference 5
- Note 6:
The story in lines 451–64 may be summarized as follows: Mercury scorns the gifts offered by the Fates but asks instead that Jove be dethroned (Jove had overthrown his father, Saturn, who ruled heaven during the Golden Age). Mercury persuades the Fates to reverse this revolution, so Saturn and his wife, Ops, return to Olympus and Jove is thrust down into "Stygian empery" (line 458), or Hades. During the Golden Age there was no murder, rape, war, lust, or treachery; these came in with Jove, so when he is sent to Hades they go with him. But this second Golden Age did not last long, because once he got what he wanted, Mercury forgot the Destinies and they restored Jove.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Mercury, the god of learning, would have slept in hell with Ignorance were it not that Learning is so divine that it always mounts up, even to heaven, the "seat of Jove." But it was not beyond the Fates' power to make Learning and Poverty go together, which they decreed in revenge for Mercury's neglect.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: The rich, because everything Midas touched turned to gold; also the stupid, because Midas, judging a musical contest between Apollo and Pan, preferred the latter, against all sensible opinion.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Not ambitious for riches or power.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Three goddesses, embodying aspects of beauty.Return to reference 1

- Note 2: An amorous nymph in Ovid's Metamorphoses.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: In Aesop's fable, a cock, scratching in the barnyard, uncovers a jewel but prefers a barley corn.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Attraction, as iron to a magnet.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Reeds used as carpeting in Elizabethan homes.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Punished in Hades by constantly reaching for fruit from a tree that eluded him and by trying to drink water that also escaped him.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: The horses that pull the chariot of the sun.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: A plant sacred to Venus or Cupid, symbolic of love.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: That is, are mist and smoke.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Like Hercules, with brute force. ("Alcides" is a patronymic of Hercules, derived from the name of his step-grandfather, Alcaeus.)Return to reference 1
- Note 2: That is, shining straight down at noon.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: That is, when it is lower in the sky. The idea is that the sun, paradoxically, causes harm only when it appears to be farthest away (at the zenith). Beauty, Marlowe goes on to claim, works the same way.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: That is, what is there now Leander dares not do?Return to reference 4
- Note 5: The primary sense is probably "became sexually aroused."Return to reference 5
- Note 6: A subordinate sea god who blew on a conch shell.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: See p. 566, n. 2.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: The three-pronged fork carried by Neptune.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Helle was the daughter of King Athamas of Thebes. To escape a cruel stepmother, she fled on a winged, golden-fleeced ram but fell off into the Hellespont, which was named for her.

Marlowe apparently invented the detail of the bracelet.Return to reference 9

- Note 1: Woodland spirits, who prophesied by looking up to the heavens.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: That is, the sea. Thetis was a sea nymph, mother of the hero Achilles.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: “Crooked” because of the undulating path of the dolphin in the water. The musician Arion was saved from drowning by a dolphin charmed by his music.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: A hunter who happened on Diana bathing. She turned him into a stag, and he was killed by his own hounds.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: A monster, half-bird, half-woman, who snatches away banquets in Virgil’s Aeneid and Shakespeare’s Tempest.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Condemned in Hades endlessly to roll a stone uphill.Return to reference 6
- Note 7:

In both the authoritative early printings of the poem (1598), the lines here numbered 775–84 follow at this point (that is, they precede the lines here numbered 763–74). Like almost all modern editors, though, we have adopted the rearrangement first made in 1910 by Tucker Brooke, in his edition of Marlowe’s Works. The original order, Brooke thought, did not make good sense; he hypothesized that two sheets of Marlowe’s manuscript had been accidentally reversed by the time (five years after his death) the poem was printed. Students may, though, want to read the passage both ways and make up their own minds as to which order is preferable.

Return to reference 7

- Note 8: The Greek philosopher Empedocles held that creation was the result of love and strife acting in opposition to each other and alternately ruling the universe.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: One of Hercules’ labors was to get the golden apples of the Hesperides, guarded by a dragon. Hercules was born in Thebes.Return to reference 9

- Note 1: A name for Venus, who was caught in bed with Mars by her husband, Vulcan, who enmeshed them in a fine chain net.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Pluto, god of the underworld and of wealth.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: The evening star; one would expect Lucifer, the morning star.Return to reference 3

Notes

- °: sweetheartsReturn to reference °
- °: calledReturn to reference °
- °: long dressReturn to reference °
- °: illuminatedReturn to reference °
- °: as she wishedReturn to reference °
- °: eitherReturn to reference °
- °: bootsReturn to reference °
- °: walkedReturn to reference °
- °: VenusReturn to reference °
- °: continualReturn to reference °
- °: Nature's Return to reference °
- °: destructionReturn to reference °
- °: the moon Return to reference °
- °: orbitReturn to reference °
- °: exquisite indentationReturn to reference °
- °: crudeReturn to reference °
- °: dullReturn to reference °
- °: shiningReturn to reference °
- °: reflectionReturn to reference °
- °: expressiveReturn to reference °
- °: byReturn to reference °
- °: captiveReturn to reference °
- °: glitteredReturn to reference °
- °: the moonReturn to reference °
- °: chariotReturn to reference °

- °: rules over Return to reference °
- °: tide Return to reference °
- °: hunt Return to reference °
- °: through Return to reference °
- °: many-colored Return to reference °
- °: lifelike Return to reference °
- °: looking glass Return to reference °
- °: could Return to reference °
- °: passionate; violent Return to reference °
- °: bowed down Return to reference °
- °: power Return to reference °
- °: race Return to reference °
- °: fancy Return to reference °
- °: judged Return to reference °
- °: with difficulty Return to reference °
- °: spoke Return to reference °
- °: addressed Return to reference °
- °: rough Return to reference °
- °: persons Return to reference °
- °: compel Return to reference °
- °: turning Return to reference °
- °: glaring Return to reference °
- °: youths Return to reference °
- °: in comparison with Return to reference °
- °: Venus Return to reference °
- °: ore Return to reference °
- °: earth Return to reference °
- °: wealth Return to reference °
- °: many-colored Return to reference °
- °: internal, civil Return to reference °
- °: undiluted Return to reference °
- °: although Return to reference °
- °: approve Return to reference °
- °: something real Return to reference °
- °: form Return to reference °
- °: gracious Return to reference °

- °: -blightingReturn to reference °
- °: translucent eyesReturn to reference °
- °: goReturn to reference °
- °: put off Return to reference °
- °: moreReturn to reference °
- °: shy, reluctantReturn to reference °
- °: grainReturn to reference °
- °: disputeReturn to reference °
- °: badlyReturn to reference °
- °: silentReturn to reference °
- °: old hagReturn to reference °
- °: sillyReturn to reference °
- °: differentReturn to reference °
- °: one and the same Return to reference °
- °: triesReturn to reference °
- °: strongReturn to reference °
- °: the FatesReturn to reference °
- °: grantReturn to reference °
- °: deceiveReturn to reference °
- °: hutsReturn to reference °
- °: rusticReturn to reference °
- °: testReturn to reference °
- °: passionReturn to reference °
- °: lackingReturn to reference °
- °: as women usually doReturn to reference °
- °: condition Return to reference °
- °: countenanceReturn to reference °
- °: contrivancesReturn to reference °
- °: immediatelyReturn to reference °
- °: requestedReturn to reference °
- °: realmReturn to reference °
- °: ignorant clodReturn to reference °
- °: mindsReturn to reference °
- °: captivated by Return to reference °
- °: trifleReturn to reference °
- °: ever Return to reference °

- °: ignorant personReturn to reference °
- °: don't be surprisedReturn to reference °
- °: immodestReturn to reference °
- °: enticeReturn to reference °
- °: appointedReturn to reference °
- °: set the tableReturn to reference °
- °: wonderedReturn to reference °
- °: engagedReturn to reference °
- °: just asReturn to reference °
- °: weighedReturn to reference °
- °: deceivedReturn to reference °
- °: possessively fearfulReturn to reference °
- °: lacking intelligenceReturn to reference °
- °: untutoredReturn to reference °
- °: skillfully Return to reference °
- °: asked forReturn to reference °
- °: clothesReturn to reference °
- °: are accustomedReturn to reference °
- °: dressReturn to reference °
- °: hatReturn to reference °
- °: ribbonReturn to reference °
- °: seaReturn to reference °
- °: gives lifeReturn to reference °
- °: revealedReturn to reference °
- °: gives awayReturn to reference °
- °: openlyReturn to reference °
- °: with rings at the endsReturn to reference °
- °: stampsReturn to reference °
- °: Neptune, god of the seaReturn to reference °
- °: mannerReturn to reference °
- °: attendantsReturn to reference °
- °: revealedReturn to reference °
- °: regrettedReturn to reference °
- °: painReturn to reference °
- °: rusticsReturn to reference °
- °: to capture his loveReturn to reference °

- °: by this timeReturn to reference °
- °: tambourineReturn to reference °
- °: fine linenReturn to reference °
- °: grantReturn to reference °
- °: gladlyReturn to reference °
- °: fetchesReturn to reference °
- °: bloody Return to reference °
- °: god of warReturn to reference °
- °: triedReturn to reference °
- °: surroundedReturn to reference °
- °: call to battleReturn to reference °
- °: innocentReturn to reference °
- °: carefullyReturn to reference °
- °: gladlyReturn to reference °
- °: bright Return to reference °
- °: gleamsReturn to reference °
- °: hurledReturn to reference °
- °: something is lackingReturn to reference °

Doctor Faustus Each of Marlowe's tragic heroes, like the playwright himself, is an overreacher, striving to get beyond conventional boundaries. Marlowe's Faustus seeks the mastery and voluptuous pleasure that come from forbidden knowledge. To achieve his goal Faustus must make—or chooses to make—a bargain with Lucifer. This is an old folklore motif, but it would have been taken seriously in a time when belief in the reality of devils was almost universal. The story's power over its original audience is vividly suggested by the numerous accounts of uncanny events at performances of the play: strange cracking noises in the theater or the extra devil who suddenly appeared when the actors were counted, causing hysteria.

In the opening soliloquy, Doctor Faustus bids farewell to each of his studies—logic, medicine, law, and divinity—as things he has mastered and found unfulfilling. He turns instead to black magic, but the devil exacts a fearful price in exchange: the eternal damnation of Faustus's soul. Whether Faustus freely chooses to pay this price, in order to acquire hidden knowledge, or he is predestined to do so, is unclear. Renaissance theologians fiercely debated the question of fate versus free will, and their arguments are reflected in the play. Faustus's fall is caused by the same pride and ambition that caused the fall of the angels in heaven and of humankind in the garden of Eden. But it is characteristic of Marlowe that he makes this catastrophic aspiration nonetheless a magnificent human venture.

The immediate source of the play is a German narrative called, in its English translation, The History of the Damnable Life and Deserved Death of Doctor John Faustus. That source supplies Marlowe's drama with the scenes of horseplay and low practical joking that contrast so markedly with the passages of huge ambition. It is quite possible that these comic scenes are the work of a collaborator; but no other Elizabethan could have written the first scene (with its brilliant representation of the insatiable aspiring mind of the hero), the ecstatic address to Helen of Troy, or the searing scene of Faustus's last hour. And though compared with these celebrated passages the comic scenes often seem crude, they too contribute to the overarching vision of Faustus's fate: the half-trivial, half-daring exploits, the alternating states of bliss and despair, the questions that are not answered and the answers that bring no real satisfaction, the heroic wanderings that lead nowhere.

Marlowe's play exists in two very different forms: the A text (1604) and the much longer B text (1616). Even the earlier version dates from some fifteen years after the play was actually written and contains later interpolations. The B text almost certainly incorporates additions by other hands and was also revised to conform to the severe censorship statutes of 1606. We use Roma Gill's edition, based on the A text. Following the play are parallel versions of a key scene that will enable the reader to compare the two texts.

The Tragical History of Doctor Faustus

DRAMATIS PERSONAE<sup>1</sup>

CHORUS

DR. JOHN FAUSTUS

WAGNER, his servant, a student

VALDES

his friends, magicians

CORNELIUS

BELZEBUB

OLD MAN

CLOWN

ROBIN

ostlers at an inn

RAFE

VINTNER

HORSE-COURSER

THE POPE

THE CARDINAL OF LORRAINE

CHARLES V, EMPEROR OF GERMANY

A KNIGHT at the EMPEROR 's court

DUKE OF VANHOLT

DUCHESS OF VANHOLT

THREE SCHOLARS

GOOD ANGEL

EVIL ANGEL

MEPHASTOPHILIS

LUCIFER

Spirits presenting

THE SEVEN DEADLY SINS

PRIDE

COVETOUSNESS

WRATH

ENVY

GLUTTONY

SLOTH

LECHERY

ALEXANDER THE GREAT and his PARAMOUR

HELEN OF TROY

ATTENDANTS, FRIARS, and DEVILS

Endnotes

- Note 1: There is no list of characters in the A text. The one here is an editorial construction. Return to reference 1

Prologue

[Enter CHORUS.]<sup>2</sup>

CHORUS Not marching now in fields of Thrasimene,
Where Mars<sup>3</sup> did mate<sup>o</sup> the Carthaginians,
Nor sporting in the dalliance of love,
In courts of kings where state<sup>o</sup> is overturned,
Nor in the pomp of proud audacious deeds,
5 Intends our Muse to vaunt his heavenly verse:
Only this (Gentlemen) we must perform,
The form of Faustus' fortunes good or bad.
To patient judgments we appeal our plaud,<sup>o</sup>
And speak for Faustus in his infancy:
10 Now is he born, his parents base of stock,
In Germany, within a town called Rhodes;<sup>4</sup>
Of riper years to Wittenberg<sup>5</sup> he went,
Whereas<sup>o</sup> his kinsmen chiefly brought him up.
So soon he profits in divinity,<sup>o</sup>
15 The fruitful plot of scholarism graced,
That shortly he was graced with doctor's name,<sup>6</sup>
Excelling all whose sweet delight disputes<sup>7</sup>
In heavenly matters of theology.
Till, swollen with cunning,<sup>o</sup> of a self-conceit, 20 His waxen wings did mount above his reach,
And melting heavens conspired his overthrow.<sup>8</sup>
For falling to a devilish exercise,
And gluttoned more with learning's golden gifts,
He surfeits upon cursed necromancy:<sup>o</sup>
25 Nothing so sweet as magic is to him,
Which he prefers before his chiefest bliss.<sup>9</sup>
And this the man<sup>1</sup> that in his study sits. [Exit.]

Endnotes

- Note 2: A single actor who recited a prologue to an act or a whole play, and occasionally delivered an epilogue.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: God of war. The battle of Lake Trasimene (217 B.C.E.) was one of the Carthaginian leader Hannibal's great victories.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Roda, or Stadtroda, in Germany.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: The famous university where Martin Luther studied, as did Shakespeare's Hamlet and Horatio.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: The lines play on two senses of graced: he so (1) adorned the place ("plot") of scholarship—that is, the university—that shortly he was (2) honored with a doctor's degree.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Referring to formal disputations, academic exercises that occupied the place now held by examinations.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: In Greek myth, Icarus flew too near the sun on wings of feathers and wax made by his father, Daedalus; the wax melted, and he fell into the sea and drowned.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: The salvation of his soul.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Apparently a cue for the Chorus to draw aside the curtain to the enclosed space at the rear of the stage.Return to reference 1

Notes

- °: join withReturn to reference °
- °: political powerReturn to reference °
- °: applauseReturn to reference °
- °: whereReturn to reference °
- °: theologyReturn to reference °
- °: knowledgeReturn to reference °
- °: black magicReturn to reference °

SCENE 1

[Enter FAUSTUS in his study.]

FAUSTUS   Settle thy studies, Faustus, and begin
To sound the depth of that thou wilt profess:
Having commenced, be a divine in show,<sup>2</sup>
Yet level<sup>o</sup> at the end of every art,
And live and die in Aristotle's works.
5   Sweet Analytics,<sup>3</sup> 'tis thou hast ravished me.
    Bene disserere est finis logices.<sup>4</sup>
Is to dispute well logic's chiefest end?
Affords this art no greater miracle?
Then read no more, thou hast attained the end;
10   A greater subject fitteth Faustus' wit.<sup>o</sup>
    Bid on kai me on<sup>5</sup> farewell; Galen<sup>6</sup> come:
    Seeing, ubi desinit philosophus, ibi incipit medicus.<sup>7</sup>
Be a physician, Faustus, heap up gold,
And be eternized for some wondrous cure.
15   Summum bonum medicinae sanitas.<sup>8</sup>
The end of physic<sup>o</sup> is our body's health.
Why Faustus, hast thou not attained that end?
Is not thy common talk found aphorisms?<sup>9</sup>
Are not thy bills<sup>o</sup> hung up as monuments, 20   Whereby whole cities have escaped the plague,
And thousand desperate maladies been eased?
Yet art thou still but Faustus, and a man.
Couldst thou make men to live eternally,
Or, being dead, raise them to life again,
25   Then this profession were to be esteemed.
Physic farewell! Where is Justinian?<sup>1</sup>
    Si una eademque res legatur duobus,
    Alter rem alter valorem rei, etc.<sup>2</sup>
30   A pretty case of paltry legacies.<sup>3</sup>

Such is the subject of the Institute
And universal Body of the Law:
This study fits a mercenary drudge
Who aims at nothing but external trash!
35 Too servile and illiberal for me.
When all is done, divinity is best.
Jerome's Bible,<sup>4</sup> Faustus, view it well:
Stipendium peccati mors est.<sup>5</sup> ha! Stipendium, etc.
The reward of sin is death? That's hard.
40 Si pecasse negamus, fallimur, et nulla est in nobis
veritas.<sup>6</sup>
If we say that we have no sin,
We deceive ourselves, and there's no truth in us.
Why then belike<sup>o</sup> we must sin,
And so consequently die.
45 Ay, we must die an everlasting death.
What doctrine call you this? Che sarà, sarà:
What will be, shall be? Divinity, adieu!
These metaphysics<sup>o</sup> of magicians
And necromantic books are heavenly!
50 Lines, circles, schemes, letters, and characters!
Ay, these are those that Faustus most desires.
O what a world of profit and delight,
Of power, of honor, of omnipotence
Is promised to the studious artisan!<sup>7</sup>
55 All things that move between the quiet<sup>o</sup> poles
Shall be at my command: emperors and kings
Are but obeyed in their several<sup>o</sup> provinces,
Nor can they raise the wind, or rend the clouds;
But his dominion that exceeds in this 60 Stretcheth as far as doth the mind of man:
A sound magician is a mighty god.
Here, Faustus, try thy brains to gain a deity.
[Enter WAGNER.]
Wagner, commend me to my dearest friends,

65 The German Valdes and Cornelius,
Request them earnestly to visit me.
WAGNER I will, sir. [Exit.] FAUSTUS Their conference will be a greater help to
me
Than all my labors, plod I ne'er so fast.
[Enter the GOOD ANGEL and the EVIL ANGEL.]
70 GOOD ANGEL O Faustus, lay that damnèd book aside,
And gaze not on it, lest it tempt thy soul
And heap God's heavy wrath upon thy head:
Read, read the Scriptures; that is blasphemy.
EVIL ANGEL Go forward, Faustus, in that famous art,
Wherein all nature's treasury is contained:
75 Be thou on earth as Jove<sup>8</sup> is in the sky,
Lord and commander of these elements. [Exeunt.]
FAUSTUS How am I gluttèd with conceit<sup>o</sup> of this!
Shall I make spirits fetch me what I please,
Resolve me of all ambiguities,
80 Perform what desperate<sup>o</sup> enterprise I will?
I'll have them fly to India for gold,
Ransack the ocean for orient pearl,<sup>9</sup>
And search all corners of the new-found world
For pleasant fruits and princely delicacies.
85 I'll have them read me strange philosophy,
And tell the secrets of all foreign kings;
I'll have them wall all Germany with brass,
And make swift Rhine circle fair Wittenberg;<sup>1</sup>
I'll have them fill the public schools<sup>2</sup> with silk, 90 Wherewith the students shall be bravely<sup>o</sup> clad.
I'll levy soldiers with the coin they bring,
And chase the Prince of Parma<sup>3</sup> from our land,
And reign sole king of all our provinces.
Yea, stranger engines for the brunt of war
95 Than was the fiery keel at Antwerp's bridge,<sup>4</sup>
I'll make my servile spirits to invent.

Come German Valdes and Cornelius,
And make me blest with your sage conference.

[Enter VALDES and CORNELIUS.]

100 Valdes, sweet Valdes, and Cornelius,
Know that your words have won me at the last
To practise magic and concealèd<sup>o</sup> arts;
Yet not your words only, but mine own fantasy,<sup>o</sup>
That will receive no object<sup>5</sup> for my head,
But ruminates on necromantic skill.
105 Philosophy is odious and obscure,
Both law and physic are for petty wits;
Divinity is basest of the three,
Unpleasant, harsh, contemptible, and vile.
'Tis magic, magic that hath ravished me.
110 Then, gentle friends, aid me in this attempt,
And I, that have with concise syllogisms
Graveled<sup>o</sup> the pastors of the German church
And made the flowering pride of Wittenberg
Swarm to my problems<sup>6</sup> as the infernal spirits
115 On sweet Musaeus when he came to hell,<sup>7</sup>
Will be as cunning as Agrippa was,
Whose shadows made all Europe honor him.<sup>8</sup> VALDES Faustus, these books, thy wit,<sup>o</sup> and our experience
Shall make all nations to canonize us.
120 As Indian Moors<sup>9</sup> obey their Spanish lords,
So shall the spirits of every element
Be always serviceable to us three.
Like lions shall they guard us when we please,
Like Almaine rutters<sup>o</sup> with their horsemen's staves,
125 Or Lapland giants trotting by our sides;
Sometimes like women, or unwedded maids,
Shadowing<sup>o</sup> more beauty in their airy brows
Than in the white breasts of the Queen of Love.
From Venice shall they drag huge argosies,<sup>o</sup>

130 And from America the golden fleece
That yearly stuffs old Philip's treasury,<sup>1</sup>
If learned Faustus will be resolute.
FAUSTUS Valdes, as resolute am I in this
As thou to live, therefore object it not.<sup>2</sup>
135 CORNELIUS The miracles that magic will perform
Will make thee vow to study nothing else.
He that is grounded in astrology,
Enriched with tongues,<sup>o</sup> well seen<sup>o</sup> in minerals,
Hath all the principles magic doth require:
140 Then doubt not, Faustus, but to be renowned
And more frequented<sup>o</sup> for this mystery<sup>o</sup>
Than heretofore the Delphian oracle.<sup>3</sup>
The spirits tell me they can dry the sea,
And fetch the treasure of all foreign wrecks,
145 Ay, all the wealth that our forefathers hid
Within the massy<sup>o</sup> entrails of the earth.
Then tell me, Faustus, what shall we three want?<sup>o</sup>
FAUSTUS Nothing, Cornelius. O this cheers my soul!
Come, show me some demonstrations magical,
150 That I may conjure in some lusty<sup>o</sup> grove,
And have these joys in full possession.
VALDES Then haste thee to some solitary grove,
And bear wise Bacon's and Abanus<sup>4</sup> works,
The Hebrew Psalter, and New Testament;
155 And whatsoever else is requisite
We will inform thee ere our conference cease.
CORNELIUS Valdes, first let him know the words of art,<sup>5</sup>
And then, all other ceremonies learned,
Faustus may try his cunning by himself.
160 VALDES First I'll instruct thee in the rudiments,
And then wilt thou be perfecter<sup>o</sup> than I.
FAUSTUS Then come and dine with me, and after meat

We'll canvass every quiddity<sup>o</sup> thereof:
For ere I sleep, I'll try what I can do.
165 This night I'll conjure,<sup>o</sup> though<sup>o</sup> I die therefore.
[Exeunt.]

Endnotes

- Note 2: In external appearance. "Commenced": graduated, that is, received the doctor's degree.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: The title of two treatises on logic by Aristotle.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: To carry on a disputation well is the end [or purpose] of logic (Latin). Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Being and not being (Greek); here standing for philosophical studies in general.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: The supreme ancient authority on medicine (2nd century C.E.).Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Where the philosopher leaves off the physician begins (Latin). Return to reference 7
- Note 8: The Latin is translated in the following line.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: That is, generally accepted wisdom.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Roman emperor and authority on law (483–565 C.E.). The Latin passages that follow paraphrase Justinian's Institutiones, a manual included in his Corpus Iuris (Body of the Law); see lines 32–33.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: If something is bequeathed to two persons, one shall have the thing itself, the other something of equal value.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: A father cannot disinherit his son unless . . .Return to reference 3
- Note 4: The Latin translation, or Vulgate, of Saint Jerome (ca. 340–420 C.E.).Return to reference 4

- Note 5: Romans 6:23. But Faustus reads only part of the scripture verse: "For the wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord."Return to reference 5
- Note 6: I John 1:8 (translated in the following two lines).Return to reference 6
- Note 7: A practitioner of an art; here, necromancy.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: God—a common substitution in Elizabethan drama.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Pearl of Orient—the especially lustrous pearl from the seas around India.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Wittenberg is in fact on the Elbe River.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: The university lecture rooms.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: The Duke of Parma, the Spanish governor-general of the Low Countries from 1579 to 1592. In 1588 he commanded the Spanish Armada in its failed attempt to invade England.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: A reference to the burning ship sent by the Protestant Netherlands in 1585 against the barrier on the river Scheldt that Parma had built as a part of the blockade of Antwerp.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: That will pay no attention to physical reality.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Questions posed for public academic disputation.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Musaeus was a legendary singer, supposed son of Orpheus; it was, however, Orpheus who charmed the denizens of hell with his music.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Cornelius Agrippa, German author of The Vanity and Uncertainty of Arts and Sciences (1530), was popularly believed to have had the power of calling up the "shadows" or shades of the dead.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Dark-skinned Native Americans. ("India" in the period could refer to either the East Indies or the West Indies.)Return

to reference 9

- Note 1: Comparing the treasures Philip II of Spain received from the Americas to the Golden Fleece taken, in Greek mythology, from Colchis by Jason and the Argonauts. (Evidently the Venetian argosies put Marlowe in mind of Jason's ship, the Argo.)Return to reference 1
- Note 2: That is, do not make an issue of my resolve.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: The oracle of Apollo at Delphi in Greece.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Roger Bacon, the 13th-century friar and scientist popularly thought to be a magician, and Pietro d'Abano, 13th-century alchemist.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: That is, the technical terms.Return to reference 5

Notes

- °: aimReturn to reference °
- °: intellectReturn to reference °
- °: medicineReturn to reference °
- °: prescriptionsReturn to reference °
- °: in all likelihoodReturn to reference °
- °: occult loreReturn to reference °
- °: unmovingReturn to reference °
- °: separateReturn to reference °
- °: filled with the ideaReturn to reference °
- °: recklessReturn to reference °
- °: splendidlyReturn to reference °
- °: occultReturn to reference °
- °: imaginationReturn to reference °
- °: confoundedReturn to reference °
- °: intellectReturn to reference °
- °: German horsemenReturn to reference °
- °: harboringReturn to reference °
- °: merchant shipsReturn to reference °

- °: languages Return to reference °
- °: expert Return to reference °
- °: visited Return to reference °
- °: craft Return to reference °
- °: massive Return to reference °
- °: lack Return to reference °
- °: pleasant Return to reference °
- °: more accomplished Return to reference °
- °: essential feature Return to reference °
- °: call up spirits Return to reference °
- °: even if Return to reference °

SCENE 2

[Enter two SCHOLARS.]

1 SCHOLAR I wonder what's become of Faustus, that was wont to make our schools ring with sic probo.<sup>6</sup>

2 SCHOLAR That shall we know; for see, here comes his boy.<sup>7</sup>

[Enter WAGNER.]

1 SCHOLAR How now, sirra,<sup>8</sup> where's thy master?

WAGNER God in heaven knows.

5

2 SCHOLAR Why, dost not thou know?

WAGNER Yes I know, but that follows not.

1 SCHOLAR Go to,<sup>9</sup> sirra, leave your jesting, and tell us where he is.

WAGNER That follows not necessary by force of argument, that you, being licentiates,<sup>1</sup> should stand upon't; therefore acknowledge your error, and be attentive.

10

2 SCHOLAR Why, didst thou not say thou knew'st?

WAGNER Have you any witness on't?

1 SCHOLAR Yes, sirra, I heard you.

WAGNER Ask my fellow if I be a thief.<sup>2</sup>

15

2 SCHOLAR Well, you will not tell us.

WAGNER Yes sir, I will tell you; yet if you were not dunces you would never ask me such a question. For is not he corpus naturale? And is not that mobile?<sup>3</sup> Then wherefore should you ask me such a question?

20

But that I am by nature phlegmatic,<sup>4</sup> slow to wrath and prone to lechery—to love I would say—it were not for you to come within forty foot of the place of execution,<sup>5</sup> although I do not doubt to see you both hanged the next sessions.<sup>6</sup> Thus having triumphed over you, I will set my countenance like a precisian,<sup>7</sup> and begin to speak

thus: Truly, my dear brethren, my master is within 25 at dinner with Valdes and Cornelius, as this wine, if it could speak, it would inform your worships. And so the Lord bless you, preserve you, and keep you, my dear brethren, my dear brethren.
[Exit.]

1 SCHOLAR Nay then, I fear he is fallen into that damned art, for which they two are infamous through the world.
30 2 SCHOLAR Were he a stranger, and not allied to me, yet should I grieve for him. But come, let us go and inform the rector,<sup>8</sup> and see if he by his grave counsel can reclaim him.
1 SCHOLAR O but I fear me nothing can reclaim
him.
2 SCHOLAR Yet let us try what we can do.
35 [Exeunt.]

Endnotes

- Note 6: Thus I prove; a phrase in scholastic disputation. Return to reference 6
- Note 7: In this case, a poor student acting as a servant to earn his living. Return to reference 7

- Note 8: A variant of “sir,” used condescendingly.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Come on!Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Graduate students.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: That is, the testimony of your companion (“fellow”) is worth no more than one thief’s testimony for another.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Corpus naturale et mobile (matter natural and movable) was a scholastic definition of the subject matter of physics. Wagner is here parodying the language of learning at the university.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Dominated by the phlegm, one of the four humors (bodily fluids) whose relative proportions were thought to determine a person’s physical and psychological qualities.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: That is, if I were not slow to anger, it would be fatally dangerous for you to come near me.Return to reference 5
- Note 6:ittings of a court.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Puritan. The rest of his speech is in the style of the Puritans. Return to reference 7
- Note 8: The head of a German university.Return to reference 8

SCENE 3

[Enter FAUSTUS to conjure.]

FAUSTUS Now that the gloomy shadow of the earth,
Longing to view Orion's drizzling look,<sup>9</sup>
Leaps from th'antarctic world unto the sky,
And dims the welkin<sup>o</sup> with her pitchy breath,
Faustus, begin thine incantations,
5 And try if devils will obey thy hest,<sup>o</sup>
Seeing thou hast prayed and sacrificed to them.
Within this circle<sup>1</sup> is Jehovah's name,
Forward and backward anagrammatized;
Th'bbreviated names of holy saints,
10 Figures of every adjunct<sup>2</sup> to the heavens,
And characters of signs and erring stars,<sup>3</sup>
By which the spirits are enforced to rise.
Then fear not Faustus, but be resolute,
And try the uttermost magic can perform.
15 Sint mihi dei Acherontis propitii! Valeat numen triplex Jehovae!
Ignei, aerii, aquatici, terreni spiritus salvete! Orientis princeps,
inferni ardentis monarcha, et Demogorgon,<sup>5</sup>
propitiamus vos ut appareat et surgat
Mephastophilis. Quid tu moraris? Per Jehovah,
Gehennam, et consecratam aquam quam nunc
20 spargo, signumque
crucis quod nunc facio, et per vota nostra, ipse nunc
surgat nobis
dicatus Mephastophilis.<sup>6</sup>

[Enter a DEVIL.]

I charge thee to return and change thy shape,
Thou art too ugly to attend on me;
Go and return an old Franciscan friar,

25       [Exit DEVIL.]
 That holy shape becomes a devil best.
 I see there's virtue<sup>o</sup> in my heavenly words!
 Who would not be proficient in this art?
 How pliant is this Mephastophilis,
 Full of obedience and humility,
 30       Such is the force of magic and my spells.
 Now Faustus, thou art conjurer laureate<sup>o</sup>
 That canst command great Mephastophilis.
Quin redis, Mephastophilis, fratris imagine!<sup>7</sup>
           [Enter MEPHASTOPHILIS.]
 35       MEPHASTOPHILIS   Now Faustus, what would'st thou have me do?
           FAUSTUS   I charge thee wait upon me whilst I live,
                     To do whatever Faustus shall command,
                     Be it to make the moon drop from her sphere,
                     Or the ocean to overwhelm the world.
 40       MEPHASTOPHILIS   I am a servant to great Lucifer,
           And may not follow thee without his leave;
           No more than he commands must we perform.
           FAUSTUS   Did not he charge thee to appear to me?
           MEPHASTOPHILIS   No, I came now hither of mine own accord.
 45       FAUSTUS   Did not my conjuring speeches raise thee?
           Speak!
           MEPHASTOPHILIS   That was the cause, but yet per accidens,<sup>8</sup>
           For when we hear one rack<sup>9</sup> the name of God,
           Abjure<sup>o</sup> the Scriptures, and his savior Christ,
           We fly in hope to get his glorious soul;
           Nor will we come unless he use such means
 50       Whereby he is in danger to be damned:
           Therefore the shortest cut for conjuring
           Is stoutly to abjure the Trinity,
           And pray devoutly to the prince of hell.

55 FAUSTUS So Faustus hath already done, and holds this principle:
There is no chief but only Belzebub,
To whom Faustus doth dedicate himself.
This word damnation terrifies not him,
For he confounds hell in Elysium:
60 His ghost be with the old philosophers.<sup>1</sup>
But leaving these vain trifles of men's souls,
Tell me, what is that Lucifer thy lord?
MEPHASTOPHILIS Arch-regent and commander of all spirits.
FAUSTUS Was not that Lucifer an angel once?
MEPHASTOPHILIS Yes Faustus, and most dearly loved 65 of God.
FAUSTUS How comes it then that he is prince of devils?
MEPHASTOPHILIS O, by aspiring pride and insolence,
For which God threw him from the face of heaven.
FAUSTUS And what are you that live with Lucifer?
MEPHASTOPHILIS Unhappy spirits that fell with Lucifer,
70 Conspired against our God with Lucifer,
And are forever damned with Lucifer.
FAUSTUS Where are you damned?
MEPHASTOPHILIS In hell.
FAUSTUS How comes it then that thou art out of hell?
75 MEPHASTOPHILIS Why this is hell, nor am I out of it.
Think'st thou that I, who saw the face of God,
And tasted the eternal joys of heaven,
Am not tormented with ten thousand hells
In being deprived of everlasting bliss?<sup>2</sup>
80 O Faustus, leave these frivolous demands,<sup>o</sup>
Which strike a terror to my fainting soul.
FAUSTUS What, is great Mephistophilis so passionate
For being deprived of the joys of heaven?
Learn thou of Faustus manly fortitude,
85

And scorn those joys thou never shalt possess.
 Go bear these tidings to great Lucifer:
 Seeing Faustus hath incurred eternal death
 By desp'rate thoughts against Jove's deity,
 Say he surrenders up to him his soul,
 90 So<sup>o</sup> he will spare him four and twenty years,
 Letting him live in all voluptuousness,
 Having thee ever to attend on me,
 To give me whatsoever I shall ask,
 To tell me whatsoever I demand,
 95 To slay mine enemies and aid my friends,
 And always be obedient to my will.
 Go, and return to mighty Lucifer,
 And meet me in my study at midnight
 And then resolve me of thy master's mind.<sup>3</sup>
 100 MEPHASTOPHILIS I will, Faustus. [Exit.]
 FAUSTUS Had I as many souls as there be stars,
 I'd give them all for Mephastophilis.
 By him I'll be great emperor of the world,
 And make a bridge through the moving air
 105 To pass the ocean with a band of men;
 I'll join the hills that bind the Afric shore,
 And make that land continent to<sup>o</sup> Spain,
 And both contributory to my crown.
 The emperor<sup>o</sup> shall not live but by my leave,
 110 Nor any potentate of Germany.
 Now that I have obtained what I desire,
 I'll live in speculation<sup>o</sup> of this art
 Till Mephastophilis return again. [Exit.]

Endnotes

- Note 9: The constellation Orion appears at the beginning of winter. The phrase is a reminiscence of Virgil.Return to reference 9

- Note 1: The magic circle drawn on the ground, within which the magician would be safe from the spirits he conjured.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Heavenly body thought to be joined to the solid firmament of the sky.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: The moving planets. "Characters of signs": signs of the zodiac and the planets.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Lord of the Flies; an ancient Phoenician deity. In Matthew 12:24 he is called "the prince of the devils."Return to reference 4
- Note 5: In Renaissance versions of classical mythology, a mysterious primeval god.Return to reference 5
- Note 6:
Faustus's Latin conjures the devils: "May the gods of the lower regions favor me! Farewell to the Trinity! Hail, spirits of fire, air, water, and earth! Prince of the East, Belzebub, monarch of burning hell, and Demogorgon, we pray to you that Mephistophilis may appear and rise. What are you waiting for? By Jehovah, Gehenna, and the holy water that I now sprinkle, and the sign of the cross that I now make, and by our vows, may Mephistophilis himself now rise to serve us."
Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Return, Mephistophilis, in the shape of a friar.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: The immediate, not ultimate, cause.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Torture; here, by anagrammatizing.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Faustus considers hell to be the Elysium of the classical philosophers, not the Christian hell of torment.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: This is the punishment of loss of God's presence, which is supposed to be the greatest torment of hell.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: That is, give me his decision.Return to reference 3

Notes

- °: skyReturn to reference °
- °: commandReturn to reference °
- °: powerReturn to reference °
- °: preeminentReturn to reference °
- °: repudiateReturn to reference °
- °: questionsReturn to reference °
- °: on condition thatReturn to reference °
- °: connected toReturn to reference °
- °: Holy Roman EmperorReturn to reference °
- °: contemplationReturn to reference °

SCENE 4

[Enter WAGNER and the CLOWN.<sup>4</sup>]

WAGNER Sirra boy, come hither.

CLOWN How, boy? Zounds,<sup>5</sup> boy! I hope you have seen many boys with such pickadevants as I have. Boy, quotha!<sup>6</sup>

WAGNER Tell me, sirra, hast thou any comings in?<sup>7</sup>

CLOWN Ay, and goings out too; you may see else.<sup>8</sup>

5 WAGNER Alas poor slave, see how poverty jesteth in his nakedness!

The villain is bare, and out of service,<sup>9</sup> and so hungry that I know he would give his soul to the devil for a shoulder of mutton, though it were blood raw.

10 CLOWN How, my soul to the devil for a shoulder of mutton though

'twere blood raw? Not so good, friend; by'rlady,<sup>1</sup> I had need have it well roasted, and good sauce to it, if I pay so dear.

WAGNER Well, wilt thou serve me, and I'll make thee go like qui mihi discipulus?<sup>2</sup>

CLOWN How, in verse?

15 WAGNER No, sirra; in beaten silk and stavesacre.<sup>3</sup>

CLOWN How, how, knavesacre?<sup>4</sup> Ay, I thought that was all the land his father left him! Do ye hear, I would be sorry to rob you of your living.

WAGNER Sirra, I say in stavesacre.

20 CLOWN Oho, oho, stavesacre! Why then belike, if I were your man,

I should be full of vermin.

WAGNER So thou shalt, whether thou be'st with me or
no. But sirra, leave your jesting, and bind yourself presently unto me for seven
25 years, or I'll turn all the lice about thee into familiar<sup>5</sup>, and they shall tear thee in pieces.

CLOWN Do you hear, sir? You may save that labor: they are too familiar with me already—zounds, they are as bold with my flesh as if they had paid for my meat and drink.

WAGNER Well, do you hear, sirra? Hold, take these 30 guilders.<sup>6</sup>

CLOWN Gridirons; what be they?

WAGNER Why, French crowns.<sup>7</sup>

CLOWN 'Mass, but for the name of French crowns a man were as good have as many English counters!<sup>8</sup> And what should I do with these?

35 WAGNER Why, now, sirra, thou art at an hour's warning whensoever or wheresoever the devil shall fetch thee.

CLOWN No, no, here take your gridirons again.

WAGNER Truly I'll none of them.

CLOWN Truly but you shall.

40 WAGNER Bear witness I gave them him.

CLOWN Bear witness I give them you again.

WAGNER Well, I will cause two devils presently to fetch thee away.

Baliol<sup>9</sup> and Belcher!

45 CLOWN Let your Baliol and your Belcher come here, and I'll knock<sup>1</sup> them, they were never so knocked since they were devils! Say I should kill one of them, what would folks say? "Do ye see yonder tall fellow in the round slop?<sup>2</sup> He has killed the devil!" So I should be called "Killdevil" all the parish over.

[Enter two DEVILS, and the CLOWN runs up and down crying.]

50 WAGNER Baliol and Belcher, spirits, away! [Exeunt DEVILS.]

CLOWN What, are they gone? A vengeance on them!
They have vile long nails. There was a he devil and a she devil. I'll tell you how you shall know them: all he devils has horns,<sup>3</sup> and all she devils has clefts and cloven feet.

WAGNER Well, sirra, follow me.

55 CLOWN But do you hear? If I should serve you, would you teach me
to raise up Banios and Belcheos?

WAGNER I will teach thee to turn thyself to anything, to a dog, or a cat, or a mouse, or a rat, or anything.

60 CLOWN How! A Christian fellow to a dog or a cat, a mouse or a rat?
No, no, sir, if you turn me into anything, let it be in the likeness of a little pretty frisking flea, that I may be here, and there, and everywhere.
O I'll tickle the pretty wenches' plackets!<sup>4</sup> I'll be amongst them, i'faith.<sup>5</sup>

WAGNER Well, sirra, come.

65 CLOWN But do you hear, Wagner . . . ?
 WAGNER How? Baliol and Belcher!
 CLOWN O Lord I pray, sir, let Banio and Belcher go
 sleep.
 WAGNER Villain, call me Master Wagner; and let thy left eye be 70 diametrically fixed upon my right heel, with quasi vestigias nostras
 insistere.<sup>6</sup>
 [Exit.]
 CLOWN God forgive me, he speaks Dutch fustian!<sup>7</sup> Well, I'll follow him, I'll serve him; that's flat.
 [Exit.]

Endnotes

- Note 4: Not a court jester (as in some of Shakespeare's plays) but an older stock character, a rustic buffoon.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: God's wounds; an oath.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Says he. The point of the clown's retort is that he is a man and wears a beard. "Pickadevants": small, pointed beards.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Income, but the clown then puns on the literal meaning.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: That is, if you don't believe me.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Out of a job.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: By Our Lady; an oath.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: You who are my pupil (the opening phrase of a poem on how students should behave, from Lily's Latin Grammar, ca. 1509). Wagner means "like a proper servant of a learned man."Return to reference 2
- Note 3: A preparation from delphinium seeds, used for killing vermin.Return to reference 3

- Note 4: Wordplay, here and in the following lines.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Familiar spirits, demons. "Bind yourself": that is, as apprentice. "Presently": immediately.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Coins. "Hold": here.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: The coins, legal tender in England at this period, were easily counterfeited.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Worthless tokens. " 'Mass": by the Mass.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Probably a corruption of Belial.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Beat.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Baggy pants. "Tall": fine.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Traditional mark both of devils and of cuckolded husbands.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Slits in garments—but with an obvious sexual allusion.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: In faith; an oath.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: A pedantic way of saying "Follow my footsteps." "Diametarily": diametrically.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Gibberish.Return to reference 7

SCENE 5

[Enter FAUSTUS in his study.]

FAUSTUS Now Faustus, must thou needs be damned,
And canst thou not be saved.

What boots<sup>o</sup> it then to think of God or heaven?

Away with such vain fancies, and despair,

Despair in God, and trust in Belzebub.

5

Now go not backward: no, Faustus, be resolute;

Why waverest thou? O, something soundeth in mine ears:

"Abjure this magic, turn to God again."

Ay, and Faustus will turn to God again.

To God? He loves thee not:

10

The god thou servest is thine own appetite,

Wherein is fixed the love of Belzebub.

To him I'll build an altar and a church,

And offer lukewarm blood of newborn babes.

[Enter GOOD ANGEL and EVIL.]

15

GOOD ANGEL Sweet Faustus, leave that execrable<sup>o</sup>
art.

FAUSTUS Contrition, prayer, repentance: what of
them?

GOOD ANGEL O they are means to bring thee unto heaven.

EVIL ANGEL Rather illusions, fruits of lunacy,

That makes men foolish that do trust them most.

20

GOOD ANGEL Sweet Faustus, think of heaven, and heavenly things.

EVIL ANGEL No, Faustus, think of honor and of wealth. [Exeunt.]

FAUSTUS Of wealth!

Why, the signory<sup>o</sup> of Emden<sup>8</sup> shall be mine,

When Mephistophilis shall stand by me.

25       What god can hurt thee, Faustus? Thou art safe,
Cast no more doubts. Come, Mephastophilis,
And bring glad tidings from great Lucifer.
Is't not midnight? Come, Mephastophilis:
Veni, veni, Mephastophile!<sup>9</sup>
          [Enter MEPHASTOPHILIS.]
Now tell, what says Lucifer thy lord?
30       MEPHASTOPHILIS   That I shall wait on Faustus whilst he lives,
So<sup>o</sup> he will buy my service with his soul.
FAUSTUS   Already Faustus hath hazarded that for thee.
MEPHASTOPHILIS   But Faustus, thou must bequeath it solemnly,
And write a deed of gift with thine own blood,
35       For that security<sup>o</sup> craves great Lucifer.
If thou deny it, I will back to hell.
FAUSTUS   Stay, Mephastophilis, and tell me,
What good will my soul do thy lord?
MEPHASTOPHILIS   Enlarge his kingdom.
40       FAUSTUS   Is that the reason he tempts us thus?
MEPHASTOPHILIS   Solamen miseris socios habuisse
          doloris.<sup>1</sup>
FAUSTUS   Have you any pain that tortures others?
MEPHASTOPHILIS   As great as have the human souls of men.
But tell me Faustus, shall I have thy soul?
45       And I will be thy slave and wait on thee,
And give thee more than thou hast wit to ask.
FAUSTUS   Ay Mephastophilis, I give it thee.
MEPHASTOPHILIS   Then stab thine arm courageously,
And bind thy soul, that at some certain day
50       Great Lucifer may claim it as his own,
And then be thou as great as Lucifer.
FAUSTUS   Lo Mephastophilis, for love of thee,

I cut my arm, and with my proper<sup>o</sup> blood
Assure my soul to be great Lucifer's,
55 Chief lord and regent of perpetual night.
View here the blood that trickles from mine arm,
And let it be propitious for my wish.
MEPHASTOPHILIS But Faustus, thou must write it
In manner of a deed of gift.
60 FAUSTUS Ay, so I will; but, Mephastophilis,
My blood congeals and I can write no more.
MEPHASTOPHILIS I'll fetch thee fire to dissolve it straight. [Exit.]
FAUSTUS What might the staying of my blood portend?
Is it unwilling I should write this bill?<sup>o</sup>
65 Why streams it not, that I may write afresh:
"Faustus gives to thee his soul"? Ah, there it stayed!
Why should'st thou not? Is not thy soul thine own?
Then write again: "Faustus gives to thee his soul."
[Enter MEPHASTOPHILIS with a chafer<sup>o</sup> of coals. ] MEPHASTOPHILIS Here's fire, come Faustus, set it on.
70 FAUSTUS So, now the blood begins to clear again.
Now will I make an end immediately.
MEPHASTOPHILIS O what will not I do to obtain his soul!
FAUSTUS Consummatus est,<sup>2</sup> this bill is ended,
And Faustus hath bequeathed his soul to Lucifer.
75 But what is this inscription on mine arm?
Homo fuge.<sup>o</sup> Whither should I fly?
If unto God, he'll throw me down to hell.
My senses are deceived, here's nothing writ;
I see it plain, here in this place is writ,
80 Homo fuge! Yet shall not Faustus fly.
MEPHASTOPHILIS I'll fetch him somewhat to delight his mind. [Exit.]

[Enter with DEVILS, giving crowns and rich apparel to FAUSTUS, and dance, and then depart.]

FAUSTUS Speak, Mephastophilis, what means this show?

MEPHASTOPHILIS Nothing, Faustus, but to delight thy mind withal,

85 And to show thee what magic can perform.

FAUSTUS But may I raise up spirits when I please?

MEPHASTOPHILIS Ay, Faustus, and do greater things than these.

FAUSTUS Then there's enough for a thousand souls!
Here, Mephastophilis, receive this scroll,
90 A deed of gift of body and of soul:

But yet conditionally, that thou perform
All articles prescribed between us both.

MEPHASTOPHILIS Faustus, I swear by hell and Lucifer
To effect all promises between us made.

95 FAUSTUS Then hear me read them. On these conditions following:

First, that Faustus may be a spirit<sup>3</sup> in form and substance.

Secondly, that Mephastophilis shall be his servant, and at his command.

Thirdly, that Mephastophilis shall do for him, and bring him whatsoever.

100 Fourthly, that he shall be in his chamber or house invisible.

Lastly, that he shall appear to the said John Faustus at all times, in what form or shape soever he please.

I, John Faustus of Wittenberg, doctor, by these presents,<sup>4</sup> do give both body and soul to Lucifer, Prince of the East, and his minister

Mephastophilis; and furthermore grant unto them that, four and twenty years being expired, the articles above-written inviolate, full power to fetch or carry the said John Faustus, body and soul, flesh,

blood, or goods, into their habitation wheresoever.

By me John Faustus.

110 MEPHASTOPHILIS Speak, Faustus: do you deliver this as your deed?

FAUSTUS Ay, take it; and the devil give thee good
on't.

MEPHASTOPHILIS Now, Faustus, ask what thou wilt.

FAUSTUS First will I question with thee about hell:

Tell me, where is the place that men call hell?

115 MEPHASTOPHILIS Under the heavens.

FAUSTUS Ay, but whereabouts?

MEPHASTOPHILIS Within the bowels of these elements,
Where we are tortured and remain for ever.

Hell hath no limits, nor is circumscribed

120 In one self place; for where we are is hell,

And where hell is, there must we ever be.

And to conclude, when all the world dissolves,

And every creature shall be purified,

All places shall be hell that is not heaven.

125 FAUSTUS Come, I think hell's a fable.

MEPHASTOPHILIS Ay, think so still, till experience change thy mind.

FAUSTUS Why? think'st thou then that Faustus shall be damned?

MEPHASTOPHILIS Ay, of necessity, for here's the scroll
Wherein thou hast given thy soul to Lucifer.

130 FAUSTUS Ay, and body too; but what of that?

Think'st thou that Faustus is so fond<sup>o</sup> to imagine

That after this life there is any pain?
 Tush, these are trifles and mere old wives' tales.
 MEPHASTOPHILIS But Faustus, I am an instance to prove the contrary:
 135 For I am damned, and am now in hell.
 FAUSTUS How, now in hell? Nay, and this be hell, I'll willingly be damned here! What? walking, disputing, etc. . . . But leaving off
 this, let me have a wife, the fairest maid in Germany, for I am wanton and lascivious, and cannot live without a 140 wife.
 MEPHASTOPHILIS How, a wife? I prithee Faustus, talk not of a wife.<sup>5</sup> FAUSTUS Nay sweet Mephistophilis, fetch me one, for I will have one.
 MEPHASTOPHILIS Well, thou wilt have one; sit there till
 I come.
 I'll fetch thee a wife in the devil's name. [Exit.] 145 [Enter with a DEVIL dressed like a woman, with fireworks.]
 MEPHASTOPHILIS Tell, Faustus, how dost thou like thy wife?
 FAUSTUS A plague on her for a hot whore!
 MEPHASTOPHILIS Tut, Faustus, marriage is but a ceremonial toy;
 If thou lovest me, think no more of it.
 I'll cull thee out the fairest courtesans
 150 And bring them every morning to thy bed:
 She whom thine eye shall like, thy heart shall have,
 Be she as chaste as was Penelope,<sup>6</sup>
 As wise as Saba,<sup>7</sup> or as beautiful
 As was bright Lucifer before his fall.
 155

Hold, take this book, peruse it thoroughly:
The iterating<sup>o</sup> of these lines brings gold;
The framing<sup>o</sup> of this circle on the ground
Brings whirlwinds, tempests, thunder and lightning.
Pronounce this thrice devoutly to thyself,
160 And men in armor shall appear to thee,
Ready to execute what thou desirest.
FAUSTUS Thanks, Mephastophilis, yet fain would I have a book wherein I might behold all spells and incantations, that I might raise up spirits when I please.
165 MEPHASTOPHILIS Here they are in this book. [There turn to them.]
FAUSTUS Now would I have a book where I might see all characters and planets of the heavens, that I might know their motions and dispositions.<sup>8</sup>
MEPHASTOPHILIS Here they are too. [Turn to them.]
170 FAUSTUS Nay, let me have one book more, and then I have done, wherein I might see all plants, herbs, and trees that grow upon the earth.
MEPHASTOPHILIS Here they be.
FAUSTUS O thou art deceived!
175 MEPHASTOPHILIS Tut, I warrant<sup>9</sup> thee. [*Turn to
them.*]
FAUSTUS When I behold the heavens, then I repent,
And curse thee, wicked Mephastophilis,
Because thou hast deprived me of those joys.
MEPHASTOPHILIS Why Faustus,
180 Think'st thou that heaven is such a glorious thing?
I tell thee 'tis not half so fair as thou,
Or any man that breathes on earth.
FAUSTUS How prov'st thou that?
MEPHASTOPHILIS It was made for man, therefore is man 185 more excellent.

FAUSTUS If it were made for man, 'twas made for me:

I will renounce this magic, and repent.

[Enter GOOD ANGEL and EVIL ANGEL.]

GOOD ANGEL Faustus, repent, yet<sup>o</sup> God will pity thee.

EVIL ANGEL Thou art a spirit,<sup>o</sup> God cannot pity thee.

190 FAUSTUS Who buzzeth in mine ears I am a spirit?
Be I a devil, yet God may pity me.

Ay, God will pity me if I repent.

EVIL ANGEL Ay, but Faustus never shall repent.

[Exeunt.]

195 FAUSTUS My heart's so hardened I cannot repent!
Scarce can I name salvation, faith, or heaven,
But fearful echoes thunders in mine ears,
"Faustus, thou are damned"; then swords and knives,

Poison, guns, halters,<sup>o</sup> and envenomed steel
Are laid before me to dispatch myself:
And long ere this I should have slain myself,
200 Had not sweet pleasure conquered deep despair.

Have I not made blind Homer sing to me
Of Alexander's<sup>1</sup> love, and Oenon's death?
And hath not he that built the walls of Thebes
205 With ravishing sound of his melodious harp,<sup>2</sup>
Made music with my Mephistophilis?

Why should I die then, or basely despair?
I am resolved! Faustus shall ne'er repent.
Come, Mephistophilis, let us dispute again,
And argue of divine astrology.
210 Tell me, are there many heavens above the moon?
Are all celestial bodies but one globe,
As is the substance of this centric earth?<sup>3</sup>

MEPHISTOPHILIS As are the elements, such are the spheres,
215 Mutually folded in each other's orb.

And, Faustus, all jointly move upon one axletree
Whose terminè<sup>o</sup> is termed the world's wide pole,
Nor are the names of Saturn, Mars, or Jupiter
Feigned, but are erring stars.<sup>4</sup>

220 FAUSTUS But tell me, have they all one motion, both situ et tempore?<sup>5</sup>

MEPHASTOPHILIS All jointly move from east to west in four-and-twenty hours upon the poles of the world, but differ in their motion upon the poles of the zodiac.<sup>6</sup>

FAUSTUS Tush, these slender trifles Wagner can decide!

225 Hath Mephistophilis no greater skill?
Who knows not the double motion of the planets?
The first is finished in a natural day, the second thus:
as Saturn in thirty years; Jupiter in twelve; Mars in four; the Sun, Venus, and
Mercury in a year; the Moon in twenty-eight days.

Tush, these are 230 freshmen's suppositions. But tell me, hath every sphere a dominion or intelligentia?<sup>7</sup>

MEPHASTOPHILIS Ay.

FAUSTUS How many heavens or spheres are there?

MEPHASTOPHILIS Nine: the seven planets, the firmament, and the 235 empyreal heaven.<sup>8</sup>

FAUSTUS Well, resolve me then in this question: why have we not conjunctions, oppositions,<sup>9</sup> aspects, eclipses, all at one time, but in some years we have more, in some less?

MEPHASTOPHILIS *Per inaequalem motum respectu
totius.*<sup>1</sup>

240 FAUSTUS Well, I am answered. Tell me who made the world?

MEPHASTOPHILIS I will not.

FAUSTUS Sweet Mephistophilis, tell me.

MEPHASTOPHILIS Move<sup>o</sup> me not, for I will not tell thee.

FAUSTUS Villain, have I not bound thee to tell me anything?

245 MEPHASTOPHILIS Ay, that is not against our kingdom; but this is.

Think thou on hell, Faustus, for thou art damned.

FAUSTUS Think, Faustus, upon God, that made the world.

MEPHASTOPHILIS Remember this. [Exit.]

250 FAUSTUS Ay, go accursèd spirit, to ugly hell,
'Tis thou hast damned distressèd Faustus' soul:
Is't not too late?

[Enter GOOD ANGEL and EVIL.]

EVIL ANGEL Too late.

GOOD ANGEL Never too late, if Faustus will repent.

EVIL ANGEL If thou repent, devils shall tear thee in pieces.

255 GOOD ANGEL Repent, and they shall never raze<sup>o</sup> thy skin.

[Exeunt.]

FAUSTUS Ah Christ my Savior! seek to save Distressèd Faustus' soul!

[Enter LUCIFER, BELZEBUB, and MEPHASTOPHILIS.]

LUCIFER Christ cannot save thy soul, for he is just.
There's none but I have interest in the same.

260 FAUSTUS O who art thou that look'st so terrible?

LUCIFER I am Lucifer, and this is my companion prince in hell.

FAUSTUS O Faustus, they are come to fetch away thy
soul!

LUCIFER We come to tell thee thou dost injure us.
Thou talk'st of Christ, contrary to thy promise.

265      Thou should'st not think of God; think of the devil,
And his dam<sup>2</sup> too.

FAUSTUS    Nor will I henceforth: pardon me in this,
And Faustus vows never to look to heaven,
Never to name God, or to pray to him,
270      To burn his Scriptures, slay his ministers,
And make my spirits pull his churches down.

LUCIFER    Do so, and we will highly gratify thee.
Faustus, we are come from hell to show thee some pastime; sit down, and thou shalt see all the Seven Deadly Sins<sup>3</sup> appear in their proper shapes.

275      FAUSTUS    That sight will be as pleasing unto me as Paradise was to
Adam, the first day of his creation.

LUCIFER    Talk not of Paradise, nor creation, but mark
this show;
talk of the devil and nothing else. Come away.

[Enter the SEVEN DEADLY SINS.]

Now Faustus, examine them of their several names
and dispositions.

280      FAUSTUS    What art thou, the first?

PRIDE    I am Pride: I disdain to have any parents. I am like to Ovid's
flea, I can creep into every corner of a wench:
sometimes like a periwig,<sup>4</sup> I sit upon her brow; or like a fan of feathers, I kiss her lips.

285      Indeed I do—what do I not! But fie, what a scent<sup>5</sup> is here? I'll not speak another word, except the ground were perfumed and covered with cloth of arras.<sup>6</sup>

FAUSTUS What art thou, the second?
 COVETOUSNESS I am Covetousness, begotten of an old churl<sup>7</sup> in an 290 old leathern bag; and might I have my wish, I would desire that this house, and all the people in it, were turned to gold, that I might lock you up in my good chest. O my sweet gold!
 FAUSTUS What art thou, the third?
 WRATH I am Wrath. I had neither father nor mother: I leaped out of 295 a lion's mouth when I was scarce half an hour old, and ever since
 I have run up and down the world with this case<sup>8</sup> of rapiers, wounding myself when I had nobody to fight withal. I was born in hell—and look to it, for some of you<sup>9</sup> shall be my father.
 FAUSTUS What art thou, the fourth?
 300 ENVY I am Envy, begotten of a chimney-sweeper and an oyster-wife.
 I cannot read, and therefore wish all books were burnt; I am lean with seeing others eat—O that there would come a famine through all the world, that all might die, and I live alone;
 then thou should'st see how fat I would be! But must thou sit and I stand? Come down, with a vengeance!
 305 FAUSTUS Away, envious rascal! What art thou, the fifth?
 GLUTTONY Who, I sir? I am Gluttony. My parents are all dead, and the devil a penny they have left me but a bare pension, and that is thirty meals a day and ten bevers<sup>1</sup>—a small trifle to suffice nature.

310 O, I come of a royal parentage: my grandfather was a gammon<sup>2</sup> of bacon, my grandmother a hogshead of claret wine;
 my godfathers
 were these: Peter Pickled-Herring, and Martin
 Martlemas-Beef.<sup>3</sup>

O but my godmother! She was a jolly gentlewoman, and well-beloved in every good town and city; her name was Mistress Margery

315 March-Beer.<sup>4</sup> Now, Faustus, thou hast heard all my progeny;<sup>5</sup> wilt thou bid me to supper?

FAUSTUS No, I'll see thee hanged; thou wilt eat up all my victuals.

GLUTTONY Then the devil choke thee!

FAUSTUS Choke thyself, Glutton. What art thou, the sixth?

320 SLOTH I am Sloth; I was begotten on a sunny bank, where I have lain ever since—and you have done me great injury to bring me from thence. Let me be carried thither again by Gluttony and Lechery.

I'll not speak another word for a king's ransom.

FAUSTUS What are you, Mistress Minx, the seventh and last?

325 LECHERY Who, I sir? I am one that loves an inch of raw mutton better than an ell of fried stockfish;<sup>6</sup> and the first letter of my name begins with Lechery.

 LUCIFER Away! To hell, to hell! [Exeunt the SINS.]
 Now Faustus, how dost thou like this?
 FAUSTUS O this feeds my soul!
 330 LUCIFER Tut, Faustus, in hell is all manner of delight.
 FAUSTUS O might I see hell, and return again, how happy were
 I then!
 LUCIFER Thou shalt; I will send for thee at midnight. In meantime,
 335 take this book, peruse it thoroughly, and thou shalt turn thyself
 into what shape thou wilt.
 FAUSTUS Great thanks, mighty Lucifer; this will I keep as chary<sup>7</sup>as my life.
 LUCIFER Farewell, Faustus; and think on the devil.
 FAUSTUS Farewell, great Lucifer; come,
 340 Mephastophilis.
 [Exeunt OMNES.]

Endnotes

- Note 8: A wealthy German trade center.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Come, come, Mephastophilis!Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Misery loves company.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: It is finished. A blasphemy, because these are the words of Christ on the Cross (John 19:30).Return to reference 2
- Note 3: That is, have the supernatural powers of a spirit.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Legal articles.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Mephastophilis cannot produce a wife for Faustus because marriage is a sacrament.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: The wife of Ulysses, famed for chastity and fidelity.Return to reference 6

- Note 7: The queen of Sheba, who tested Solomon's wisdom with "hard questions" (1 Kings 10).Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Relationships to other planets. "Characters": occult symbols.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Assure.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Alexander is another name for Paris, the lover of Oenone; later he deserted her and abducted Helen, causing the Trojan War. Oenone refused to heal the wounds Paris received in battle, and when he died of them, she killed herself in remorse.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: The legendary musician Amphion, whose harp caused stones, of themselves, to form the walls of Thebes.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Faustus asks whether all the apparently different heavenly bodies really form "one globe" like the earth. Mephastophilis answers that like the elements, which are separate but combined, the heavenly bodies are separate but their spheres are enfolded, and they move (according to the ancient Ptolemaic cosmology) on a single axle.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: It is appropriate to give individual names to Saturn, Mars, Jupiter, and the other planets—which are called wandering, or "erring" stars. The fixed stars were in the eighth sphere (the firmament, or crystalline sphere).Return to reference 4
- Note 5: In position and in time.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: The common axle on which all the spheres revolve.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: An angel, or intelligence, thought to be the source of motion in each sphere.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: The ninth sphere was the immovable empyrean.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: When two planets are most remote from each other. "Conjunctions": the apparent joinings of two planets. These are two of the planetary "aspects" (relative positions) that figure in astrology.Return to reference 9

- Note 1: Because of their unequal movements in respect of the whole.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Mother. "The devil and his dam" was a common colloquial expression.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Pride, avarice, lust, anger, gluttony, envy, and sloth, called deadly because they lead to spiritual death. All other sins are said to grow out of them (compare the procession of the Seven Deadly Sins in Spenser's The Faerie Queene, Book 1, canto 4, stanzas 16–37).Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Wig. "Ovid's flea": a salacious medieval poem "Carmen de pulice" (Song of the Flea) was attributed to Ovid.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Stink.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Arras in Flanders exported fine cloth used for tapestry hangings. "Except": unless.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Miser.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Pair.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: That is, some in the audience.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Snacks.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: The lower side of pork, including the leg.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Meat, salted to preserve it during the winter, was prepared around Martinmas (November 11).Return to reference 3
- Note 4: A rich ale, made in March.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Lineage.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Dried cod, associated with sexual coldness and impotence. "Mutton": frequently a bawdy term in Elizabethan English; here, the penis. "Ell": forty-five inches.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Carefully.Return to reference 7

Notes

- °: availsReturn to reference °

- °: accursedReturn to reference °
- °: lordshipReturn to reference °
- °: provided thatReturn to reference °
- °: guaranteeReturn to reference °
- °: ownReturn to reference °
- °: contractReturn to reference °
- °: a portable grateReturn to reference °
- °: O man, flyReturn to reference °
- °: foolishReturn to reference °
- °: repeatingReturn to reference °
- °: drawingReturn to reference °
- °: stillReturn to reference °
- °: evil spirit, devilReturn to reference °
- °: hangman's noosesReturn to reference °
- °: endReturn to reference °
- °: urgeReturn to reference °
- °: grazeReturn to reference °

SCENE 6

[Enter ROBIN the ostler<sup>8</sup> with a book in his hand.]

ROBIN O this is admirable! here I ha' stolen one of Doctor Faustus' conjuring books, and i'faith I mean to search some circles<sup>9</sup> for my own use: now will I make all the maidens in our parish dance at my pleasure stark naked before me, and so by that means I shall see more than ere I felt or saw yet.

5

[Enter RAFE calling ROBIN.]

RAFE Robin, prithee come away, there's a gentleman tarries<sup>1</sup> to have his horse, and he would have his things rubbed and made clean.
He keeps such a chafing<sup>2</sup> with my mistress about it, and she has sent me to look thee out. Prithee, come away.

10

ROBIN Keep out, keep out; or else you are blown up,
you are dismembered, Rafe. Keep out, for I am about a roaring<sup>3</sup> piece of work.

RAFE Come, what dost thou with that same book?
Thou canst not read!

15

ROBIN Yes, my master and mistress shall find that I can read—he for his forehead,<sup>4</sup> she for her private study. She's born to bear with me,<sup>5</sup> or else my art fails.

RAFE Why Robin, what book is that?

ROBIN What book? Why the most intolerable<sup>6</sup> book for conjuring

that ere was invented by any brimstone devil.
RAFE Canst thou conjure with it?
20 ROBIN I can do all these things easily with it: first, I can make thee drunk with 'ipocrase<sup>7</sup> at any tavern in Europe for nothing, that's one of my conjuring works.
RAFE Our master parson says that's nothing.
25 ROBIN True, Rafe! And more, Rafe, if thou hast any mind to Nan
Spit, our kitchen maid, then turn her and wind her to thy own use, as often as thou wilt, and at midnight.
RAFE O brave Robin! Shall I have Nan Spit, and to mine own use?
On that condition I'll feed thy devil with horsebread as long as he 30 lives, of free cost.<sup>8</sup>
ROBIN No more, sweet Rafe; let's go and make clean our boots which lie foul upon our hands, and then to our conjuring in the devil's name. [Exeunt.]

CHORUS 2

[Enter WAGNER solus.]
WAGNER Learned Faustus,
To know the secrets of astronomy
Graven in the book of Jove's high firmament,
Did mount himself to scale Olympus<sup>9</sup> top.
Being seated in a chariot burning bright,
5 Drawn by the strength of yokèd dragons' necks.
He now is gone to prove cosmography,<sup>1</sup>
And, as I guess, will first arrive at Rome

To see the pope, and manner of his court,
 And take some part of holy Peter's feast,<sup>2</sup>
 That to this day is highly solemnized [Exit WAGNER.]

Endnotes

- Note 8: Hostler, stablehand. Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Magicians' circles, but with a sexual innuendo. Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Is waiting. Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Scolding. Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Dangerous. Return to reference 3
- Note 4: That is, Robin intends to give his master horns—cuckold him. Return to reference 4
- Note 5: That is, bear his weight, or bear him a child. Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Irresistible. Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Robin's pronunciation of "hippocras," a spiced wine. Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Free of charge. "Horsebread": fodder. Return to reference 8
- Note 9: The home of the gods in Greek mythology. Return to reference 9
- Note 1: To test the accuracy of maps. Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Saint Peter's feast is June 29. Return to reference 2

SCENE 7

[Enter FAUSTUS and MEPHASTOPHILIS.]

FAUSTUS Having now, my good Mephastophilis,
Passed with delight the stately town of Trier,<sup>3</sup>
Environed round with airy mountain tops,
With walls of flint, and deep entrenched lakes,<sup>o</sup>
Not to be won by any conquering prince;
5 From Paris next, coasting<sup>o</sup> the realm of France,
We saw the river Main fall into Rhine,
Whose banks are set with groves of fruitful vines;
Then up to Naples, rich Campania,
With buildings fair and gorgeous to the eye,
10 The streets straight forth, and paved with finest brick,
Quarters the town in four equivalents;
There saw we learned Maro's<sup>4</sup> golden tomb,
The way<sup>o</sup> he cut, an English mile in length,
Thorough<sup>o</sup> a rock of stone in one night's space.
15 From thence to Venice, Padua, and the rest,
In midst of which a sumptuous temple<sup>o</sup> stands
That threatens the stars with her aspiring top.
Thus hitherto hath Faustus spent his time.
But tell me now, what resting place is this?
20 Hast thou, as erst<sup>o</sup> I did command,
Conducted me within the walls of Rome?
MEPHASTOPHILIS Faustus, I have; and because we will not be unprovided, I have taken up his holiness' privy chamber<sup>5</sup> for our use.
FAUSTUS I hope his holiness will bid us welcome.
25 MEPHASTOPHILIS Tut, 'tis no matter, man, we'll be bold with his good cheer.<sup>6</sup>

And now, my Faustus, that thou may'st perceive
What Rome containeth to delight thee with,
Know that this city stands upon seven hills
30 That underprop the groundwork of the same;
Just through the midst runs flowing Tiber's stream,
With winding banks, that cut it in two parts;
Over the which four stately bridges lean,
That makes safe passage to each part of Rome.
35 Upon the bridge called Ponte Angelo
Erected is a castle passing<sup>7</sup> strong,
Within whose walls such store of ordnance are
And double cannons, framed of carved brass,
As match the days within one complete year—
40 Besides the gates and high pyramides<sup>8</sup>
Which Julius Caesar brought from Africa.

FAUSTUS Now by the kingdoms of infernal rule,
Of Styx, Acheron, and the fiery lake
Of ever-burning Phlegethon,<sup>8</sup> I swear
45 That I do long to see the monuments
And situation of bright-splendent Rome.
Come therefore, let's away.

MEPHASTOPHILIS Nay, Faustus, stay. I know you'd fain
see the pope,
And take some part of holy Peter's feast,
50 Where thou shalt see a troop of bald-pate friars,
Whose summum bonum<sup>9</sup> is in belly-cheer.

FAUSTUS Well, I am content to compass<sup>1</sup> then some sport,
And by their folly make us merriment.
Then charm me that I may be invisible, to do what I 55 please unseen of any whilst I stay in Rome.

MEPHASTOPHILIS [casts a spell on him] So Faustus, now do what thou wilt, thou shalt not be discerned.

[Sound a sennet; <sup>2</sup> enter the POPE and the CARDINAL OF LORRAINE to the banquet, with FRIARS attending.]

POPE My lord of Lorraine, will't please you draw near?

60 FAUSTUS Fall to; and the devil choke you and<sup>3</sup> you spare.

POPE How now, who's that which spake? Friars, look about.

1 FRIAR Here's nobody, if it like<sup>4</sup> your holiness.

POPE My lord, here is a dainty dish was sent to me from the bishop of Milan.

FAUSTUS I thank you, sir. [Snatch it.]

65 POPE How now, who's that which snatched the meat from me? Will no man look? My lord, this dish was sent me from the cardinal of Florence.

FAUSTUS You say true? I'll have't. [Snatch it.]

70 POPE What, again! My lord, I'll drink to your grace.

FAUSTUS I'll pledge<sup>5</sup> your grace. [Snatch the cup.]

LORRAINE My lord, it may be some ghost newly crept out of purgatory
come to beg a pardon of your holiness.

POPE It may be so; friars, prepare a dirge<sup>6</sup> to lay the fury of this ghost.

75 Once again my lord, fall to. [*The POPE crosseth
himself.*]

FAUSTUS What, are you crossing of your self? Well, use that trick
no more, I would advise you.
[Cross again.]

FAUSTUS Well, there's the second time; aware<sup>7</sup> the third! I give you fair warning.

[Cross again, and FAUSTUS hits him a box of the ear, and they all run away.]

80 Come on, Mephastophilis, what shall we do?
 MEPHASTOPHILIS Nay, I know not; we shall be cursed with bell,
 book, and candle.<sup>8</sup>

FAUSTUS How! Bell, book, and candle; candle, book, and bell,
 Forward and backward, to curse Faustus to hell.
 Anon you shall hear a hog grunt, a calf bleat, and an 85 ass bray,
 Because it is St. Peter's holy day.
 [Enter all the FRIARS to sing the Dirge.]

1 FRIAR Come brethren, let's about our business with good devotion.
 [Sing this.]
 Cursed be he that stole away His Holiness' meat from the table.
Maledicat Dominus.<sup>9</sup>

90 Cursed be he that struck His Holiness a blow on the face.
Maledicat Dominus.
 Cursed be he that took Friar Sandelo a blow on the pate.
Maledicat Dominus.
 Cursed be he that disturbeth our holy dirge.
Maledicat Dominus.

95 Cursed be he that took away His Holiness' wine.
Maledicat dominus.
Et omnes sancti.<sup>1</sup> Amen.
 [Beat the FRIARS, and fling fireworks among them, and so Exeunt.]

Endnotes

- Note 3: Treves (in Prussia).Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Virgil's. In medieval legend the Roman poet Virgil was considered a magician whose powers produced a tunnel on the promontory of Posilippo at Naples, near his tomb.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Private quarters.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Entertainment.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Surpassingly. Actually the castle is on the bank, not the bridge.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Classical names for rivers of the underworld.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: The greatest good; often refers to God.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Take part in.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: A set of notes on the trumpet or cornet.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: If. "Fall to": start eating.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Please.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Toast.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: A requiem mass. But what actually follows is a litany of curses.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Beware.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: The traditional paraphernalia for cursing and excommunication.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: May the Lord curse him.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: And all the saints (also curse him).Return to reference 1

Notes

- °: moatsReturn to reference °
- °: traversingReturn to reference °
- °: tunnelReturn to reference °
- °: throughReturn to reference °
- °: St. Mark's in VeniceReturn to reference °
- °: earlierReturn to reference °

- °: obelisks Return to reference °

SCENE 8

[Enter ROBIN and RAFE with a silver goblet.]

ROBIN Come, Rafe, did not I tell thee we were forever made by this Doctor Faustus' book? Ecce signum!<sup>2</sup> Here's a simple purchase for horsekeepers: our horses shall eat no hay as long as this lasts.

[Enter the VINTNER.]

RAFE But Robin, here comes the vintner.

5 ROBIN Hush, I'll gull<sup>3</sup> him supernaturally! Drawer,<sup>4</sup> I hope all is paid; God be with you. Come, Rafe.

VINTNER Soft, sir, a word with you. I must yet have a goblet paid
from you ere you go.

ROBIN I, a goblet, Rafe? I, a goblet? I scorn you: and you are but a etc.<sup>5</sup> . . . I, a goblet? Search me.

10 VINTNER I mean so, sir, with your favor. [Searches
ROBIN..]

ROBIN How say you now?

VINTNER I must say somewhat to your fellow; you,
sir!

RAFE Me, sir? Me, sir? Search your fill. Now sir, you may be ashamed
to burden honest men with a matter of truth.

15 VINTNER [searches RAFE] Well, t'one of you hath this goblet about
you.

ROBIN You lie, drawer; 'tis afore me. Sirra you, I'll teach ye to impeach<sup>6</sup> honest men: [to RAFE] stand by. [to the VINTNER] I'll scour

 20 you for a goblet—stand aside, you were best—I charge you in the name of Belzebub—look to the goblet, Rafe!
 VINTNER What mean you, sirra?
 ROBIN I'll tell you what I mean: [he reads]
Sanctobulorum
Periphrasticon—nay, I'll tickle you, vintner—look to the goblet,
 Rafe— Polypragmos Belseborams framanto
 25 pacostiphos tostis
Mephastophilis, etc.<sup>7</sup> . . .
 [Enter MEPHASTOPHILIS: sets squibs<sup>8</sup> at their backs: they run about.]
 VINTNER O nomine Domine!<sup>9</sup> What mean'st thou, Robin? Thou
 hast no goblet.
 RAFF Peccatum peccatorum!<sup>1</sup> Here's thy goblet, good vintner.
 30 ROBIN Misericordia pro nobis!<sup>2</sup> What shall I do? Good devil, forgive me now, and I'll never rob thy library
 more.
 [Enter to them MEPHASTOPHILIS.]
 MEPHASTOPHILIS Vanish, villains, th'one like an ape, another like a bear, the third an ass, for doing this enterprise.
 [Exit VINTNER.]
 Monarch of hell, under whose black survey
 Great potentates do kneel with awful fear;
 35 Upon whose altars thousand souls do lie;
 How am I vexèd with these villains' charms!
 From Constantinople am I hither come,
 Only for pleasure of these damnèd slaves.

40 ROBIN How, from Constantinople? You have had a great journey!
Will you take sixpence in your purse to pay for your supper, and be gone?
MEPHASTOPHILIS Well, villains, for your presumption, I transform thee into an ape, and thee into a dog; and so begone! [Exit.]
45 ROBIN How, into an ape? That's brave:<sup>3</sup> I'll have fine sport with the boys; I'll get nuts and apples enow.<sup>4</sup>
RAFE And I must be a dog.
ROBIN I'faith, thy head will never be out of the potage<sup>5</sup> pot.
[Exeunt.]

CHORUS 3

[Enter CHORUS.<sup>6</sup>]
CHORUS When Faustus had with pleasure ta'en the view
Of rarest things, and royal courts of kings,
He stayed his course, and so returnèd home;
Where such as bare his absence but with grief—
5 I mean his friends and nearest companions—
Did gratulate his safety with kind words.
And in their conference of what befell,
Touching his journey through the world and air,
They put forth questions of astrology,
Which Faustus answered with such learnèd skill
10 As they admired and wondered at his wit.
Now is his fame spread forth in every land:
Amongst the rest the emperor is one,
Carolus the Fifth,<sup>7</sup> at whose palace now
Faustus is feasted 'mongst his noblemen.
15 What there he did in trial<sup>8</sup> of his art

I leave untold: your eyes shall see performed.
[Exit.]

Endnotes

- Note 2: Behold the proof.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Trick.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Wine drawer. Return to reference 4
- Note 5: The actor might ad lib abuse at this point.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Accuse.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Dog-Latin, as Robin attempts to conjure from Faustus's book.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Firecrackers. Evidently Mephistophilis is onstage only long enough to set off the firecrackers and is not seen by Robin, Rafe, or the vintner. He then reenters at line 32.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: In the name of the Lord. The Latin invocations are used in swearing.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Sin of sins!Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Have mercy on us!Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Splendid.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Enough.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Porridge.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: That is, Wagner.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: The Holy Roman Emperor Charles V (reigned 1519–56).Return to reference 7

Notes

- °: demonstrationReturn to reference °

SCENE 9

[Enter EMPEROR, FAUSTUS, and a KNIGHT, with Attendants.]

EMPEROR Master Doctor Faustus, I have heard strange report of thy knowledge in the black art, how that none in my empire, nor in the whole world, can compare with thee for the rare effects of magic.

They say thou hast a familiar spirit, by whom thou canst accomplish
5        what thou list! This therefore is my request: that thou let me see some proof of thy skill, that mine eyes may be witnesses to confirm what mine ears have heard reported. And here I swear to thee, by the honor of mine imperial crown, that whatever thou dost, thou shalt be in no ways prejudiced or endamaged.

10        KNIGHT [aside] I'faith, he looks much like a conjuror.

FAUSTUS My gracious sovereign, though I must confess myself far inferior to the report men have published, and nothing answerable to<sup>8</sup> the honor of your imperial majesty, yet for that love and duty binds me thereunto, I am content to do whatsoever your majesty shall command me.

15        EMPEROR Then Doctor Faustus, mark what I shall say. As I was sometime solitary set within my closet,<sup>9</sup> sundry thoughts arose about the honor of mine ancestors—how they had won by prowess such exploits, got such riches, subdued so many kingdoms, as we that do succeed, or they that shall hereafter possess 20 our throne, shall (I fear me) never attain to that degree of high renown and great authority. Amongst which kings is Alexander the Great,<sup>1</sup>

chief spectacle of the world's pre-eminence:
The bright shining of whose glorious acts
Lightens the world with his reflecting beams;
25 As when I hear but motion<sup>o</sup> made of him,
It grieves my soul I never saw the man.
If therefore thou, by cunning of thine art,
Canst raise this man from hollow vaults below,
Where lies entombed this famous conqueror,
30 And bring with him his beauteous paramour,<sup>2</sup>
Both in their right shapes, gesture, and attire
They used to wear during their time of life,
Thou shalt both satisfy my just desire
And give me cause to praise thee whilst I live.
35 FAUSTUS My gracious lord, I am ready to accomplish your request,
so far forth as by art and power of my spirit I am able to perform.
KNIGHT [aside] I'faith, that's just nothing at all.
FAUSTUS But, if it like your grace, it is not in my ability to present
40 before your eyes the true substantial bodies of those two deceased
princes, which long since are consumed to dust.

KNIGHT [aside] Ay, marry,<sup>3</sup> master doctor, now there's a sign of grace in you, when you will confess the truth.

FAUSTUS But such spirits as can lively resemble Alexander and his paramour shall appear before your grace, in that 45 manner that they best lived in, in their most flourishing estate:<sup>4</sup> which I doubt not shall sufficiently content your imperial majesty.

EMPEROR Go to, master doctor, let me see them presently.<sup>5</sup>

KNIGHT Do you hear, master doctor? You bring Alexander and his paramour before the emperor!

50 FAUSTUS How then, sir?

KNIGHT I'faith, that's as true as Diana turned me to a stag.

FAUSTUS No sir; but when Actaeon died, he left the horns<sup>6</sup> for you!
Mephastophilis, begone.

[Exit MEPHASTOPHILIS.]

KNIGHT Nay, and <sup>7</sup> you go to conjuring I'll be gone.

55 [Exit KNIGHT.]

FAUSTUS I'll meet with you anon<sup>8</sup> for interrupting me so. Here they are, my gracious lord.

[Enter MEPHASTOPHILIS with ALEXANDER and his PARAMOUR.]

EMPEROR Master doctor, I heard this lady, while she lived, had a wart or mole in her neck; how shall I know whether it be so or no?

FAUSTUS Your highness may boldly go and see.

60 [The EMPEROR examines the lady's neck.]

EMPEROR Sure, these are no spirits, but the true substantial bodies of those two deceased princes.

[Exit ALEXANDER (and his PARAMOUR ).]

FAUSTUS Will't please your highness now to send for the knight
that was so pleasant with me here of late?

EMPEROR One of you call him forth.

65 [Enter the KNIGHT with a pair of horns on his head.]

How now, sir knight? Why, I had thought thou hadst been a bachelor, but now I see thou hast a wife that not only gives thee horns

but makes thee wear them! Feel on thy head.

KNIGHT Thou damnèd wretch and execrable<sup>o</sup> dog,

70 Bred in the concave of some monstrous rock,

How dar'st thou thus abuse a gentleman?

Villain, I say, undo what thou hast done.

FAUSTUS O not so fast, sir, there's no haste but good.<sup>9</sup> Are you remembered<sup>1</sup> how you crossed me in my conference with the emperor? I think I have met with you for it.

75 EMPEROR Good master doctor, at my entreaty release him; he hath done penance sufficient.

FAUSTUS My gracious lord, not so much for the injury
he offered me

here in your presence, as to delight you with some mirth, hath

80 Faustus worthily requited this injurious knight; which being all I desire,

I am content to release him of his horns. And, sir knight, hereafter

- Note 8: Shortly. "Meet with": be revenged on. Return to reference 8
- Note 9: A proverb: no point hurrying, unless it's to good effect. Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Have you forgotten. Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Immediately. Return to reference 2

Notes

- °: mention Return to reference °
- °: detestable Return to reference °

SCENE 10

[Enter a HORSE-COURSER.<sup>3</sup>]

HORSE-COURSER I have been all this day seeking one Master

Fustian: 'Mass,<sup>4</sup> see where he is! God save you, master doctor.

FAUSTUS What, horse-courser: you are well met.

HORSE-COURSER Do you hear, sir; I have brought you forty dollars<sup>5</sup> for your horse.

5 FAUSTUS I cannot sell him so: if thou lik'st him for fifty, take him.

HORSE-COURSER Alas sir, I have no more. I pray you speak for me.

MEPHASTOPHILIS I pray you let him have him; he is an honest fellow, and he has a great charge<sup>6</sup>—neither wife nor child.

10 FAUSTUS Well, come, give me your money; my boy will deliver him to you. But I must tell you one thing before you have him: ride him
not into the water at any hand.<sup>7</sup>

HORSE-COURSER Why sir, will he not drink of all waters?

15 FAUSTUS O yes, he will drink of all waters, but ride him not into the water. Ride him over hedge or ditch, or where thou wilt, but not into the water.

HORSE-COURSER Well sir. Now am I made man forever: I'll not leave my horse for forty! If he had but the quality of hey ding ding, hey ding ding,<sup>8</sup> I'd make a brave living on him! He has a buttock as slick as an eel. Well, God b'y,<sup>9</sup> sir; your boy will 20 deliver him me.

But hark ye sir, if my horse be sick, or ill at ease, if I bring his water<sup>1</sup> to you, you'll tell me what it is?
[Exit HORSE-COURSER.]

FAUSTUS Away, you villain! What, dost think I am a horse-doctor?
What art thou, Faustus, but a man condemned to die?
Thy fatal time<sup>o</sup> doth draw to final end.
25 Despair doth drive distrust unto my thoughts.
Confound these passions with a quiet sleep:
Tush, Christ did call the thief upon the cross.<sup>2</sup>
Then rest thee, Faustus, quiet in conceit.<sup>o</sup>
[Sleep in his chair.]
[Enter HORSE-COURSER all wet, crying.]

HORSE-COURSER Alas, alas, Doctor Fustian, quotha?<sup>3</sup>
30 'Mass,
Doctor Lopus<sup>4</sup> was never such a doctor! H'as given me a purgation, h'as purged me of forty dollars! I shall never see them more. But yet, like an ass as I was, I would not be ruled by him; for he bade me I should ride him into no water. Now I, thinking my horse had 35 had some rare quality that he would not have had me known of, I, like a vent'rous<sup>5</sup> youth, rid him into the deep pond at the town's end. I was no sooner in the middle of the pond, but my horse

 vanished away, and I sat upon a bottle<sup>6</sup> of hay, never so near drowning in my life! But I'll seek out my doctor, and have my forty dollars
 again, or I'll make it the dearest<sup>7</sup> horse. O, yonder is 40 his snipper-snapper!<sup>8</sup> Do you hear, you hey-pass,<sup>9</sup> where's your master?
 MEPHASTOPHILIS Why, sir, what would you? You cannot speak with
 him.
 HORSE-COURSER But I will speak with him.
 MEPHASTOPHILIS Why, he's fast asleep; come some 45 other time.
 HORSE-COURSER I'll speak with him now, or I'll break his glasswindows<sup>1</sup> about his ears.
 MEPHASTOPHILIS I tell thee, he has not slept this eight nights.
 HORSE-COURSER And he have not slept this eight weeks
 I'll speak
 with him.
 50 MEPHASTOPHILIS See where he is, fast asleep.
 HORSE-COURSER Ay, this is he; God save ye, master doctor, master doctor, master Doctor Fustian, forty dollars, forty dollars for a bottle of hay!
 MEPHASTOPHILIS Why, thou seest he hears thee not.
 55 HORSE-COURSER So ho ho; so ho ho.<sup>2</sup> [Halloo in his ear.]
 No, will you not wake? I'll make you wake ere I go. [Pull him by the leg, and pull it away.] Alas, I am undone! What shall I do?

FAUSTUS O my leg, my leg! Help, Mephastophilis! Call the officers!
 My leg, my leg!
 60 MEPHASTOPHILIS Come villain, to the constable.
 HORSE-COURSER O Lord, sir! Let me go, and I'll give you forty dollars
 more.
 MEPHASTOPHILIS Where be they?
 HORSE-COURSER I have none about me: come to my 65 ostry<sup>3</sup> and I'll give them you.
 MEPHASTOPHILIS Begone quickly!
 [HORSE-COURSER runs away.]
 FAUSTUS What, is he gone? Farewell he: Faustus has his leg again,
 and the horse-courser—I take it—a bottle of hay for his labor!
 Well, this trick shall cost him forty dollars more.
 70 [Enter WAGNER.]
 How now, Wagner, what's the news with thee?
 WAGNER Sir, the duke of Vanholt<sup>4</sup> doth earnestly entreat your company.
 FAUSTUS The duke of Vanholt! An honorable gentleman, to whom
 I must be no niggard of my cunning.<sup>5</sup> Come, 75 Mephastophilis, let's away to him. [Exeunt.]

Endnotes

- Note 3: Horse trader, traditionally a sharp bargainer or cheat.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: By the Mass. "Fustian": the horse-courser's comic mistake for Faustus's name.Return to reference 4

- Note 5: Common German coins.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Burden.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: On any account.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: That is, he wishes his horse were a stallion, not a gelding, so he could put him to stud.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Good-bye (contracted from “God be with you”).Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Urine.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: In Luke 23:39–43 one of the two thieves crucified with Jesus is promised paradise. “Tush”: a scoffing exclamation.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: He said.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: In February 1594 Roderigo Lopez, the queen’s personal physician, was executed for plotting to poison her. Obviously Marlowe, who died in 1593, did not write the line.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Adventurous.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Bundle. Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Most expensive.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Insignificant youth; a whipper-snapper.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: A conjurer’s phrase. Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Spectacles.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: The huntsman’s cry, when he sights the quarry.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Hostelry, inn.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: The duchy of Anhalt, in central Germany.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: That is, must generously display my skill.Return to reference 5

Notes

- °: time allotted by fateReturn to reference °
- °: in mindReturn to reference °

SCENE 11

[FAUSTUS and MEPHASTOPHILIS return to the stage.
Enter to them the DUKE and the DUCHESS; the DUKE speaks.]

DUKE Believe me, master doctor, this merriment hath much pleased me.

FAUSTUS My gracious lord, I am glad it contents you so well: but it may be, madam, you take no delight in this; I have heard that

5 great-bellied<sup>6</sup> women do long for some dainties or other—what is it, madam? Tell me, and you shall have it.

DUCHESS Thanks, good master doctor; and for I see your courteous

intent to pleasure me, I will not hide from you the thing my heart desires. And were it now summer, as it is January and the dead of

10 winter, I would desire no better meat than a dish of ripe grapes.

FAUSTUS Alas madam, that's nothing! Mephastophilis, begone! [Exit

MEPHASTOPHILIS.] Were it a greater thing than this, so it would content you, you should have it. [Enter

MEPHASTOPHILIS with the

grapes.] Here they be, madam; will't please you taste on them?

15 DUKE Believe me, master doctor, this makes me wonder above the rest: that being in the dead time of winter, and in the month of

January, how you should come by these grapes?
FAUSTUS If it like<sup>7</sup> your grace, the year is divided into two circles over the whole world, that when it is here winter with us, in the contrary
20 circle it is summer with them, as in India, Saba,<sup>8</sup> and farther countries in the east; and by means of a swift spirit that I have, I had them brought hither, as ye see. How do you like them, madam;
be they good?
DUCHESS Believe me, master doctor, they be the best grapes that ere
I tasted in my life before.
25 FAUSTUS I am glad they content you so, madam.
DUKE Come, madam, let us in, where you must well reward this learned man for the great kindness he hath showed to you.
DUCHESS And so I will, my lord; and whilst I live, rest beholding for this courtesy.
30 FAUSTUS I humbly thank your grace.
DUKE Come, master doctor, follow us, and receive your reward.

[Exeunt.]

CHORUS 4

[Enter WAGNER solus.]

WAGNER I think my master means to die shortly,
For he hath given to me all his goods.
And yet methinks, if that death were near,
He would not banquet, and carouse, and swill

5        Amongst the students, as even now he doth,
Who are at supper with such belly-cheer°
As Wagner ne'er beheld in all his life.
See where they come: belike the feast is ended.
[Exit.]

Endnotes

- Note 6: Pregnant.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Please.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: The biblical kingdom of Sheba, in southwestern Arabia.Return to reference 8

Notes

- °: gluttonyReturn to reference °

SCENE 12

[Enter FAUSTUS (and MEPHASTOPHILIS), with two or three SCHOLARS.]

1 SCHOLAR Master Doctor Faustus, since our conference about fair ladies, which was the beautifulest in all the world, we have determined with ourselves that Helen of Greece was
the admirablest lady that ever lived. Therefore, master doctor, if you will do us that favor as to let us see that peerless dame of 5 Greece, whom all the world admires for majesty, we should think ourselves much beholding unto you.

FAUSTUS Gentlemen, for that I know your friendship is unfeigned,
And Faustus' custom is not to deny
The just requests of those that wish him well,
10 You shall behold that peerless dame of Greece,
No otherways for pomp and majesty
Than when Sir Paris crossed the seas with her
And brought the spoils to rich Dardania.°
Be silent then, for danger is in words.

15 [Music sounds, and HELEN passeth over the stage.]

2 SCHOLAR Too simple is my wit to tell her praise,
Whom all the world admires for majesty.

3 SCHOLAR No marvel though the angry Greeks pursued
With ten years' war the rape° of such a queen,
Whose heavenly beauty passeth all compare.

20

1 SCHOLAR Since we have seen the pride of Nature's works

And only paragon of excellence,
Let us depart; and for this glorious deed
Happy and blest be Faustus evermore.

25 FAUSTUS Gentlemen, farewell; the same I wish to
you.

[Exeunt SCHOLARS.]

[Enter an OLD MAN.]

OLD MAN Ah Doctor Faustus, that I might prevail
To guide thy steps unto the way of life,
By which sweet path thou may'st attain the goal
That shall conduct thee to celestial rest.
30 Break heart, drop blood, and mingle it with tears,
Tears falling from repentant heaviness<sup>o</sup>
Of thy most vile and loathsome filthiness,
The stench whereof corrupts the inward soul
With such flagitious<sup>o</sup> crimes of heinous sins,
35 As no commiseration may expel
But mercy, Faustus, of thy savior sweet,
Whose blood alone must wash away thy guilt.

FAUSTUS Where art thou, Faustus? Wretch, what hast
thou done!
Damned art thou, Faustus, damned; despair and die!
Hell calls for right, and with a roaring voice
40 Says, "Faustus, come: thine hour is come!"

[MEPHASTOPHILIS gives him a dagger.]

And Faustus will come to do thee right.

OLD MAN Ah stay, good Faustus, stay thy desperate steps!

45 I see an angel hovers o'er thy head
And with a vial full of precious grace
Offers to pour the same into thy soul!
Then call for mercy, and avoid despair.

FAUSTUS Ah my sweet friend, I feel thy words
To comfort my distressed soul;

50 Leave me awhile to ponder on my sins.
OLD MAN I go, sweet Faustus; but with heavy cheer,<sup>o</sup>
Fearing the ruin of thy hopeless soul. [Exit.]
FAUSTUS Accursèd Faustus, where is mercy now?
I do repent, and yet I do despair:
55 Hell strives with grace for conquest in my breast!
What shall I do to shun the snares of death?
MEPHASTOPHILIS Thou traitor, Faustus: I arrest thy
soul
For disobedience to my sovereign lord.
Revolt,<sup>9</sup> or I'll in piecemeal tear thy flesh.
60 FAUSTUS Sweet Mephistophilis, entreat thy lord
To pardon my unjust presumption;
And with my blood again I will confirm
My former vow I made to Lucifer.
MEPHASTOPHILIS Do it then quickly, with unfeignèd
heart,
Lest greater danger do attend thy drift.<sup>o</sup> 65 FAUSTUS Torment, sweet friend, that base and crooked age<sup>o</sup>
That durst<sup>o</sup> dissuade me from thy Lucifer,
With greatest torments that our hell affords.
MEPHASTOPHILIS His faith is great, I cannot touch his
soul,
70 But what I may afflict his body with
I will attempt—which is but little worth.
FAUSTUS One thing, good servant, let me crave of
thee,
To glut the longing of my heart's desire:
That I might have unto<sup>o</sup> my paramour
75 That heavenly Helen which I saw of late,
Whose sweet embracings may extinguish clean
These thoughts that do dissuade me from my vow,
And keep mine oath I made to Lucifer.

MEPHASTOPHILIS Faustus, this, or what else thou shalt desire,
 Shall be performed in twinkling of an eye.
 80 [Enter HELEN.]
 FAUSTUS Was this the face that launched a thousand ships,
 And burnt the topless<sup>1</sup> towers of Ilium?<sup>o</sup>
 Sweet Helen, make me immortal with a kiss:
 Her lips sucks forth my soul, see where it flies!
 Come Helen, come, give me my soul again.
 85 Here will I dwell, for heaven be in these lips,
 And all is dross that is not Helena!
 [Enter OLD MAN.]
 I will be Paris, and for love of thee,
 Instead of Troy shall Wittenberg be sacked;
 And I will combat with weak Menelaus,<sup>o</sup>
 90 And wear thy colors on my plumèd crest;
 Yea, I will wound Achilles in the heel,<sup>2</sup>
 And then return to Helen for a kiss.
 O thou art fairer than the evening air
 Clad in the beauty of a thousand stars,
 95 Brighter art thou than flaming Jupiter
 When he appeared to hapless Semele;<sup>3</sup>
 More lovely than the monarch of the sky
 In wanton Arethusa's azured arms;<sup>4</sup>
 And none but thou shalt be my paramour.
 100 [Exeunt (FAUSTUS and HELEN).]
 OLD MAN Accursèd Faustus, miserable man,
 That from thy soul exclud'st the grace of heaven
 And fliest the throne of His tribunal seat!
 [Enter the DEVILS.]
 Satan begins to sift me with his pride,<sup>5</sup>
 As in this furnace God shall try my faith.
 105 My faith, vile hell, shall triumph over thee!
 Ambitious fiends, see how the heavens smiles

At your repulse, and laughs your state<sup>o</sup> to scorn.
Hence hell, for hence I fly unto my God.

[Exeunt.]

Endnotes

- Note 9: Turn back (to your allegiance to Lucifer).Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Immeasurably high; matchless.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Achilles could be wounded only in his heel—where he was shot by Paris.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: A Theban girl, loved by Jupiter and destroyed by the fire of his lightning when he appeared to her in his full splendor.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Arethusa was the nymph of a fountain, as well as the fountain itself; she excited the passion of the river god Alpheus, who was by some accounts related to the sun.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: To test me with his strength.Return to reference 5

Notes

- °: TroyReturn to reference °
- °: abductionReturn to reference °
- °: griefReturn to reference °
- °: villainousReturn to reference °
- °: heavy heartReturn to reference °
- °: intentReturn to reference °
- °: aged manReturn to reference °
- °: dared toReturn to reference °
- °: forReturn to reference °
- °: TroyReturn to reference °
- °: Helen's husbandReturn to reference °
- °: royal powerReturn to reference °

SCENE 13

[Enter FAUSTUS with the SCHOLARS.]

FAUSTUS Ah gentlemen!

1 SCHOLAR What ails Faustus?

FAUSTUS Ah my sweet chamber-fellow, had I lived with thee, then had I lived still;<sup>6</sup> but now I die eternally. Look, comes he not, comes he not?

5 2 SCHOLAR What means Faustus?

3 SCHOLAR Belike he is grown into some sickness by being oversolitary.

1 SCHOLAR If it be so, we'll have physicians to cure him;
'tis but a

10 surfeit:<sup>7</sup> never fear, man.

FAUSTUS A surfeit of deadly sin, that hath damned both body and soul.

2 SCHOLAR Yet Faustus, look up to heaven;
remember God's mercies are infinite.

15 FAUSTUS But Faustus' offense can ne'er be pardoned!

The serpent that tempted Eve may be saved, but not Faustus. Ah
gentlemen,
hear me with patience, and tremble not at my speeches, though my heart pants and quivers to remember that I have been a student here these thirty years—O would I had never seen

Wittenberg, never read book—and what wonders I have done, all Wittenberg can witness—yea, all the world; for which Faustus hath lost both Germany and the world—yea, heaven itself—heaven,
 the seat of God, the throne of the blessed, the kingdom of joy; and must remain in hell forever—hell, ah, hell forever! Sweet
 25 friends, what shall become of Faustus, being in hell forever?
 3 SCHOLAR Yet Faustus, call on God.
 FAUSTUS On God, whom Faustus hath abjured? On God, whom Faustus hath blasphemed? Ah, my God—I would weep, but the devil draws in my tears! Gush forth blood, instead of tears—yea,
 30 life and soul! O, he stays my tongue! I would lift up my hands, but see, they hold them, they hold them!
 ALL Who, Faustus?
 FAUSTUS Lucifer and Mephistophilis! Ah gentlemen, I gave them
 my soul for my cunning.
 ALL God forbid!
 35 FAUSTUS God forbade it indeed, but Faustus hath done it: for the vain pleasure of four-and-twenty years hath Faustus lost eternal joy and felicity. I writ them a bill<sup>8</sup> with mine own blood, the date is expired, the time will come, and he will fetch me.

1 SCHOLAR Why did not Faustus tell us of this before, that divines
might have prayed for thee?

FAUSTUS Oft have I thought to have done so, but the devil

threatened to tear me in pieces if I named God, to fetch both body and soul if I once gave ear to divinity; and now 'tis too late. Gentlemen,

away, lest you perish with me!

45 2 SCHOLAR O what shall we do to save Faustus?

3 SCHOLAR God will strengthen me. I will stay with Faustus.

1 SCHOLAR Tempt not God, sweet friend, but let us into the next room, and there pray for him.

50 FAUSTUS Ay, pray for me, pray for me; and what noise soever ye hear, come not unto me, for nothing can rescue me.

2 SCHOLAR Pray thou, and we will pray, that God may have mercy upon thee.

FAUSTUS Gentlemen, farewell. If I live till morning, I'll visit you; if not, Faustus is gone to hell.

55 ALL Faustus, farewell.

[Exeunt SCHOLARS.]

[The clock strikes eleven.]

FAUSTUS Ah Faustus,
Now hast thou but one bare hour to live,
And then thou must be damned perpetually.
Stand still, you ever-moving spheres of heaven,
60 That time may cease, and midnight never come.
Fair Nature's eye, rise, rise again, and make Perpetual day, or let this hour be but
A year, a month, a week, a natural day,

65 That Faustus may repent and save his soul.
O lente, lente currite noctis equi!<sup>9</sup>
The stars move still, time runs, the clock will strike,
The devil will come, and Faustus must be damned.
O I'll leap up to my God! Who pulls me down?
70 See, see where Christ's blood streams in the firmament!<sup>o</sup>
One drop would save my soul, half a drop: ah my Christ—
Ah, rend not my heart for naming of my Christ;
Yet will I call on him—O spare me, Lucifer!
Where is it now? 'Tis gone: and see where God
Stretcheth out his arm, and bends his ireful brows!
75 Mountains and hills, come, come and fall on me,
And hide me from the heavy wrath of God.
No, no?
Then will I headlong run into the earth:
Earth, gape! O no, it will not harbor me.
80 You stars that reigned at my nativity,
Whose influence hath allotted death and hell,
Now draw up Faustus like a foggy mist
Into the entrails of yon laboring cloud,
That when you vomit forth into the air
85 My limbs may issue from your smoky mouths,
So that my soul may but ascend to heaven.<sup>1</sup>
[The watch strikes.]
Ah, half the hour is past: 'twill all be past anon.<sup>o</sup>
O God, if thou wilt not have mercy on my soul,
Yet for Christ's sake, whose blood hath ransomed
90 me,
Impose some end to my incessant pain:
Let Faustus live in hell a thousand years,
A hundred thousand, and at last be saved.
O no end is limited to damnèd souls!
Why wert thou not a creature wanting<sup>o</sup> soul?
95

Or why is this immortal that thou hast?
 Ah, Pythagoras' metempsychosis<sup>2</sup>—were that true,
 This soul should fly from me, and I be changed
 Unto some brutish beast:
 100 All beasts are happy, for when they die,
 Their souls are soon dissolved in elements;
 But mine must live still<sup>o</sup> to be plagued in hell.
 Cursed be the parents that engendered me!
 No, Faustus, curse thy self, curse Lucifer,
 105 That hath deprived thee of the joys of heaven.
     [The clock striketh twelve.]
 O it strikes, it strikes! Now body, turn to air,
 Or Lucifer will bear thee quick<sup>o</sup> to hell.
     [Thunder and lightning.]
 O soul, be changed into little water drops
 And fall into the ocean, ne'er be found.
 My God, my God, look not so fierce on me!
 110      [Enter DEVILS.]
 Adders and serpents, let me breathe awhile!
 Ugly hell gape not! Come not, Lucifer!
 I'll burn my books—ah, Mephastophilis!
     [Exeunt with him.]

Endnotes

- Note 6: Always. Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Indigestion caused by overeating. Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Document. Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Slowly, slowly run, O horses of the night (adapted from a line in Ovid's Amores). Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Faustus wants to be drawn up into a cloud, which would compact his body into a thunderbolt so that his soul, thus purified, might ascend to heaven. Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Pythagoras's doctrine of the transmigration of souls. Return to reference 2

Notes

- °: skyReturn to reference °
- °: shortlyReturn to reference °
- °: lackingReturn to reference °
- °: alwaysReturn to reference °
- °: aliveReturn to reference °

Epilogue

[Enter CHORUS.]

Cut is the branch that might have grown full straight,
And burnèd is Apollo's laurel bough,<sup>3</sup>
That sometime grew within this learnèd man.
Faustus is gone! Regard his hellish fall,
Whose fiendful fortune<sup>o</sup> may exhort the wise
5 Only to wonder at<sup>4</sup> unlawful things:
Whose deepness doth entice such forward wits<sup>o</sup>
To practice more than heavenly power permits.

[Exit.]

Terminat hora diem, terminat author opus.<sup>5</sup>

1604, 1616

Endnotes

- Note 3: The laurel crown of Apollo symbolizes (among other things) learning and wisdom.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Be content simply to observe with awe.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: The hour ends the day, the author ends his work. This motto was probably added by the printer.Return to reference 5

Notes

- °: devilish fateReturn to reference °
- °: aspiring mindsReturn to reference °

The Two Texts of *Doctor Faustus The following excerpts enable readers to compare a sample passage (from Scene 12) of the A text (1604) with the corresponding passage of the B text (1616). (On the two texts, see p. 581.) Here the differences in tone and content in the two versions of the Old Man's speech may signal different attitudes toward the finality of Faustus's damnation.

Doctor Faustus, A Text

[Enter an OLD MAN.]

OLD MAN    Ah Doctor Faustus, that I might prevail
To guide thy steps unto the way of life,
By which sweet path thou may'st attain the goal
That shall conduct thee to celestial rest.
5    Break heart, drop blood, and mingle it with tears,
Tears falling from repentant heaviness<sup>o</sup>
Of thy most vile and loathsome filthiness,
The stench whereof corrupts the inward soul
With such flagitious<sup>o</sup> crimes of heinous sins
As no commiseration may expel
10    But mercy, Faustus, of thy savior sweet,
Whose blood alone must wash away thy guilt.
FAUSTUS    Where art thou, Faustus? Wretch, what hast
thou done!
Damned art thou, Faustus, damned; despair and die!
Hell calls for right, and with a roaring voice
15    Says, "Faustus, come: thine hour is come!"
          [MEPHASTOPHILIS gives him a dagger.]
And Faustus will come to do thee right.
OLD MAN    Ah stay, good Faustus, stay thy desperate
steps!
I see an angel hovers o'er thy head
And with a vial full of precious grace
20    Offers to pour the same into thy soul!
Then call for mercy, and avoid despair.
FAUSTUS    Ah my sweet friend, I feel thy words
To comfort my distressed soul;
Leave me awhile to ponder on my sins.
25    OLD MAN    I go, sweet Faustus; but with heavy cheer,<sup>o</sup>
Fearing the ruin of thy hopeless soul.    [Exit.]

30

FAUSTUS Accursèd Faustus, where is mercy now?
I do repent, and yet I do despair:
Hell strives with grace for conquest in my breast!
What shall I do to shun the snares of death?
MEPHASTOPHILIS Thou traitor, Faustus: I arrest thy
soul
For disobedience to my sovereign lord.
Revolt,<sup>1</sup> or I'll in piecemeal tear thy flesh.

Endnotes

- Note 1: Turn back (to your allegiance to Lucifer).Return to reference 1

Notes

- °: griefReturn to reference °
- °: villainousReturn to reference °
- °: heavy heartReturn to reference °

Doctor Faustus, B Text

[Enter an OLD MAN.]

OLD MAN O gentle Faustus, leave this damnèd art,
This magic that will charm thy soul to hell
And quite bereave thee of salvation.
Though thou hast now offended like a man,
Do not persèver<sup>o</sup> in it like a devil.
5 Yet, yet, thou hast an amiable<sup>o</sup> soul,
If sin by custom grow not into nature.
Then, Faustus, will repentance come too late;
Then thou art banished from the sight of heaven.
No mortal can express the pains of hell.
10 It may be this my exhortatiön
Seems harsh and all unpleasant; let it not,
For, gentle son, I speak it not in wrath
Or envy of<sup>o</sup> thee, but in tender love
And pity of thy future misery.
15 And so have hope that this my kind rebuke,
Checking<sup>o</sup> thy body, may amend thy soul.
FAUSTUS Where art thou, Faustus? Wretch, what hast
thou done?
Hell claims his right, and with a roaring voice
Says, "Faustus, come; thine hour is almost come";
20 And Faustus now will come to do thee right.
[MEPHOSTOPHILIS gives him a dagger.]
OLD MAN O stay, good Faustus, stay thy desperate steps.
I see an angel hover o'er thy head,
And with a vial full of precious grace
Offers to pour the same into thy soul.
25 Then call for mercy and avoid despair.
FAUSTUS O friend, I feel thy words

To comfort my distressed soul.
 Leave me a while to ponder on my sins.
 30 OLD MAN Faustus, I leave thee, but with grief of
     heart,
 Fearing the enemy of thy hapless soul.[Exit.]
 FAUSTUS Accursèd Faustus, wretch, what hast thou done?
 I do repent, and yet I do despair.
 Hell strives with grace for conquest in my breast.
 What shall I do to shun the snares of death?
 35 MEPHOSTOPHILIS Thou traitor, Faustus, I arrest thy
     soul
 For disobedience to my sovereign lord.
 Revolt,<sup>1</sup> or I'll in piecemeal tear thy flesh.

Endnotes

- Note 1: Turn back (to your allegiance to Lucifer).Return to reference 1

Notes

- °: persevereReturn to reference °
- °: worthy of (divine) loveReturn to reference °
- °: ill will towardReturn to reference °
- °: rebukingReturn to reference °

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE

1564–1616

William Shakespeare was born in the small market town of Stratford-upon-Avon in April (probably April 23) 1564. His father, a successful glovemaker, landowner, moneylender, and dealer in agricultural commodities, was elected to several important posts in local government but later suffered financial and social reverses, possibly as a result of adherence to the Catholic faith. Shakespeare, between the ages of seven and fourteen, almost certainly attended the free Stratford grammar school, where he would have acquired a reasonably impressive education, including a respectable knowledge of Latin, but he did not proceed to Oxford or Cambridge. There are legends about Shakespeare's youth but no documented facts. The first unambiguous record we have of his life after his christening is that of his marriage, in 1582, at age eighteen, to Anne Hathaway, eight years his senior. A daughter, Susanna, was born six months later, in 1583, and twins, Hamnet and Judith, in 1585. We possess no information about his activities for the next seven years, but by 1592 he was in London as an actor and apparently already well known as a playwright, for a rival dramatist, Robert Greene, refers to him resentfully in A Groatsworth of Wit as "an upstart crow, beautified with our feathers."

At this time, there were several companies of professional actors in London and in the provinces. What links Shakespeare had with one or more of them before 1592 are conjectural, but we do know of his long and fruitful connection, established by 1594, with the most successful troupe, the Lord Chamberlain's Men; later, when James I came to the throne, they became the King's Men. Shakespeare not only acted with this company but eventually became a leading shareholder (he had shares in the company), householder (he had shares in the theatrical buildings), and the principal playwright. Then as now, making a living in the professional theater was not easy: competition among the repertory companies was stiff; civic officials and religious moralists regarded playacting as a sinful, time-wasting nuisance and tried to ban it altogether; government officials exercised censorship over the contents of the plays; and periodic outbreaks of bubonic plague led to temporary closing of the London theaters. But Shakespeare's company, which included some of the most famous actors of the day, nonetheless thrived and in 1599 began to perform in the Globe, a fine, round open-air theater that the company built for itself on the south bank of the Thames. The company also performed frequently at court and, after 1608, at Blackfriars, an oblong private indoor London theater. Already by 1597 Shakespeare had so prospered that he was able to purchase New Place, a handsome house in Stratford-upon-Avon; he could now call himself a gentleman, as his father had (probably with the financial assistance of his successful playwright son) been granted a coat of arms the previous year. Shakespeare's wife and daughters (his son, Hamnet, having died in 1596) resided in Stratford-upon-Avon, while the playwright, living in rented rooms in London, pursued his career. Shortly after writing The Tempest (ca. 1611), he retired from direct involvement in the theater and returned to Stratford, buying one of the largest houses there. In March 1616, he signed his will; he died a month later, leaving the bulk of his estate to his daughter Susanna.

Shakespeare began his career as a playwright, probably in the early 1590s, by writing comedies and history plays. The earliest of these histories (in which he may have had one or more collaborators), generally based on accounts of English kings written by Raphael Holinshed and other sixteenth-century chroniclers, seem theatrically vital but crude, as does an early attempt at tragedy, Titus Andronicus. But by the later 1590s Shakespeare had created a sequence of profoundly searching and ambitious history plays—Richard II, the first and second parts of Henry IV, and Henry V—which together explore the death throes of feudal England and the birth of the modern nation-state ruled by a charismatic monarch. In the same years he wrote a succession of romantic comedies (The Merchant of Venice, The Merry Wives of Windsor, Much Ado About Nothing, As You Like It, Twelfth Night) whose poetic richness and emotional complexity remain unmatched.

Twelfth Night may originally have been written in the same year as Hamlet (ca. 1601), which initiated an outpouring of great tragic dramas: Othello, King Lear, Macbeth, Antony and Cleopatra, and Coriolanus. These plays, written from 1601 to 1607, seem to mark a major shift in sensibility, an existential and metaphysical darkening that many readers think originated in personal anguish. Whatever the truth of this speculation—and we have no direct, personal testimony either to support or to undermine it—there appears to have occurred in the same period a shift as well in Shakespeare's comic sensibility. The comedies written between 1601 and 1604, Troilus and Cressida, All's Well That Ends Well, and Measure for Measure, are sufficiently different from the earlier comedies—more biting in tone, more uneasy with comic conventions, more ruthlessly questioning of the values of the characters and the resolutions of the plots—that some modern scholars have classified them as "problem plays" or "dark comedies." Another group of plays, among the last that Shakespeare wrote, seem similarly to define a distinct category. Pericles, Cymbeline, The Winter's Tale, and The Tempest, written between 1608 and 1611, when Shakespeare had developed a remarkably fluid, dreamlike sense of plot and a poetic style that could veer, apparently effortlessly, from the tortured to the ineffably sweet, are now commonly known as the "romances." These plays share an interest in the moral and emotional life less of the adolescents who dominate the earlier comedies than of their parents. The romances are deeply concerned with patterns of loss and recovery, suffering and redemption, despair and renewal. They have seemed to many critics to constitute a self-conscious conclusion to a career that opened with histories and comedies and passed through the dark and tormented tragedies. They are, though, also written after the company's acquisition of the new, Blackfriars playhouse—which was more exclusive and expensive than the Globe—and reflect, too, the tastes of the elevated courtly audience the company was now expecting. In a few of the late plays, Shakespeare worked, as he apparently had at the beginning of his professional life, with collaborators. Perhaps he thought of himself as handing over his vocation to a new generation.

Shakespeare evinced no interest in preserving for posterity the sum of his writings, let alone in clarifying the chronology of his works or in specifying which plays he wrote alone and which with collaborators. He wrote plays for performance by his company, and his scripts existed in his own handwritten manuscripts or in scribal copies, in actors' separate part scripts, in playhouse promptbooks, and probably in pirated texts based on shorthand reports of a performance or, possibly, on reconstructions from memory by a spectator. None of these manuscript versions has survived, with the exception, perhaps, of some of the Thomas More passages, one of which is included in this volume (p. 482). Eighteen of his plays were published during his lifetime in the small-format, inexpensive books called quartos; to these were added eighteen other plays, never before printed, in the large, expensive folio volume of Mr. William Shakespeares Comedies, Histories, & Tragedies (1623), published seven years after his death. This First Folio, compiled by two of his friends and fellow actors, John Heminges and Henry Condell, is prefaced by a Ben Jonson poem, in which Shakespeare is hailed as “not of an age, but for all time.”

That Shakespeare is “for all time” does not mean that he did not also belong to his own age. It is possible to see where Shakespeare adapted the techniques of his contemporaries and where, crucially, he differed from them. Shakespeare rarely invented the plots of his dramas, preferring to work, often quite closely, with stories he found ready-made in histories, novellas, narrative poems, or other plays. The religious mystery plays and the allegorical morality plays still popular during his childhood taught him that dramas worth seeing must get at something central to the human condition, that they should embody as well as narrate the crucial actions, and that they could reach not only a coterie of the educated elite but also the great mass of ordinary people. From these and other theatrical models, Shakespeare learned how to construct plays around the struggle for the soul of a protagonist, how to create theatrically compelling and subversive figures of wickedness, and how to focus attention on his characters' psychological, moral, and spiritual lives as well as on their outward behavior.

Sketch of the Swan Theater. This drawing by Arend van Buchell (ca. 1596), based on the observations of Johannes De Witt, shows features of a public playhouse in Shakespeare's time. Resembling the courtyard of an Elizabethan inn, the Swan had three galleries for the audience, and probably additional room for audience members in the gallery at the back of the stage, above the tiring-house (dressing room). The stage itself had two doors for players' entrances and exits, and the roof over the stage was supported by pillars. The flag flying from the roof signals that a play is to be performed that day, and a trumpeter announces the beginning of the performance (though the sketch shows a performance already under way). De Witt labeled parts of the sketch using Latin names derived from the Roman theater.

---

The authors of the morality plays thought they could enhance the broad impact they sought to achieve by stripping their characters of all incidental distinguishing traits and getting to their essences. They believed that their audiences would thereby not be distracted by the irrelevant details of individual identities. Shakespeare grasped that the spectacle of human destiny was in fact vastly more compelling when it was attached not to generalized abstractions but to particular people, people whom he realized with an unprecedented intensity of individuation: not Youth but Viola, not Everyman but Lear. No other writer of his time was able to create and enter into the interior worlds of so many characters, conveying again and again a sense of unique and irreducible selfhood. In the plays of Shakespeare's brilliant contemporary Marlowe, the protagonist overwhelms virtually all the other characters; in Shakespeare, by contrast, even relatively minor characters—Gonzalo in The Tempest, for example, or Emilia in Othello—make astonishingly powerful claims on the audience's attention. The Romantic critic William Hazlitt observed that Shakespeare had the power to multiply himself marvelously. His plays convey the sense of an inexhaustible imaginative generosity.

Shakespeare was singularly alert to the fantastic vitality of the English language. His immense vocabulary bears witness to an uncanny ability to absorb terms from a wide range of pursuits and to transform them into intimate registers of thought and feeling. He had a seemingly boundless capacity to generate metaphors, and he was virtually addicted to wordplay. Double meanings, verbal echoes, and submerged associations ripple through every passage, deepening the reader's enjoyment and understanding, though sometimes at the expense of a single clear sense. The eighteenth-century critic Samuel Johnson complained with some justice that the quibble, the pun, was "the fatal Cleopatra for which Shakespeare lost the world and was content to lose it." For the power that continually discharges itself throughout his plays and poems, at once constituting and unsettling everything it touches, is the power of language.

Historical accuracy is rarely a concern for Shakespeare. His ancient Romans wear doublets, throw caps into the air and use Christian oaths: to this extent he pulled everything he touched into his contemporary existence. But at the same time he was not a social realist; other writers in this period are better at conveying the precise details of the daily lives of shoemakers, alchemists, and judges. The settings of his plays are rarely realistic representations of particular historical times and places; instead, they function as imaginative displacements into alternative worlds that remain strangely familiar.

Though on occasion he depicts ghosts, demons, and other supernatural figures, the universe Shakespeare conjures up seems resolutely human-centered and secular: the torments and joys that most deeply matter are found in this world, not in the next. Attempts to claim him for one or another religious system have proven unconvincing, as have attempts to assign him a specific political label. Activists and ideologues of all political stripes have viewed him as an ally: he has been admiringly quoted by kings and by revolutionaries, by fascists, liberal democrats, socialists, republicans, and communists. At once an agent of civility and an agent of subversion, Shakespeare seems to have been able to view society simultaneously as an insider and as an outsider. His plays can be interpreted and performed—with deep conviction and compelling power—in utterly contradictory ways. The centuries-long accumulation of these interpretations and performances, far from exhausting Shakespeare's aesthetic appeal, seems only to have enhanced its enduring freshness.

Sonnets In Elizabethan England aristocratic patronage, with the money, protection, and prestige it alone could provide, was probably a professional writer's most important asset. This patronage, or at least Shakespeare's quest for it, is most visible in his dedication, in 1593 and 1594, of his narrative poems, Venus and Adonis and The Rape of Lucrece, to the wealthy young nobleman Henry Wriothesley, earl of Southampton. What return the poet got for his exquisite offerings is unknown. We do know that among wits and gallants the poems won Shakespeare a reputation as an immensely stylish and accomplished poet. This reputation was enhanced by manuscript circulation of his sonnets, which were mentioned admiringly in print more than ten years before they were published, in 1609 (apparently without his personal supervision and perhaps without his consent).

Shakespeare's sonnets are quite unlike the other sonnet sequences of his day, notably in his almost unprecedented choice of a beautiful young man (rather than a lady) as the principal object of praise, love, and idealizing devotion and in his portrait of a dark, sensuous, and sexually promiscuous mistress (rather than the usual chaste and aloof blond beauty). Nor are the moods confined to what the Renaissance thought were those of the despairing Petrarchan lover: they include delight, pride, melancholy, shame, disgust, and fear. Shakespeare's sequence suggests a story, although the details are vague, and there is even doubt whether the sonnets as published are in an order established by the poet himself. Certain motifs are evident: an introductory series (1 to 17) celebrates the beauty of a young man and urges him to marry and beget children who will bear his image. The subsequent long sequence (18 to 126), passionately focused on the beloved young man, develops as a dominant motif the transience and destructive power of time, countered only by the force of love and the permanence of poetry. The remaining sonnets focus chiefly on the so-called Dark Lady as an alluring but degrading object of desire. Some sonnets (like 144) intimate a love triangle involving the speaker, the male friend, and the woman; others take note of a rival poet (sometimes identified as George Chapman or Christopher Marlowe). The biographical background of the sonnets has inspired a mountain of speculation, but very little of it has any factual support.

Though there are many variations, Shakespeare's most frequent rhyme scheme in the sonnets is abab cdcd efef gg. This so-called Shakespearean pattern often (though not always) calls attention to three distinct quatrains (each of which may develop a separate metaphor), followed by a closing couplet that may either confirm or pull sharply against what has gone before. Startling shifts in direction may occur in lines other than the closing ones; consider, for example, the twists and turns in the opening lines of sonnet 138: "When my love swears that she is made of truth, / I do believe her, though I know she lies." Shakespeare's sonnets as a whole are strikingly intense, conveying a sense of high psychological and moral stakes. They are also remarkably dense, written with a daunting energy, concentration, and compression. Often the main idea of the poem may be grasped quickly, but the precise movement of thought and feeling, the links between the shifting images, and the syntax, tone, and rhetorical structure prove immensely challenging. These are poems that famously reward rereading.

Sonnets

To the Only Begetter of These Ensuing Sonnets Mr. W. H. All Happiness and That Eternity Promised By Our Ever-Living
Poet Wisheth The Well-Wishing Adventurer in Setting Forth T. T.<sup>1</sup>

Endnotes

- Note 1:
This odd dedication bears the initials of the publisher, Thomas Thorpe. The W. H. addressed here may or may not be the male friend addressed in sonnets 1 to 126. Leading candidates for that role are Henry Wriothesley, Earl of Southampton, the dedicatee of Venus and Adonis (1593) and The Rape of Lucrece (1594), and William Herbert, earl of Pembroke, a dedicatee of the First Folio. But there is no hard evidence to support these or other suggested identifications of the male friend or of the so-called Dark Lady; these sonnet personages may or may not have had real-life counterparts.

Since all the sonnets save two were first published in 1609, we do not repeat the date after each one. Numbers 138 and 144 were first published in 1599, in a verse miscellany called The Passionate Pilgrim.

Return to reference 1

1

From fairest creatures we desire increase,
That thereby beauty's rose might never die,
But as the ripper should by time decease,
His tender heir might bear his memory;
5 But thou, contracted<sup>2</sup> to thine own bright eyes,
Feed'st thy light's flame with self-substantial<sup>3</sup> fuel,
Making a famine where abundance lies,
Thyself thy foe, to thy sweet self too cruel.
Thou that art now the world's fresh ornament
10 And only<sup>4</sup> herald to the gaudy spring,
Within thine own bud buriest thy content<sup>5</sup>
And, tender churl,<sup>6</sup> mak'st waste in niggarding.<sup>o</sup> Pity the world, or else this glutton be,
To eat the world's due, by the grave and thee<sup>7</sup>

Endnotes

- Note 2: Betrothed; also, withdrawn into.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Of your own substance.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Principal, with overtones of single, solitary.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: What you contain (potential for fatherhood), also what would content you (marriage and fatherhood).Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Gentle boor (an oxymoron).Return to reference 6
- Note 7: "This . . . thee": be a glutton by causing what is owed to the world (your posterity) to be consumed by the grave and within yourself.Return to reference 7

Notes

- °: hoarding Return to reference °

3

Look in thy glass<sup>o</sup> and tell the face thou viewest
Now is the time that face should form another,
Whose fresh repair<sup>o</sup> if now thou not renewest,
Thou dost beguile<sup>o</sup> the world, unbless some mother.
5 For where is she so fair whose uneared<sup>o</sup> womb
Disdains the tillage of thy husbandry?
Or who is he so fond<sup>o</sup> will be the tomb
Of his self-love, to stop posterity?
Thou art thy mother's glass, and she in thee
10 Calls back the lovely April of her prime;
So thou through windows of thine age shalt see,
Despite of wrinkles, this thy golden time.
But if thou live rememb'ed not to be,<sup>8</sup>
Die single, and thine image dies with thee.

Endnotes

- Note 8: But if you live to be forgotten.Return to reference 8

Notes

- <sup>o</sup>: mirrorReturn to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: stateReturn to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: cheatReturn to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: unplowedReturn to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: foolishReturn to reference <sup>o</sup>

12

When I do count the clock that tells the time
And see the brave<sup>o</sup> day sunk in hideous night,
When I behold the violet past prime
And sable curls all silvered o'er with white,
When lofty trees I see barren of leaves,
5 Which erst<sup>o</sup> from heat did canopy the herd
And summer's green all girded up in sheaves
Borne on the bier with white and bristly beard:
Then of thy beauty do I question make<sup>o</sup>
10 That thou among the wastes of time must go,
Since sweets and beauties do themselves forsake,
And die as fast as they see others grow,
And nothing 'gainst Time's scythe can make defense
Save breed,<sup>o</sup> to brave<sup>o</sup> him when he takes thee hence.

Notes

- °: splendid Return to reference °
- °: formerly Return to reference °
- °: speculate Return to reference °
- °: offspring Return to reference °
- °: defy Return to reference °

When I consider every thing that grows
 Holds<sup>o</sup> in perfection but a little moment;
 That this huge stage presenteth nought but shows<sup>9</sup>
 Whereon the stars in secret influence comment;<sup>1</sup>
 When I perceive that men as plants increase,
 5      Cheered and checked<sup>2</sup> even by the selfsame sky,
       Vaunt<sup>3</sup> in their youthful sap, at height decrease,
       And wear their brave state out of memory;<sup>4</sup>
       Then the conceit<sup>o</sup> of this inconstant stay
 10      Sets you most rich in youth before my sight,
       Where wasteful Time debateth<sup>5</sup> with Decay
       To change your day of youth to sullied<sup>o</sup> night,
       And all in war with Time for love of you,
       As he takes from you, I ingraft<sup>6</sup> you new.

Endnotes

- Note 9: (1) Appearances, (2) performances. Return to reference 9
- Note 1: That is, the stars secretly affect human actions. Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Encouraged and reproached or stopped. Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Exult, display themselves. Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Wear their showy splendor out and are forgotten. Return to reference 4
- Note 5: (1) Fights, (2) joins forces. Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Renew by grafting; implant beauty again (by my verse). Return to reference 6

Notes

- °: remains Return to reference °
- °: conception Return to reference °
- °: soiled, blackened Return to reference °

Shall I compare thee to a summer's day?
 Thou art more lovely and more temperate:
 Rough winds do shake the darling buds of May,
 And summer's lease hath all too short a date;
 Sometime too hot the eye of heaven shines,
 5 And often is his gold complexion dimmed;
 And every fair from fair sometime declines,
 By chance or nature's changing course untrimmed.<sup>7</sup>
 But thy eternal summer shall not fade,
 Nor lose possession of that fair thou ow'st;°
 10 Nor shall death brag thou wander'st in his shade,
 When in eternal lines to time thou grow'st:°
 So long as men can breathe or eyes can see,
 So long lives this,<sup>8</sup> and this gives life to thee.

Endnotes

- Note 7: Stripped of gay apparel.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: That is, the poem. The boast of immortality for one's verse was a convention going back to the Greek and Roman classics.Return to reference 8

Notes

- °: ownestReturn to reference °
- °: are graftedReturn to reference °

Devouring Time, blunt thou the lion's paws,
 And make the earth devour her own sweet brood;
 Pluck the keen teeth from the fierce tiger's jaws,
 And burn the long-lived phoenix in her blood;<sup>9</sup>
 Make glad and sorry seasons as thou fleet'st,
 5 And do whate'er thou wilt, swift-footed Time,
 To the wide world and all her fading sweets,
 But I forbid thee one most heinous crime:
 O carve not with thy hours my love's fair brow,
 Nor draw no lines there with thine antique<sup>1</sup> pen;
 10 Him in thy course untainted<sup>2</sup> do allow,
 For beauty's pattern to succeeding men.
 Yet do thy worst, old Time: despite thy wrong,
 My love shall in my verse ever live young.

Endnotes

- Note 9: In full vigor of life (a hunting term). The phoenix was a mythical bird that lived five hundred years, then died in flames to rise again from its ashes.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: (1) Old, (2) fantastic (antic).Return to reference 1
- Note 2: (1) Undeiled, (2) untouched by a weapon (a term from jousting).Return to reference 2

A woman's face with Nature's own hand painted<sup>3</sup>
 Hast thou, the master mistress of my passion;<sup>4</sup>
 A woman's gentle heart but not acquainted
 With shifting change as is false women's fashion;
 An eye more bright than theirs, less false in rolling,<sup>5</sup>
 5 Gilding the object whereupon it gazeth;
 A man in hue all hues<sup>5</sup> in his controlling,
 Which steals men's eyes and women's souls amazeth.
 And for a woman wert thou first created,
 10 Till Nature as she wrought thee fell a-doting,<sup>6</sup>
 And by addition me of thee defeated,
 By adding one thing to my purpose nothing.
 But since she pricked<sup>7</sup> thee out for women's pleasure,
 Mine be thy love, and thy love's use<sup>8</sup> their treasure.

Endnotes

- Note 3: That is, not made up with cosmetics.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: (1) Strong feeling, (2) poem.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: "Hue" probably means appearance or form. In the first edition, "hues" is spelled "Hews," which some have taken as indicating a pun on a proper name. It has also been suggested that "man in" is a copyist's or compositor's misreading of "maiden."Return to reference 5
- Note 6: (1) Crazy, (2) infatuated.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Marked, with obvious sexual pun.Return to reference 7

- Note 8: (1) Sexual enjoyment, (2) interest (as in usury). Return to reference 8

Notes

- °: roving Return to reference °

As an unperfect actor on the stage
 Who with his fear is put besides<sup>o</sup> his part,
 Or some fierce thing replete with too much rage
 Whose strength's abundance weakens his own heart,
 5 So I, for fear of trust,<sup>o</sup> forget to say
 The perfect ceremony of love's rite,<sup>9</sup>
 And in mine own love's strength seem to decay,
 O'er-charged<sup>o</sup> with burden of mine own love's might.
 O let my books be then the eloquence
 10 And dumb presagers<sup>o</sup> of my speaking breast,
 Who plead for love, and look for recompense
 More than that tongue that more hath more expressed.<sup>1</sup>
 O learn to read what silent love hath writ;
 To hear with eyes belongs to love's fine wit.<sup>o</sup>

Endnotes

- Note 9: The first edition has "right," suggesting love's due as well as love's ritual ("rite").Return to reference 9
- Note 1: More than that (rival) speaker who has more often said more.Return to reference 1

Notes

- <sup>o</sup>: forgetsReturn to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: lack of confidenceReturn to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: overweighedReturn to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: mute presentersReturn to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: intelligenceReturn to reference <sup>o</sup>

When, in disgrace<sup>o</sup> with Fortune and men's eyes,
 I all alone bewEEP my outcast state,
 And trouble deaf heaven with my bootless<sup>o</sup> cries,
 And look upon myself and curse my fate,
 Wishing me like to one more rich in hope,
 5 Featured like him, like him with friends possessed,<sup>2</sup>
 Desiring this man's art<sup>o</sup> and that man's scope,<sup>o</sup>
 With what I most enjoy contented least;
 Yet in these thoughts myself almost despising,
 10 Haply I think on thee, and then my state<sup>3</sup>
 (Like to the lark at break of day arising From sullen earth) sings hymns at heaven's gate;
 For thy sweet love remembered such wealth brings
 That then I scorn to change my state with kings.

Endnotes

- Note 2: That is, I wish I had one man's looks, another man's friends. Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Condition, state of mind; but in line 14 there is a pun on state meaning chair of state, throne. Return to reference 3

Notes

- °: disfavor Return to reference °
- °: futile Return to reference °
- °: skill Return to reference °
- °: ability Return to reference °

When to the sessions<sup>4</sup> of sweet silent thought
 I summon up remembrance of things past,
 I sigh the lack of many a thing I sought,
 And with old woes new wail<sup>o</sup> my dear time's waste:
 5 Then can I drown an eye (unused to flow)
 For precious friends hid in death's dateless<sup>o</sup> night,
 And weep afresh love's long since canceled woe,
 And moan th' expense<sup>o</sup> of many a vanished sight:
 Then can I grieve at grievances foregone,<sup>o</sup>
 10 And heavily from woe to woe tell<sup>o</sup> o'er
 The sad account of fore-bemoanèd moan,
 Which I new pay as if not paid before.
 But if the while I think on thee, dear friend,
 All losses are restored and sorrows end.

Endnotes

- Note 4: Sitzings of court. "Summon up" (next line) continues the metaphor. Return to reference 4

Notes

- °: bewail anew Return to reference °
- °: endless Return to reference °
- °: loss Return to reference °
- °: former Return to reference °
- °: count Return to reference °

Full many a glorious morning have I seen
 Flatter the mountain tops with sovereign eye,<sup>o</sup>
 Kissing with golden face the meadows green,
 Gilding pale streams with heavenly alchemy;
 Anon<sup>o</sup> permit the basest<sup>o</sup> clouds to ride
 5 With ugly rack<sup>o</sup> on his celestial face,
 And from the forlorn world his visage hide,
 Stealing unseen to west with this disgrace.
 Even so my sun one early morn did shine
 With all triumphant splendor on my brow;
 10 But out, alack,<sup>o</sup> he was but one hour mine;
 The region<sup>o</sup> cloud hath masked him from me now.
 Yet him for this my love no whit disdaineth:
 Suns of the world may stain<sup>o</sup> when heaven's sun staineth.

Notes

- °: sunlight Return to reference °
- °: (but) soon Return to reference °
- °: darkest Return to reference °
- °: cloudy mask Return to reference °
- °: alas Return to reference °
- °: high Return to reference °
- °: darken Return to reference °

No more be grieved at that which thou hast done:
 Roses have thorns, and silver fountains mud.
 Clouds and eclipses stain<sup>o</sup> both moon and sun,
 And loathsome canker<sup>o</sup> lives in sweetest bud.
 5 All men make faults, and even I in this,
 Authorizing thy trespass with compare,<sup>o</sup>
 Myself corrupting, salving thy amiss,<sup>o</sup>
 Excusing thy sins more than thy sins are;
 For to thy sensual fault I bring in sense<sup>o</sup>—
 Thy adverse party is thy advocate—
 10 And 'gainst myself a lawful plea commence.
 Such civil war is in my love and hate
 That I an accessory needs must be
 To that sweet thief which sourly robs from me.

Notes

- °: dimReturn to reference °
- °: rose wormReturn to reference °
- °: comparisonsReturn to reference °
- °: palliating your offenseReturn to reference °
- °: reasonReturn to reference °

Not marble nor the gilded monuments
 Of princes shall outlive this powerful rhyme;
 But you shall shine more bright in these contents
 Than unswept stone, besmeared with sluttish time.<sup>5</sup>
 When wasteful war shall statues overturn,
 5 And broils° root out the work of masonry,
 Nor Mars his° sword nor war's quick fire shall burn
 The living record of your memory.
 'Gainst death and all-oblivious enmity<sup>6</sup>
 Shall you pace forth; your praise shall still find room
 10 Even in the eyes of all posterity
 That wear this world out to the ending doom.°
 So, till the judgment that yourself arise,<sup>7</sup>
 You live in this, and dwell in lovers' eyes.

Endnotes

- Note 5: That is, than in a stone tomb or effigy that slovenly time wears away and covers with dust.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: The enmity of oblivion, of being forgotten.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Until you rise from the dead on Judgment Day.Return to reference 7

Notes

- °: battlesReturn to reference °
- °: neither Mars'sReturn to reference °
- °: Judgment DayReturn to reference °

Like as the waves make towards the pebbled shore,
 So do our minutes hasten to their end;
 Each changing place with that which goes before,
 In sequent toil all forwards do contend.<sup>8</sup>
 5 Nativity, once in the main<sup>o</sup> of light,
 Crawls to maturity, wherewith being crowned,
 Crooked<sup>o</sup> eclipses 'gainst his glory fight,
 And Time that gave doth now his gift confound.
 Time doth transfix the flourish<sup>9</sup> set on youth,
 10 And delves the parallels<sup>1</sup> in beauty's brow,
 Feeds on the rarities of nature's truth,
 And nothing stands but for his scythe to mow.
 And yet to times in hope<sup>o</sup> my verse shall stand,
 Praising thy worth, despite his cruel hand.

Endnotes

- Note 8: Toiling and following each other, all struggle to move forward.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Destroy the embellishment. To "flourish" is also to blossom.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Digs the parallel furrows (wrinkles).Return to reference 1

Notes

- °: broad expanseReturn to reference °
- °: perniciousReturn to reference °
- °: future timesReturn to reference °

Sin of self-love possesseth all mine eye,
 And all my soul, and all my every part;
 And for this sin there is no remedy,
 It is so grounded inward in my heart.
 Methinks no face so gracious<sup>o</sup> is as mine,
 5 No shape so true,<sup>o</sup> no truth of such account,
 And for myself mine own worth do define
 As<sup>o</sup> I all other<sup>o</sup> in all worths surmount.
 But when my glass<sup>o</sup> shows me myself indeed,
 Beated and chapped with tanned antiquity,
 10 Mine own self-love quite contrary<sup>o</sup> I read;
 Self so self-loving were iniquity.
 'Tis thee, my self,<sup>o</sup> that for<sup>o</sup> myself I praise,
 Painting my age with beauty of thy days.

Notes

- <sup>o</sup>: pleasing Return to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: perfect Return to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: as if Return to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: others Return to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: mirror Return to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: differently Return to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: you, my other self Return to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: as Return to reference <sup>o</sup>

Since<sup>2</sup> brass, nor stone, nor earth, nor boundless sea,
 But sad mortality o'ersways their power,
 How with this rage<sup>o</sup> shall beauty hold a plea,
 Whose action is no stronger than a flower?
 O how shall summer's honey breath hold out
 5 Against the wrackful<sup>o</sup> siege of batt'ring days,
 When rocks impregnable are not so stout,
 Nor gates of steel so strong, but Time decays?
 O fearful meditation! Where, alack,
 10 Shall Time's best jewel from Time's chest<sup>3</sup> he hid?
 Or what strong hand can hold his swift foot back?
 Or who his spoil<sup>o</sup> of beauty can forbid?
 O none, unless this miracle have might,
 That in black ink my love may still shine bright.

Endnotes

- Note 2: That is, since there is neither.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: That is, from being coffered up by Time.Return to reference 3

Notes

- °: destructive powerReturn to reference °
- °: destructiveReturn to reference °
- °: ravagingReturn to reference °

No longer mourn for me when I am dead
 Than you shall hear the surly sullen bell<sup>4</sup>
 Give warning to the world that I am fled
 From this vile world, with vilest worms to dwell.
 5 Nay, if you read this line, remember not
 The hand that writ it; for I love you so,
 That I in your sweet thoughts would be forgot,
 If thinking on me then should make you woe.
 O, if, I say, you look upon this verse
 10 When I perhaps compounded am with clay,
 Do not so much as my poor name rehearse,<sup>o</sup>
 But let your love even with my life decay;
 Lest the wise world should look into your moan,
 And mock you with me after I am gone.

Endnotes

- Note 4: The bell was tolled to announce the death of a member of the parish—one stroke for each year of his or her life.Return to reference 4

Notes

- °: repeatReturn to reference °

That time of year thou may'st in me behold
 When yellow leaves, or none, or few, do hang Upon those boughs which shake against the cold, Bare ruined choirs,<sup>5</sup> where late<sup>o</sup> the sweet birds sang.

5 In me thou seest the twilight of such day
 As after sunset fadeth in the west;
 Which by and by black night doth take away,
 Death's second self that seals up all in rest.
 In me thou seest the glowing of such fire
 That on the ashes of his youth doth lie,
 10 As the deathbed whereon it must expire,
 Consumed with that which it was nourished by.<sup>6</sup>
 This thou perceiv'st, which makes thy love more strong,
 To love that well, which thou must leave ere long.

Endnotes

- Note 5: The part of a church where divine service was sung.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Choked by the ashes of that which once nourished its flame.Return to reference 6

Notes

- °: latelyReturn to reference °

But be contented; when that fell<sup>7</sup> arrest
 Without all bail shall carry me away,
 My life hath in this line some interest,<sup>8</sup>
 Which for memorial still<sup>o</sup> with thee shall stay.
 When thou reviewest this, thou dost review
 5 The very part was<sup>o</sup> consecrate to thee.
 The earth can have but earth, which is his due;
 My spirit is thine, the better part of me.
 So then thou hast but lost the dregs of life,
 The prey of worms, my body being dead,
 10 The coward conquest of a wretch's knife,<sup>9</sup>
 Too base of<sup>o</sup> thee to be rememberèd.
 The worth of that is that which it contains,<sup>1</sup>
 And that is this, and this with thee remains.

Endnotes

- Note 7: Cruel. Hamlet says, "this fell sergeant / Death is strict in his arrest" (5.2.278–79).Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Share, participation. "In this line": that is, in this poetry.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Death's weapon (like Time's scythe).Return to reference 9
- Note 1: That is, the only value of the body is that it contains the spirit.Return to reference 1

Notes

- °: alwaysReturn to reference °
- °: which wasReturn to reference °
- °: byReturn to reference °

O, how I faint<sup>o</sup> when I of you do write,
 Knowing a better spirit<sup>2</sup> doth use your name,
 And in the praise thereof spends all his might,
 To make me tongue-tied, speaking of your fame!
 5 But since your worth, wide as the ocean is,
 The humble as<sup>o</sup> the proudest sail doth bear,
 My saucy bark,<sup>o</sup> inferior far to his,
 On your broad main<sup>o</sup> doth willfully<sup>o</sup> appear.
 Your shallowest help will hold me up afloat
 Whilst he upon your soundless<sup>o</sup> deep doth ride;
 10 Or, being wrecked, I am a worthless boat,
 He of tall building<sup>3</sup> and of goodly pride.<sup>o</sup>
 Then if he thrive and I be cast away,
 The worst was this: my love was my decay.

Endnotes

- Note 2: A rival poet. See the headnote, p. 624.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Tall, strong build.Return to reference 3

Notes

- °: get discouragedReturn to reference °
- °: as well asReturn to reference °
- °: impudent boatReturn to reference °
- °: waters Return to reference °
- °: boldlyReturn to reference °
- °: bottomlessReturn to reference °
- °: magnificenceReturn to reference °

Farewell: thou art too dear<sup>4</sup> for my possessing,
 And like enough thou know'st thy estimate.<sup>o</sup>
 The charter<sup>o</sup> of thy worth gives thee releasing;<sup>5</sup>
 My bonds in thee are all determinate.<sup>o</sup>
 5 For how do I hold thee but by thy granting,
 And for that riches where is my deserving?
 The cause of this fair gift in me is wanting,<sup>o</sup>
 And so my patent<sup>o</sup> back again is swerving.<sup>6</sup>
 Thy self thou gav'st, thy own worth then not knowing,
 10 Or me, to whom thou gav'st it, else mistaking;<sup>o</sup>
 So thy great gift, upon misprision growing,<sup>o</sup>
 Comes home again, on better judgment making.<sup>7</sup>
 Thus have I had thee as a dream doth flatter:
 In sleep a king, but waking no such matter.

Endnotes

- Note 4: (1) Expensive, (2) beloved. Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Releases you (from love's bonds). Return to reference 5
- Note 6: That is, reverting to you. Return to reference 6
- Note 7: That is, when you realize your error. Return to reference 7

Notes

- °: value Return to reference °
- °: deed; contract for property Return to reference °
- °: expired Return to reference °
- °: absent Return to reference °
- °: title Return to reference °

- °: overestimating Return to reference °
- °: based on error Return to reference °

They that have power to hurt and will do none,
 That do not do the thing they most do show,<sup>8</sup>
 Who, moving others, are themselves as stone,
 Unmovèd, cold, and to temptation slow;
 They rightly do inherit heaven's graces
 5 And husband nature's riches from expense;<sup>9</sup>
 They are the lords and owners of their faces,
 Others but stewards of their excellence.
 The summer's flower is to the summer sweet,
 10 Though to itself it only live and die,<sup>1</sup>
 But if that flower with base infection meet,
 The basest weed outbraves° his dignity:
 For sweetest things turn sourest by their deeds;
 Lilies that fester smell far worse than weeds.

Endnotes

- Note 8: Seem to do, or seem capable of doing. Return to reference 8
- Note 9: That is, they do not squander nature's gifts. Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Even if it lives and dies in apparent isolation (unpollinated). Return to reference 1

Notes

- °: surpasses Return to reference °

How like a winter hath my absence been
 From thee, the pleasure of the fleeting year!
 What freezings have I felt, what dark days seen!
 What old December's bareness everywhere!
 5 And yet this time removed<sup>2</sup> was summer's time,
 The teeming autumn, big with rich increase,
 Bearing the wanton burthen of the prime,<sup>3</sup>
 Like widowed wombs after their lords' decease.
 Yet this abundant issue<sup>o</sup> seemed to me
 10 But hope of orphans and unfathered fruit;
 For summer and his pleasures wait<sup>o</sup> on thee,
 And, thou away, the very birds are mute;
 Or, if they sing, 'tis with so dull a cheer<sup>o</sup>
 That leaves look pale, dreading the winter's near.

Endnotes

- Note 2: That is, when I was absent. Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Spring, which has engendered the lavish crop ("wanton burthen") that autumn is now left to bear. Return to reference 3

Notes

- °: outgrowth Return to reference °
- °: attend Return to reference °
- °: such a dismal mood Return to reference °

From you have I been absent in the spring,
 When proud-pied<sup>4</sup> April, dressed in all his trim,
 Hath put a spirit of youth in everything,
 That heavy Saturn<sup>o</sup> laughed and leapt with him.
 5 Yet nor<sup>o</sup> the lays<sup>o</sup> of birds, nor the sweet smell
 Of different flowers in odor and in hue
 Could make me any summer's story tell,
 Or from their proud lap pluck them where they grew;
 Nor did I wonder at<sup>o</sup> the lily's white,
 Nor praise the deep vermilion in the rose;
 10 They were but sweet, but figures<sup>o</sup> of delight,
 Drawn after you, you pattern of all those.
 Yet seemed it winter still, and, you away,
 As with your shadow I with these did play.

Endnotes

- Note 4: Magnificent in many colors.Return to reference 4

Notes

- °: god of melancholyReturn to reference °
- °: neither Return to reference °
- °: songsReturn to reference °
- °: admireReturn to reference °
- °: merely emblemsReturn to reference °

Let not my love be called idolatry,
 Nor my beloved as an idol show,
 Since all alike my songs and praises be
 To one, of one, still <sup>o</sup> such, and ever so.
 Kind is my love today, tomorrow kind,
 5 Still constant in a wondrous excellence.
 Therefore my verse, to constancy confined,
 One thing expressing, leaves out difference. <sup>o</sup>
 "Fair, kind, and true" is all my argument, <sup>o</sup>
 "Fair, kind, and true" varying to other words,
 10 And in this change is my invention spent, <sup>5</sup>
 Three themes in one, which wondrous scope affords.
 Fair, kind, and true have often lived alone, <sup>o</sup>
 Which three till now never kept seat <sup>o</sup> in one.

Endnotes

- Note 5: And in varying the words alone my inventiveness is expended. Return to reference 5

Notes

- <sup>o</sup>: continually Return to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: variety Return to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: theme Return to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: separately Return to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: dwelt permanently Return to reference <sup>o</sup>

When in the chronicle of wasted<sup>o</sup> time
 I see descriptions of the fairest wights,<sup>o</sup>
 And beauty making beautiful old rhyme
 In praise of ladies dead and lovely knights,
 5 Then, in the blazon<sup>6</sup> of sweet beauty's best,
 Of hand, of foot, of lip, of eye, of brow,
 I see their antique pen would have expressed
 Even such a beauty as you master now.
 So all their praises are but prophecies
 10 Of this our time, all you prefiguring;
 And, for they looked but with divining eyes,<sup>7</sup>
 They had not skill enough your worth to sing:
 For we, which now behold these present days,
 Have eyes to wonder, but lack tongues to praise.

Endnotes

- Note 6: Catalog of excellencies.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Because ("for") they were able only ("but") to foresee prophetically.Return to reference 7

Notes

- °: pastReturn to reference °
- °: personsReturn to reference °

Not mine own fears, nor the prophetic soul
 Of the wide world dreaming on things to come,<sup>8</sup>
 Can yet the lease of my true love control,
 Supposed as forfeit to a confined doom.<sup>9</sup>
 5 The mortal moon hath her eclipse endured,
 And the sad augurs mock their own presage;<sup>1</sup>
 Incertainties now crown themselves assured,
 And peace<sup>2</sup> proclaims olives of endless age.
 Now with the drops of this most balmy time
 10 My love looks fresh, and death to me subscribes,<sup>o</sup>
 Since, spite of him, I'll live in this poor rhyme,
 While he insults o'er dull and speechless tribes:
 And thou in this shalt find thy monument,
 When tyrants' crests and tombs of brass are spent.
 o
 —

Endnotes

- Note 8: This sonnet refers to contemporary events and the prophecies, common in Elizabethan almanacs, of disaster.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: That is, can yet put an end to my love, which I thought doomed to early forfeiture.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: The "mortal moon" is probably Queen Elizabeth; her "eclipse" could be either her death (March 1603) or, perhaps, her "climacteric" year, her sixty-third (thought meaningful because the product of two "significant" numbers, 7 and 9), which ended in September 1596. The sober astrologers ("sad augurs") now ridicule their own predictions ("presage") of catastrophe, because they turned out to be false.Return to reference 1

- Note 2: Perhaps referring to the peace treaty signed with Spain by Elizabeth's successor, James I, or, if the sonnet refers to the time of Elizabeth's climacteric, to an earlier treaty between England and France. Return to reference 2

Notes

- °: submits Return to reference °
- °: wasted away Return to reference °

Alas, 'tis true I have gone here and there
 And made myself a motley<sup>o</sup> to the view, Gored<sup>3</sup> mine own thoughts, sold cheap what is most
 dear,
 Made old offenses of affections<sup>o</sup> new.
 Most true it is that I have looked on truth<sup>o</sup>
 5 Askance and strangely;<sup>4</sup> but, by all above,
 These blenches<sup>o</sup> gave my heart another youth,
 And worse essays<sup>5</sup> proved thee my best of love.
 Now all is done, have what shall have no end:
 Mine appetite I never more will grind<sup>o</sup>
 10 On newer proof,<sup>o</sup> to try<sup>o</sup> an older friend,
 A god in love, to whom I am confined.
 Then give me welcome, next my heaven the best,<sup>6</sup>
 Even to thy pure and most most loving breast.

Endnotes

- Note 3: Wounded, pierced. Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Obliquely or asquint, and coldly (like a stranger). Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Trials of worse relationships. Return to reference 5
- Note 6: That is, the next best thing to the Christian heaven. Return to reference 6

Notes

- °: fool, jester Return to reference °
- °: passions Return to reference °
- °: fidelity Return to reference °
- °: turnings aside Return to reference °

- °: whetReturn to reference °
- °: experiences Return to reference °
- °: testReturn to reference °

Let me not to the marriage of true minds
 Admit impediments;<sup>7</sup> love is not love
 Which alters when it alteration finds,
 Or bends with the remover to remove:
 5 O, no, it is an ever-fixèd mark,<sup>8</sup>
 That looks on tempests and is never shaken;
 It is the star to every wand'ring bark,
 Whose worth's unknown, although his height<sup>9</sup> be taken.
 Love's not Time's fool,° though rosy lips and cheeks
 10 Within his<sup>1</sup> bending sickle's compass come;
 Love alters not with his brief hours and weeks,
 But bears it out even to the edge of doom.°
     If this be error and upon me proved,
     I never writ, nor no man ever loved.

Endnotes

- Note 7: From the Anglican marriage service: "If either of you do know any impediment why ye may not be lawfully joined together . . ." Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Seamark, such as a lighthouse or a beacon. Return to reference 8
- Note 9: The star's value is incalculable, although its altitude may be known and used for navigation. Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Time's (as also in line 11). Return to reference 1

Notes

- °: plaything Return to reference °
- °: brink of Judgment Day Return to reference °

O thou, my lovely boy, who in thy power
 Dost hold Time's fickle glass,<sup>3</sup> his sickle, hour;<sup>o</sup>
 Who hast by waning grown and therein show'st<sup>o</sup>
 Thy lovers withering as thy sweet self grow'st;
 If Nature (sovereign mistress over wrack<sup>o</sup>)
 5 As thou goest onwards still will pluck thee back,
 She keeps thee to this purpose, that her skill
 May Time disgrace and wretched minutes kill.
 Yet fear her, O thou minion<sup>o</sup> of her pleasure,
 She may detain, but not still<sup>o</sup> keep, her treasure!
 10 Her audit<sup>o</sup> (though delayed) answered must be,
 And her quietus<sup>o</sup> is to render<sup>o</sup> thee.

Endnotes

- Note 2: This poem—not a sonnet but six couplets—is an envoy (a closing summary or commentary) marking the end of the sequence addressed to a beloved young man (see the headnote) and formally signaling a change in tone and subject matter in the remaining sonnets.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Mirror, fickle because as the subject ages, the mirror reflects a changed image.Return to reference 3

Notes

- °: hourglassReturn to reference °
- °: in contrastReturn to reference °
- °: destructionReturn to reference °
- °: darlingReturn to reference °
- °: alwaysReturn to reference °
- °: accountingReturn to reference °

- °: settlement Return to reference °
- °: surrender Return to reference °

In the old age black was not counted fair,<sup>4</sup>
 Or, if it were, it bore not beauty's name;
 But now is black beauty's successive heir,<sup>5</sup>
 And beauty slandered with a bastard shame:<sup>o</sup>
 For since each hand hath put on nature's power,
 5 Fairing the foul with art's false borrowed face,<sup>o</sup>
 Sweet beauty hath no name, no holy bower,<sup>6</sup>
 But is profaned, if not lives in disgrace.
 Therefore my mistress' brows are raven black,
 Her eyes so suited,<sup>o</sup> and they mourners seem 10 At<sup>o</sup> such who, not born fair, no beauty lack,<sup>7</sup>
 Sland'ring creation with a false esteem:
 Yet so they mourn, becoming of<sup>o</sup> their woe,
 That every tongue says beauty should look so.

Endnotes

- Note 4: Beautiful, equated with blond hair and coloring. "Old": former. "Black": dark hair and coloring, equated with ugliness.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Heir in line of succession.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Shrine. The next line suggests that natural (unpainted) beauty is now discredited.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: That is, nevertheless possess the appearance of beauty.Return to reference 7

Notes

- °: declared illegitimateReturn to reference °
- °: with cosmeticsReturn to reference °
- °: also blackReturn to reference °

- °: for Return to reference °
- °: gracing Return to reference °

How oft when thou, my music, music play'st
 Upon that blessèd wood<sup>8</sup> whose motion sounds
 With thy sweet fingers when thou gently sway'st<sup>o</sup>
 The wiry concord that mine ear confounds,<sup>9</sup>
 5 Do I envý those jacks<sup>1</sup> that nimble leap
 To kiss the tender inward of thy hand,
 Whilst my poor lips, which should that harvest reap,
 At the wood's boldness by thee blushing stand.
 To be so tickled they would change their state<sup>2</sup>
 10 And situation<sup>3</sup> with those dancing chips,
 O'er whom thy fingers walk with gentle gait,
 Making dead wood more blessed than living lips.
 Since saucy jacks<sup>4</sup> so happy are in this,
 Give them thy fingers, me thy lips to kiss.

Endnotes

- Note 8: Keys of the spinet or virginal. Return to reference 8
- Note 9: The harmony from the strings that overcomes my ear with delight. Return to reference 9
- Note 1: The keys (actually, "jacks" are the plectra that pluck the strings when activated by the keys). Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Their place in the order of things. Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Physical location. Return to reference 3
- Note 4: With a quibble on the sense "impertinent fellows." Return to reference 4

Notes

- °: govern Return to reference °

Th' expense of spirit in a waste of shame
 Is lust in action;<sup>5</sup> and till action, lust
 Is perjured, murd'rous, bloody, full of blame,
 Savage, extreme, rude,<sup>o</sup> cruel, not to trust;
 Enjoyed no sooner but despisèd straight;<sup>o</sup>
 5 Past reason hunted, and no sooner had,
 Past reason hated as a swallowed bait
 On purpose laid to make the taker mad:
 Mad in pursuit, and in possession so;
 Had, having, and in quest to have, extreme;
 10 A bliss in proof,<sup>6</sup> and proved, a very<sup>o</sup> woe;
 Before, a joy proposed; behind, a dream.
 All this the world well knows; yet none knows well
 To shun the heaven that leads men to this hell.

Endnotes

- Note 5: The word order here is inverted and slightly obscures the meaning. Lust, when put into action, expends "spirit" (life, vitality; also semen) in a "waste" (desert; also with a pun on waist) of shame.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: A bliss during the experience.Return to reference 6

Notes

- °: brutalReturn to reference °
- °: immediatelyReturn to reference °
- °: trueReturn to reference °

My mistress' eyes are nothing like the sun;<sup>7</sup>
 Coral is far more red than her lips' red;
 If snow be white, why then her breasts are dun;
 If hairs be wires, black wires grow on her head.
 I have seen roses damasked,<sup>o</sup> red and white,
 5 But no such roses see I in her cheeks;
 And in some perfumes is there more delight
 Than in the breath that from my mistress reeks.<sup>8</sup>
 I love to hear her speak, yet well I know
 That music hath a far more pleasing sound;
 10 I grant I never saw a goddess go;<sup>o</sup>
 My mistress, when she walks, treads on the ground.
 And yet, by heaven, I think my love as rare<sup>o</sup>
 As any she belied<sup>o</sup> with false compare.

Endnotes

- Note 7: An anti-Petrarchan sonnet. All of the details commonly attributed by other Elizabethan sonneteers to their ladies (for example, in Spenser's Amoretti 64; see p. 453) are here denied to the poet's mistress.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Not with our pejorative sense, but simply "emanates."Return to reference 8

Notes

- °: dappledReturn to reference °
- °: walkReturn to reference °
- °: admirable; extraordinaryReturn to reference °
- °: misrepresentedReturn to reference °

Whoever hath her wish, thou hast thy Will,<sup>9</sup>
 And Will to boot, and Will in overplus;
 More than enough am I that vex thee still,<sup>o</sup>
 To thy sweet will making addition thus.
 Wilt thou, whose will is large and spacious,
 5 Not once vouchsafe<sup>o</sup> to hide my will in thine?
 Shall will in others seem right gracious,
 And in<sup>o</sup> my will no fair acceptance shine?
 The sea, all water, yet receives rain still,
 And in abundance addeth to his store,<sup>o</sup> 10 So thou being rich in Will add to thy Will
 One will of mine to make thy large Will more.
 Let no unkind, no fair beseechers kill;<sup>1</sup>
 Think all but one, and me in that one Will.

Endnotes

- Note 9: (1) Wishes, (2) carnal desire, (3) the male and female sexual organs, (4) one or more lovers—evidently including Shakespeare—named Will. This is one of several sonnets punning on the word. Return to reference 9
- Note 1: That is, do not kill with unkindness any of your wooers. Return to reference 1

Notes

- °: always Return to reference °
- °: consent Return to reference °
- °: in the case of Return to reference °
- °: plenty Return to reference °

When my love swears that she is made of truth,<sup>2</sup>
 I do believe her, though I know she lies,<sup>3</sup>
 That she might think me some untutored youth,
 Unlearnèd in the world's false subtleties.
 Thus vainly thinking that she thinks me young,
 5 Although she knows my days are past the best,<sup>4</sup>
 Simply° I credit her false-speaking tongue:
 On both sides thus is simple truth suppressed.
 But wherefore says she not she is unjust?°
 And wherefore say not I that I am old?
 10 Oh, love's best habit° is in seeming trust,
 And age in love loves not to have years told.°
 Therefore I lie with her and she with me,
 And in our faults by lies we flattered be.

Endnotes

- Note 2: (1) Is utterly honest, (2) is faithful.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: With the obvious sexual pun (as also in lines 13–14).
Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Shakespeare was thirty-five or younger when he wrote this sonnet (it first appeared in The Passionate Pilgrim, 1599).Return to reference 4

Notes

- °: like a simpletonReturn to reference °
- °: unfaithfulReturn to reference °
- °: clothing, guiseReturn to reference °
- °: countedReturn to reference °

Two loves I have of comfort and despair,<sup>5</sup>
 Which like two spirits do suggest me still:<sup>o</sup>
 The better angel is a man right fair,
 The worser spirit a woman colored ill.<sup>o</sup>
 To win me soon to hell, my female evil
 5 Tempteth my better angel from my side,
 And would corrupt my saint to be a devil,
 Wooing his purity with her foul pride.<sup>6</sup>
 And whether that my angel be turned fiend
 Suspect I may, yet not directly tell;
 10 But being both from<sup>o</sup> me, both to each<sup>o</sup> friend,
 I guess one angel in another's hell.
 Yet this shall I ne'er know, but live in doubt,
 Till my bad angel fire my good one out.<sup>7</sup>

Endnotes

- Note 5: I have two beloveds, one bringing me comfort and the other despair.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: (1) Vanity, (2) sexuality.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: That is, until she infects him with venereal disease.Return to reference 7

Notes

- °: tempt me constantlyReturn to reference °
- °: darkReturn to reference °
- °: away from Return to reference °
- °: each otherReturn to reference °

Poor soul, the center of my sinful earth,
 Lord of<sup>8</sup> these rebel powers that thee array,<sup>9</sup>
 Why dost thou pine within and suffer dearth,
 Painting thy outward walls so costly gay?
 Why so large cost, having so short a lease,
 5 Dost thou upon thy fading mansion spend?
 Shall worms, inheritors of this excess,
 Eat up thy charge?<sup>1</sup> Is this thy body's end?<sup>o</sup>
 Then, soul, live thou upon thy servant's loss,
 10 And let that pine to aggravate thy store;<sup>2</sup>
 Buy terms<sup>o</sup> divine in selling hours of dross;<sup>o</sup>
 Within be fed, without be rich no more.
 So shalt thou feed on death, that feeds on men,
 And death once dead, there's no more dying then.

Endnotes

- Note 8: "Lord of" is an emendation. The 1609 edition repeats the last three words of line 1. Other suggestions are "Thrall to," "Starved by," "Pressed by," and leaving the repetition but dropping "that thee" in line 2. Return to reference 8
- Note 9: The rebellious body that clothes you. Return to reference 9
- Note 1: (1) Your expense, (2) the thing you were responsible for (that is, the body). Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Let "that" (that is, the body) deteriorate to increase ("aggravate") the soul's riches ("thy store"). Return to reference 2

Notes

- °: destiny; purposeReturn to reference °
- °: long periods Return to reference °
- °: rubbishReturn to reference °

My love is as a fever, longing still<sup>o</sup>
 For that which longer nurseth<sup>3</sup> the disease,
 Feeding on that which doth preserve the ill,<sup>o</sup>
 Th' uncertain sickly appetite<sup>4</sup> to please.
 5 My reason, the physician to my love,
 Angry that his prescriptions are not kept,
 Hath left me, and I desperate now approve
 Desire is death, which physic did except.<sup>5</sup>
 Past cure I am, now reason is past care,<sup>6</sup>
 And frantic mad with evermore unrest;
 10 My thoughts and my discourse as madmen's are,
 At random from the truth, vainly expressed:<sup>7</sup>
 For I have sworn thee fair, and thought thee bright,
 Who art as black as hell, as dark as night.

Endnotes

- Note 3: (1) Nourishes, (2) takes care of.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: (1) Desire for food, (2) lust.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: That is, I learn by experience that desire, which rejected reason's medicine, is death.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: That is, medical care (of me). The line is a version of the proverb "past cure, past care."Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Wide of the mark and senselessly uttered.Return to reference 7

Notes

- °: continuallyReturn to reference °
- °: maintain the illnessReturn to reference °

In loving thee thou know'st I am forsworn,<sup>8</sup>
 But thou art twice forsworn to me love swearing:
 In act thy bed-vow<sup>o</sup> broke, and new faith torn
 In vowing new hate after new love bearing.<sup>9</sup>
 But why of two oaths' breach do I accuse thee
 5 When I break twenty? I am perjured most,
 For all my vows are oaths but to misuse<sup>o</sup> thee,
 And all my honest faith in thee is lost.
 For I have sworn deep oaths of thy deep kindness,
 Oaths of thy love, thy truth, thy constancy,
 10 And to enlighten thee gave eyes to blindness,<sup>1</sup>
 Or made them swear against the thing they see.
 For I have sworn thee fair—more perjured eye<sup>o</sup>
 To swear against the truth so foul a lie.

1609

Endnotes

- Note 8: That is, am breaking loving vows to another.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: The object of the “new faith” followed by “new hate” could be either the speaker’s young friend or the speaker himself.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: And to make you fair (or give you insight), I looked blindly on your failings (or pretended to see what I couldn’t).Return to reference 1

Notes

- °: to husband (or lover)Return to reference °
- °: deceive; misrepresentReturn to reference °

- °: (punning on "I")Return to reference °

Othello Othello (1603–04), one of a succession of tragic masterpieces that Shakespeare wrote in the early years of the seventeenth century, is unrivaled in its excruciating intensity. With its almost clinical account of a malevolent assault on love and beauty, the play has for centuries aroused in audiences the paradoxical blend of pleasure and acute discomfort characteristic of great tragedy. The performance history of Othello includes anecdotes of spectators attempting to intervene by angrily denouncing the villain, shouting advice to the deceived hero, or even rushing onstage to save the doomed heroine. If such stories reveal a fundamental misunderstanding of the nature of theater, they also disclose Shakespeare's brilliant exploitation of the gap between the performers and the audience. We see what is happening; we understand where it is leading; we urgently want to prevent the catastrophe—but, as in a nightmare, we are powerless to do so. Othello is a prime instance of what a twentieth-century writer, Antonin Artaud, called "the theater of cruelty."

This cruelty is intensified by the fact that the plot of Shakespeare's tragedy is woven from some of the elements of the joyous comedies in which he had already distinguished himself. Othello begins with a miniature version of the traditional comedy of sexual fulfillment. Refusing to allow his daughter to elope with the man of her choosing, an angry father, wellborn, wealthy, and powerful, lodges a formal complaint before the authorities. His daughter, he alleges, has been seduced by means of witchcraft; otherwise, she would never have been attracted to someone so far below her in social class and culture. At first the authorities—the senators of the Venetian Republic—seem inclined to agree, but after hearing testimony from the couple in question, Othello and Desdemona, they dismiss the father's complaint. The rigid hold of the older generation over the desires of the next is broken, paternal possessiveness is defeated, and romantic love triumphs over familial bonds. And lest this triumph should seem to threaten the social order, the romantic couple is legitimated by marriage, the newlywed husband makes clear his devotion to serving the state in its war against the Ottoman Turks, and the spouse who at first seemed socially unsuitable turns out to be the equal of his amorous conquest. "I fetch my life and being," Othello declares, "From men of royal siege" (1.2.21–22). All's well that ends well.

But, of course, it does not end well. Disturbing elements, also with roots in comedy, have already begun to surface in the first scenes. One of these is the familiar farce of January and May: the old man married to the much younger wife who is courted by handsome, unscrupulous suitors. Another is what we might call the comedy of fantastical passion: the person who awakens from the trance of love to find that the object of desire is in fact ridiculous. Still another is the braggart soldier, the preening, self-promoting hero who is revealed to be an empty shell. And yet another is the mocking of the alien, the collective ridiculing of an outsider who hopes to be accepted but whom the natives despise as outlandish, gullible, and grotesque.

There is one person who is particularly sensitive to all of these cruel comic undertones: Othello's devious, resentful third-in-command, Iago. Unable to derail Othello's elopement, Iago seizes on potentially destructive versions of Othello and Desdemona's story. Desdemona fell in love with Othello merely for his bragging, he tells the lovesick Roderigo, but she will soon realize her mistake and long for someone younger, more handsome, more appropriate. When Roderigo doubts that Desdemona can be so easily seduced—"I cannot believe that in her; she's full of most blessed condition"—Iago replies with the cynic's tough, deflating realism: "Blessed fig's-end! The wine she drinks is made of grapes" (2.1.246–49).

The problem for Iago, though, is that none of these conventional comic scenarios seems very promising. Desdemona shows no sign of restlessness with her choice, nor does she register any discomfort with the age difference between herself and her husband. Othello's martial heroism is the real thing, attested to by everyone and elegantly manifested in the serene self-confidence with which he greets the armed followers of his irate father-in-law: "Keep up your bright swords, for the dew will rust them" (1.2.59). It is true that he initially allured Desdemona with exotic tales from what he calls "the story of my life" (1.3.128), but the bond between them is anything but superficial: consecrating her "soul and fortunes" to her husband, she declares that her "heart's subdued / Even to the very quality of my lord" (1.3.252, 248–49).

"Men whose heads / Do grow beneath their shoulders" (Othello 1.3.143–44), in an engraving by Jodocus Hondius from a 1599 edition of Raleigh's Discovery of Guiana. These creatures, known as Blemmyes or Ewaipanoma, are reported as well in Mandeville's Travels.

---

The strongest weapon in Iago's arsenal is racism, the contempt and revulsion with which many Europeans in the Middle Ages and the Renaissance routinely stigmatized dark skin and African features. This attitude is also reflected in a document issued by Queen Elizabeth in 1601, complaining about the "great numbers of . . .

Blackamoors" who "are crept into this realm." Denouncing these unwelcome people as "infidels, having no understanding of Christ or his Gospel," the queen authorized their deportation (though it is not clear that any such expulsion was carried out). In the tragedy Shakespeare wrote only a few years after this order, his hero is a Moor, whether that refers to an origin in North Africa or in sub-Saharan Africa, and this identity is enough to trigger the vile abuse Iago and Roderigo shout in the darkness in the first moments of the play. Othello is an "old black ram," "a Barbary horse" (1.1.85, 108).

But even this weapon seems blunted. Othello is not a religious outsider, but a Christian. He is the valiant commander to whom the state of Venice turns when it needs to defend its strategic outpost Cyprus against the great Muslim enemy, the Turks. Racial slurs in this play are the hallmarks of viciousness, not the collective judgment of the community. As for Desdemona, her declaration that she "saw Othello's visage in his mind" (1.3.250) suggests, among other things, that her husband's skin is not relevant to the great love that unites them.

How then does Iago do it? How does he succeed in undermining Othello's absolute faith in his wife and in shattering what seems an unshakable bond? Shakespeare depicts the destruction in one of the greatest scenes he ever wrote, a quiet conversation between the two men. The Turkish threat has vanished, blown away by a storm; Othello and Desdemona have been safely reunited in Cyprus; and though a drunken brawl in the night (cunningly instigated by Iago) has temporarily disgraced Othello's lieutenant Cassio, all the significant obstacles to harmony both public and private have been resolved. At this moment of almost perfect security, Iago injects the fatal poison of jealousy into Othello by little more than the intonation of the simple word "indeed" (3.3.101). Without leveling any direct accusation or offering a shred of evidence, with only a succession of apparently naive questions and broken phrases, Iago manages to insert himself into and remake—indeed, destroy—Othello's whole world.

Othello is not naive. He grasps that the verbal feints and dodges Iago is performing could “in a false disloyal knave” (3.3.124) be tricks designed to take in the gullible. But he knows Iago well, he thinks, and has confidence in his honesty. Tormented by the unbearable pain of aroused jealousy, Othello demands “ocular proof” (3.3.361) of Desdemona’s adultery with Cassio. Iago, who has been promoted to lieutenant in Cassio’s place, then embarks on a devious set of deceptions, centered on an embroidered handkerchief, a gift from Othello, that Desdemona has inadvertently mislaid. “Trifles light as air,” Iago gleefully observes, “Are to the jealous confirmations strong / As proofs of holy writ” (3.3.323–25).

What is Iago’s motive? Why should he want to destroy Othello, on whom his livelihood depends, and Desdemona, whom his own wife, Emilia, serves as lady’s maid? Early in the play Iago presents himself as someone with an eye only for his own interests: “not I for love and duty, / But seeming so, for my peculiar end” (1.1.56–57). But it is difficult to make out how ruining his commander could help Iago. What is his peculiar—that is, personal—end?

As was his usual practice, Shakespeare did not make up the plot of his play from scratch but instead adapted it—in this case, from a short story by the sixteenth-century Italian writer Giraldi Cinthio. In Cinthio’s account the villain’s pathology is reasonably clear. Having fallen ardently in love with Desdemona, he tried to seduce her. When he did not succeed, the love he felt for the general’s wife turned into violent loathing, and he set about to destroy her. Shakespeare discards this motivation. His villain does not dream of possessing Othello’s wife, nor is she the particular object of his hatred. To be sure, there is a moment in which Iago seems to be heading in this direction—“Now I do love her too” (2.1.287), he declares in one of his sinister soliloquies—yet he immediately veers away from it toward a farrago of other explanations. Iago’s repeated attempts to account for his obsessive, unappeasable hatred of Othello are famously unconvincing. Coleridge called them “the motive-hunting of motiveless malignity.” Near the play’s end, when he has come to understand that he has been duped into murdering his innocent, loving wife and that his life has been destroyed in the cruelest imaginable way, Othello asks why Iago “hath thus ensnared my soul and body?” Iago’s spare, monosyllabic reply—his last utterance in the play—is a refusal to apologize or explain: “What you know, you know. / From this time forth I never will speak word” (5.2.307–9).

But why does Othello succumb? Why should a passion on which he has staked his whole being—“when I love thee not, / Chaos is come again” (3.3.91–92)—prove so fragile? Why should he doubt the faith of a woman so obviously single-minded in her devotion to him and so absolute in her love? The answer in part seems to lie in the terrible vulnerability of trust. As Iago coolly observes, Othello “[i]s of a constant, loving, noble nature” (2.1.285). That nature is bound up with his capacity to cherish his friends, rely on his subordinates, and, above all, open his whole soul to his wife: “My life upon her faith!” (1.3.293). But such openness makes it possible for Iago to penetrate Othello’s psychic defenses and refashion his perceptions.

Though Iago has a coarse and reductive account of human nature, he is a brilliant improviser, able to employ whatever comes to hand to shape illusions and to manipulate those around him like puppets in a theatrical performance of his making. He bustles about using people without a trace of moral restraint, shame, or decency, and he has the peculiar liberty of complete fraudulence: “I am not what I am” (1.1.62). In the end, he is exposed—by the wife whom he despises, abuses, and finally murders—but not before he has ruined whatever seemed most beautiful and precious in his world. Such is the power of cunning lies and twisted hatred over someone “that loved not wisely but too well” (5.2.349).

But perhaps this characterization of himself, offered by Othello just before his suicide, is not quite right, or at least not complete. Perhaps there is something disturbing in his love—some strain of anxiety about the future, about sexual pleasure, about his capacity for happiness—that Iago senses he can exploit. “If it were now to die,” Othello has declared at the height of his joy,

’Twere now to be most happy; for I fear
My soul hath her content so absolute

That not another comfort like to this
Succeeds in unknown fate. (2.1.187–91)

Desdemona attempts to offer reassurance—"The heavens forbid / But that our loves and comforts should increase / Even as our days do grow" (2.1.191–93)—but the malevolent worm of Iago's doubt is more powerful than her generous embrace. Or is it? Desdemona struggles in her last breath to commend herself to her "kind lord" (5.2.128), and Othello, desperately attempting to reestablish a moral order by executing himself, dies kissing the wife whose innocence he knows he has fatally wronged. Readers and audiences have, for more than four centuries, pondered how much these final gestures offer a glimpse of redemption through boundless love.

The Tragedy of Othello, the Moor of Venice***

THE NAMES OF THE ACTORS<sup>1</sup>

OTHELLO, the Moor [and General of the Venetian forces]

BRABANTIO, father to Desdemona [and a Venetian Senator]

CASSIO, an honorable lieutenant [to Othello]

IAGO, a villain [and Othello's standard-bearer or ensign]

RODERIGO, a gulled<sup>o</sup> gentleman

DUKE of Venice

SENATORS

MONTANO, Governor of Cyprus

GENTLEMEN of Cyprus

LODOVICO and GRATIANO, two Noble Venetians [and kinsmen to Brabantio]

SAILORS

OFFICERS

CLOWN

DESDEMONA, wife to Othello

EMILIA, wife to Iago

BIANCA, a courtesan

MESSENGERS

MUSICIANS

Endnotes

- Note *:
Othello exists in two early texts, both of which have a claim to authority: a version published in the small, inexpensive quarto format in 1622 (Q) and a version published in the great First Folio of 1623 (F). There are many small and some substantial differences between them, including 160 lines that are found only in F. The text printed here is adapted from the Norton Critical Edition of Othello, edited by Edward Pechter. Like most modern editors of the play, Pechter bases his text on F, corrected by some readings from Q. Significant departures from Pechter's text have been footnoted.
Return to reference \*
- Note 1: The list of characters (with its misleading title) is reproduced from the First Folio, with some bracketed additions.Return to reference 1

Notes

- °: deceivedReturn to reference °

1.1

Enter RODERIGO and IAGO.<sup>1</sup>

RODERIGO Tush, never tell me!<sup>2</sup> I take it much unkindly

That thou, Iago, who hast had my purse
As if the strings were thine, shouldst know of this.

IAGO 'Sblood,<sup>o</sup> but you'll not hear me! If ever I did dream

Of such a matter, abhor me.

5 RODERIGO Thou told'st me
Thou didst hold him in thy hate.

IAGO Despise me
If I do not. Three great ones of the city,
In personal suit to make me his lieutenant,
Off-capped<sup>o</sup> to him; and by the faith of man
I know my price; I am worth no worse a place.
10 But he, as loving his own pride and purposes,
Evades them with a bombast circumstance,<sup>3</sup>
Horribly stuffed with epithets of war,<sup>o</sup> Non-suits<sup>o</sup> my mediators. For "Certes,"<sup>o</sup> says he,
"I have already chose my officer." And what was he?

15 Forsooth, a great arithmetician,<sup>4</sup>
One Michael Cassio, a Florentine,
A fellow almost damned in a fair wife,<sup>5</sup>
That<sup>o</sup> never set a squadron in the field,
Nor the division<sup>o</sup> of a battle<sup>o</sup> knows 20 More than a spinster<sup>o</sup>—unless the bookish theorick,<sup>o</sup>
Wherein the tonguè consuls can propose<sup>6</sup>
As masterly as he. Mere prattle without practice
Is all his soldiership. But he, sir, had th'election
And I—of whom his eyes had seen the proof
25 At Rhodes, at Cyprus, and on other grounds,

Christened and heathen—must be beleed<sup>o</sup> and calmed<sup>7</sup>

By debtor and creditor. This counter-caster,<sup>8</sup>
He in good time<sup>o</sup> must his lieutenant be,
And I—God bless the mark!<sup>o</sup>—his Moorship's 30 ancient.<sup>9</sup>

RODERIGO By heaven, I rather would have been his hangman.

IAGO Why, there's no remedy. 'Tis the curse of service;

Preferment goes by letter and affection,<sup>1</sup>
And not by old gradation,<sup>o</sup> where each second Stood heir to th'first. Now, sir, be judge yourself 35 Whether I in any just term am affined<sup>o</sup>
To love the Moor.<sup>2</sup>

RODERIGO I would not follow him then.

IAGO O, sir, content you.<sup>o</sup>

I follow him to serve my turn upon him.

We cannot all be masters, nor all masters
40 Cannot be truly followed. You shall mark
Many a duteous and knee-crooking knave
That, doting on his own obsequious bondage,
Wears out his time much like his master's ass,
For naught but provender;<sup>o</sup> and when he's old—
45 cashiered.<sup>o</sup>

Whip me<sup>o</sup> such honest knaves! Others there are
Who, trimmed<sup>o</sup> in forms and visages of duty,
Keep yet their hearts attending on themselves
And, throwing but shows of service on their lords,
Do well thrive by them; and when they have lined 50 their coats,

Do themselves homage. These fellows have some
soul,

And such a one do I profess myself. For, sir,
It is as sure as you are Roderigo,

Were I the Moor, I would not be Iago.
In following him, I follow but myself.
55 Heaven is my judge, not I for<sub>o</sub> love and duty,
But seeming so, for my peculiar<sub>o</sub> end.
For when my outward action doth demonstrate
The native act and figure<sub>3</sub> of my heart
In complement extern,<sub>o</sub> 'tis not long after 60 But I will wear my heart upon my sleeve
For daws<sub>o</sub> to peck at. I am not what I am.
RODERIGO What a full fortune does the thick-lips owe<sub>o</sub>
If he can carry't thus!
IAGO Call up her father,
Rouse him, make after him, poison his delight.
65 Proclaim him in the streets, incense her kinsmen,
And though he in a fertile climate dwell,
Plague him with flies. Though that his joy be joy,
Yet throw such chances of vexation on't,
As it may lose some color.
70 RODERIGO Here is her father's house. I'll call aloud.
IAGO Do, with like timorous accent<sub>o</sub> and dire yell
As when, by night and negligence, the fire
Is spied in populous cities.
RODERIGO What ho, Brabantio! Signor Brabantio, ho!
75 IAGO Awake! What ho, Brabantio! Thieves, thieves!
Look to your house, your daughter, and your bags!
Thieves, thieves!
[Enter] BRABANTIO above at a window.
BRABANTIO What is the reason of this terrible summons?
What is the matter there?
80 RODERIGO Signor, is all your family within?
IAGO Are your doors locked?
BRABANTIO Why? Wherefore ask you this?

IAGO 'Swounds, o sir, you're robbed! For shame, put on your gown!
 Your heart is burst, you have lost half your soul.
 Even now, now, very now, an old black ram
 85 Is tupping o your white ewe. Arise, arise!
 Awake the snorting o citizens with the bell,
 Or else the devil will make a grandsire of you.
 Arise, I say!
 BRABANTIO What, have you lost your wits?
 RODERIGO Most reverend signor, do you know my 90 voice?
 BRABANTIO Not I; what are you?
 RODERIGO My name is Roderigo.
 BRABANTIO The worser welcome!
 I have charged thee not to haunt about my doors;
 In honest plainness thou hast heard me say
 My daughter is not for thee. And now in madness, 95 Being full of supper and distemp'ring o draughts,
 Upon malicious bravery, o dost thou come
 To start o my quiet.
 RODERIGO Sir, sir, sir—
 BRABANTIO But thou must needs be sure,
 My spirits and my place o have in their power
 100 To make this bitter to thee.
 RODERIGO Patience, good sir.
 BRABANTIO What tell'st thou me of robbing? This is Venice;
 My house is not a grange. o
 RODERIGO Most grave Brabantio,
 In simple and pure soul, I come to you.
 IAGO 'Swounds, sir, you are one of those that will 105 not serve God if the devil bid you. Because we come to do you service and you think we are ruffians, you'll have your daughter covered with a Barbary horse;<sup>4</sup> you'll have your nephews<sup>o</sup> neigh to you; you'll have coursers for cousins and jennets for germans.<sup>5</sup>

110 BRABANTIO What profane wretch art thou?
IAGO I am one, sir, that comes to tell you your daughter and the Moor are making the beast with two backs.<sup>o</sup>

BRABANTIO Thou art a villain.
IAGO You are a senator.

115 BRABANTIO This thou shalt answer.<sup>o</sup> I know thee,
Roderigo.
RODERIGO Sir, I will answer anything. But I beseech
you,
If't be your pleasure, and most wise consent—<sup>6</sup>
As partly I find it is—that your fair daughter,
At this odd-even<sup>o</sup> and dull watch o'th' night,
120 Transported with no worse nor better guard
But with a knave of common<sup>o</sup> hire, a gondolier,
To the gross clasps of a lascivious Moor—
If this be known to you, and your allowance,<sup>o</sup>
We then have done you bold and saucy wrongs.
125 But if you know not this, my manners tell me
We have your wrong rebuke. Do not believe
That from<sup>o</sup> the sense of all civility
I thus would play and trifle with your reverence.
Your daughter, if you have not given her leave,
130 I say again, hath made a gross revolt,
Tying her duty, beauty, wit, and fortunes
In an extravagant and wheeling stranger<sup>7</sup>
Of here and everywhere. Straight<sup>o</sup> satisfy yourself.
If she be in her chamber or your house,
135 Let loose on me the justice of the state
For thus deluding you.
BRABANTIO Strike on the tinder,<sup>o</sup> ho!
Give me a taper,<sup>o</sup> call up all my people!

This accident<sup>o</sup> is not unlike my dream;
Belief of it oppresses me already.
140 Light, I say, light! Exit [above].
IAGO Farewell, for I must leave you.
It seems not meet<sup>o</sup> nor wholesome to my place
To be producted<sup>o</sup>—as, if I stay, I shall—
Against the Moor. For I do know the state,
However this may gall him with some check,<sup>o</sup>
145 Cannot with safety cast<sup>o</sup> him; for he's embarked<sup>o</sup>
With such loud<sup>o</sup> reason to the Cyprus wars,
Which even now stands in act,<sup>o</sup> that, for their souls,
Another of his fathom<sup>o</sup> they have none
To lead their business. In which regard,
150 Though I do hate him as I do hell pains,
Yet for necessity of present life
I must show out a flag and sign of love,
Which is indeed but sign. That you shall surely find
him,
Lead to the Sagittary<sup>8</sup> the raised search,<sup>o</sup>
155 And there will I be with him. So farewell.
Exit.
Enter [below] BRABANTIO in his nightgown, with servants and torches
BRABANTIO It is too true an evil. Gone she is,
And what's to come of my despised time<sup>o</sup>
Is naught but bitterness. Now, Roderigo,
Where didst thou see her?—O unhappy girl!—
160 With the Moor, say'st thou?—Who would be a father?
—
How didst thou know 'twas she?—O, she deceives
me
Past thought!—What said she to you?— [to servants]
Get more tapers,
Raise all my kindred! [*Exit one or
more.*]

[to RODERIGO] Are they married, think you?
 RODERIGO Truly, I think they are.
 165 BRABANTIO O heaven! How got she out? O treason of the blood!
 Fathers, from hence trust not your daughters' minds
 By what you see them act. Is there not charms<sup>o</sup>
 By which the property<sup>o</sup> of youth and maidhood<sup>o</sup>
 May be abused? Have you not read, Roderigo, 170 Of some such thing?
 RODERIGO Yes, sir, I have indeed.
 BRABANTIO [to servants] Call up my brother.
 [to RODERIGO] O, would you had had her!
 [to servants] Some one way, some another.
 [Exit one or more.]
 [to RODERIGO] Do you know
 Where we may apprehend her and the Moor?
 RODERIGO I think I can discover him, if you please 175 To get good guard and go along with me.
 BRABANTIO Pray you lead on. At every house I'll call;
 I may command<sup>o</sup> at most.—Get weapons, ho!
 And raise some special officers of night.—
 On, good Roderigo; I will deserve<sup>o</sup> your pains.
 180 Exeunt.

Endnotes

- Note 1.1: Location: A street in Venice.Return to reference 1.1
- Note 1: Iago's name may be related to that of Santiago Matamoros (Saint James the Moor-Slayer), the patron saint of Spain.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Expressive of annoyance, disbelief.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: With an inflated circumlocution. "Bombast": cotton padding in clothes, a metaphor picked up by "stuffed" (line 13) and perhaps "Non-suits" (line 14).Return to reference 3

- Note 4: Implying that Cassio's knowledge of war is purely theoretical.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Obscure. Cassio has not yet met Bianca and is unmarried (although in Shakespeare's source he is married). Perhaps Shakespeare's error, a reference to Cassio as a ladies' man, or an oblique anticipation of the main plot.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: In which the glib senators can debate. In Q the senators are not "tongued" but "togaed," that is, toga-wearing.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Becalmed.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Pejorative term for an accountant (Cassio), as is "debitor and creditor."Return to reference 8
- Note 9: A variant form of ensign. Iago is something like a standard-bearer or third-in-command. He clearly ranks below "lieutenant" Cassio, the second-in-command. This reference to "his Moorship" is also the first indication of the person about whom Iago has been complaining.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Promotion comes through connections and favoritism.Return to reference 1
- Note 2:
A Muslim of the mixed Berber and Arab people inhabiting northwest Africa. This term, like the comparison of Othello to a "Barbary horse" (an Arab, line 108), formerly led to the denial of Othello's blackness. But the passages describing Othello's appearance—"thick-lips," "black ram," "sooty bosom," "black Othello," "I am black," "black / As mine own face" (1.1.63, 85; 1.2.70; 2.3.29; 3.3.265, 388–89)—seem to have greater weight. In the Renaissance, "Moor" often meant sub-Saharan African.
Return to reference 2
- Note 3: The innate operation (or motivation) and shape (or nature).Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Horse from northwest coastal Africa.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Close relatives. "Coursers": strong horses. "Cousins": kinsmen. "Jennets": small Spanish horses.Return to reference 5

- Note 6: Lines 118–34 do not appear in Q.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: In a vagrant and vagabond foreigner.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Perhaps indicating an inn named for the astrological sign Sagittarius, where Othello and Desdemona are staying. It may also suggest Othello himself, because Sagittarius is depicted as a centaur (a mythological being part man, part horse), and Iago has already likened Othello to a “Barbary horse.”Return to reference 8

Notes

- °: by Christ's bloodReturn to reference °
- °: took off their capsReturn to reference °
- °: military jargonReturn to reference °
- °: denies Return to reference °
- °: certainlyReturn to reference °
- °: whoReturn to reference °
- °: ordering Return to reference °
- °: battalionReturn to reference °
- °: housewife Return to reference °
- °: learningReturn to reference °
- °: without windReturn to reference °
- °: indeed (scornful)Return to reference °
- °: God help usReturn to reference °
- °: traditional seniorityReturn to reference °
- °: am bound in any just wayReturn to reference °
- °: be contentReturn to reference °
- °: animal feed Return to reference °
- °: firedReturn to reference °
- °: the hell withReturn to reference °
- °: outwardly decoratedReturn to reference °
- °: I am not driven byReturn to reference °
- °: personalReturn to reference °
- °: outward appearanceReturn to reference °

- °: crowlike birdsReturn to reference °
- °: ownReturn to reference °
- °: frightening toneReturn to reference °
- °: by Christ's woundsReturn to reference °
- °: copulating withReturn to reference °
- °: snoringReturn to reference °
- °: destabilizingReturn to reference °
- °: defianceReturn to reference °
- °: upsetReturn to reference °
- °: rankReturn to reference °
- °: country houseReturn to reference °
- °: grandsonsReturn to reference °
- °: copulatingReturn to reference °
- °: account forReturn to reference °
- °: late (around midnight)Return to reference °
- °: publicReturn to reference °
- °: allowed by youReturn to reference °
- °: in opposition toReturn to reference °
- °: immediatelyReturn to reference °
- °: a lightReturn to reference °
- °: candleReturn to reference °
- °: eventReturn to reference °
- °: properReturn to reference °
- °: presented as witnessReturn to reference °
- °: reprimandReturn to reference °
- °: dismiss Return to reference °
- °: committedReturn to reference °
- °: urgentReturn to reference °
- °: are taking placeReturn to reference °
- °: caliberReturn to reference °
- °: awakened searchersReturn to reference °
- °: lifetimeReturn to reference °
- °: magicReturn to reference °
- °: attribute Return to reference °
- °: virginityReturn to reference °
- °: demand helpReturn to reference °

- $\circ$ : reward Return to reference  \$\circ\$

1.2

Enter OTHELLO, IAGO, [and] attendants with torches.

5 IAGO Though in the trade of war I have slain men,
Yet do I hold it very stuff<sup>o</sup> o'th' conscience
To do no contrived<sup>o</sup> murder. I lack iniquity, Sometime, to do me service. Nine or ten times
I had thought t'have yerked him<sup>o</sup> here, under the ribs.

OTHELLO 'Tis better as it is.

IAGO Nay, but he prated
And spoke such scurvy and provoking terms
Against your honor
That, with the little godliness I have,
10 I did full hard forbear him.<sup>1</sup> But I pray you, sir,
Are you fast<sup>o</sup> married? Be assured of this,
That the magnifico<sup>o</sup> is much beloved,
And hath in his effect a voice potential<sup>o</sup>
As double as the duke's. He will divorce you,
Or put upon you what restraint or grievance
15 The law, with all his might to enforce it on,
Will give him cable.<sup>o</sup>

OTHELLO Let him do his spite.
My services, which I have done the signory,<sup>o</sup>
Shall out-tongue his complaints. 'Tis yet to know<sup>o</sup>—
Which, when I know that boasting is an honor, 20 I shall promulgate—I fetch my life and being
From men of royal siege;<sup>o</sup> and my demerits<sup>o</sup>
May speak unbonneted<sup>2</sup> to as proud a fortune
As this that I have reached. For know, Iago,
But that I love the gentle Desdemona,
25 I would not my unhoused<sup>o</sup> free condition
Put into circumscription and confine

For the seas' worth. But look, what lights come yond?

Enter CASSIO, with officers and torches.

IAGO Those are the raised father and his friends.
You were best go in.

30 OTHELLO Not I; I must be found.
My parts,o my title, and my perfect soul<sup>3</sup>
Shall manifest me rightly. Is it they?

IAGO By Janus,o I think no.

OTHELLO The servants of the duke? And my lieutenant?
35 The goodness of the night upon you, friends.
What is the news?

CASSIO The duke does greet you,
general,
And he requires your haste-post-haste appearance
Even on the instant.

OTHELLO What is the matter, think you?

CASSIO Something from Cyprus, as I may divine.
40 It is a business of some heat.o The galleys
Have sent a dozen sequento messengers
This very night at one another's heels,
And many of the consuls, raised and met,
Are at the duke's already. You have been hotly called
for;

45 When, being not at your lodging to be found,
The senate hath sent abouto three several quests
To search you out.

OTHELLO 'Tis well I am found by you.
I will but spend a word here in the house
And go with you. [Exit.]

CASSIO Ancient, what makes he here?

50 IAGO Faith, he tonight hath boarded a land-carrack.<sup>4</sup>
If it prove lawful prize, he's made forever.

CASSIO I do not understand.

IAGO He's married.
 CASSIO To who?
 IAGO Marry,<sup>o</sup> to— [Enter OTHELLO.]
 Come, captain, will you go?
 OTHELLO Have
 with you.<sup>o</sup>
 CASSIO Here comes another troop to seek for you.
Enter BRABANTIO [and]. RODERIGO, with officers and torches.
 IAGO It is Brabantio; general, be advised,
 55 He comes to bad intent.
 OTHELLO Holla, stand there!
 RODERIGO Signor, it is the Moor.
 BRABANTIO Down with him,
 thief!
 [They draw on both sides.]
 IAGO You, Roderigo? Come, sir, I am for you.
 OTHELLO Keep up<sup>o</sup> your bright swords, for the dew will rust them.
 60 Good signor, you shall more command with years
 Than with your weapons.
 BRABANTIO O thou foul thief, where hast thou stowed
 my daughter?
 Damned as thou art, thou hast enchanted her;
 For I'll refer me to all things of sense,<sup>5</sup>
 If she in chains of magic were not bound,
 65 Whether a maid, so tender, fair, and happy,
 So opposite to marriage that she shunned
 The wealthy curlèd darlings of our nation,
 Would ever have, t'incur a general mock,
 Run from her guardage to the sooty bosom
 70 Of such a thing as thou—to fear, not to delight.
 Judge me the world if 'tis not gross in sense<sup>6</sup>
 That thou hast practiced on her with foul charms,
 Abused her delicate youth with drugs or minerals

75 That weakens motion.° I'll have't disputed on;<sup>7</sup>
 'Tis probable and palpable to thinking.
 I therefore apprehend and do attach° thee
 For an abuser of the world, a practicer
 Of arts inhibited and out of warrant.°
 80 Lay hold upon him; if he do resist,
 Subdue him at his peril!
 OTHELLO Hold your hands,
 Both you of my inclining° and the rest.
 Were it my cue to fight, I should have known it Without a prompter. Where will you that I go
 To answer this your charge?
 85 BRABANTIO To prison, till fit time
 Of law and course of direct session
 Call thee to answer.
 OTHELLO What if I do obey?
 How may the duke be therewith satisfied,
 Whose messengers are here about my side
 Upon some present business of the state
 90 To bring me to him?
 OFFICER 'Tis true, most worthy signor.
 The duke's in council, and your noble self
 I am sure is sent for.
 BRABANTIO How? The duke in council?
 In this time of the night? Bring him away.°
 Mine's not an idle cause. The duke himself,
 95 Or any of my brothers of the state,
 Cannot but feel this wrong as 'twere their own;
 For if such actions may have passage free,
 Bondslaves and pagans shall our statesmen be.
Exeunt.

Endnotes

- Note 1.2: Location: Another street in Venice, before Othello's lodgings.Return to reference 1.2
- Note 1: I barely restrained myself from attacking him.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Without deference; modestly.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: My clear conscience.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: A carrack is a large merchant ship.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: For I'll ask, relying on common sense.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: If it is not patently obvious. Lines 72–77 do not appear in Q.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Argued by experts.Return to reference 7

Notes

- °: essenceReturn to reference °
- °: premeditatedReturn to reference °
- °: stabbed (Roderigo)Return to reference °
- °: legitimatelyReturn to reference °
- °: (Brabantio)Return to reference °
- °: powerfulReturn to reference °
- °: scopeReturn to reference °
- °: Venetian governmentReturn to reference °
- °: not publicly knownReturn to reference °
- °: rankReturn to reference °
- °: desertsReturn to reference °
- °: unconfinedReturn to reference °
- °: qualitiesReturn to reference °
- °: two-faced Roman godReturn to reference °
- °: urgencyReturn to reference °
- °: successiveReturn to reference °
- °: outReturn to reference °
- °: by Mary (a mild oath)Return to reference °
- °: let's goReturn to reference °
- °: put awayReturn to reference °

- °: natural inclinationReturn to reference °
- °: arrestReturn to reference °
- °: prohibited and illegalReturn to reference °
- °: followingReturn to reference °
- °: alongReturn to reference °

1.3

Enter DUKE and SENATORS set at a table, with lights and OFFICERS.

DUKE There's no composition in this news
That gives them credit.<sup>1</sup>

FIRST SENATOR Indeed, they are disproportioned;<sup>o</sup>
My letters say a hundred and seven galleys.

DUKE And mine a hundred forty.

SECOND SENATOR And mine two hundred.

5 But though they jump not on a just account<sup>o</sup>—
As in these cases where the aim reports
'Tis oft with difference<sup>2</sup>—yet do they all confirm
A Turkish fleet, and bearing up to Cyprus.

DUKE Nay, it is possible enough to judgment;
10 I do not so secure me in the error
But the main article I do approve
In fearful sense.<sup>3</sup>

SAILOR [within] What ho! what ho! what ho!
Enter SAILOR.

OFFICER A messenger from the galleys.

DUKE Now, what's the business?

SAILOR The Turkish preparation<sup>o</sup> makes for Rhodes.
15 So was I bid report here to the state
By Signor Angelo.<sup>4</sup>

DUKE How say you by this change?

FIRST SENATOR This cannot be
By no assay<sup>o</sup> of reason. 'Tis a pageant
To keep us in false gaze. When we consider 20 Th' importancy of Cyprus to the Turk,
And let ourselves again but understand

That, as it more concerns the Turk than Rhodes,
So may he with more facile question bear it,<sup>5</sup>
For that it stands not in such warlike brace,
But altogether lacks th'abilities
25 That Rhodes is dressed in—if we make thought of this,

We must not think the Turk is so unskillful
To leave that latest<sup>o</sup> which concerns him first,
Neglecting an attempt of ease and gain
To wake and wage<sup>o</sup> a danger profitless.

30 DUKE Nay, in all confidence, he's not for Rhodes.

OFFICER Here is more news.

Enter a MESSENGER.

MESSENGER The Ottomites,<sup>o</sup> reverend and gracious,<sup>6</sup>
Steering with due course toward the isle of Rhodes,
Have there injointed them with an after<sup>o</sup> fleet.

35 FIRST SENATOR Ay, so I thought. How many, as you guess?

MESSENGER Of thirty sail; and now they do re-stem<sup>o</sup>
Their backward course, bearing with frank appearance

Their purposes toward Cyprus. Signor Montano,
Your trusty and most valiant servitor,
40 With his free duty recommends you thus,<sup>7</sup>
And prays you to believe him.

DUKE 'Tis certain then for Cyprus.

Marcus Luccicos<sup>8</sup>—is not he in town?

FIRST SENATOR He's now in Florence.

45 DUKE Write from us to him post-post-haste.
Dispatch!

FIRST SENATOR Here comes Brabantio and the valiant Moor.

Enter BRABANTIO, OTHELLO, CASSIO, IAGO, RODERIGO, and OFFICERS.

DUKE Valiant Othello, we must straight<sup>o</sup> employ you

Against the general enemy<sup>o</sup> Ottoman.
 50 [to BRABANTIO] I did not see you; welcome, gentle<sup>o</sup>
 signor.
 We lacked your counsel and your help tonight.
 BRABANTIO So did I yours. Good your grace, pardon
 me.
 Neither my place<sup>o</sup> nor aught I heard of business Hath raised me from my bed; nor doth the general care
 55 Take hold on me. For my particular grief
 Is of so floodgate and o'erbearing nature
 That it engluts and swallows other sorrows,
 And it is still itself.<sup>9</sup>
 DUKE Why, what's the matter?
 BRABANTIO My daughter, O my daughter!
 SENATOR Dead?
 BRABANTIO Ay, to
 me.
 60 She is abused,<sup>o</sup> stol'n from me and corrupted
 By spells and medicines bought of mountebanks;<sup>o</sup>
 For nature so preposterously to err,
 Being not deficient, blind, or lame of sense,
 Sans<sup>o</sup> witchcraft could not.
 65 DUKE Whoe'er he be that in this foul proceeding
 Hath thus beguiled your daughter of herself
 And you of her, the bloody book of law
 You shall yourself read in the bitter letter
 After your own sense; yea, though our proper son Stood in your action.<sup>1</sup>
 70 BRABANTIO Humbly I thank your grace.
 Here is the man, this Moor, whom now it seems
 Your special mandate for the state affairs
 Hath hither brought.
 ALL We are very sorry for't.

DUKE [to OTHELLO]    What in your own part can you say to this?

BRABANTIO    Nothing, but this is so.

75

OTHELLO    Most potent, grave, and reverend signors,
My very noble and approved good masters:

That I have ta'en away this old man's daughter
It is most true; true I have married her.

80

The very head and front<sup>o</sup> of my offending
Hath this extent, no more. Rude<sup>o</sup> am I in my speech,
And little blessed with the soft phrase of peace;

85

For since these arms of mine had seven years' pith<sup>o</sup>
Till now some nine moons wasted,<sup>o</sup> they have used
Their dearest<sup>o</sup> action in the tented field;

And little of this great world can I speak
More than pertains to feats of broils<sup>o</sup> and battle,
And therefore little shall I grace my cause
In speaking for myself. Yet, by your gracious patience,

90

I will a round<sup>o</sup> unvarnished tale deliver,
Of my whole course of love: what drugs, what charms,

What conjuration and what mighty magic—
For such proceeding I am charged withal<sup>o</sup>—
I won his daughter.

95

BRABANTIO                    A maiden never bold;
Of spirit so still and quiet that her motion
Blushed at herself<sup>2</sup> and she—in spite of nature,
Of years, of country, credit,<sup>o</sup> everything—
To fall in love with what she feared to look on?

100

It is a judgment maimed and most imperfect
That will confess perfection so could err
Against all rules of nature, and must<sup>o</sup> be driven
To find out practices of cunning hell
Why this should be. I therefore vouch again
That with some mixtures powerful o'er the blood,<sup>o</sup>

105 Or with some dram conjured<sup>o</sup> to this effect,
He wrought upon her.

DUKE To vouch this is no proof,
Without more wider and more overt test
Than these thin habits and poor likelihoods
Of modern seeming do prefer against him.<sup>3</sup>

110 SENATOR But, Othello, speak;
Did you by indirect and forced courses<sup>o</sup>
Subdue and poison this young maid's affections?
Or came it by request and such fair question<sup>o</sup>
As soul to soul affordeth?

OTHELLO I do beseech you
115 Send for the lady to the Sagittary,
And let her speak of me before her father.
If you do find me foul in her report,
The trust, the office I do hold of you,
Not only take away, but let your sentence
Even fall upon my life.

120 DUKE [to OFFICERS] Fetch Desdemona hither.

OTHELLO Ancient, conduct them; you best know the place.

Exit [IAGO and] two or three [attendants].

And till she come, as truly as to heaven
I do confess the vices of my blood,<sup>o</sup>
So justly to your grave ears I'll present
How I did thrive in this fair lady's love
125 And she in mine.

DUKE Say it, Othello.

OTHELLO Her father loved me, oft invited me,
Still<sup>o</sup> questioned me the story of my life
From year to year, the battles, sieges, fortunes
That I have past.

130 I ran it through, even from my boyish days
To th'very moment that he bade me tell it;
Wherein I spoke of most disastrous chances,<sup>o</sup>

Of moving accidents<sup>o</sup> by flood and field,
Of hair-breadth scapes i'th' imminent-deadly
135 breach,<sup>4</sup>
Of being taken by the insolent foe
And sold to slavery, of my redemption thence
And portance<sup>o</sup> in my traveler's history;
Wherein of antars<sup>o</sup> vast and deserts idle, 140 Rough quarries, rocks, and hills whose heads touch
heaven,
It was my hint<sup>o</sup> to speak—such was my process<sup>o</sup> —
And of the cannibals that each other eat,
The anthropophagi,<sup>5</sup> and men whose heads
Do grow beneath their shoulders. These things to hear
145 Would Desdemona seriously incline,
But still the house affairs would draw her thence,
Which ever as<sup>o</sup> she could with haste dispatch
She'd come again and with a greedy ear
Devour up my discourse; which I, observing,
150 Took once a pliant<sup>o</sup> hour and found good means
To draw from her a prayer of earnest heart
That I would all my pilgrimage dilate,<sup>o</sup>
Whereof by parcels she had something heard,
But not intentively.<sup>o</sup> I did consent
And often did beguile her of her tears
155 When I did speak of some distressful stroke
That my youth suffered. My story being done,
She gave me for my pains a world of kisses;<sup>6</sup>
She swore in faith 'twas strange, 'twas passing<sup>o</sup> strange,
'Twas pitiful, 'twas wondrous pitiful.
160 She wished she had not heard it, yet she wished That heaven had made her such a man.<sup>7</sup> She thanked me
And bade me, if I had a friend that loved her,

I should but teach him how to tell my story,
 And that would woo her. Upon this hint I spake.
 165 She loved me for the dangers I had past,
 And I loved her that she did pity them.
 This only is the witchcraft I have used.
 Here comes the lady; let her witness it.
     Enter DESDEMONA, IAGO, [and] attendants.
 DUKE I think this tale would win my daughter too.
 170 Good Brabantio, take up this mangled matter at the best.°
 Men do their broken weapons rather use,
 Than their bare hands.
 BRABANTIO I pray you hear her speak.
 If she confess that she was half the wooer,
 Destruction on my head if my bad blame
 175 Light on the man. Come hither, gentle mistress.
 Do you perceive in all this noble company
 Where most you owe obedience?
 DESDEMONA My noble father,
 I do perceive here a divided duty.
 To you I am bound for life and education;
 180 My life and education both do learn° me
 How to respect you; you are the lord of duty;
 I am hitherto your daughter. But here's my husband;
 And so much duty as my mother showed
 To you, preferring you before her father,
 185 So much I challenge° that I may profess
 Due to the Moor my lord.
 BRABANTIO God be with you; I have
     done.
 Please it° your grace, on to the state affairs;
 I had rather to adopt a child than get° it.
 Come hither, Moor.
 190 I here do give thee that° with all my heart
 Which, but° thou hast already, with all my heart

I would keep from thee. [to DESDEMONA] For your sake, jewel,
 I am glad at soul I have no other child,
 For thy escape would teach me tyranny
 195 To hang clogs<sup>8</sup> on them. I have done, my lord.
 DUKE Let me speak like yourself and lay a sentence<sup>o</sup>
 Which, as a grise<sup>o</sup> or step, may help these lovers
 Into your favor.
 When remedies are past, the griefs are ended
 200 By seeing the worst, which late on hopes depended.<sup>9</sup>
 To mourn a mischief that is past and gone
 Is the next way to draw new mischief on.
 What cannot be preserved, when fortune takes,
 205 Patience her injury a mockery makes.<sup>1</sup>
 The robbed that smiles steals something from the
 thief;
 He robs himself that spends a bootless<sup>o</sup> grief.
 BRABANTIO So let the Turk of Cyprus us beguile:
 We lose it not, so long as we can smile.
 He bears the sentence<sup>o</sup> well that nothing bears
 210 But the free comfort which from thence he hears.
 But he bears both the sentence and the sorrow
 That, to pay grief, must of poor patience borrow.
 These sentences, to sugar or to gall,<sup>o</sup>
 Being strong on both sides, are equivocal.
 215 But words are words; I never yet did hear
 That the bruised heart was piercèd<sup>2</sup> through the ear.
 I humbly beseech you proceed to th'affairs of state.
 DUKE The Turk with a most mighty preparation makes for 220 Cyprus. Othello, the fortitude of the place is best known to you; and though we have there a substitute of most allowed sufficiency,<sup>o</sup> yet opinion, a more sovereign mistress of effects, throws a more safer voice on you.<sup>3</sup> You must therefore be content to slubber<sup>o</sup> the gloss of

 your new fortunes with this more stubborn<sup>o</sup> and 225 boisterous expedition.
 OTHELLO The tyrant custom, most grave senators,
 Hath made the flinty and steel couch of war
 My thrice-driven<sup>o</sup> bed of down. I do agnize<sup>o</sup>
 A natural and prompt alacrity
 230 I find in hardness,<sup>o</sup> and do undertake
 This present wars against the Ottomites.
 Most humbly, therefore, bending to your state,<sup>o</sup>
 I crave fit disposition for my wife,
 Due reference of place, and exhibition,<sup>4</sup>
 235 With such accommodation and besort<sup>o</sup>
 As levels with her breeding.
 DUKE Why, at her father's.
 BRABANTIO I will not have it so.
 OTHELLO Nor I.
 DESDEMONA Nor would I there reside,
 To put my father in impatient thoughts
 240 By being in his eye. Most gracious duke,
 To my unfolding<sup>o</sup> lend your prosperous<sup>o</sup> ear,
 And let me find a charter<sup>o</sup> in your voice
 T'assist my simpleness.
 DUKE What would you, Desdemona?
 245 DESDEMONA That I love the Moor to live with him,
 My downright violence and storm of fortunes<sup>5</sup>
 May trumpet to the world. My heart's subdued
 Even to the very quality<sup>6</sup> of my lord.
 I saw Othello's visage in his mind,
 250 And to his honors and his valiant parts<sup>o</sup>

Did I my soul and fortunes consecrate;
 So that, dear lords, if I be left behind,
 A moth of peace, and he go to the war,
 The rites<sup>o</sup> for why I love him are bereft me,
 255 And I a heavy interim shall support
 By his dear absence. Let me go with him.
 OTHELLO [to the DUKE] Let her have your voice.
 Vouch with me, heaven, I therefor beg it not
 To please the palate of my appetite,
 260 Nor to comply with heat<sup>o</sup> (the young affects<sup>7</sup>
 In me defunct) and proper<sup>o</sup> satisfaction,
 But to be free<sup>o</sup> and bounteous to her mind;
 And heaven defend your good souls that you think
 I will your serious and great business scant 265 When she is with me. No, when light-winged toys<sup>o</sup>
 Of feathered Cupid seel<sup>o</sup> with wanton dullness
 My speculative and officed instruments,<sup>8</sup>
 That my disports<sup>o</sup> corrupt and taint my business,
 Let housewives make a skillet of my helm,
 270 And all indign<sup>o</sup> and base adversities
 Make head against my estimation.<sup>9</sup>
 DUKE Be it as you shall privately determine,
 Either for her stay or going. Th'affair cries haste,
 And speed must answer it.
 275 SENATOR You must away tonight.
 DESDEMONA Tonight, my lord?
 DUKE This night.<sup>1</sup> OTHELLO With all my
 heart.
 DUKE At nine i'th' morning here we'll meet again.
 Othello, leave some officer behind,
 And he shall our commission bring to you,
 280 And such things else of quality and respect<sup>o</sup>
 As doth import<sup>o</sup> you.

OTHELLO                      So please your grace, my ancient;

285 A man he is of honesty<sup>2</sup> and trust.
To his conveyance I assign my wife,
With what else needful your good grace shall think
To be sent after me.

DUKE Let it be so.
Good night to every one. [to BRABANTIO] And, noble
signor,
If virtue no delighted<sup>o</sup> beauty lack,
Your son-in-law is far more fair than black.

[Exit DUKE.]

290 SENATOR Adieu, brave Moor; use Desdemona well.
BRABANTIO Look to her, o Moor, if thou hast eyes to see:

She has deceived her father, and may thee.

Exeunt [BRABANTIO, CASSIO, SENATORS, and OFFICERS.]

OTHELLO My life upon her faith!—Honest Iago,
My Desdemona must I leave to thee.
I prithee let thy wife attend on her,
And bring them after in the best advantage.
Come, Desdemona; I have but an hour
Of love, of worldly matter and direction
To spend with thee. We must obey the time.

Exeunt [OTHELLO the] Moor and DESDEMONA.

RODERIGO Iago?

300 IAGO What say'st thou, noble heart?

RODERIGO What will I do, think'st thou?

IAGO Why, go to bed and sleep.

RODERIGO I will incontinently<sup>o</sup> drown myself.

305 IAGO If thou dost, I shall never love thee after. Why, thou
silly gentleman?

RODERIGO It is silliness to live when to live is torment; and then have we a prescription<sup>4</sup> to die when death is our physician.

310 IAGO O villainous!° I have looked upon the world for four times seven years, and since I could distinguish betwixt
a benefit and an injury, I never found man that knew how to love himself. Ere I would say I would drown myself for the love of a guinea-hen,° I would change my humanity with a baboon.

315 RODERIGO What should I do? I confess it is my shame to be so fond, but it is not in my virtue° to amend it.

IAGO Virtue? A fig!° 'Tis in ourselves that we are thus or thus. Our bodies are our gardens, to the which our wills
320 are gardeners. So that if we will plant nettles or sow lettuce, set hyssop° and weed up thyme, supply it with one gender° of herbs or distract it with many, either to have it sterile with idleness° or manured with industry, why,
the power and corrigible authority° of this lies in our wills. If 325 the balance of our lives had not one scale of reason
to poise° another of sensuality, the blood and baseness
of our natures would conduct us to most preposterous conclusions. But we have reason to cool our raging motions,<sup>o</sup> our carnal stings or unbitted<sup>o</sup> lusts; whereof I take

 this that you call love to be a sect or scion.<sup>o</sup>
 330 RODERIGO It cannot be.
 IAGO It is merely a lust of the blood and a permission of the will. Come, be a man! Drown thyself? Drown cats and blind puppies. I have professed me thy friend, and I confess me knit to thy deserving with cables of perdurable<sup>o</sup> 335 toughness. I could never better stead<sup>o</sup> thee than now.
 Put money in thy purse. Follow thou the wars; defeat thy favor with an usurped beard.<sup>5</sup> I say, put money in thy purse. It cannot be long that Desdemona should continue her love to the Moor—put money in thy 340 purse—
 nor he his to her. It was a violent commencement<sup>6</sup> in her, and thou shalt see an answerable sequestration<sup>7</sup> put but money in thy purse. These Moors are changeable
 —
 in their wills—fill thy purse with money. The food that to him now is as luscious as locusts<sup>8</sup> shall be to 345 him
 shortly as bitter as coloquintida.<sup>9</sup> She must change
 for youth: when she is sated with his body, she will find the error of her choice. Therefore, put money in thy purse. If thou wilt needs<sup>o</sup> damn thyself, do it a more

350 delicate way than drowning—make all the money
thou canst. If sanctimony<sup>o</sup> and a frail vow betwixt an erring<sup>1</sup> barbarian and a super-subtle<sup>o</sup> Venetian be not too hard for my wits and all the tribe of hell, thou shalt enjoy her. Therefore make money. A pox of drowning thyself;
355 it is clean out of the way.<sup>o</sup> Seek thou rather to be hanged
in compassing<sup>o</sup> thy joy than to be drowned and go without her.
RODERIGO Wilt thou be fast<sup>o</sup> to my hopes, if I depend on the issue?<sup>o</sup>
IAGO Thou art sure of me—go make money. I have 360 told thee often, and I retell thee again and again, I hate
the Moor. My cause is hearted;<sup>o</sup> thine hath no less reason.
Let us be conjunctive<sup>o</sup> in our revenge against him. If
thou canst cuckold him, thou dost thyself a pleasure, me
a 365 sport. There are many events in the womb of time which will be delivered. Traverse,<sup>o</sup> go, provide thy money.
We will have more of this tomorrow. Adieu.
RODERIGO Where shall we meet i'th' morning?
IAGO At my lodging.
RODERIGO I'll be with thee betimes.<sup>o</sup>
370 IAGO Go to, farewell. Do you hear, Roderigo?

RODERIGO I'll sell all my land. Exit.
 IAGO Thus do I ever make my fool my purse;
 For I mine own gained knowledge should profane
 If I would time expend with such a snipe<sup>o</sup>
 375 But for my sport and profit. I hate the Moor,
 And it is thought abroad<sup>o</sup> that 'twixt my sheets
 H'as done my office. I know not if't be true,
 But I for mere suspicion in that kind
 Will do<sup>o</sup> as if for surety. He holds<sup>o</sup> me well;
 380 The better shall my purpose work on him.
 Cassio's a proper<sup>o</sup> man. Let me see now . . .
 To get his place and to plume up<sup>o</sup> my will
 In double knavery—how? how? Let's see . . .
 After some time, to abuse Othello's ears
 385 That he is too familiar with his wife.<sup>2</sup>
 He hath a person and a smooth dispose<sup>o</sup>
 To be suspected, framed<sup>o</sup> to make women false.
 The Moor is of a free<sup>o</sup> and open nature
 That thinks men honest that but seem to be so,
 390 And will as tenderly<sup>o</sup> be led by th'nose
 As asses are. . . .
 I have't! It is engendered! Hell and night Must bring this monstrous birth to the world's light. Exit.

Endnotes

- Note 1.3: Location: A Venetian council room.Return to reference 1.3
- Note 1: The reports lack the consistency that would make them believable.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: "Where . . . difference": where the reports are estimates, there are often discrepancies among them.Return to reference 2

- Note 3: "I do not . . . sense": I am not so reassured by the discrepancies as to dismiss the main concern—the approach of a Turkish fleet.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Not mentioned elsewhere in the play, Angelus Sorianus was a Venetian sea captain who received the Venetian ambassador bearing from Constantinople the Turkish ultimatum to surrender Cyprus, shortly before its capture by the Turks in 1571.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: So also can the Turkish fleet more easily win it.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Addressed to the senators.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: With his freely given loyalty reports to you thus.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Not mentioned elsewhere in the play.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: That it (my grief) can incorporate other sorrows without being affected.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: That is, you yourself shall interpret the law as you see fit, even if my own son was the one you accuse.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: "Her . . . herself": she blushed at herself at the slightest provocation.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: "Without . . . him": without fuller and more direct testimony than mere appearances and conjecture based on currently popular beliefs against him.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: In the immediately life-threatening gaps in a fortification.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Man-eaters. The term is from the ancient Roman writer Pliny the Elder. Shakespeare was also indebted to the travel literature of the Middle Ages (The Travels of Sir John Mandeville) and the Renaissance (Hakluyt's Principal Navigations, among others).Return to reference 5
- Note 6: F reads "kisses," Q "sighs." It is hard to explain "kisses" as a textual error.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Made such a man for her; made her into such a man.Return to reference 7

- Note 8: Blocks of wood tied to criminals' legs to keep them from escaping.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: By seeing those things come to pass that caused grief in anticipation. The duke paints the moral in rhyming couplets, to which Brabantio replies in kind.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Patience laughs at what cannot be helped (and thus reduces the "injury").Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Surgically lanced (and presumably cured).Return to reference 2
- Note 3: "Opinion . . . you": public opinion, which determines what gets done, finds greater security with you.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Proper accommodation and maintenance.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: My outright defiance of custom.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Essential nature. In the Quarto, Desdemona says that her heart is subdued to Othello's "utmost pleasure."Return to reference 6
- Note 7: The youthful desires.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: My duty-bound faculties of sense.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Raise an army against my good reputation.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: This exchange between Desdemona and the Duke is only in Q.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: The first of many references to Iago's "honesty."Return to reference 2
- Note 3: And bring them along at the most favorable moment.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Right; doctor's order.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Disguise your appearance with a fake beard.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: An abruptly begun affair.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: A correspondingly abrupt separation.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: A sweet, exotic fruit, perhaps carob or honeysuckle.Return to reference 8

- Note 9: Colocynth, a purgative—one of Iago’s many references to the digestive tract.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: A wandering.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: “He” is Cassio (as in line 387), but “his” refers to Othello.Return to reference 2

Notes

- °: inconsistentReturn to reference °
- °: don’t exactly agreeReturn to reference °
- °: battle-ready fleetReturn to reference °
- °: testReturn to reference °
- °: lastReturn to reference °
- °: riskReturn to reference °
- °: Ottoman TurksReturn to reference °
- °: joined with anotherReturn to reference °
- °: retraceReturn to reference °
- °: immediatelyReturn to reference °
- °: (of all Christendom)Return to reference °
- °: nobleReturn to reference °
- °: official dutyReturn to reference °
- °: deludedReturn to reference °
- °: quacksReturn to reference °
- °: withoutReturn to reference °
- °: height and breadthReturn to reference °
- °: unpolishedReturn to reference °
- °: strengthReturn to reference °
- °: nine months agoReturn to reference °
- °: most valuedReturn to reference °
- °: combatsReturn to reference °
- °: plainReturn to reference °
- °: withReturn to reference °
- °: reputationReturn to reference °
- °: (we therefore) mustReturn to reference °
- °: passionsReturn to reference °

- °: enchanted doseReturn to reference °
- °: meansReturn to reference °
- °: conversationReturn to reference °
- °: sins of passionReturn to reference °
- °: constantlyReturn to reference °
- °: eventsReturn to reference °
- °: eventsReturn to reference °
- °: conductReturn to reference °
- °: cavesReturn to reference °
- °: occasion Return to reference °
- °: storyReturn to reference °
- °: wheneverReturn to reference °
- °: convenientReturn to reference °
- °: relateReturn to reference °
- °: continuouslyReturn to reference °
- °: exceptionallyReturn to reference °
- °: make the best of thisReturn to reference °
- °: teachReturn to reference °
- °: assertReturn to reference °
- °: if it pleasesReturn to reference °
- °: begetReturn to reference °
- °: that whichReturn to reference °
- °: except thatReturn to reference °
- °: draw a moralReturn to reference °
- °: stepReturn to reference °
- °: pointlessReturn to reference °
- °: saying; judgmentReturn to reference °
- °: both sweet and bitterReturn to reference °
- °: known ability Return to reference °
- °: soil Return to reference °
- °: rougherReturn to reference °
- °: sifted Return to reference °
- °: acknowledgeReturn to reference °
- °: hardshipReturn to reference °
- °: authorityReturn to reference °
- °: suitable attendanceReturn to reference °

- °: proposal Return to reference °
- °: receptive Return to reference °
- °: an authorization Return to reference °
- °: qualities Return to reference °
- °: (of love); (of war?) Return to reference °
- °: sexual passion Return to reference °
- °: personal; fitting Return to reference °
- °: liberal Return to reference °
- °: diversions Return to reference °
- °: blind Return to reference °
- °: sexual pleasures Return to reference °
- °: undignified Return to reference °
- °: weight and importance Return to reference °
- °: concern Return to reference °
- °: delightful Return to reference °
- °: watch her carefully Return to reference °
- °: immediately Return to reference °
- °: absurd Return to reference °
- °: woman Return to reference °
- °: native ability Return to reference °
- °: (an obscenity) Return to reference °
- °: mint herb Return to reference °
- °: kind Return to reference °
- °: noncultivation Return to reference °
- °: ability to decide Return to reference °
- °: counterweigh Return to reference °
- °: appetites Return to reference °
- °: unrestrained Return to reference °
- °: offshoot Return to reference °
- °: durable Return to reference °
- °: help Return to reference °
- °: if you must Return to reference °
- °: holy rite Return to reference °
- °: highly sensitive Return to reference °
- °: of no use Return to reference °
- °: encompassing Return to reference °

- °: duty-boundReturn to reference °
- °: outcomeReturn to reference °
- °: heartfelt Return to reference °
- °: joined Return to reference °
- °: go (to arms)Return to reference °
- °: earlyReturn to reference °
- °: foolReturn to reference °
- °: rumoredReturn to reference °
- °: act Return to reference °
- °: esteemsReturn to reference °
- °: handsomeReturn to reference °
- °: gratifyReturn to reference °
- °: mannerReturn to reference °
- °: formedReturn to reference °
- °: liberalReturn to reference °
- °: easilyReturn to reference °

2.1

Enter MONTANO and two GENTLEMEN [one above].

MONTANO What from the cape can you discern at sea?

FIRST GENTLEMAN Nothing at all; it is a high-wrought flood.<sup>o</sup>

I cannot 'twixt the heaven and the main<sup>o</sup>
Descry<sup>o</sup> a sail.

5 MONTANO Methinks the wind hath spoke aloud at land;
A fuller blast ne'er shook our battlements
If it hath ruffianed<sup>o</sup> so upon the sea,
What ribs of oak, when mountains melt on them,
Can hold the mortise?<sup>1</sup> What shall we hear of this?

10 SECOND GENTLEMAN A segregation<sup>o</sup> of the Turkish fleet:
For do but stand upon the foaming shore,
The chidden billow<sup>2</sup> seems to pelt the clouds;
The wind-shaked surge, with high and monstrous mane,
Seems to cast water on the burning Bear
And quench the guards of th'ever-fixèd pole.<sup>3</sup>
15 I never did like molestation view<sup>o</sup>
On the enchafed<sup>o</sup> flood.

MONTANO If that the Turkish fleet
Be not ensheltered and embayed, they are drowned;
It is impossible to bear it out.

Enter a THIRD GENTLEMAN.

20 THIRD GENTLEMAN News, lads! Our wars are done.
The desperate tempest hath so banged the Turks
That their designment<sup>o</sup> halts. A noble ship of Venice
Hath seen a grievous wrack and sufferance<sup>o</sup>
On most part of their fleet.

MONTANO How? Is this true?
 25 THIRD GENTLEMAN The ship is here put in,
 A Veronnesa.<sup>4</sup> Michael Cassio,
 Lieutenant to the warlike Moor, Othello,
 Is come on shore; the Moor himself at sea,
 And is in full commission here for Cyprus.
 30 MONTANO I am glad on't—'tis a worthy governor.
 THIRD GENTLEMAN But this same Cassio, though he speak of comfort
 Touching the Turkish loss, yet he looks sadly<sup>o</sup>
 And prays the Moor be safe; for they were parted
 With foul and violent tempest.
 MONTANO Pray heavens he be,
 35 For I have served him, and the man commands
 Like a full soldier. Let's to the seaside—ho!—
 As well to see the vessel that's come in
 As to throw out our eyes for brave Othello,
 Even till we make the main and th'aerial blue
 An indistinct regard.<sup>5</sup>
 40 THIRD GENTLEMAN Come, let's do so;
 For every minute is expectancy
 Of more arrivance.
Enter CASSIO.
 CASSIO Thanks, you the valiant of the warlike isle,
 That so approve the Moor! O, let the heavens
 Give him defense against the elements,
 45 For I have lost him on a dangerous sea.
 MONTANO Is he well shipped?
 CASSIO His bark is stoutly timbered, and his pilot
 Of very expert and approved allowance;<sup>o</sup>
 Therefore my hopes, not surfeited to death,<sup>o</sup>
 50 Stand in bold cure.<sup>o</sup>
 VOICES [within] A sail! a sail! a sail!
 CASSIO What noise?
 GENTLEMAN The town is empty; on the brow o'th' sea

Stand ranks of people, and they cry "A sail!"

55 CASSIO My hopes do shape him for<sup>o</sup> the governor.
[A shot.]

SECOND GENTLEMAN They do discharge their shot of courtesy—

Our friends, at least.

CASSIO I pray you, sir, go forth
And give us truth who 'tis that is arrived.

SECOND GENTLEMAN I shall. Exit.

60 MONTANO But, good lieutenant, is your general wived?

CASSIO Most fortunately: he hath achieved a maid
That paragon<sup>o</sup>s description and wild fame,
One that excels the quirks of blazoning<sup>o</sup> pens,
And in th'essential vesture of creation
Does tire the engineer.<sup>6</sup>

Enter SECOND GENTLEMAN.

65 How now? Who has put in?
SECOND GENTLEMAN 'Tis one Iago, ancient to the general.

CASSIO He's had most favorable and happy speed:
Tempests themselves, high seas, and howling winds,
The guttered<sup>o</sup> rocks and congregated<sup>o</sup> sands,
70 Traitors ensteeped<sup>o</sup> to enclog the guiltless keel,
As having sense of beauty, do omit<sup>o</sup>
Their mortal<sup>o</sup> natures, letting go safely by The divine Desdemona.

MONTANO What is she?

CASSIO She that I spake of, our great captain's captain,
75 Left in the conduct of the bold Iago,
Whose footing here anticipates our thoughts
A se'night's speed.<sup>7</sup> Great Jove, Othello guard,
And swell his sail with thine own powerful breath,
That he may bless this bay with his tall ship,

I find it still<sup>o</sup> when I have leave to sleep.
 Marry, before your ladyship, I grant,
 105 She puts her tongue a little in her heart<sup>9</sup>
 And chides with thinking.
 EMILIA You have little cause to say so.
 IAGO Come on! come on! You are pictures<sup>1</sup> out of door,
 110 Bells<sup>o</sup> in your parlors, wildcats in your kitchens,
 Saints<sup>o</sup> in your injuries, devils being offended, Players in your huswifery, and huswives<sup>2</sup> in your beds.
 DESDEMONA O, fie upon thee, slanderer!
 IAGO Nay, it is true, or else I am a Turk:
 You rise to play and go to bed to work.
 115 EMILIA You shall not write my praise.
 IAGO No, let me not.
 DESDEMONA What wouldst write of me, if thou shouldst praise me?
 IAGO O, gentle lady, do not put me to't,
 For I am nothing if not critical.
 DESDEMONA Come on, assay.<sup>o</sup> There's one gone to 120 the harbor?
 IAGO Ay, madam.
 DESDEMONA I am not merry, but I do beguile<sup>o</sup>
 The thing I am<sup>o</sup> by seeming otherwise.—
 Come, how wouldst thou praise me?
 IAGO I am about it, but indeed my invention
 125 Comes from my pate as birdlime<sup>3</sup> does from frieze.<sup>o</sup>
 It plucks out brains and all. But my muse labors,<sup>o</sup>
 And thus she is delivered:
 "If she be fair and wise, fairness and wit,
 The one's for use, the other useth it."<sup>4</sup> 130 DESDEMONA Well praised! How if she be black and witty?
 IAGO "If she be black,<sup>5</sup> and thereto have a wit, She'll find a white that shall her blackness fit."<sup>6</sup>

 DESDEMONA Worse and worse!
 EMILIA How if fair and foolish?
 135 IAGO "She never yet was foolish that was fair,
 For even her folly<sup>o</sup> helped her to an heir."
 DESDEMONA These are old fond<sup>o</sup> paradoxes, to make fools laugh i'th' alehouse. What miserable praise hast thou
 for her that's foul<sup>o</sup> and foolish?
 140 IAGO "There's none so foul and foolish thereunto,<sup>o</sup>
 But does foul<sup>o</sup> pranks which fair and wise ones do."
 DESDEMONA O, heavy ignorance! Thou praisest the worst best. But what praise couldst thou bestow on a deserving woman indeed? One that in the authority of her 145 merit did justly put on the vouch<sup>z</sup> of very malice itself.
 IAGO "She that was ever fair, and never proud,
 Had tongue at will, and yet was never loud,
 Never lacked gold, and yet went never gay,<sup>o</sup>
 150 Fled from her wish, and yet said "now I may";<sup>8</sup>
 She that, being angered, her revenge being nigh,
 Bade her wrong stay<sup>o</sup> and her displeasure fly;
 She that in wisdom never was so frail
 To change the cod's head for the salmon's tail;<sup>9</sup>
 She that could think, and ne'er disclose her mind, 155 See suitors following, and not look behind:
 She was a wight (if ever such wights were) . . ."
 DESDEMONA To do what?
 IAGO "To suckle fools and chronicle small beer."<sup>1</sup>
 DESDEMONA O, most lame and impotent conclusion!
 160 Do
 not learn of him, Emilia, though he be thy husband.

How say you, Cassio? Is he not a most profane and liberal<sup>o</sup> counselor?

CASSIO He speaks home, madam. You may relish him more in<sup>o</sup> the soldier than in the scholar.

165 IAGO [aside] He takes her by the palm. Ay, well said,<sup>o</sup> whisper! With as little a web as this will I ensnare as great a fly as Cassio. Ay, smile upon her, do! I will gyve<sup>o</sup> thee in thine own courtship.<sup>o</sup>—You say true, 'tis so indeed.—If such tricks as these strip you out of your 170 lieutenantry, it had been better you had not kissed your three fingers so oft,<sup>2</sup> which now again you are most apt to play the sir<sup>o</sup> in. Very good! well kissed and excellent courtesy!—'Tis so indeed.—Yet again, your fingers to your lips? Would they were clyster pipes<sup>o</sup> for your 175 sake!

Trumpets within

The Moor! I know his trumpet.

CASSIO 'Tis truly so.

DESDEMONA Let's meet him and receive him.

CASSIO Lo, where he comes.

Enter OTHELLO and attendants.

OTHELLO O, my fair warrior!

DESDEMONA My dear Othello!

180 OTHELLO It gives me wonder great as my content
To see you here before me. O! my soul's joy,
If after every tempest come such calms,
May the winds blow till they have wakened death,
And let the laboring bark<sup>o</sup> climb hills of seas
185 Olympus-high,<sup>3</sup> and duck again as low

As hell's from heaven! If it were now to die,<sup>4</sup>
 'Twere now to be most happy; for I fear
 My soul hath her content so absolute
 That not another comfort like to this
 190 Succeeds<sup>o</sup> in unknown fate.<sup>o</sup>
 DESDEMONA The heavens forbid
 But that our loves and comforts should increase
 Even as our days do grow.
 OTHELLO Amen to that, sweet powers!
 I cannot speak enough of this content;
 It stops me here; it is too much of joy.
 195 And this, and this— They kiss.
 the greatest discords be
 That e'er our hearts shall make!
 IAGO [aside] O, you are well
 tuned now;
 But I'll set down the pegs that make this music,<sup>5</sup>
 As honest as I am.
 OTHELLO Come, let us to the castle.
 News, friends; our wars are done. The Turks are 200 drowned.
 How does my old acquaintance of this isle?—
 Honey, you shall be well desired<sup>o</sup> in Cyprus;
 I have found great love amongst them. O, my sweet,
 I prattle out of fashion, and I dote
 In mine own comforts. I prithee, good Iago,
 205 Go to the bay and disembark my coffers.<sup>o</sup>
 Bring thou the master<sup>o</sup> to the citadel;
 He is a good one, and his worthiness
 Does challenge<sup>o</sup> much respect. Come, Desdemona;
 Once more well met at Cyprus.
 210 Exit OTHELLO and DESDEMONA [and all but IAGO and RODERIGO].

IAGO [to a departing attendant] Do thou meet me presently at the harbor. [to RODERIGO] Come hither. If thou be'st valiant—as they say base<sup>o</sup> men, being in love, have then a nobility in their natures more than is native to them—list<sup>o</sup> me. The lieutenant tonight watches on 215 the court of guard.<sup>6</sup> First I must tell thee this:
 Desdemona is directly in love with him.
 RODERIGO With him? Why, 'tis not possible.
 IAGO Lay thy finger thus,<sup>o</sup> and let thy soul be instructed.
 220 Mark me with what violence she first loved the Moor, but<sup>o</sup> for bragging and telling her fantastical lies. To love
 him still for prating, let not thy discreet heart think it.
 Her eye must be fed. And what delight shall she have to look on the devil? When the blood is made dull with
 the act of sport, there should be—again to enflame it, 225 and to give satiety a fresh appetite—loveliness in favor,<sup>o</sup> sympathy in years, manners, and beauties, all which
 the Moor is defective in. Now for want of these required conveniences,<sup>o</sup> her delicate tenderness will find itself 230 abused,<sup>o</sup> begin to heave the gorge,<sup>7</sup> disrelish and abhor
 the Moor. Very nature will instruct her in it and compel her to some second choice. Now, sir, this granted—as it is a most pregnant<sup>o</sup> and unforced position—who stands

so eminent in the degree of<sup>8</sup> this fortune as Cassio does?—a knave very voluble,<sup>o</sup> no further 235       conscionable<sup>9</sup> than in putting on the mere form of civil and humane seeming for the better compass<sup>o</sup> of his salt<sup>1</sup> and most hidden loose affection. Why none! why none! A slipper<sup>o</sup> and subtle knave, a finder of occasion, that has an eye
240       can stamp and counterfeit advantages,<sup>2</sup> though true advantage never present itself. A devilish knave!
Besides,
the knave is handsome, young, and hath all those requisites in him that folly<sup>o</sup> and green minds look after. A <sup>o</sup> pestilent complete knave! And the woman hath found him already.
245       RODERIGO I cannot believe that in her; she's full of most blessed condition.
IAGO   Blessed fig's-end!<sup>o</sup> The wine she drinks is made of grapes. If she had been blessed, she would never have 250       loved the Moor. Blessed pudding!<sup>o</sup> Didst thou not see her paddle with the palm of his hand? Didst not mark
that?
RODERIGO   Yes, that I did, but that was but courtesy.
IAGO   Lechery, by this hand! an index and obscure<sup>o</sup>

255 prologue to the history<sup>o</sup> of lust and foul thoughts.<sup>3</sup>
They met so near with their lips that their breaths embraced together. Villainous thoughts, Roderigo: when these mutualities so marshal the way, hard at hand comes
the master and main exercise,<sup>4</sup> th'incorporate<sup>o</sup> conclusion.

260 Pish! But, sir, be you ruled by me. I have brought
you from Venice. Watch you tonight. For the command, I'll
lay't upon you.<sup>5</sup> Cassio knows you not. I'll not be far from
you. Do you find some occasion to anger Cassio, either by speaking too loud or tainting<sup>o</sup> his discipline, or from what other course you please, which the time shall more 265 favorably minister.<sup>o</sup>

RODERIGO Well.

IAGO Sir, he's rash and very sudden in choler, and haply<sup>o</sup> may strike at you. Provoke him that he may; for even out of that will I cause these of Cyprus to mutiny; whose 270 qualification shall come into no true taste again<sup>6</sup> but by the displanting of Cassio. So shall you have a shorter journey to your desires by the means I shall then have to prefer<sup>o</sup> them, and the impediment most profitably removed without the which there were no 275 expectation of our prosperity.

RODERIGO I will do this if you can bring it to any opportunity.

IAGO I warrant thee. Meet me by and by at the citadel. I must fetch his necessaries<sup>7</sup> ashore. Farewell.

280

RODERIGO Adieu. Exit.

IAGO That Cassio loves her, I do well believ't;
That she loves him, 'tis apt and of great credit.<sup>o</sup>
The Moor, howbeit that I endure him not,

285

Is of a constant, loving, noble nature,
And I dare think he'll prove to Desdemona

A most dear<sup>o</sup> husband. Now I do love her too,
Not out of absolute lust (though peradventure
I stand accountant<sup>o</sup> for as great a sin),

290

But partly led to diet<sup>o</sup> my revenge,
For that I do suspect the lusty Moor
Hath leaped into my seat<sup>o</sup>—the thought whereof Doth, like a poisonous mineral, gnaw my inwards,<sup>o</sup>
And nothing can or shall content my soul

295

Till I am evened with him, wife for wife;
Or failing so, yet that I put the Moor
At least into a jealousy so strong
That judgment cannot cure; which thing to do,
If this poor trash of Venice, whom I trace

300

For his quick hunting, stand the putting on,<sup>8</sup>
I'll have our Michael Cassio on the hip,<sup>o</sup>
Abuse<sup>o</sup> him to the Moor in the rank garb<sup>o</sup>
(For I fear Cassio with my nightcap<sup>o</sup> too),

305

Make the Moor thank me, love me, and reward me
For making him egregiously an ass
And practicing upon<sup>o</sup> his peace and quiet
Even to madness. 'Tis here,<sup>o</sup> but yet confused;
Knavery's plain face is never seen till used. Exit.

Endnotes

- Note 2.1: Location: A seaport in Cyprus; outdoors near the harbor.Return to reference 2.1
- Note 1: "What . . . mortise": what ship (with "ribs of oak") can hold its joints ("mortise") together when "mountains" of water pour on it?Return to reference 1
- Note 2: The surging ocean, rebuked ("chidden") by the wind (or repulsed by the land).Return to reference 2
- Note 3: The "burning Bear" is the constellation Ursa Minor; the "guards" are probably two stars in the constellation that point in a line to the polestar, also in Ursa Minor.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Meaning unclear: either a ship originally from Verona, though now used by the Venetians; or perhaps a particular kind of ship.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: "Even . . . regard": until we can't distinguish sea from sky.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: "In . . . engineer": whose natural beauty exhausts the poet's capacity to invent praise.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Whose arrival predates our expectations by a week.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Perhaps both a defense of Emilia and a prod for her to speak.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: She keeps her (critical) thoughts to herself.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Models of silent propriety. In this speech Iago shifts from Emilia to women generally.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Pronounced hussies and thus carrying opposed suggestions: wanton; businesslike, charily husbanding sexual favors (compare line 115). "Players in your huswifery": deceptive in managing household expenses.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Sticky substance used to trap small birds.Return to reference 3

- Note 4: That is, intelligence makes use of beauty.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Dark-haired or dark-complexioned.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: With sexual double entendre. "White": fair-skinned person (with a pun on wight, "person").Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Compel the approval.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Voluntarily withstood temptation even when given the choice.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: To make an unworthy exchange.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: That is, to breastfeed babies and keep track of trivial domestic goods.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: It would have been better for you not to have blown her so many kisses.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Mount Olympus, home of the Greek gods and hence too high for mortals.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: To perish, but also evoking the very common sense "to have an orgasm."Return to reference 4
- Note 5: I'll untune (by loosening) the "pegs" that hold the strings of the musical instrument taut.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: That is, Cassio is in charge of the watch at the guardhouse.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Feel nausea.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: As next in line for.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: No more ethical.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Lewd.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Who can (like a counterfeiter) create his own opportunities.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: The analogy is to a dirty book. "Index": table of contents. Return to reference 3
- Note 4: When these intimacies have cleared the way, the main event follows close behind. Here, the analogy is to an official procession.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Stand watch tonight. I'll see that you receive orders.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Who will not be adequately appeased.Return to reference 6

- Note 7: Othello's possessions. Return to reference 7
- Note 8: "If . . . on": if Roderigo, whom I follow (?), harness (?), is successfully set on the hunt when incited. Return to reference 8

Notes

- °: very rough sea Return to reference °
- °: sea Return to reference °
- °: discern Return to reference °
- °: raged Return to reference °
- °: separation Return to reference °
- °: see such a tumult Return to reference °
- °: raging Return to reference °
- °: plan Return to reference °
- °: damage Return to reference °
- °: seriously Return to reference °
- °: known ability Return to reference °
- °: not excessive Return to reference °
- °: likely to be rewarded Return to reference °
- °: make it out to be Return to reference °
- °: stands above Return to reference °
- °: praise-giving Return to reference °
- °: jagged Return to reference °
- °: accumulated Return to reference °
- °: underwater Return to reference °
- °: forgo Return to reference °
- °: deadly Return to reference °
- °: always Return to reference °
- °: noisy Return to reference °
- °: martyrs Return to reference °
- °: essay, try Return to reference °
- °: disguise Return to reference °
- °: (worried for Othello) Return to reference °
- °: coarse wool cloth Return to reference °

- °: (in childbirth) Return to reference °
- °: foolishness; lechery Return to reference °
- °: foolish Return to reference °
- °: ugly Return to reference °
- °: to boot Return to reference °
- °: lascivious Return to reference °
- °: lavishly clothed Return to reference °
- °: sense of injury end Return to reference °
- °: outspoken Return to reference °
- °: as Return to reference °
- °: well done Return to reference °
- °: shackle Return to reference °
- °: courtliness Return to reference °
- °: gentleman Return to reference °
- °: enema tubes Return to reference °
- °: small ship Return to reference °
- °: will follow Return to reference °
- °: future Return to reference °
- °: welcomed Return to reference °
- °: trunks Return to reference °
- °: captain Return to reference °
- °: deserve Return to reference °
- °: lowly born Return to reference °
- °: listen to Return to reference °
- °: be silent Return to reference °
- °: only Return to reference °
- °: looks Return to reference °
- °: compatibilities Return to reference °
- °: revolted Return to reference °
- °: obvious; (sexual) Return to reference °
- °: facile Return to reference °
- °: achievement Return to reference °
- °: slippery Return to reference °
- °: wantonness Return to reference °
- °: damnably Return to reference °
- °: (obscene) Return to reference °

- °: sausageReturn to reference °
- °: encoded Return to reference °
- °: story Return to reference °
- °: in the flesh Return to reference °
- °: insulting Return to reference °
- °: provideReturn to reference °
- °: perhaps Return to reference °
- °: promoteReturn to reference °
- °: likely and believableReturn to reference °
- °: affectionate; costlyReturn to reference °
- °: accountableReturn to reference °
- °: feedReturn to reference °
- °: slept with my wifeReturn to reference °
- °: innardsReturn to reference °
- °: at my mercyReturn to reference °
- °: slander Return to reference °
- °: gross mannerReturn to reference °
- °: (as sexual rival)Return to reference °
- °: underminingReturn to reference °
- °: my plan is hereReturn to reference °

2.2

Enter OTHELLO 's HERALD with a proclamation.

HERALD [reads] "It is Othello's pleasure, our noble
and valiant general, that upon certain tidings now arrived importing the mere perdition<sup>o</sup> of the Turkish fleet, every man put himself into triumph—some to dance, some
to make bonfires, each man to what sport and revels
5 his addition<sup>o</sup> leads him. For besides these beneficial news, it is the celebration of his nuptial." So much was his pleasure should be proclaimed. All offices<sup>o</sup> are open, and there is full liberty of feasting from this present hour
of 10 five till the bell have told eleven. Heaven bless the isle of Cyprus and our noble general Othello! Exit.

Endnotes

- Note 2.2: Location: A street in Cyprus. Return to reference 2.2
- °: entire loss Return to reference °
- °: inclination Return to reference °
- °: storehouses Return to reference °

2.3

Enter OTHELLO, DESDEMONA, CASSIO, and attendants.

OTHELLO Good Michael, look you to the guard tonight.
Let's teach ourselves that honorable stop,<sup>o</sup>
Not to outsport<sup>o</sup> discretion.

5 CASSIO Iago hath direction what to do;
But notwithstanding, with my personal eye
Will I look to't.

OTHELLO Iago is most honest.
Michael, goodnight. Tomorrow with your earliest
Let me have speech with you.—Come, my dear love.
The purchase made, the fruits are to ensue,
10 That profit's yet to come 'tween me and you.<sup>1</sup> Goodnight.

Exit [OTHELLO, DESDEMONA, and attendants].

Enter IAGO.

CASSIO Welcome, Iago; we must to the watch.

IAGO Not this hour, lieutenant; 'tis not yet ten o'th' clock.

15 Our general cast<sup>o</sup> us thus early for the love of his Desdemona, who let us not therefore blame: he hath not yet made wanton the night with her, and she is sport for Jove.

CASSIO She's a most exquisite lady.

IAGO And, I'll warrant her, full of game.

20 CASSIO Indeed, she's a most fresh and delicate creature.

IAGO What an eye she has! Methinks it sounds a parley<sup>o</sup>
to provocation.

CASSIO An inviting eye; and yet, methinks, right modest.

IAGO And when she speaks, is it not an alarum<sup>o</sup> to
love?

25 CASSIO She is indeed perfection.

IAGO Well, happiness to their sheets! Come, lieutenant, I have a stoup<sup>o</sup> of wine, and here without are a brace<sup>o</sup> of Cyprus gallants that would fain have a measure<sup>2</sup> to
the health of black Othello.

30 CASSIO Not tonight, good Iago. I have very poor and unhappy brains for drinking. I could well wish courtesy
would invent some other custom of entertainment.

IAGO O, they are our friends; but one cup; I'll drink
for
you.

35 CASSIO I have drunk but one cup tonight, and that was craftily qualified<sup>o</sup> too; and behold what innovation<sup>3</sup> it makes here. I am unfortunate in the infirmity and dare not task my weakness with any more.

IAGO What, man! 'Tis a night of revels—the gallants desire it.

40 CASSIO Where are they?

IAGO Here at the door; I pray you call them in.

CASSIO I'll do't, but it dislikes me.<sup>o</sup>

Exit.

45 IAGO If I can fasten but one cup upon him
With that which he hath drunk tonight already,
He'll be as full of quarrel and offense
As my young mistress' dog. Now my sick fool,
Roderigo,
Whom love hath turned almost the wrong side out,

To Desdemona hath tonight caroused
Potations pottle-deep; and he's to watch.<sup>4</sup>
50 Three else of Cyprus (noble swelling<sub>o</sub> spirits,
That hold their honors in a wary distance,<sup>5</sup>
The very elements<sub>o</sub> of this warlike isle)
Have I tonight flustered with flowing cups,
And they watch too. Now, 'mongst this flock of 55 drunkards
Am I to put our Cassio in some action
That may offend the isle. But here they come.
Enter CASSIO, MONTANO, and GENTLEMEN [with wine].
If consequence do but approve my dream,<sup>6</sup>
My boat sails freely, both with wind and stream.<sub>o</sub>
CASSIO 'Fore God, they have given me a rouse<sub>o</sub>
60 already.
MONTANO Good faith, a little one; not past a pint, as I am a soldier.
IAGO Some wine, ho!
[Sings]
And let me the cannikin<sub>o</sub> clink, clink,
And let me the cannikin clink.
65 A soldier's a man,
O man's life's but a span,
Why then, let a soldier drink.
Some wine, boys!
CASSIO 'Fore God, an excellent song!
70 IAGO I learned it in England, where indeed they are most potent in potting.<sup>7</sup> Your Dane, your German, and
your swag<sub>o</sub>-bellied Hollander—drink, ho!—are nothing to your English.
CASSIO Is your Englishman so exquisite in his
75 drinking?

IAGO Why, he drinks you with facility your Dane dead
 drunk. He sweats not to overthrow your Almaine.°
 He gives your Hollander a vomit ere the next pottle° can be filled.

80 CASSIO To the health of our general!
 MONTANO I am for it, lieutenant, and I'll do you justice.⁸

IAGO O sweet England!
 [Sings]
 King Stephen was and-a worthy peer,
 His breeches cost him but a crown;⁹
 He held them sixpence all too dear,
 85 With that he called the tailor lown.°
 He was a wight of high renown,
 And thou art but of low degree;
 'Tis pride° that pulls the country down,
 And take thy auld cloak about thee.

90 Some wine, ho!
 CASSIO 'Fore God, this is a more exquisite song than
 the other.

IAGO Will you hear't again?

95 CASSIO No, for I hold him to be unworthy of his place that does those things. Well, God's above all, and there be souls must be saved, and there be souls must not be saved.¹

IAGO It's true, good lieutenant.

100 CASSIO For mine own part—no offense to the general,

nor any man of quality<sup>o</sup>—I hope to be saved.

IAGO And so do I too, lieutenant.

CASSIO Ay; but by your leave, not before me. The
lieutenant

105 is to be saved before the ancient. Let's have no more of this. Let's to our affairs. God forgive us our sins.
Gentlemen, let's look to our business. Do not think, gentlemen, I am drunk. This is my ancient, this is my right hand, and this is my left. I am not drunk now. I can stand well enough, and I speak well enough.

GENTLEMAN Excellent well.

110 CASSIO Why, very well then. You must not think,
then,

that I am drunk. Exit.

MONTANO To th'platform, masters; come, let's set the watch. [Exeunt some

GENTLEMEN.]

115 IAGO [to MONTANO] You see this fellow that is gone before:

He's a soldier fit to stand by Caesar
And give direction. And do but see his vice:

'Tis to his virtue a just equinox,<sup>o</sup>

The one as long as th'other. 'Tis pity of him;

120 I fear the trust Othello puts him in

On some odd time of his infirmity

Will shake this island.

MONTANO But is he often thus?

IAGO 'Tis evermore his prologue to his sleep.

He'll watch the horologe a double set<sup>2</sup>

If drink rock not his cradle.

125 MONTANO It were well
The general were put in mind of it.

Perhaps he sees it not, or his good nature

Prizes the virtue that appears in Cassio

And looks not on his evils. Is not this true?

Enter RODERIGO.

130 IAGO [aside] How now, Roderigo?
I pray you after the lieutenant—go! Exit

RODERIGO.

MONTANO And 'tis great pity that the noble Moor
Should hazard such a place as his own second
With one of an ingraft<sup>o</sup> infirmity.
It were an honest action to say so 135 To the Moor.

IAGO Not I, for this fair island.
I do love Cassio well and would do much
To cure him of this evil.

VOICES [within] Help, help!<sup>3</sup>

But hark, what noise?

Enter CASSIO, pursuing RODERIGO.

140 CASSIO 'Swounds, you rogue! you rascal!

MONTANO What's the matter, lieutenant?

CASSIO A knave teach me my duty? I'll beat the knave

into a twiggen<sup>o</sup> bottle.

RODERIGO Beat me?

145 CASSIO Dost thou prate, rogue? [Attacks
RODERIGO.]

MONTANO Nay, good lieutenant! I pray you, sir, hold your hand.

CASSIO Let me go, sir, or I'll knock you o'er the mazzard.<sup>o</sup>

MONTANO Come, come; you're drunk!

150 CASSIO Drunk? [CASSIO and
MONTANO fight.]

IAGO [aside to RODERIGO] Away, I say! Go out and cry a mutiny.

[Exit RODERIGO.]

Nay, good lieutenant! God's will, gentlemen!
Help ho! Lieutenant! Sir—Montano—Sir!
Help, masters! Here's a goodly watch indeed!

155

A bell rung.

Who's that which rings the bell? Diablo, <sup>o</sup> ho!
The town will rise. God's will, lieutenant, hold!
You'll be ashamed forever.

Enter OTHELLO and attendants.

OTHELLO What is the matter here?

160

MONTANO 'Swounds, I bleed still; I am hurt to th'death.

[Attacks CASSIO] He dies.

OTHELLO Hold, for your lives!

IAGO Hold, ho! Lieutenant—Sir—Montano—
gentlemen!

Have you forgot all place of sense and duty?
Hold! The general speaks to you. Hold, for shame!

165

OTHELLO Why, how now, ho? From whence ariseth
this?

Are we turned Turks? and to ourselves do that
Which heaven hath forbid the Ottomites?<sup>o</sup>
For Christian shame, put by this barbarous brawl!

170

He that stirs next, to carve for his own rage,<sup>o</sup>
Holds his soul light; he dies upon his motion.
Silence that dreadful bell—it frights the isle
From her propriety. What is the matter, masters?
Honest Iago, that looks dead with grieving,
Speak. Who began this? On thy love, I charge thee.

175

IAGO I do not know. Friends all, but now, even now,
In quarter<sup>o</sup> and in terms like bride and groom
Divesting them<sup>o</sup> for bed; and then, but now,
As if some planet<sup>o</sup> had unwitted men,
Swords out and tilting one at other's breasts
180 In opposition bloody. I cannot speak
Any beginning to this peevish odds,<sup>o</sup>

And would in action glorious I had lost
 Those legs that brought me to a part of it.
 185 OTHELLO How comes it, Michael, you are thus forgot?
 CASSIO I pray you pardon me; I cannot speak.
 OTHELLO Worthy Montano, you were wont<sup>o</sup> to be civil;
 The gravity and stillness of your youth
 The world hath noted, and your name is great
 In mouths of wisest censure.<sup>o</sup> What's the matter, 190 That you unlace your reputation thus
 And spend your rich opinion<sup>o</sup> for the name
 Of a night brawler? Give me answer to it.
 MONTANO Worthy Othello, I am hurt to danger.
 Your officer, Iago, can inform you—195 While I spare speech, which something now offends me<sup>4</sup>—
 Of all that I do know; nor know I aught
 By me that's said or done amiss this night,
 Unless self-charity<sup>o</sup> be sometimes a vice,
 And to defend ourselves it be a sin
 200 When violence assails us.
 OTHELLO Now, by heaven,
 My blood begins my safer guides to rule,
 And passion, having my best judgment collied,<sup>o</sup>
 Assays<sup>o</sup> to lead the way. 'Swounds, if I stir
 Or do but lift this arm, the best of you 205 Shall sink in my rebuke. Give me to know
 How this foul rout began, who set it on;
 And he that is approved<sup>o</sup> in this offense,
 Though he had twinned with me, both at a birth,
 Shall lose me. What! in a town of war,
 210 Yet<sup>o</sup> wild, the people's hearts brimful of fear,
 To manage<sup>o</sup> private and domestic quarrel?
 In night, and on the court and guard of safety?<sup>5</sup>

'Tis monstrous. Iago, who began't?
MONTANO If partially affined,<sup>o</sup> or leagued in office,
215 Thou dost deliver more or less than truth,
Thou art no soldier.
IAGO Touch me not so near.
I had rather have this tongue cut from my mouth
Than it should do offense to Michael Cassio;
Yet I persuade myself to speak the truth
220 Shall nothing wrong him. This it is, general:
Montano and myself being in speech,
There comes a fellow crying out for help,
And Cassio following him with determined sword
To execute upon<sup>o</sup> him. Sir, this gentleman 225 Steps in to Cassio and entreats his pause;
Myself the crying fellow did pursue,
Lest by his clamor—as it so fell out—
The town might fall in fright. He, swift of foot, Outran my purpose; and I returned, the rather 230 For that I heard the clink and fall of swords
And Cassio high in oath, which till tonight
I ne'er might say before. When I came back—
For this was brief—I found them close together
At blow and thrust, even as again they were 235 When yourself did part them.
More of this matter cannot I report.
But men are men: the best sometimes forget.
Though Cassio did some little wrong to him,
As men in rage strike those that wish them best,
240 Yet surely Cassio, I believe, received
From him that fled some strange indignity
Which patience could not pass.<sup>o</sup>
OTHELLO I know, Iago,
Thy honesty and love doth mince<sup>o</sup> this matter,
Making it light to Cassio. Cassio, I love thee,
245 But never more be officer of mine.—
Enter DESDEMONA, attended.

Look if my gentle love be not raised up!—
I'll make thee an example.

DESDEMONA What is the matter, dear?

OTHELLO All's well,
sweeting;

250 Come away to bed. [To MONTANO] Sir, for your hurts
Myself will be your surgeon. Lead him off.

[Exeunt attendants with MONTANO.]

Iago, look with care about the town,
And silence those whom this vile brawl distracted.
Come, Desdemona; 'tis the soldier's life
To have their balmy slumbers waked with strife.

255 Exeunt [OTHELLO the] Moor, DESDEMONA, and attendants.

IAGO What, are you hurt, lieutenant?

CASSIO Ay, past all surgery.

IAGO Marry, God forbid!

CASSIO Reputation, reputation, reputation! O, I have lost

260 my reputation! I have lost the immortal part of myself, and what remains is bestial. My reputation, Iago, my reputation!

IAGO As I am an honest man, I had thought you had received some bodily wound; there is more sense in
that than in reputation. Reputation is an idle and most false

265 imposition, <sup>o</sup> oft got without merit and lost without deserving. You have lost no reputation at all, unless
you repute yourself such a loser. What, man! there are more ways to recover the general again. You are but now cast in his mood, a punishment more in policy<sup>6</sup> than in malice,

270 even so as one would beat his offenseless dog to affright
an imperious lion. Sue to<sup>o</sup> him again, and he's yours.
CASSIO I will rather sue to be despised than to deceive
so good a commander with so slight, so drunken,
and so indiscreet an officer. Drunk? And speak parrot?<sup>o</sup> And squabble? Swagger? Swear? And discourse fustian<sup>o</sup> 275 with one's own shadow? O, thou invisible spirit of wine! if thou hast no name to be known by, let us call thee
devil.
IAGO What was he that you followed with your sword?
What had he done to you?
CASSIO I know not.
280 IAGO Is't possible?
CASSIO I remember a mass of things, but nothing distinctly; a quarrel, but nothing wherefore.<sup>o</sup> O God!
that men should put an enemy in their mouths to steal away
285 their brains! that we should with joy, pleasance, revel,
and applause transform ourselves into beasts!
IAGO Why, but you are now well enough. How came
you
thus recovered?
CASSIO It hath pleased the devil drunkenness to give 290 place to the devil wrath; one unperfectness shows
me
another, to make me frankly despise myself.

IAGO Come, you are too severe a moraler. As the time,
the place, and the condition of this country stands, I could heartily wish this had not befallen; but since it is
as it is, mend it for your own good.

295 CASSIO I will ask him for my place again. He shall tell me
I am a drunkard. Had I as many mouths as Hydra,<sup>7</sup> such an answer would stop them all. To be now a sensible man, by and by a fool, and presently a beast!—O,
strange!
Every inordinate cup is unblessed, and the ingredient 300 is a devil.

IAGO Come, come; good wine is a good familiar creature
if it be well used. Exclaim no more against it. And,
good
lieutenant, I think you think I love you.

CASSIO I have well approved<sup>o</sup> it, sir—I drunk?

305 IAGO You or any man living may be drunk at a time,
man.
I tell you what you shall do. Our general's wife is now
the general. I may say so in this respect, for that he hath devoted and given up himself to the contemplation, mark, and devotement<sup>o</sup> of her parts<sup>8</sup> and graces.

310 Confess yourself freely to her; importune her help to put you
in your place again. She is of so free,<sup>o</sup> so kind, so apt, so blessed a disposition, she holds it a vice in her goodness not to do more than she is requested. This broken joint 315 between you and her husband entreat her to splinter,<sup>9</sup> and my fortunes against any lay<sup>o</sup> worth naming, this crack of your love shall grow stronger than it was before.

 CASSIO You advise me well.
 IAGO I protest,<sup>o</sup> in the sincerity of love and honest kindness.
 320 CASSIO I think it freely; and betimes<sup>o</sup> in the morning
 I will beseech the virtuous Desdemona to undertake
 for me. I am desperate of my fortunes if they check<sup>o</sup>
 me.
 IAGO You are in the right. Good night, lieutenant; I must
 to the watch.
 325 CASSIO Good night, honest Iago. Exit
 CASSIO.
 IAGO And what's he then that says I play the villain,
 When this advice is free I give and honest,
 Probal<sup>o</sup> to thinking, and indeed the course
 To win the Moor again? For 'tis most easy
 330 Th'inclining<sup>o</sup> Desdemona to subdue
 In any honest suit: she's framed as fruitful<sup>o</sup>
 As the free elements; and then for her
 To win the Moor, were't to renounce his baptism,
 All seals and symbols of redeemed sin,
 335 His soul is so enfettered to her love
 That she may make, unmake, do what she list,
 Even as her appetite<sup>o</sup> shall play the god

With his weak function.° How am I then a villain
To counsel Cassio to this parallel° course
340 Directly to his good? Divinity° of hell!
When devils will the blackest sins put on,
They do suggest at first with heavenly shows,
As I do now. For whiles this honest fool
Plies Desdemona to repair his fortune,
345 And she for him pleads strongly to the Moor,
I'll pour this pestilence into his ear:
That she repeals him° for her body's lust,
And by how much she strives to do him good
She shall undo her credit with the Moor.
350 So will I turn her virtue into pitch,<sup>1</sup>
And out of her own goodness make the net
That shall enmesh them all.

Enter RODERIGO.

How now, Roderigo?
355 RODERIGO I do follow here in the chase, not like a hound that hunts, but one that fills up the cry.° My money
is almost spent; I have been tonight exceedingly well cudgeled; and I think the issue will be I shall have so much° experience for my pains, and so, with no money

at all and a little more wit, return again to Venice.
360 IAGO How poor are they that have not patience!
What wound did ever heal but by degrees?
Thou know'st we work by wit and not by witchcraft,
And wit depends on dilatory° time.
Does't not go well? Cassio hath beaten thee,
365 And thou by that small hurt hath cashiered° Cassio.
Though other things grow fair against the sun,
Yet fruits that blossom first will first be ripe.<sup>2</sup>
Content thyself awhile. By the Mass,° 'tis morning!

370 Pleasure and action make the hours seem short.
 Retire thee; go where thou art billeted.
 Away! I say; thou shalt know more hereafter.
 Nay, get thee gone! Exit
 RODERIGO.

Two things are to be done:
 My wife must move for Cassio to her mistress—
 I'll set her on—

375 Myself a while to draw the Moor apart
 And bring him jump<sup>o</sup> when he may Cassio find Soliciting his wife. Ay, that's the way!
 Dull not device by coldness and delay.<sup>3</sup>
Exit.

Endnotes

- Note 2.3: Location: The citadel at Cyprus.Return to reference 2.3
- Note 1: That is, we haven't yet consummated our marriage.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Would like to drink.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Disorder.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: "Caroused . . . watch": consumed drink to the bottom of the tankard; and he's assigned guard duty.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Who are touchy about their honor.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: If events turn out as I hope.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Most adept at drinking.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Match your drinking.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: A coin (worth 60 pence).Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Referring to the doctrine of predestination, the belief held by Calvinist Protestants that some souls are destined from all eternity to be saved and others to be damned.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: He'll stay up twice around the clock.Return to reference 2

- Note 3: The offstage shouts for help are only in Q.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Somewhat now pains me.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: And at the place where safety and security are at stake (on the night watch).Return to reference 5
- Note 6: “Cast . . . policy”: dismissed in anger—a matter of policy (of public example).Return to reference 6
- Note 7: A mythical serpent with many heads, who grew two more when one was cut off.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Qualities.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Heal with a splint.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Black, sticky substance used as a snare.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: That is, although others may appear to be prospering, your plan will be successful soonest because it was set in motion first.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Don’t let sluggishness and slowness to act weaken the plot.Return to reference 3

Notes

- °: self-restraintReturn to reference °
- °: pass the limits ofReturn to reference °
- °: dismissedReturn to reference °
- °: (military) callReturn to reference °
- °: a call (to arms)Return to reference °
- °: two quarts Return to reference °
- °: pairReturn to reference °
- °: well dilutedReturn to reference °
- °: I don’t like itReturn to reference °
- °: proudReturn to reference °
- °: typical residentsReturn to reference °
- °: currentReturn to reference °
- °: full draftReturn to reference °
- °: drinking vesselReturn to reference °

- °: hangingReturn to reference °
- °: German Return to reference °
- °: tankardReturn to reference °
- °: loutReturn to reference °
- °: ostentatious clothingReturn to reference °
- °: rankReturn to reference °
- °: of equal sizeReturn to reference °
- °: ingrainedReturn to reference °
- °: wicker-casedReturn to reference °
- °: headReturn to reference °
- °: the devilReturn to reference °
- °: (by raising a storm)Return to reference °
- °: draw a sword in angerReturn to reference °
- °: under controlReturn to reference °
- °: getting undressedReturn to reference °
- °: astrological influenceReturn to reference °
- °: silly quarrelReturn to reference °
- °: were accustomedReturn to reference °
- °: judgmentReturn to reference °
- °: reputationReturn to reference °
- °: care of oneselfReturn to reference °
- °: darkenedReturn to reference °
- °: triesReturn to reference °
- °: proven guiltyReturn to reference °
- °: stillReturn to reference °
- °: carry onReturn to reference °
- °: biased (for Cassio)Return to reference °
- °: to attackReturn to reference °
- °: let passReturn to reference °
- °: minimizeReturn to reference °
- °: artificial notion Return to reference °
- °: petitionReturn to reference °
- °: rant on Return to reference °
- °: nonsenseReturn to reference °
- °: but not whyReturn to reference °
- °: testedReturn to reference °

- °: observation Return to reference °
- °: generous Return to reference °
- °: wager Return to reference °
- °: insist Return to reference °
- °: early Return to reference °
- °: stop Return to reference °
- °: wise Return to reference °
- °: well-disposed Return to reference °
- °: generous Return to reference °
- °: wishes Return to reference °
- °: faculties Return to reference °
- °: suitable Return to reference °
- °: theology Return to reference °
- °: appeals for him Return to reference °
- °: a pack follower Return to reference °
- °: only this much Return to reference °
- °: gradually unfolding Return to reference °
- °: dismissed Return to reference °
- °: (a mild oath) Return to reference °
- °: exactly Return to reference °

3.1

Enter CASSIO, MUSICIANS, and CLOWN.

CASSIO Masters, play here—I will content<sup>o</sup> your pains—

Something that's brief; and bid "Good morrow, general."

CLOWN Why, masters, have your instruments been in Naples, that they speak i'th' nose thus?<sup>1</sup>

5 MUSICIAN How, sir? how?

CLOWN Are these, I pray you, wind instruments?<sup>2</sup>

MUSICIAN Ay, marry, are they, sir.

CLOWN O, thereby hangs a tail!

MUSICIAN Whereby hangs a tale, sir?

10 CLOWN Marry, sir, by many a wind instrument that I know.

But, masters, here's money for you; and the general so likes your music that he desires you for love's sake to make no more noise with it.

MUSICIAN Well, sir, we will not.

15 CLOWN If you have any music that may not<sup>o</sup> be heard, to't again. But, as they say, to hear music the general does not greatly care.

MUSICIAN We have none such, sir.

CLOWN Then put up your pipes in your bag, for I'll away.

20 Go! Vanish into air, away! Exeunt

MUSICIANS.

CASSIO Dost thou hear, mine honest friend?

CLOWN No, I hear not your honest friend: I hear you.

CASSIO Prithee keep up thy quillets.<sup>3</sup> There's a poor piece of gold for thee. If the gentlewoman that attends the general be stirring, tell her there's one Cassio
25 entreats

her a little favor of speech. Wilt thou do this?

CLOWN She is stirring, sir. If she will stir hither, I shall seem<sup>o</sup> to notify unto her.

CASSIO Do, good my friend.

Exit

CLOWN.

Enter IAGO In happy time,<sup>o</sup> Iago.

IAGO You have not been abed then?

30

CASSIO Why, no; the day had broke before we parted.

I have made bold, Iago, to send in to your wife.

My suit to her is that she will to virtuous Desdemona Procure me some access.

IAGO I'll send her to you presently;<sup>o</sup>

35

And I'll devise a mean to draw the Moor Out of the way, that your converse and business May be more free.

CASSIO I humbly thank you for't.

Exit

[IAGO].

I never knew A Florentine more kind and honest.

Enter EMILIA

40

EMILIA Good morrow, good lieutenant. I am sorry For your displeasure, but all will sure<sup>o</sup> be well. The general and his wife are talking of it, And she speaks for you stoutly. The Moor replies That he you hurt is of great fame in Cyprus

45       And great affinity,<sup>o</sup> and that in wholesome wisdom
           He might not but refuse you; but he protests he loves you
           And needs no other suitor but his likings
           To bring you in again.

          CASSIO                               Yet I beseech you,
           If you think fit, or that it may be done,
           Give me advantage of some brief discourse
 50       With Desdemon alone.

          EMILIA                               Pray you come in.
           I will bestow you where you shall have time
           To speak your bosom<sup>o</sup> freely.

          CASSIO                               I am much bound to
           you.
           Exeunt.

Endnotes

- Note 3.1: Location: Outside Othello and Desdemona's room.Return to reference 3.1
- Note 1: That they sound so nasal; perhaps a reference to venereal disease, often associated with Naples, or a phallic or anal joke.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: The exchange that follows depends on the connections among wind instruments, flatulence, and "tale/tail."Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Pack up your puns.Return to reference 3

Notes

- °: rewardReturn to reference °
- °: cannotReturn to reference °
- °: arrangeReturn to reference °
- °: well metReturn to reference °
- °: immediatelyReturn to reference °

- °: surely Return to reference °
- °: well connected Return to reference °
- °: heart Return to reference °

3.2

Enter OTHELLO, IAGO, and GENTLEMEN

OTHELLO These letters give, Iago, to the pilot,
And by him do my duties<sup>o</sup> to the senate.
That done, I will be walking on the works;<sup>o</sup>
Repair<sup>o</sup> there to me.

IAGO Well, my good lord; I'll do't.

5

OTHELLO This fortification, gentlemen, shall we see't?

GENTLEMAN We'll wait upon your lordship.

Exeunt.

Endnotes

- Note 3.2: Location: The citadel.Return to reference 3.2

Notes

- <sup>o</sup>: send my respectsReturn to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: fortificationsReturn to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: comeReturn to reference <sup>o</sup>

3.3

Enter DESDEMONA, CASSIO, and EMILIA.

DESDEMONA Be thou assured, good Cassio, I will do
All my abilities in thy behalf.

EMILIA Good madam, do. I warrant it grieves my husband

As if the cause were his.

5 DESDEMONA O, that's an honest fellow. Do not doubt, Cassio,

But I will have my lord and you again
As friendly as you were.

CASSIO Bounteous madam,
Whatever shall become of Michael Cassio,
He's never anything but your true servant.

10 DESDEMONA I know't; I thank you. You do love my lord;

You have known him long; and be you well assured
He shall in strangeness stand no farther off
Than in a politic distance.<sup>1</sup>

CASSIO Ay, but, lady,
That policy may either last so long,
Or feed upon such nice and wat'rish diet,
15 Or breed itself so out of circumstances,<sup>2</sup>
That—I being absent, and my place supplied<sup>o</sup>—
My general will forget my love and service.

DESDEMONA Do not doubt<sup>o</sup> that. Before Emilia here,
I give thee warrant<sup>o</sup> of thy place. Assure thee,
20 If I do vow a friendship, I'll perform it
To the last article. My lord shall never rest:
I'll watch him tame and talk him out of patience;<sup>3</sup>
His bed shall seem a school, his board a shift;<sup>o</sup>
I'll intermingle everything he does
25 With Cassio's suit. Therefore be merry, Cassio,

For thy solicitor<sup>o</sup> shall rather die
Than give thy cause away.<sub>o</sub>

Enter OTHELLO and IAGO.

EMILIA Madam, here comes my lord.

CASSIO Madam, I'll take my leave.

30

DESDEMONA Why, stay and hear me speak.

CASSIO Madam, not now: I am very ill at ease,
Unfit for mine own purposes.

DESDEMONA Well, do your discretion. Exit

CASSIO.

IAGO Ha! I like not that.

OTHELLO What dost thou say?

35

IAGO Nothing, my lord; or if . . . I know not what.

OTHELLO Was not that Cassio parted from my wife?

IAGO Cassio, my lord? No, sure, I cannot think it
That he would steal away so guilty-like,
Seeing your coming.

OTHELLO I do believe 'twas he.

40

DESDEMONA How now, my lord?

I have been talking with a suitor here,
A man that languishes in your displeasure.

OTHELLO Who is't you mean?

DESDEMONA Why, your lieutenant, Cassio. Good my 45 lord,

If I have any grace or power to move you,
His present reconciliation take;<sup>o</sup>

For if he be not one that truly loves you,
That errs in ignorance and not in cunning,<sup>o</sup>

I have no judgment in an honest face.

50

I prithee call him back.

OTHELLO Went he hence now?

DESDEMONA Yes, faith; so humbled
That he hath left part of his grief with me
To suffer with him. Good love, call him back.

OTHELLO Not now, sweet Desdemon; some other
55 time.

DESDEMONA But shall't be shortly?
 OTHELLO The sooner,
 sweet, for you.
 DESDEMONA Shall't be tonight, at supper?
 OTHELLO No, not
 tonight.
 DESDEMONA Tomorrow dinner<sup>o</sup> then?
 OTHELLO I shall not dine at home;
 I meet the captains at the citadel.
 DESDEMONA Why then, tomorrow night, on Tuesday
 60 morn,
 On Tuesday noon or night, on Wednesday morn.
 I prithee name the time, but let it not Exceed three days. In faith, he's penitent;
 And yet his trespass, in our common reason<sup>o</sup>—
 65 Save that, they say, the wars must make example
 Out of her<sup>o</sup> best—is not almost a fault
 T'incur a private check.<sup>4</sup> When shall he come?
 Tell me, Othello. I wonder in my soul
 What you would ask me that I should deny,
 Or stand so mamm'ring<sup>o</sup> on? What? Michael Cassio, 70 That came a-wooing with you? and so many a time,
 When I have spoke of you dispraisingly,
 Hath ta'en your part—to have so much to do
 To bring him in?<sup>o</sup> By'r Lady, I could do much<sup>5</sup>— OTHELLO Prithee, no more. Let him come when he 75 will:
 I will deny thee nothing.
 DESDEMONA Why, this is not a boon;
 'Tis as I should entreat you wear your gloves,
 Or feed on nourishing dishes, or keep you warm,
 Or sue to you to do a peculiar<sup>o</sup> profit
 To your own person. Nay, when I have a suit
 80 Wherein I mean to touch your love indeed,

It shall be full of poise<sup>o</sup> and difficult weight,
And fearful to be granted.

OTHELLO I will deny thee nothing.
Whereon I do beseech thee grant me this,
To leave me but a little to myself.

85 DESDEMONA Shall I deny you? No. Farewell, my lord.

OTHELLO Farewell, my Desdemona; I'll come to thee straight.<sup>o</sup>

DESDEMONA Emilia, come. [to OTHELLO] Be as your fancies teach<sup>o</sup> you.

Whate'er you be, I am obedient.

Exeunt DESDEMONA and EMILIA.

90 OTHELLO Excellent wretch!<sup>o</sup> Perdition catch my soul
But I do love thee! and when I love thee not,
Chaos is come again.

IAGO My noble lord . . .

OTHELLO What dost thou say, Iago?

IAGO Did Michael Cassio, when you wooed my lady,
Know of your love?

95 OTHELLO He did, from first to last.
Why dost thou ask?

IAGO But for a satisfaction of my thought,
No further harm.

OTHELLO Why of thy thought, Iago?

IAGO I did not think he had been acquainted with her.

100 OTHELLO O yes, and went between us very oft.

IAGO Indeed?

OTHELLO Indeed? Ay, indeed. Discern'st thou aught in that?

Is he not honest?

IAGO Honest, my lord?

105 OTHELLO Honest? Ay, honest.

IAGO My lord, for aught I know.

OTHELLO What dost thou think?

IAGO Think, my lord?

OTHELLO "Think, my lord?" By heaven, thou echo'st
me
As if there were some monster in thy thought 110 Too hideous to be shown. Thou dost mean something:
I heard thee say even now thou lik'st not that,
When Cassio left my wife. What didst not like?
And when I told thee he was of my counsel,o
Of my whole course of wooing, thou cried'st
115 "Indeed?"
And didst contract and purse thy brow together
As if thou then hadst shut up in thy brain
Some horrible conceit.o If thou dost love me,
Show me thy thought.
IAGO My lord, you know I love you.
OTHELLO I think thou dost;
120 And foro I know thou'rt full of love and honesty,
And weigh'st thy words before thou giv'st them breath,
Therefore these stopso of thine fright me the more:
For such things in a false disloyal knave
Are tricks of custom;o but in a man that's just, 125 They're close dilations,<sup>6</sup> working from the heart
That passion cannot rule.o
IAGO For Michael Cassio,
I dare be sworn I think that he is honest.
OTHELLO I think so too.
IAGO Men should be what they seem,
Or those that be not, would they might seem none.<sup>7</sup> 130 OTHELLO Certain, men should be what they seem.
IAGO Why then, I think Cassio's an honest man.
OTHELLO Nay, yet there's more in this.
I prithee speak to me as to thy thinkings,

135

But he that filches from me my good name
Robs me of that which not enriches him
And makes me poor indeed.

OTHELLO                      By heaven, I'll know thy thoughts!

165 IAGO    You cannot, if my heart were in your hand,
Nor shall not, whilst 'tis in my custody.

OTHELLO    Ha?

IAGO                      O, beware, my lord, of jealousy!
It is the green-eyed monster, which doth mock
The meat it feeds on.<sup>1</sup> That cuckold lives in bliss
Who, certain of his fate, loves not his wronger;<sup>2</sup>
170 But O, what damnèd minutes tells he o'er
Who dotes yet doubts, suspects yet strongly loves!

OTHELLO    O misery!

IAGO    Poor and content is rich, and rich enough,
But riches fineless<sup>o</sup> is as poor as winter
175 To him that ever fears he shall be poor.
Good God, the souls of all my tribe defend
From jealousy!

OTHELLO                      Why, why is this?
Think'st thou I'd make a life of jealousy,
To follow still the changes of the moon<sup>o</sup>
180 With fresh suspicions? No! To be once in doubt
Is once to be resolved.<sup>o</sup> Exchange me for a goat
When I shall turn the business of my soul
To such exsufflicate and blowed<sup>o</sup> surmises,
Matching thy inference. 'Tis not to make me jealous
185 To say my wife is fair, feeds well, loves company,
Is free of speech, sings, plays, and dances:
Where virtue is, these are more virtuous.
Nor from mine own weak merits will I draw
The smallest fear or doubt of her revolt,<sup>o</sup>
190 For she had eyes and chose me. No, Iago, I'll see before I doubt; when I doubt, prove;

And on the proof there is no more but this:
 Away at once with love or jealousy!
 195 IAGO I am glad of this; for now I shall have reason
 To show the love and duty that I bear you
 With franker spirit. Therefore, as I am bound,
 Receive it from me. I speak not yet of proof.
 Look to your wife; observe her well with Cassio;
 200 Wear your eyes thus: not jealous, nor secure.
 I would not have your free and noble nature
 Out of self-bounty be abused.<sup>3</sup> Look to't.
 I know our country disposition well:
 In Venice they do let God see the pranks 205 They dare not show their husbands; their best conscience
 Is not to leave't undone, but keep't unknown.
 OTHELLO Dost thou say so?
 IAGO She did deceive her father, marrying you,
 And when she seemed to shake, and fear your looks,
 She loved them most.
 OTHELLO And so she did.
 210 IAGO Why, go to<sup>o</sup>
 then.
 She that, so young, could give out such a seeming
 To seel her father's eyes up close as oak,<sup>4</sup>
 He thought 'twas witchcraft . . . ; but I am much to blame.
 I humbly do beseech you of your pardon
 For too much loving you.
 215 OTHELLO I am bound to thee
 forever.
 IAGO I see this hath a little dashed your spirits.
 OTHELLO Not a jot, not a jot.
 IAGO I'faith, I fear it has.
 I hope you will consider what is spoke
 Comes from my love. But I do see you're moved.

220 I am to pray you not to strain my speech
 To grosser issues<sup>o</sup> nor to larger reach
 Than to suspicion.
 OTHELLO I will not.
 IAGO Should you do so, my lord,
 My speech should fall into such vile success
 Which my thoughts aimed not. Cassio's my worthy 225 friend—
 My lord, I see you're moved.
 OTHELLO No, not much moved;
 I do not think but Desdemona's honest.
 IAGO Long live she so! and long live you to think
 so!
 OTHELLO And yet how nature, erring from itself—
 IAGO Ay, there's the point! as to be bold with you,
 230 Not to affect<sup>o</sup> many proposed matches
 Of her own clime, complexion, and degree,
 Whereto we see in all things nature tends—
 Foh! one may smell in such a will most rank,
 Foul disproportions, thoughts unnatural.
 235 But, pardon me, I do not in position<sup>o</sup>
 Distinctly speak of her, though I may fear
 Her will,<sup>o</sup> recoiling<sup>o</sup> to her better judgment,
 May fall to match you with her country forms,<sup>5</sup>
 And happily<sup>o</sup> repent.
 OTHELLO Farewell, farewell.
 240 If more thou dost perceive, let me know more.
 Set on thy wife to observe. Leave me, Iago.
 IAGO [going] My lord, I take my leave.
 OTHELLO Why did I marry? This honest creature, doubtless,
 Sees and knows more, much more, than he unfolds.
 245 IAGO [returning] My lord, I would I might entreat
 your honor

To scan this thing no farther; leave it to time.
Although 'tis fit that Cassio have his place
(For sure he fills it up with great ability),
Yet if you please to hold him off awhile,
250 You shall by that perceive him and his means.<sup>6</sup>
Note if your lady strain his entertainment<sup>o</sup>
With any strong or vehement importunity;
Much will be seen in that. In the meantime
Let me be thought too busy<sup>o</sup> in my fears 255 (As worthy cause I have to fear I am),
And hold her free,<sup>o</sup> I do beseech your honor.
OTHELLO Fear not my government.<sup>o</sup>
IAGO I once more take my leave.
Exit.
OTHELLO This fellow's of exceeding honesty,
260 And knows all qualities<sup>o</sup> with a learned spirit
Of human dealings. If I do prove her haggard,<sup>o</sup>
Though that her jesses were my dear heartstrings,
I'd whistle her off and let her down the wind
To prey at fortune.<sup>7</sup> Haply for<sup>o</sup> I am black, 265 And have not those soft parts of conversation<sup>o</sup>
That chamberers<sup>o</sup> have, or for I am declined
Into the vale of years—yet that's not much—
She's gone, I am abused,<sup>o</sup> and my relief
Must be to loathe her. O curse of marriage!
270 That we can call these delicate creatures ours
And not their appetites! I had rather be a toad
And live upon the vapor of a dungeon
Than keep a corner in the thing I love
For others' uses. Yet 'tis the plague of great ones:
275 Prerogatives<sup>o</sup> are they less than the base;<sup>o</sup>
'Tis destiny unshunnable, like death;
Even then this forkèd plague is fated to us
When we do quicken.<sup>8</sup>

Enter DESDEMONA and EMILIA.

Look where she comes!
 If she be false, O then heaven mocks itself;
 280 I'll not believe't.

DESDEMONA How now, my dear Othello?
 Your dinner, and the generous<sup>o</sup> islanders
 By you invited, do attend<sup>o</sup> your presence.

OTHELLO I am to blame.

DESDEMONA Why do you speak so faintly?
 Are you not well?

285 OTHELLO I have a pain upon my forehead, here.<sup>o</sup>

DESDEMONA Faith, that's with watching;<sup>o</sup> 'twill away
 again.
 Let me but bind it hard, within this hour
 It will be well.

OTHELLO Your napkin<sup>o</sup> is too little;
 [The handkerchief is dropped.]
 Let it alone. Come, I'll go in with you.

290 DESDEMONA I am very sorry that you are not well.
Exeunt OTHELLO and DESDEMONA.

EMILIA I am glad I have found this napkin;
 This was her first remembrance<sup>o</sup> from the Moor.
 My wayward husband hath a hundred times
 Wooed me to steal it. But she so loves the token 295 (For he conjured her<sup>o</sup> she should ever keep it)
 That she reserves it evermore about her
 To kiss and talk to. I'll have the work ta'en out,<sup>o</sup>
 And giv't Iago; what he will do with it
 Heaven knows, not I:

300 I nothing<sup>o</sup> but to please his fantasy.
Enter IAGO.

IAGO How now? What do you here alone?

EMILIA Do not you chide; I have a thing for you.

IAGO You have a thing for me? It is a common thing<sup>9</sup>—

305 EMILIA Ha?
 IAGO To have a foolish wife.
 EMILIA O, is that all? What will you give me now
 For that same handkerchief?
 IAGO What handkerchief?
 EMILIA What handkerchief?
 Why, that the Moor first gave to Desdemona,
 310 That which so often you did bid me steal.
 IAGO Hast stolen it from her?
 EMILIA No, faith; she let it drop by negligence,
 And to th'advantage<sup>o</sup> I, being here, took't up.
 Look, here 'tis.
 IAGO A good wench! Give it me.
 315 EMILIA What will you do with't, that you have been so earnest
 To have me filch it?
 IAGO [taking it] Why, what is that to you?
 EMILIA If it be not for some purpose of import,
 Giv't me again. Poor lady, she'll run mad
 When she shall lack it.
 IAGO Be not acknown on't;<sup>o</sup>
 320 I have use for it. Go—leave me! Exit
 EMILIA.
 I will in Cassio's lodging lose this napkin
 And let him find it. Trifles light as air
 Are to the jealous confirmations strong
 As proofs of holy writ. This may do something.
 325 The Moor already changes with my poison:
 Dangerous conceits<sup>o</sup> are in their natures poisons,
 Which at the first are scarce found to distaste,
 But with a little act<sup>o</sup> upon the blood
 Burn like the mines of sulphur.<sup>1</sup>
Enter OTHELLO. I did say so—330 Look where he comes! Not poppy nor mandragora<sup>2</sup>
 Nor all the drowsy syrups of the world

Shall ever medicine thee to that sweet sleep
Which thou owedst<sup>o</sup> yesterday.

OTHELLO Ha! ha! false to me?

IAGO Why, how now, general? No more of that!

335 OTHELLO Avaunt! be gone! Thou hast set me on the rack.

I swear 'tis better to be much abused<sup>o</sup>
Than but to know't a little.

IAGO How now, my lord?

OTHELLO What sense had I of her stol'n hours of lust?

I saw't not, thought it not; it harmed not me;
340 I slept the next night well, fed well, was free and merry;

I found not Cassio's kisses on her lips.

He that is robbed, not wanting<sup>o</sup> what is stol'n,
Let him not know't, and he's not robbed at all.

IAGO I am sorry to hear this.

345 OTHELLO I had been happy if the general camp,
Pioneers<sup>o</sup> and all, had tasted her sweet body,
So<sup>o</sup> I had nothing known. O, now forever

Farewell the tranquil mind! farewell content!
Farewell the plumèd troops and the big wars
350 That makes ambition virtue! O, farewell!

Farewell the neighing steed and the shrill trump,<sup>o</sup>
The spirit-stirring drum, th'ear-piercing fife,
The royal banner and all quality,<sup>o</sup>

Pride,<sup>o</sup> pomp, and circumstance<sup>o</sup> of glorious war!
355 And O you mortal engines<sup>o</sup> whose rude throats
Th'immortal Jove's dread clamors<sup>o</sup> counterfeit, Farewell! Othello's occupation's gone!

IAGO Is't possible, my lord?

360 OTHELLO [grabs IAGO by the throat] Villain, be sure thou prove my love a whore!

Be sure of it, give me the ocular proof,
Or by the worth of mine eternal soul,

Thou hadst been better have been born a dog
Than answer my waked wrath.

IAGO Is't come to this?

365 OTHELLO Make me to see't, or at the least so prove
it

That the probation<sup>o</sup> bear no hinge nor loop
To hang a doubt on, or woe upon thy life!

IAGO My noble lord—

370 OTHELLO If thou dost slander her and torture me,
Never pray more; abandon all remorse;
On horror's head horrors accumulate;
Do deeds to make heaven weep, all earth amazed;
For nothing canst thou to damnation add
Greater than that.

IAGO O grace! O heaven forgive me!
Are you a man? Have you a soul? or sense?
375 God buy you; take mine office.<sup>3</sup> O wretched fool,<sup>o</sup>
That lov'st to make thine honesty a vice!<sup>o</sup>
O monstrous world! Take note, take note, O world:
To be direct and honest is not safe.

380 I thank you for this profit,<sup>o</sup> and from hence
I'll love no friend, sith<sup>o</sup> love breeds such offense.

OTHELLO Nay, stay; thou shouldst be honest.

IAGO I should be wise; for honesty's a fool
And loses that<sup>o</sup> it works for.

385 OTHELLO By the world,<sup>4</sup>
I think my wife be honest, and think she is not;
I think that thou art just, and think thou art not.
I'll have some proof. My name, that was as fresh
As Dian's<sup>5</sup> visage, is now begrimed and black
As mine own face. If there be cords or knives,
Poison, or fire, or suffocating streams,
390 I'll not endure it. Would I were satisfied!

IAGO I see you are eaten up with passion;
I do repent me that I put it to you.

That gave thee to the Moor!"

OTHELLO O monstrous! monstrous!

IAGO Nay, this was but his dream.

OTHELLO But this denoted a foregone conclusion;
'Tis a shrewd doubt, though it be but a dream.<sup>8</sup>

430 IAGO And this may help to thicken other proofs
That do demonstrate thinly.

OTHELLO I'll tear her all to pieces!

IAGO Nay, yet be wise; yet we see nothing done;
She may be honest yet. Tell me but this:
Have you not sometimes seen a handkerchief
Spotted with strawberries in your wife's hand?

435 OTHELLO I gave her such a one; 'twas my first gift.

IAGO I know not that; but such a handkerchief—
I am sure it was your wife's—did I today
See Cassio wipe his beard with.

OTHELLO If it be that—

440 IAGO If it be that, or any that was hers,
It speaks against her with the other proofs.

OTHELLO O that the slave<sup>o</sup> had forty thousand lives!
One is too poor, too weak for my revenge.
Now do I see 'tis true. Look here, Iago:
All my fond love thus do I blow to heaven.
445 'Tis gone.

Arise, black vengeance, from the hollow hell!
Yield up, O love, thy crown and hearted throne<sup>o</sup>
To tyrannous hate! Swell, bosom, with thy fraught,<sup>o</sup>
For 'tis of aspics'<sup>o</sup> tongues!

IAGO Yet be content.

450 OTHELLO O, blood! blood! blood!

IAGO Patience, I say; your mind may change.

OTHELLO Never, Iago. Like to the Pontic Sea,<sup>o</sup>
Whose icy current and compulsive course

455 Ne'er keeps retiring ebb but keeps due on
To the Propontic and the Hellespont,<sup>9</sup>
Even so my bloody thoughts with violent pace
Shall ne'er look back, ne'er ebb to humble love,
Till that a capable<sup>o</sup> and wide revenge Swallow them up. OTHELLO
kneels.

460 Now, by yond marble heaven,
In the due reverence of a sacred vow,
I here engage my words.
IAGO Do not rise yet. IAGO
kneels.

Witness, you ever-burning lights above,
You elements that clip<sup>o</sup> us round about,
Witness that here Iago doth give up
465 The execution<sup>o</sup> of his wit, hands, heart,
To wronged Othello's service. Let him command,
And to obey shall be in me remorse,<sup>o</sup>
What bloody business ever.<sup>o</sup> [ They rise.]

OTHELLO I greet thy love,
Not with vain thanks but with acceptance bounteous,
470 And will upon the instant put thee to't.<sup>o</sup>
Within these three days let me hear thee say
That Cassio's not alive.

IAGO My friend is dead;
'Tis done at your request. But let her live.
OTHELLO Damn her, lewd minx!<sup>o</sup> O, damn her! damn 475 her!

Come, go with me apart; I will withdraw
To furnish me with some swift means of death
For the fair devil. Now art thou my lieutenant.

IAGO I am your own forever.
Exeunt.

Endnotes

- Note 3.3: Location: The citadel's garden.Return to reference 3.3
- Note 1: He will distance himself from you only as much as good diplomacy requires.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: "Or feed . . . circumstances": or persist based on such unimportant and poor justifications, or continue by chance.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: I'll keep him awake until he obeys me, and talk to him beyond his endurance.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Is barely worth even private criticism.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Do much to make you regret your reluctance (?).Return to reference 5
- Note 6: That is, involuntary revelations of interior, close-kept secrets.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: "Or . . . none": if only those who are not what they seem didn't seem to be what they are not.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: That is, I am not obligated to reveal my inner thoughts, something about which even slaves have a choice.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: "Uncleanly . . . lawful": illegitimate thoughts meet in court ("leets") from time to time (on "law-days") and debate (in court "sessions") with legitimate ones.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: That is, tortures, as it consumes, the heart of the jealous person.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Who, knowing it is his fate to be cuckolded, doesn't love his wife.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Be deceived on account of your own goodness.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Perhaps: to cover ("seel" means "to blind") her father's eyes as tightly as oak (a fine-grained wood).Return to reference 4
- Note 5: May happen to compare you with Venetian standards.Return to reference 5

- Note 6: Method (for restoring himself to favor).Return to reference 6
- Note 7: “Though . . . fortune”: even if what tied her (“jesses” are leg straps put on a hawk) were my own heartstrings, I’d set her loose downwind forever to hunt on her own.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: “Even . . . quicken”: the “plague” of horns (imagined to grow from the forehead of a cuckold) is our fate as soon as we live.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: It is a vagina (“thing”) available to all.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Pliny the Elder (23/24–79 C.E.) describes two islands of sulfur between mainland Italy and Sicily that were rumored to be always on fire.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: A sleep-inducing substance made from the mandrake root.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Good-bye, I resign my official position (ensign).Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Othello’s speech (lines 384–91) does not appear in Q.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Diana, goddess of chastity and of the (pale) moon. The Second Quarto (1630) replaces “My” (line 387) with “Her,” a plausible but arguably less powerful reading that lacks textual authority.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: As lecherous as wolves in heat.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: If inference and strong circumstantial evidence.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Q gives this line to Iago.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: The Propontic was the body of water bounded by the straits of Bosphorus and the Dardanelles (Hellespont), the latter strait leading to the Aegean.Return to reference 9

Notes

- °: filledReturn to reference °

- °: fearReturn to reference °
- °: assuranceReturn to reference °
- °: confessionalReturn to reference °
- °: advocateReturn to reference °
- °: upReturn to reference °
- °: accept him nowReturn to reference °
- °: not knowinglyReturn to reference °
- °: midday mealReturn to reference °
- °: normal judgmentReturn to reference °
- °: (war's)Return to reference °
- °: hesitatingReturn to reference °
- °: into favorReturn to reference °
- °: particularReturn to reference °
- °: balanced judgmentReturn to reference °
- °: immediatelyReturn to reference °
- °: as your whims leadReturn to reference °
- °: (affectionate)Return to reference °
- °: in my confidenceReturn to reference °
- °: thoughtReturn to reference °
- °: sinceReturn to reference °
- °: reluctancesReturn to reference °
- °: habitualReturn to reference °
- °: controlReturn to reference °
- °: (Othello)Return to reference °
- °: mistakenReturn to reference °
- °: imaginesReturn to reference °
- °: incoherentReturn to reference °
- °: boundlessReturn to reference °
- °: to renew endlesslyReturn to reference °
- °: to be finally settledReturn to reference °
- °: inflated and blown upReturn to reference °
- °: or fear of her betrayalReturn to reference °
- °: that's itReturn to reference °
- °: greater conclusionsReturn to reference °
- °: desireReturn to reference °
- °: argumentReturn to reference °

- °: desire Return to reference °
- °: submitting Return to reference °
- °: perhaps Return to reference °
- °: urge his reception Return to reference °
- °: meddlesome Return to reference °
- °: believe her innocent Return to reference °
- °: self-conduct Return to reference °
- °: (human) types Return to reference °
- °: wild (from falconry) Return to reference °
- °: perhaps because Return to reference °
- °: easy manners Return to reference °
- °: gallants Return to reference °
- °: deceived Return to reference °
- °: privileged Return to reference °
- °: lowborn Return to reference °
- °: noble Return to reference °
- °: wait for Return to reference °
- °: (from cuckold's horns) Return to reference °
- °: from lack of sleep Return to reference °
- °: handkerchief Return to reference °
- °: keepsake Return to reference °
- °: made her swear Return to reference °
- °: embroidery copied Return to reference °
- °: intend nothing Return to reference °
- °: taking the occasion Return to reference °
- °: don't let it be known Return to reference °
- °: ideas Return to reference °
- °: effect Return to reference °
- °: owned Return to reference °
- °: mistreated; deceived Return to reference °
- °: missing Return to reference °
- °: manual laborers Return to reference °
- °: if Return to reference °
- °: trumpet Return to reference °
- °: aspects Return to reference °
- °: magnificence Return to reference °

- °: ceremonyReturn to reference °
- °: deadly cannonsReturn to reference °
- °: thunderclapsReturn to reference °
- °: proofReturn to reference °
- °: (to himself)Return to reference °
- °: faultReturn to reference °
- °: profitable lessonReturn to reference °
- °: sinceReturn to reference °
- °: whatReturn to reference °
- °: observerReturn to reference °
- °: painfulReturn to reference °
- °: share a pillowReturn to reference °
- °: other Return to reference °
- °: own eyesReturn to reference °
- °: lustfulReturn to reference °
- °: sustainable; validReturn to reference °
- °: taskReturn to reference °
- °: prodded onReturn to reference °
- °: gripReturn to reference °
- °: an earlier eventReturn to reference °
- °: reasonable fearReturn to reference °
- °: (Cassio)Return to reference °
- °: rule of the heartReturn to reference °
- °: burdenReturn to reference °
- °: poisonous snakesReturn to reference °
- °: Black SeaReturn to reference °
- °: capaciousReturn to reference °
- °: embraceReturn to reference °
- °: commandReturn to reference °
- °: pity (for Othello)Return to reference °
- °: soeverReturn to reference °
- °: immediately test itReturn to reference °
- °: wantonReturn to reference °

3.4

Enter DESDEMONA, EMILIA, and CLOWN.

DESDEMONA Do you know, sirrah,<sup>1</sup> where Lieutenant Cassio lies?

CLOWN I dare not say he lies anywhere.

DESDEMONA Why, man?

5 CLOWN He's a soldier, and for me to say a soldier lies, 'tis stabbing.

DESDEMONA Go to; where lodges he?

CLOWN To tell you where he lodges is to tell you where I lie.

10 DESDEMONA Can anything be made of this?

CLOWN I know not where he lodges, and for me to devise a lodging and say he lies here or he lies there were to lie in mine own throat.<sup>o</sup>

DESDEMONA Can you inquire him out and be edified by report?

15 CLOWN I will catechize the world for him—that is, make questions and by them answer.

DESDEMONA Seek him, bid him come hither. Tell him I have moved<sup>o</sup> my lord on his behalf and hope all will be well.

20 CLOWN To do this is within the compass<sup>o</sup> of man's wit, and therefore I will attempt the doing it. Exit

CLOWN.

DESDEMONA Where should<sup>o</sup> I lose the handkerchief, Emilia?

EMILIA I know not, madam.

25

DESDEMONA Believe me, I had rather have lost my purse

Full of crusadoes,<sup>o</sup> and but<sup>o</sup> my noble Moor
Is true of mind and made of no such baseness
As jealous creatures are, it were enough
To put him to ill-thinking.

EMILIA Is he not jealous?

30

DESDEMONA Who, he? I think the sun where he was born

Drew all such humors from him.<sup>2</sup>

Enter OTHELLO.

EMILIA Look where he comes.

DESDEMONA [aside] I will not leave him now till Cassio be Called to him.—How is't with you, my lord?

35

OTHELLO Well, my good lady. [Aside] O, hardness to dissemble!—

How do you, Desdemona?

DESDEMONA Well, my good lord.

OTHELLO Give me your hand. This hand is moist, my lady.

DESDEMONA It hath felt no age nor known no sorrow.

OTHELLO This argues fruitfulness and liberal heart.<sup>3</sup>

40

Hot, hot and moist. This hand of yours requires
A sequester from liberty: fasting and prayer,
Much castigation, exercise devout;
For here's a young and sweating devil here
That commonly rebels. 'Tis a good hand,

A frank<sup>o</sup> one.

45 DESDEMONA You may indeed say so,
 For 'twas that hand that gave away my heart.
 OTHELLO A liberal hand. The hearts of old gave hands,
 But our new heraldry is hands, not hearts.<sup>4</sup>

DESDEMONA I cannot speak of this. Come now, your promise.

50 OTHELLO What promise, chuck?<sup>o</sup>
 DESDEMONA I have sent to bid Cassio come speak
 with you.
 OTHELLO I have a salt and sorry rheum<sup>o</sup> offends
 me;
 Lend me thy handkerchief.

DESDEMONA Here, my lord.

OTHELLO That which I gave you.

DESDEMONA I have it not about
 me.

55 OTHELLO Not?
 DESDEMONA No, faith, my lord.
 OTHELLO That's a fault. That handkerchief
 Did an Egyptian to my mother give.
 She was a charmer<sup>o</sup> and could almost read
 The thoughts of people. She told her, while she kept
 it,

60 'Twould make her amiable<sup>o</sup> and subdue my father
 Entirely to her love; but if she lost it
 Or made a gift of it, my father's eye
 Should hold her loathèd, and his spirits should hunt
 After new fancies. She, dying, gave it me,
 And bid me, when my fate would have me wived,
 65 To give it her.<sup>o</sup> I did so; and—take heed on't!—
 Make it a darling like your precious eye.
 To lose't or give't away were such perdition<sup>o</sup>

As nothing else could match.

DESDEMONA

Is't possible?

70

OTHELLO 'Tis true. There's magic in the web of it:
A sibyl<sup>o</sup> that had numbered in the world

The sun to course two hundred compasses,<sup>5</sup>

In her prophetic fury<sup>o</sup> sewed the work;

The worms were hallowed that did breed the silk,

75

And it was dyed in mummy,<sup>6</sup> which the skillful Conserved of<sup>o</sup> maidens' hearts.

DESDEMONA

I'faith? Is't true?

OTHELLO Most veritable; therefore look to't well.

DESDEMONA Then would to God that I had never seen't!

OTHELLO Ha? wherefore?

80

DESDEMONA Why do you speak so startingly and rash?<sup>o</sup>

OTHELLO Is't lost? Is't gone? Speak, is't out o'th'way?

DESDEMONA Heaven bless us!

OTHELLO Say you?

DESDEMONA It is not lost; but what an if<sup>o</sup> it were?

OTHELLO How?

85

DESDEMONA I say it is not lost.

OTHELLO Fetch't, let me see't!

DESDEMONA Why, so I can; but I will not now.

This is a trick to put me from my suit.

Pray you let Cassio be received again.

90

OTHELLO Fetch me the handkerchief, my mind
misgives—

DESDEMONA Come, come!

You'll never meet a more sufficient<sup>o</sup> man—

OTHELLO The handkerchief!

DESDEMONA I pray, talk me of Cassio.

OTHELLO The handkerchief!<sup>7</sup>

95 DESDEMONA A man that all his time
Hath founded his good fortunes on your love,
Shared dangers with you—
OTHELLO The handkerchief!
DESDEMONA I'faith, you are to blame.
OTHELLO 'Swounds! Exit
OTHELLO.
100 EMILIA Is not this man jealous?
DESDEMONA I ne'er saw this before.
Sure, there's some wonder in this handkerchief;
I am most unhappy in the loss of it.
EMILIA 'Tis not a year or two shows us a man.<sup>8</sup>
They are all but<sup>o</sup> stomachs, and we all but food;
105 They eat us hungerly, and when they are full
They belch us.
Enter IAGO and CASSIO.
Look you, Cassio and my husband.
IAGO There is no other way; 'tis she must do't;
And lo the happiness!<sup>9</sup> go and importune her.
DESDEMONA How now, good Cassio, what's the news
110 with you?
CASSIO Madam, my former suit. I do beseech you
That by your virtuous means I may again
Exist and be a member of his love
Whom I, with all the office<sup>o</sup> of my heart, 115 Entirely honor. I would not be delayed.
If my offense be of such mortal<sup>o</sup> kind
That nor<sup>o</sup> my service past nor present sorrows
Nor purposed merit in futurity
Can ransom me into his love again,
But to know so<sup>o</sup> must be my benefit;
120 So<sup>o</sup> shall I clothe me in a forced content
And shut<sup>o</sup> myself up in some other course
To fortune's alms.
DESDEMONA Alas, thrice-gentle Cassio,

My advocacy is not now in tune.<sup>1</sup>
 125 My lord is not my lord, nor should I know him,
 Were he in favor<sup>o</sup> as in humor<sup>o</sup> altered.
 So help me every spirit sanctified
 As I have spoken for you all my best
 And stood within the blank<sup>2</sup> of his displeasure
 For my free speech. You must awhile be patient.
 130 What I can do I will, and more I will
 Than for myself I dare. Let that suffice you.
 IAGO Is my lord angry?
 EMILIA He went hence but now,
 And certainly in strange unquietness.
 IAGO Can he be angry? I have seen the cannon
 135 When it hath blown his ranks into the air
 And, like the devil, from his very arm
 Puffed his own brother<sup>3</sup>—and is he angry?
 Something of moment then. I will go meet him;
 There's matter in't indeed if he be angry.
 140 DESDEMONA I prithee do so. Exit
 [IAGO].
 Something sure of state<sup>4</sup>—
 Either from Venice, or some unhatched practice<sup>o</sup>
 Made demonstrable here in Cyprus to him—
 Hath puddled his clear spirit; and in such cases
 Men's natures wrangle with inferior things,
 145 Though great ones are their object. 'Tis even so.
 For let our finger ache, and it endues<sup>o</sup>
 Our other, healthful members even to a sense
 Of pain. Nay, we must think men are not gods,
 Nor of them look for such observancy<sup>o</sup>
 150 As fits the bridal.<sup>o</sup>—Beshrew me<sup>o</sup> much, Emilia.
 I was, unhandsome<sup>o</sup> warrior as I am,
 Arraigning his unkindness with my soul;
 But now I find I had suborned the witness,
 And he's indicted falsely.<sup>5</sup>

155 EMILIA Pray heaven it be
 State matters, as you think, and no conception
 Nor no jealous toy<sup>o</sup> concerning you.
 DESDEMONA Alas the day! I never gave him cause.
 EMILIA But jealous souls will not be answered so;
 They are not ever jealous for the cause,
 160 But jealous for they're jealous. It is a monster
 Begot upon itself, born on itself.
 DESDEMONA Heaven keep the monster from Othello's mind!
 EMILIA Lady, amen!
 DESDEMONA I will go seek him; Cassio, walk here
 165 about.
 If I do find him fit, I'll move your suit
 And seek to effect it to my uttermost.
 CASSIO I humbly thank your ladyship.
Exeunt DESDEMONA and EMILIA.
Enter BIANCA.<sup>6</sup>
 BIANCA Save you,<sup>o</sup> friend Cassio!
 CASSIO What make<sup>o</sup> you from home?
 How is't with you, my most fair Bianca?
 170 I'faith, sweet love, I was coming to your house.
 BIANCA And I was going to your lodging, Cassio.
 What? keep a week away? seven days and nights?
 Eightscore-eight hours? And lovers' absent hours
 More tedious than the dial eightscore times!<sup>7</sup>
 175 O weary reckoning!<sup>o</sup>
 CASSIO Pardon me, Bianca;
 I have this while with leaden thoughts been pressed,
 But I shall in a more continue<sup>o</sup> time
 Strike off<sup>o</sup> this score of absence. Sweet Bianca, [Gives her DESDEMONA'S handkerchief.]
 Take me this work out.<sup>o</sup> 180

BIANCA O, Cassio! whence came
 this?
 This is some token from a newer friend;
 To the felt absence now I feel a cause.
 Is't come to this? Well, well.
 CASSIO Go to,<sup>o</sup> woman!
 Throw your vile guesses in the devil's teeth,
 From whence you have them. You are jealous now 185 That this is from some mistress some remembrance;
 No, by my faith, Bianca.
 BIANCA Why, whose is it?
 CASSIO I know not neither; I found it in my chamber.
 I like the work well; ere it be demanded,<sup>o</sup>
 190 As like<sup>o</sup> enough it will, I would have it copied.
 Take it and do't, and leave me for this time.
 BIANCA Leave you? Wherefore?
 CASSIO I do attend here on the general,
 And think it no addition,<sup>o</sup> nor my wish,
 To have him see me womaned.
 195 BIANCA Why, I pray you?
 CASSIO Not that I love you not.
 BIANCA But that you do not love me.
 I pray you bring me on the way a little,
 And say if I shall see you soon at night.
 CASSIO 'Tis but a little way that I can bring you,
 For I attend here; but I'll see you soon.
 200 BIANCA 'Tis very good—I must be circumstanced.<sup>8</sup>
Exeunt.

Endnotes

- Note 3.4: Location: Before the citadel.Return to reference 3.4
- Note 1: A form of address to an inferior.Return to reference 1

- Note 2: As if the African sun dried up the bodily fluids (“humors”) that produce jealousy.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: This demonstrates fertility (perhaps, by implication, lust) and a generous (hinting at “loose”) heart. A moist hand was thought to be a sign of active desire.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: That is, these days the joining of hands doesn’t signify the joining of hearts.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: “That . . . compasses”: who was two hundred years old.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Fluid drained from mummified bodies, supposedly magical.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Desdemona’s “I pray, talk me of Cassio” and Othello’s “The handkerchief!” are only in Q.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: That is, it doesn’t take long to see what a man is.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: What a happy coincidence (seeing Desdemona).Return to reference 9
- Note 1: My advocacy isn’t working properly.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: The “blank” was the white spot at the center of a target.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Blew up his own brother (and Othello wasn’t angry even then).Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Surely some official business.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Made the witness lie and so accused Othello falsely.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: “Bianca” means “white” in Italian—an ironic reversal of conventional color imagery, given that Bianca is a “customer” (courtesan, 4.1.119).Return to reference 6
- Note 7: “Lovers’ . . . times”: each hour lovers are parted is eightscore (160) times more tedious than normal clock time.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Content with what circumstances offer.Return to reference 8

Notes

- °: lie outrageouslyReturn to reference °
- °: petitionedReturn to reference °
- °: scopeReturn to reference °
- °: didReturn to reference °
- °: gold coins Return to reference °
- °: except thatReturn to reference °
- °: (sexually) openReturn to reference °
- °: woodchuck (affectionate)Return to reference °
- °: badly watering eyesReturn to reference °
- °: sorceressReturn to reference °
- °: desirableReturn to reference °
- °: to my wifeReturn to reference °
- °: loss; damnationReturn to reference °
- °: female prophetReturn to reference °
- °: raptureReturn to reference °
- °: preserved out ofReturn to reference °
- °: fitfully and urgentlyReturn to reference °
- °: an if = ifReturn to reference °
- °: completeReturn to reference °
- °: nothing butReturn to reference °
- °: duty; loyal serviceReturn to reference °
- °: deadlyReturn to reference °
- °: neitherReturn to reference °
- °: even to know thisReturn to reference °
- °: if soReturn to reference °
- °: giveReturn to reference °
- °: appearance Return to reference °
- °: moodReturn to reference °
- °: unfinished plotReturn to reference °
- °: inducesReturn to reference °
- °: careful attentionReturn to reference °
- °: wedding Return to reference °
- °: (mild curse)Return to reference °

- °: unskilledReturn to reference °
- °: whimReturn to reference °
- °: God save youReturn to reference °
- °: bringsReturn to reference °
- °: calculatingReturn to reference °
- °: opportuneReturn to reference °
- °: make upReturn to reference °
- °: copy this embroideryReturn to reference °
- °: stop itReturn to reference °
- °: sought outReturn to reference °
- °: likelyReturn to reference °
- °: (to my cause)Return to reference °

4.1

Enter OTHELLO and IAGO.

IAGO Will you think so?

OTHELLO Think so, Iago?

IAGO What,
To kiss in private?

OTHELLO An unauthorized kiss!

IAGO Or to be naked with her friend in bed
An hour or more, not meaning any harm?

5 OTHELLO Naked in bed, Iago, and not mean harm?
It is hypocrisy against the devil.<sup>1</sup>
They that mean virtuously, and yet do so,
The devil their virtue tempts, and they tempt heaven.<sup>2</sup>

IAGO If they do nothing, 'tis a venial slip;<sup>o</sup>
But if I give my wife a handkerchief—

10 OTHELLO What then?

IAGO Why then, 'tis hers, my lord; and being hers,
She may, I think, bestow't on any man.

OTHELLO She is protectress of her honor too;
May she give that?

15 IAGO Her honor is an essence that's not seen;
They<sup>o</sup> have it very oft that have it not.
But for the handkerchief—

OTHELLO By heaven, I would most gladly have forgot it!

20 Thou said'st—O, it comes o'er my memory
As doth the raven o'er the infectious<sup>o</sup> house,<sup>3</sup>
Boding to all!—he had my handkerchief.

IAGO Ay, what of that?

OTHELLO That's not so good now.

IAGO What if I had said I had seen him do you wrong?

25 Or heard him say—as knaves be such abroad<sup>4</sup>
 Who (having by their own importunate suit
 Or voluntary dotage<sup>o</sup> of some mistress Convinced or supplied<sup>o</sup> them) cannot choose
 But they must blab—
 OTHELLO Hath he said anything?
 30 IAGO He hath, my lord, but be you well assured,
 No more than he'll unswear.
 OTHELLO What hath he said?
 IAGO Faith, that he did . . . I know not what he did.
 OTHELLO What? What?
 IAGO Lie . . .
 OTHELLO With her?
 IAGO With her, on her; what you
 will.
 35 OTHELLO Lie with her? lie on her? We say lie on her when they belie<sup>o</sup> her. Lie with her? 'Swounds, that's fulsome.<sup>o</sup>—Handkerchief! confessions!
 handkerchief!—To<sup>5</sup> confess, and be hanged for his labor. First to be hanged,
 and then to confess: I tremble at it. Nature would
 not invest herself in such shadowing passion without 40 some instruction.<sup>6</sup> It is not words that shakes me thus.
 Pish!
 Noses, ears, and lips! Is't possible? Confess?
 Handkerchief? O devil! Falls in a trance.
 IAGO Work on;
 45 My medicine works! Thus credulous fools are caught,
 And many worthy and chaste dames even thus,
 All guiltless, meet reproach.—What ho! my lord!
 My lord, I say! Othello!

Enter CASSIO.

How now, Cassio?

CASSIO What's the matter?

50 IAGO My lord is fallen into an epilepsy.
This is his second fit; he had one yesterday.

CASSIO Rub him about the temples.

IAGO No, forbear.

The lethargy<sup>o</sup> must have his<sup>o</sup> quiet course;
If not, he foams at mouth and by and by Breaks out to savage madness. Look, he stirs.
55 Do you withdraw yourself a little while;
He will recover straight.<sup>o</sup> When he is gone,
I would on great occasion<sup>o</sup> speak with you.

[Exit CASSIO.]

How is it, general? Have you not hurt your head?<sup>7</sup>

OTHELLO Dost thou mock me?

60 IAGO I mock you not, by heaven.

Would you would bear your fortune like a man!

OTHELLO A hornèd man's a monster and a beast.

IAGO There's many a beast then in a populous city,
And many a civil<sup>o</sup> monster.

OTHELLO Did he confess it?

65 IAGO Good sir, be a man:
Think every bearded fellow that's but yoked
May draw with you.<sup>8</sup> There's millions now alive
That nightly lie in those unproper beds
Which they dare swear peculiar.<sup>9</sup> Your case is better.
O, 'tis the spite of hell, the fiend's arch-mock,<sup>o</sup>
70 To lip<sup>o</sup> a wanton in a secure<sup>o</sup> couch
And to suppose her chaste. No, let me know;
And knowing what I am,<sup>o</sup> I know what she shall be.

OTHELLO O, thou art wise, 'tis certain.

IAGO Stand you a while

apart,
Confine yourself but in a patient list.°
75 Whilst you were here, o'er-whelmèd with your grief—
A passion most unsuited such a man—
Cassio came hither. I shifted him away
And laid good 'scuses upon your ecstasy,°
80 Bade him anon return and here speak with me,
The which he promised. Do but encave° yourself,
And mark the fleers,° the gibes, and notable scorns
That dwell in every region of his face;
For I will make him tell the tale anew:
Where, how, how oft, how long ago, and when 85 He hath and is again to cope° your wife.
I say, but mark his gesture. Marry, patience!
Or I shall say you're all in all in spleen,°
And nothing of a man.

OTHELLO Dost thou hear, Iago?
I will be found most cunning in my patience;
90 But—dost thou hear?—most bloody.

IAGO That's not amiss,

But yet keep time° in all. Will you withdraw?

[OTHELLO withdraws.]

Now will I question Cassio of Bianca,
A huswife° that by selling her desires
Buys herself bread and cloth. It is a creature
95 That dotes on Cassio—as 'tis the strumpet's plague
To beguile many and be beguiled by one.
He, when he hears of her, cannot restrain
From the excess of laughter. Here he comes.

Enter CASSIO.

As he shall smile, Othello shall go mad;
100 And his unbookish° jealousy must conster°
Poor Cassio's smiles, gestures, and light behaviors
Quite in the wrong. How do you, lieutenant?
CASSIO The worser that you give me the addition°

Whose want even kills me.
105 IAGO Ply Desdemona well, and you are sure on't.
Now if this suit lay in Bianca's power,
How quickly should you speed!
CASSIO Alas, poor caitiff!°
OTHELLO Look how he laughs already!
IAGO I never knew woman love man so.
110 CASSIO Alas, poor rogue! I think, i'faith, she loves
me.
OTHELLO Now he denies it faintly and laughs it out.
IAGO Do you hear, Cassio?
OTHELLO Now he importunes him
To tell it o'er. Go to! well said, well said!
IAGO She gives it out that you shall marry her.
115 Do you intend it?
CASSIO Ha, ha, ha!
OTHELLO Do ye triumph, Roman?<sup>1</sup> do you triumph?
CASSIO I marry? What! a customer?° Prithee bear
some charity to my wit;° do not think it so unwholesome.
120 Ha, ha,
ha!
OTHELLO So, so, so, so! they laugh that wins.
IAGO Faith, the cry goes that you marry her.
CASSIO Prithee say true.
IAGO I am a very villain else.°
125 OTHELLO Have you scored° me? Well.
CASSIO This is the monkey's own giving out.<sup>2</sup> She is persuaded I will marry her out of her own love and flattery,
not out of my promise.
OTHELLO Iago beckons me; now he begins the 130 story.
[OTHELLO draws closer.]

CASSIO She was here even now; she haunts me in every place. I was the other day talking on the sea-bank
with certain Venetians, and thither comes the bauble<sup>o</sup>
and falls me thus about my neck—
OTHELLO Crying "O dear Cassio!" as it were: his 135 gesture
imports<sup>o</sup> it.
CASSIO So hangs and lolls and weeps upon me, so shakes
and pulls me. Ha, ha, ha!
OTHELLO Now he tells how she plucked him to my chamber. O, I see that nose of yours, but not that 140 dog I shall throw it to.<sup>3</sup>
CASSIO Well, I must leave her company.
IAGO Before me! look where she comes!
Enter BIANCA.
CASSIO 'Tis such another fitchew!<sup>4</sup> marry, a perfumed one!
What do you mean by this haunting of me?
145 BIANCA Let the devil and his dam<sup>o</sup> haunt you! What did you mean by that same handkerchief you gave me even now? I was a fine fool to take it. I must take out<sup>o</sup>
the work? A likely piece of work,<sup>5</sup> that you should find it
in your chamber and know not who left it there! This is 150 some minx's token, and I must take out the work?
There,

give it your hobby-horse!° Wheresoever you had it, I'll
 take out no work on't.
 CASSIO How now, my sweet Bianca?
 How now? how now?
 155 OTHELLO By heaven, that should° be my handkerchief!
 BIANCA If you'll come to supper tonight, you may; if
 you will not, come when you are next prepared for.6
Exit.
 IAGO After her, after her!
 CASSIO Faith, I must; she'll rail in the streets else.
 160 IAGO Will you sup there?
 CASSIO Faith, I intend so.
 IAGO Well, I may chance to see you, for I would very fain
 speak with you.
 CASSIO Prithee come, will you?
 165 IAGO Go to; say no more.
Exit CASSIO.
 OTHELLO [comes forward] How shall I murder him,
 Iago?
 IAGO Did you perceive how he laughed at his vice?
 OTHELLO O Iago!
 IAGO And did you see the handkerchief?
 170 OTHELLO Was that mine?
 IAGO Yours, by this hand! and to see how he prizes
 the foolish woman, your wife! She gave it him, and he hath given it his whore.
 OTHELLO I would have him nine years a-killing!7—A 175 fine
 woman, a fair woman, a sweet woman!

IAGO Nay, you must forget that.
 OTHELLO Ay, let her rot and perish and be damned tonight, for she shall not live! No, my heart is turned
 to 180 stone; I strike it, and it hurts my hand.—O, the world hath not a sweeter creature! She might lie by an emperor's side and command him tasks.
 IAGO Nay, that's not your way.◊
 OTHELLO Hang her!—I do but say what she is: so delicate 185 with her needle; an admirable musician (O, she will sing
 the savageness out of a bear!); of so high and plenteous
 wit and invention!◊
 IAGO She's the worse for all this.
 OTHELLO O, a thousand, a thousand times!—And then of 190 so gentle◊ a condition!
 IAGO Ay, too gentle.◊
 OTHELLO Nay, that's certain.—But yet the pity of it,
 Iago!
 O Iago, the pity of it, Iago!
 IAGO If you are so fond◊ over her iniquity, give her patent◊ 195 to offend; for if it touch not you, it comes near nobody.
 OTHELLO I will chop her into messes!◊ Cuckold me!
 IAGO O, 'tis foul in her.
 OTHELLO With mine officer!
 IAGO That's fouler.
 200 OTHELLO Get me some poison, Iago, this night. I'll
 not expostulate with her, lest her body and beauty unprovide

my mind<sup>o</sup> again. This night, Iago.

IAGO Do it not with poison. Strangle her in her bed,
even
the bed she hath contaminated.

205 OTHELLO Good, good! The justice of it pleases. Very good!

IAGO And for Cassio, let me be his undertaker.<sup>o</sup> You shall hear more by midnight.

OTHELLO Excellent good!
A trumpet [within].
What trumpet is that same?

210 IAGO I warrant something from Venice.
Enter LODOVICO, DESDEMONA, and attendants.
'Tis Lodovico; this comes from the duke.
See, your wife's with him.

LODOVICO God save you, worthy general.

215 OTHELLO With all my heart,<sup>o</sup> sir.

LODOVICO The duke and the senators of Venice greet you.
[Gives him a letter.]

OTHELLO I kiss the instrument<sup>o</sup> of their pleasures.<sup>o</sup>
[Opens the letter and reads.]

DESDEMONA And what's the news, good cousin Lodovico?

IAGO I am very glad to see you, signor.
Welcome to Cyprus.

220 LODOVICO I thank you. How does Lieutenant Cassio?

IAGO Lives, sir.

DESDEMONA Cousin, there's fallen between him and
my lord
An unkind<sup>o</sup> breach; but you shall make all well.

225 OTHELLO Are you sure of that?

DESDEMONA My lord?

OTHELLO [reads] "This fail you not to do, as you will
..."

LODOVICO He did not call: he's busy in the paper.
Is there division 'twixt my lord and Cassio?

230 DESDEMONA A most unhappy one; I would do much T'atone<sup>o</sup> them, for the love I bear to Cassio.

OTHELLO Fire and brimstone!

DESDEMONA My lord?

OTHELLO Are you wise?

DESDEMONA What, is he angry?

LODOVICO May be the letter
moved him;
For, as I think, they do command him home,
Deputing Cassio in his government.<sup>o</sup>

235 DESDEMONA By my troth, I am glad on't.

OTHELLO Indeed!

DESDEMONA My
lord?

OTHELLO I am glad to see you mad.<sup>8</sup>

DESDEMONA Why, sweet
Othello?

OTHELLO Devil! [Strikes her.]

DESDEMONA I have not deserved this.

240 LODOVICO My lord, this would not be believed in Venice,
Though I should swear I saw't. 'Tis very much;<sup>o</sup>
Make her amends—she weeps.

OTHELLO O devil, devil!
If that the earth could teem with<sup>o</sup> woman's tears,
Each drop she falls would prove a crocodile.<sup>9</sup>
Out of my sight!

DESDEMONA I will not stay to offend you.

245 LODOVICO Truly obedient lady!
I do beseech your lordship call her back.

OTHELLO Mistress!

DESDEMONA My lord?

OTHELLO What would you<sup>o</sup> with her, sir?

250 LODOVICO Who, I, my
lord?

OTHELLO    Ay, you did wish that I would make her turn.

Sir, she can turn, and turn,<sup>o</sup> and yet go on
And turn again. And she can weep, sir, weep.
And she's obedient; as you say, obedient,
Very obedient.—Proceed you in your tears.—
Concerning this, sir—O well-painted passion!—
I am commanded home.—Get you away!
I'll send for you anon.—Sir, I obey the mandate
And will return to Venice.—Hence, avaunt!<sup>o</sup>

[Exit DESDEMONA.]

260 Cassio shall have my place. And, sir, tonight
I do entreat that we may sup together.
You are welcome, sir, to Cyprus.—Goats and monkeys!<sup>1</sup>

Exit.

LODOVICO Is this the noble Moor whom our full senate
Call all-in-all sufficient? Is this the nature
Whom passion could not shake? whose solid virtue
The shot of accident nor dart of chance
Could neither graze nor pierce?

IAGO He is much changed.

LODOVICO    Are his wits safe? Is he not light of brain?

IAGO    He's that he is; I may not breathe my censure.

270      What he might be—if what he might he is not—
I would to heaven he were.

LODOVICO                      What! Strike his wife?

IAGO 'Faith, that was not so well; yet would I knew
That stroke would prove the worst.

LODOVICO Is it his use?<sup>o</sup>

Or did the letters work upon his blood—
And new create his fault?

IAGO                                      Alas, alas!

It is not honesty in me to speak
What I have seen and known. You shall observe him,
And his own courses will denote him so
That I may save my speech. Do but go after
And mark how he continues.

LODOVICO    I am sorry that I am deceived in him.
Exeunt.

IAGO                                  Alas, alas!

It is not honesty in me to speak
What I have seen and known. You shall observe him,
And his own courses<sup>o</sup> will denote him so
That I may save my speech. Do but go after
And mark how he continues.

Endnotes

- Note 9: Who lie in beds that don't belong entirely to them but that they would swear are exclusively their own.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Othello draws on associations either with Rome's imperial successes (and subsequent collapse) or with the Roman practice of holding celebratory processions (called triumphs) for military victors.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: That is, this is Bianca's own story.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: That is, I'm envisioning my revenge, but the time is not yet quite right.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Polecat, associated with prostitutes because of its bad smell and supposed lecherousness.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: An implausible story.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Come next time I prepare for you (never).Return to reference 6
- Note 7: I would like to spend nine years killing him.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Othello is pleased that Desdemona is rejoicing in Cassio's promotion and thus revealing their adulterous affair, which she would be "mad" to do in public and in front of him.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Each drop would cause the earth to conceive a crocodile (crocodiles proverbially wept false tears for their victims).Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Symbols of lust.Return to reference 1

Notes

- °: an excusable sinReturn to reference °
- °: they are reputed toReturn to reference °
- °: plague-infestedReturn to reference °
- °: dotingReturn to reference °
- °: seduced or satisfiedReturn to reference °
- °: slander Return to reference °
- °: nauseatingReturn to reference °

- °: trance Return to reference °
- °: its Return to reference °
- °: immediately Return to reference °
- °: important matters Return to reference °
- °: city-dwelling Return to reference °
- °: devil's greatest mock Return to reference °
- °: kiss Return to reference °
- °: an unsuspected Return to reference °
- °: (a cuckold) Return to reference °
- °: boundary Return to reference °
- °: for your fit Return to reference °
- °: hide Return to reference °
- °: sneers Return to reference °
- °: copulate with Return to reference °
- °: completely impulsive Return to reference °
- °: maintain control Return to reference °
- °: hussy Return to reference °
- °: ignorant Return to reference °
- °: construe Return to reference °
- °: title Return to reference °
- °: wretch Return to reference °
- °: courtesan Return to reference °
- °: sense Return to reference °
- °: if it's not true Return to reference °
- °: scored off Return to reference °
- °: toy Return to reference °
- °: indicates Return to reference °
- °: mother Return to reference °
- °: copy Return to reference °
- °: mountable woman Return to reference °
- °: must Return to reference °
- °: (the way to think) Return to reference °
- °: imagination Return to reference °
- °: highly born Return to reference °
- °: generous (sexually) Return to reference °
- °: foolish Return to reference °

- °: licenseReturn to reference °
- °: pieces of foodReturn to reference °
- °: weaken my resolveReturn to reference °
- °: murdererReturn to reference °
- °: thank youReturn to reference °
- °: bearer Return to reference °
- °: commandsReturn to reference °
- °: unnaturalReturn to reference °
- °: to reconcileReturn to reference °
- °: official positionReturn to reference °
- °: going too farReturn to reference °
- °: become pregnant byReturn to reference °
- °: do you wishReturn to reference °
- °: returnReturn to reference °
- °: (sexually)Return to reference °
- °: begoneReturn to reference °
- °: customReturn to reference °
- °: passionsReturn to reference °
- °: actionsReturn to reference °

4.2

Enter OTHELLO and EMILIA.

OTHELLO You have seen nothing then?

EMILIA Nor ever heard, nor ever did suspect.

OTHELLO Yes, you have seen Cassio and she together.

EMILIA But then I saw no harm, and then I heard
Each syllable that breath made up between them.

5 OTHELLO What, did they never whisper?

EMILIA Never, my
lord.

OTHELLO Nor send you out o'th' way?

EMILIA Never.

OTHELLO To fetch her fan, her gloves, her mask, nor nothing?

EMILIA Never, my lord.

10 OTHELLO That's strange.

EMILIA I durst, my lord, to wager she is honest,
Lay down my soul at stake. If you think other,
Remove your thought; it doth abuse your bosom.
If any wretch have put this in your head,

15 Let heaven requite it with the serpent's curse,<sup>1</sup>

For if she be not honest, chaste, and true,
There's no man happy. The purest of their wives
Is foul as slander.

OTHELLO Bid her come hither—go. Exit

EMILIA.

20 She says enough; yet she's a simple bawd
That cannot say as much.<sup>2</sup> This is a subtle whore:
A closet lock and key<sup>o</sup> of villainous secrets;
And yet she'll kneel and pray; I have seen her do't.

Enter DESDEMONA and EMILIA.

DESDEMONA My lord, what is your will?

OTHELLO Pray you,
 chuck,
 come hither.
 DESDEMONA What is your pleasure?
 25 OTHELLO Let me see your eyes.
 Look in my face.
 DESDEMONA What horrible fancy's this?
 OTHELLO [to EMILIA] Some of your function,<sup>3</sup>
 mistress:
 Leave procreants<sup>o</sup> alone and shut the door;
 Cough or cry "hem" if anybody come.
 Your mystery, your mystery!<sup>o</sup> Nay, dispatch! Exit
 30 EMILIA.
 DESDEMONA Upon my knees, what doth your speech import?
 I understand a fury in your words,
 But not the words.
 OTHELLO Why? What art thou?
 DESDEMONA Your wife, my lord, your true and loyal
 wife.
 35 OTHELLO Come, swear it! damn thyself!
 Lest, being<sup>o</sup> like one of heaven, the devils themselves
 Should fear to seize thee. Therefore be double-damned:
 Swear thou art honest!
 DESDEMONA Heaven doth truly know it.
 OTHELLO Heaven truly knows that thou art false as hell.
 40 DESDEMONA To whom, my lord? With whom? How am I false?
 OTHELLO Ah, Desdemon! away, away, away!
 DESDEMONA Alas the heavy day! Why do you weep?
 Am I the motive of these tears, my lord?

45 If haply<sup>o</sup> you my father do suspect
An instrument of this your calling back,
Lay not your blame on me. If you have lost him,
I have lost him too.

OTHELLO Had it pleased heaven
To try me with affliction, had they rained
All kind of sores and shames on my bare head,
Steeped me in poverty to the very lips,
50 Given to captivity me and my utmost hopes,
I should have found in some place of my soul
A drop of patience. But, alas, to make me
The fixèd figure for the time of scorn
To point his slow and moving finger at!<sup>4</sup>
55 Yet could I bear that too—well, very well;
But there where I have garnered<sup>o</sup> up my heart,
Where either I must live or bear no life,
The fountain from the which my current runs
Or else dries up; to be discarded thence,
60 Or keep it as a cistern for foul toads
To knot and gender<sup>5</sup> in!—Turn thy complexion there,
Patience,<sup>6</sup> thou young and rose-lipped cherubin;
Ay, here look grim as hell!

65 DESDEMONA I hope my noble lord esteems me
honest.

OTHELLO O, ay, as summer flies are in the shambles,
<sup>o</sup>
That quicken even with blowing.<sup>7</sup> O thou weed,
Who art so lovely fair and smell'st so sweet
That the sense aches at thee,
Would thou hadst never been born!

70 DESDEMONA Alas, what ignorant sin have I committed?

OTHELLO Was this fair paper, this most goodly book,
Made to write "whore" upon? What committed?
Committed?<sup>8</sup> O, thou public commoner!<sup>o</sup>

75 I should make very forges of my cheeks
 That would to cinders burn up modesty
 Did I but speak thy deeds. What committed?
 Heaven stops the nose at it, and the moon winks;
 The bawdy wind that kisses all it meets
 Is hushed within the hollow mine of earth
 80 And will not hear't. What committed?
 DESDEMONA By heaven, you do me wrong!
 OTHELLO Are not you a strumpet?
 DESDEMONA No, as I am a Christian!
 If to preserve this vessel for my lord
 From any other foul unlawful touch
 85 Be not to be a strumpet, I am none.
 OTHELLO What, not a whore?
 DESDEMONA No, as I shall be saved!
 OTHELLO Is't possible?
 DESDEMONA O, heaven forgive us!
 OTHELLO I cry you mercy
 then.
 I took you for that cunning whore of Venice
 90 That married with Othello.—You! Mistress!
 That have the office opposite to Saint Peter
 And keeps the gate of hell. You, you!
Enter EMILIA.
 Ay, you.
 We have done our course; [giving her money]
 there's money for your pains;
 I pray you turn the key and keep our counsel.
 95 Exit.
 EMILIA Alas, what does this gentleman conceive?
 How do you, madam? how do you, my good lady?
 DESDEMONA Faith, half asleep.
 EMILIA Good madam, what's the matter with my
 lord?
 DESDEMONA With who?

100 EMILIA Why, with my lord, madam.
 DESDEMONA Who is thy lord?
 EMILIA He that is yours, sweet lady.
 DESDEMONA I have none. Do not talk to me, Emilia;
 I cannot weep, nor answers have I none
 But what should go by water.° Prithee tonight
 Lay on my bed my wedding sheets, remember;
 105 And call thy husband hither.
 EMILIA Here's a change indeed!
Exit.
 DESDEMONA 'Tis meet° I should be used so, very meet.
 How have I been behaved that he might stick
 The small'st opinion on my least misuse?°
Enter IAGO and EMILIA.
 110 IAGO What is your pleasure, madam? How is't with you?
 DESDEMONA I cannot tell. Those that do teach young babes
 Do it with gentle means and easy tasks.
 He might have chid me so; for in good faith
 I am a child to chiding.
 IAGO What is the matter, lady?
 115 EMILIA Alas, Iago, my lord hath so bewhored her,° Thrown such despite° and heavy terms upon her,
 That true hearts cannot bear it.
 DESDEMONA Am I that name, Iago?
 IAGO What name, fair lady?
 DESDEMONA Such as she said my lord did say I was.
 120 EMILIA He called her whore. A beggar in his drink
 Could not have laid such terms upon his callet.°
 IAGO Why did he so?

DESDEMONA I do not know; I am sure I am none
such.

IAGO Do not weep, do not weep. Alas the day!

125 EMILIA Hath she forsook so many noble matches,
Her father and her country and her friends,
To be called whore? Would it not make one weep?

DESDEMONA It is my wretched fortune.

IAGO Beshrew<sup>o</sup> him for't!
How comes this trick<sup>o</sup> upon him?

DESDEMONA Nay, heaven doth know.

130 EMILIA I will be hanged if some eternal villain,
Some busy<sup>o</sup> and insinuating rogue,
Some cogging,<sup>o</sup> cozening<sup>o</sup> slave, to get some office,
Have not devised this slander. I will be hanged else.

IAGO Fie! there is no such man; it is impossible.

135 DESDEMONA If any such there be, heaven pardon
him.

EMILIA A halter<sup>o</sup> pardon him, and hell gnaw his bones!
Why should he call her whore? Who keeps her company?
What place? what time? what form? what likelihood?
The Moor's abused by some most villainous knave,
Some base notorious knave, some scurvy fellow.

140 O heaven, that such companions thou'dst unfold,<sup>o</sup>
And put in every honest hand a whip
To lash the rascals naked through the world
Even from the east to th' west!

IAGO Speak within door.<sup>o</sup>

145 EMILIA O, fie upon them! Some such squire<sup>o</sup> he was
That turned your wit the seamy side without<sup>o</sup>
And made you to suspect me with the Moor.

IAGO You are a fool; go to.

DESDEMONA O God,<sup>1</sup> Iago,
 What shall I do to win my lord again?
 Good friend, go to him; for by this light of heaven,
 150 I know not how I lost him. Here I kneel:<sup>2</sup>
 If e'er my will did trespass 'gainst his love,
 Either in discourse of thought or actual deed,
 Or that mine eyes, mine ears, or any sense
 Delighted them in any other form,<sup>3</sup>
 155 Or that I do not yet,<sup>o</sup> and ever did,
 And ever will (though he do shake me off
 To beggarly divorcement) love him dearly—
 Comfort forswear me!<sup>o</sup> Unkindness may do much,
 And his unkindness may defeat my life,
 160 But never taint my love. [She rises.]
 I cannot say "whore."
 It does abhor<sup>4</sup> me now I speak the word.
 To do the act that might the addition<sup>o</sup> earn,
 Not the world's mass of vanity<sup>o</sup> could make me.
 IAGO I pray you be content; 'tis but his humor;<sup>o</sup>
 165 The business of the state does him offense.
 DESDEMONA If 'twere no other—
 IAGO It is but so, I warrant.
 [Trumpets within.]
 Hark how these instruments summon to supper.
 The messengers of Venice stays the meat;<sup>o</sup>
 Go in, and weep not; all things shall be well.
 170 Exeunt DESDEMONA and EMILIA.
Enter RODERIGO.
 How now, Roderigo?
 RODERIGO I do not find that thou deal'st justly with
 me.
 IAGO What in the contrary?
 RODERIGO Every day thou doff'st me with some device,<sup>5</sup>

175 Iago, and rather, as it seems to me now, keep'st from me
all conveniency<sup>o</sup> than suppliest me with the least advantage of hope. I will indeed no longer endure it. Nor am I yet persuaded to put up in peace what already I
have foolishly suffered.

180 IAGO Will you hear me, Roderigo?
RODERIGO Faith, I have heard too much; and your words
and performances are no kin together.

IAGO You charge me most unjustly.

RODERIGO With naught but truth. I have wasted myself
185 out of my means. The jewels you have had from me
to deliver Desdemona would half have corrupted a votarist.<sup>o</sup>
You have told me she hath received them, and returned me expectations and comforts of sudden respect and acquaintance, but I find none.

IAGO Well, go to, very well.

190 RODERIGO "Very well"! "go to"! I cannot go to,<sup>o</sup> man, nor
'tis not very well. Nay, I think it is scurvy, and begin
to find myself fopped<sup>o</sup> in it.

IAGO Very well.

195 RODERIGO I tell you 'tis not very well. I will make myself known to Desdemona. If she will return me my jewels, I will give over my suit and repent my unlawful solicitation.

If not, assure yourself I will seek satisfaction of you.

200 IAGO You have saido now.

RODERIGO Ay, and said nothing but what I protest intendment of doing.

IAGO Why, now I see there's mettle in thee, and even from this instant do build on thee a better opinion than 205 ever before. Give me thy hand, Roderigo. Thou hast taken against me a most just exception, but yet I protest I have dealt most directly in thy affair.

RODERIGO It hath not appeared.

IAGO I grant indeed it hath not appeared, and your suspicion
210 is not without wit and judgment. But, Roderigo, if thou hast that in thee indeed which I have greater reason to believe now than ever—I mean purpose, courage, and valor—this night show it. If thou the next night following enjoy not Desdemona, take me from this world 215 with treachery and devise engines foro my life.

RODERIGO Well, what is it? Is it within reason and compass?o

IAGO Sir, there is especial commission come from Venice to depute Cassio in Othello's place.

220 RODERIGO Is that true? Why, then Othello and Desdemona return again to Venice.

IAGO O no; he goes into Mauritania<sup>6</sup> and taketh
 away
 with him the fair Desdemona, unless his abode be lingered here by some accident; wherein none can be so determinate<sup>o</sup> as the removing of Cassio.
 225 RODERIGO How do you mean "removing" him?
 IAGO Why, by making him incapable of Othello's place—
 knocking out his brains.
 RODERIGO And that you would have me to do.
 IAGO Ay, if you dare do yourself a profit and a right.
 230 He sups tonight with a harlotry, and thither will I go to
 him.
 He knows not yet of his honorable fortune.<sup>o</sup> If you will watch his going thence, which I will fashion<sup>o</sup> to fall out between twelve and one, you may take him at your pleasure.
 I will be near to second your attempt, and he shall 235 fall between us. Come, stand not amazed at it, but go along with me. I will show you such a necessity in his death that you shall think yourself bound to put it on him. It is now high suppertime, and the night grows
 to waste. About it!
 240 RODERIGO I will hear further reason for this.
 IAGO And you shall be satisfied.
Exeunt.

Endnotes

- Note 4.2: Location: The citadel.Return to reference 4.2
- Note 1: In Genesis, the curse that God laid on the serpent who deceived Eve.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Yet it would be a simpleminded go-between who couldn't say as much as she did.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Fulfill your bawd's function by guarding the door.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: The designated object of scorn for this scornful time to point (as on a clock face) its slowly moving hand at.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: To couple and engender.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Change color at the thought of that, Patience.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Who come to life (or bring their offspring to life and hence make the meat foul) as soon as the eggs are deposited. The point seems to be the speed of breeding, inferred from Desdemona's supposed infidelity.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Lines 74–77 do not appear in Q.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: "That . . . misuse": that would cause him to suspect even slightly the least fault (?).Return to reference 9
- Note 1: The folio reads "Alas," in keeping with the censorship of oaths that led to many changes from the quarto text. Q's reading here, "O Good," is probably a misprint for "O God."Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Lines 151–64 (beginning with "Here") do not appear in Q.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Took pleasure in anyone but him.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Fill me with abhorrence; make me abhorrent, with a pun on "ab-whore."Return to reference 4
- Note 5: You put me off with some trick.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Country in the western Sahara.Return to reference 6

Notes

- °: a hiderReturn to reference °

- °: copulatorsReturn to reference °
- °: professionReturn to reference °
- °: appearingReturn to reference °
- °: perhapsReturn to reference °
- °: storedReturn to reference °
- °: slaughterhouseReturn to reference °
- °: prostituteReturn to reference °
- °: closes its eyesReturn to reference °
- °: promiscuousReturn to reference °
- °: within a caveReturn to reference °
- °: I beg your pardonReturn to reference °
- °: businessReturn to reference °
- °: believeReturn to reference °
- °: appear in tearsReturn to reference °
- °: fittingReturn to reference °
- °: called her a whoreReturn to reference °
- °: spiteReturn to reference °
- °: whoreReturn to reference °
- °: curseReturn to reference °
- °: behaviorReturn to reference °
- °: meddlingReturn to reference °
- °: deceiving Return to reference °
- °: cheatingReturn to reference °
- °: hangman's nooseReturn to reference °
- °: revealReturn to reference °
- °: more softlyReturn to reference °
- °: fellowReturn to reference °
- °: wrong side outReturn to reference °
- °: stillReturn to reference °
- °: deny me divine solaceReturn to reference °
- °: labelReturn to reference °
- °: all worldly splendorReturn to reference °
- °: moodReturn to reference °
- °: are waiting to eatReturn to reference °
- °: opportunityReturn to reference °
- °: nunReturn to reference °

- °: succeed sexually Return to reference °
- °: made a fool Return to reference °
- °: finished Return to reference °
- °: plots against Return to reference °
- °: possibility Return to reference °
- °: effectual Return to reference °
- °: his promotion Return to reference °
- °: arrange Return to reference °

4.3

Enter OTHELLO, LODOVICO, DESDEMONA, EMILIA, and attendants.

LODOVICO I do beseech you, sir, trouble yourself no further.

OTHELLO O, pardon me; 'twill do me good to walk.

LODOVICO [to DESDEMONA] Madam, good night. I humbly thank your ladyship.

DESDEMONA Your honor is most welcome.

OTHELLO Will you walk, sir?

O, Desdemona—

5

DESDEMONA My lord?

OTHELLO Get you to bed on th' instant. I will be returned forthwith. Dismiss your attendant there. Look't be done.

DESDEMONA I will, my lord.

Exeunt [OTHELLO with LODOVICO and attendants].

10

EMILIA How goes it now? He looks gentler than he did.

DESDEMONA He says he will return incontinent,<sup>o</sup> And hath commanded me to go to bed, And bid me to dismiss you.

EMILIA Dismiss me?

DESDEMONA It was his bidding; therefore, good Emilia,

15

Give me my nightly wearing, and adieu. We must not now displease him.

EMILIA I would you had never seen him.

DESDEMONA So would not I: my love doth so approve him

That even his stubbornness, his checks, his frowns—
Prithee unp<sup>1</sup>in me—have grace and favor in them.

[EMILIA helps DESDEMONA undress.]

EMILIA I have laid those sheets you bade me on the bed.

DESDEMONA All's one. o Good faith, how foolish are our minds!

If I do die before thee, prithee shroud me
In one of these same sheets.

EMILIA                                    Come, come—you talk.

25 DESDEMONA My mother had a maid called Barbary;
She was in love, and he she loved proved mad
And did forsake her. She had a Song of "Willow"—
An old thing 'twas, but it expressed her fortune—
And she died singing it. That song tonight
30 Will not go from my mind; I<sup>2</sup> have much to do
But to<sup>3</sup> go hang my head all at one side
And sing it, like poor Barbary. Prithee dispatch.<sup>o</sup>

EMILIA Shall I go fetch your nightgown?

DESDEMONA me here. No. Unpin

This Lodovico is a proper man.

EMILIA     A very handsome man.

35 DESDEMONA He speaks well.

EMILIA I know a lady in Venice would have walked barefoot to Palestine for a touch of his nether<sup>o</sup> lip.

DESDEMONA [sings]

40 The poor soul sat sighing by a sycamore tree,
Sing all a green willow;<sup>4</sup>
Her hand on her bosom, her head on her knee,
Sing willow, willow, willow.

The fresh streams ran by her and murmured her moans,
 Sing willow, willow, willow;
 Her salt tears fell from her and softened the 45 stones,
 Sing willow—
 [to EMILIA] Lay by these.° [sings]
 willow, willow.
 [to EMILIA] Prithee hie° thee—he'll come anon.°
 [sings]
 Sing all a green willow must be my garland.
 50 Let nobody blame him, his scorn I approve.
 Nay, that's not next. Hark, who is't that knocks?
 EMILIA It's the wind.
 DESDEMONA [sings]
 I called my love false love, but what said he then?⁵
 Sing willow, willow, willow;
 55 If I court more women, you'll couch with more
 men.
 [to EMILIA] So, get thee gone, good night. Mine eyes do itch—
 Doth that bode° weeping?
 EMILIA 'Tis neither here nor
 there.
 DESDEMONA I have heard it said so. O, these men, these men!⁶
 60 Dost thou in conscience think—tell me, Emilia—
 That there be women do abuse their husbands
 In such gross kind?°
 EMILIA There be some such, no
 question.

DESDEMONA Wouldst thou do such a deed for all the world?
 EMILIA Why, would not you?
 DESDEMONA No, by this heavenly light!
 EMILIA Nor I neither, by this heavenly light:
 65 I might do't as well i'th' dark.
 DESDEMONA Wouldst thou do such a deed for all the
 world?
 EMILIA The world's a huge thing: it is a great price for a small vice.
 DESDEMONA In troth, I think thou wouldst not.
 70 EMILIA In troth, I think I should—and undo't when I had done. Marry, I would not do such a thing for a joint ring,<sup>7</sup> nor for measures of lawn,<sup>o</sup> nor for gowns, petticoats,
 nor caps, nor any petty exhibition.<sup>o</sup> But for all the whole world—'Uds<sup>o</sup> pity! who would not make her 75 husband
 a cuckold to make him a monarch? I should venture purgatory for't.
 DESDEMONA Beshrew me if I would do such a wrong
 for the whole world!
 EMILIA Why, the wrong is but a wrong i'th' world;
 80 and having the world for your labor, 'tis a wrong in your own
 world, and you might quickly make it right.
 DESDEMONA I do not think there is any such woman.
 EMILIA Yes, a dozen; and as many to'th' vantage as 85 would store the world they played for.<sup>8</sup>
 But I do think it is their husbands' faults<sup>9</sup>

If wives do fall. Say that they slack their duties<sup>o</sup>
 And pour our treasures into foreign laps;<sup>1</sup>
 Or else break out in peevish jealousies,
 Throwing restraint upon us; or say they strike us,
 90 Or scant our former having in despite.<sup>2</sup>
 Why, we have galls;<sup>o</sup> and though we have some grace,<sup>3</sup>
 Yet have we some revenge. Let husbands know Their wives have sense like them. They see, and smell,
 95 And have their palates both for sweet and sour,
 As husbands have. What is it that they do
 When they change us for others? Is it sport?
 I think it is. And doth affection<sup>o</sup> breed it?
 I think it doth. Is't frailty that thus errs?
 100 It is so too. And have not we affections, Desires for sport, and frailty, as men have?
 Then let them use us well; else let them know,
 The ills we do, their ills instruct us so.
 DESDEMONA Good night, good night. God me such uses<sup>o</sup> send,
 105 Not to pick bad from bad, but by bad, mend!<sup>4</sup>
Exeunt.

Endnotes

- Note 4.3: Location: Scene continues. Return to reference 4.3
- Note 1: To “unpin” a woman was to undo her dress, by the removal of pins. Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Lines 30–52 (“I . . . next”) do not appear in Q. Return to reference 2
- Note 3: I can barely bring myself not to. Return to reference 3
- Note 4: A conventional symbol of disappointed love. Return to reference 4

- Note 5: Lines 54–56 do not appear in Q.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Lines 59–62 do not appear in Q.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: A cheap ring in separable halves.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: And as many more as it would take to populate the world they gained by doing it.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Lines 86–103 do not appear in Q.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: And give the semen that belongs to us to other women.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Or reduce our allowances out of spite.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Capacity for goodness, forgiveness.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Not to take bad behavior as an example to be followed, but to learn from it what to avoid.Return to reference 4

Notes

- °: immediatelyReturn to reference °
- °: it doesn't matterReturn to reference °
- °: make hasteReturn to reference °
- °: lowerReturn to reference °
- °: put these things asideReturn to reference °
- °: hurryReturn to reference °
- °: straightawayReturn to reference °
- °: foretellReturn to reference °
- °: fashionReturn to reference °
- °: linenReturn to reference °
- °: giftReturn to reference °
- °: God'sReturn to reference °
- °: marital dutiesReturn to reference °
- °: tempersReturn to reference °
- °: lustReturn to reference °
- °: habitsReturn to reference °

5.1

Enter IAGO and RODERIGO.

IAGO Here, stand behind this bulk, o straight<sup>1</sup> will he come.

Wear thy good rapier bare, and put it home. o
Quick, quick, fear nothing! I'll be at thy elbow.
It makes us or it mars us; think on that
And fix most firm thy resolution.

5 RODERIGO Be near at hand; I may miscarry in't.

IAGO Here, at thy hand. Be bold, and take thy stand.

[Stands aside.]

RODERIGO I have no great devotion to the deed,
And yet he hath given me satisfying reasons;
'Tis but a man gone. Forth my sword: he dies!

10 IAGO I have rubbed this young quat o almost to the sense, <sup>2</sup>

And he grows angry. Now, whether he kill Cassio
Or Cassio him, or each do kill the other,
Every way makes my gain. Live Roderigo, o
He calls me to a restitution large 15 Of gold and jewels that I bobbed from him o
As gifts to Desdemona.

It must not be. If Cassio do remain,
He hath a daily beauty in his life
That makes me ugly; and besides, the Moor
20 May unfold o me to him; there stand I in much peril.
No, he must die. But so—I hear him coming.

Enter CASSIO

RODERIGO I know his gait; 'tis he. Villain, thou diest!

[Thrusts at CASSIO.]

CASSIO That thrust had been mine enemy indeed,
25 But that my coat is better o than thou know'st.

I will make proof of o thine. [Wounds RODERIGO.]

RODERIGO

O, I am slain!

[IAGO wounds CASSIO in the leg and exits.]

CASSIO I am maimed forever! Help, ho! murder! murder!

Enter OTHELLO.

OTHELLO The voice of Cassio. Iago keeps his word.

RODERIGO O, villain that I am!

OTHELLO It is even so.

CASSIO O, help ho! light! a surgeon!

30

OTHELLO 'Tis he. O brave Iago, honest and just,
That hast such noble sense of thy friend's wrong!
Thou teachest me. Minion, o your dear lies dead,
And your unblest fate hies. o Strumpet, I come.
Forth of o my heart those charms, thine eyes, are 35 blotted.

Thy bed, lust-stained, shall with lust's blood be spotted.

Exit OTHELLO.

Enter LODOVICO and GRATIANO.

CASSIO What ho! no watch? no passage? o Murder, murder!

GRATIANO 'Tis some mischance; the voice is very direful.

CASSIO O help!

LODOVICO Hark!

40

RODERIGO O wretched villain!

LODOVICO Two or three groan. 'Tis heavy o night;
These may be counterfeits; let's think't unsafe
To come into o the cry without more help.

45

RODERIGO Nobody come? Then shall I bleed to death.

Enter IAGO with a light.

LODOVICO Hark.

GRATIANO Here's one comes in his shirt, with light
and weapons.

IAGO Who's there? Whose noise is this that cries on murder?

LODOVICO We do not know.

IAGO Do not you hear a cry?

CASSIO Here, here! for heaven's sake, help me!

50 IAGO What's the matter?

GRATIANO This is Othello's ancient, as I take it.

LODOVICO The same indeed, a very valiant fellow.

IAGO What are you here that cry so grievously?

CASSIO Iago? O, I am spoiled, undone by villains! Give me some help.

55 IAGO O me, lieutenant! What villains have done this?

CASSIO I think that one of them is hereabout And cannot make away.

IAGO O treacherous villains!

[to LODOVICO and GRATIANO] What are you there?

Come

in, and give some help.

60 RODERIGO O, help me there!

CASSIO That's one of them.

IAGO O murd'rous slave! O villain!

[Stabs RODERIGO.]

RODERIGO O damned Iago! O inhuman dog!

IAGO Kill men i'th' dark?—Where be these bloody thieves?—

How silent is this town!—Ho, murder, murder!—

65 [to LODOVICO and GRATIANO] What may you be? Are you of good or evil?

LODOVICO As you shall prove us, praise us.

IAGO Signor Lodovico?

LODOVICO He, sir.

IAGO I cry you mercy. Here's Cassio hurt by villains.
 GRATIANO Cassio?
 70 IAGO How is't, brother?
 CASSIO My leg is cut in two.
 IAGO Marry, heaven forbid!
 Light, gentlemen. I'll bind it with my shirt.
Enter BIANCA.
 BIANCA What is the matter, ho? Who is't that cried?
 IAGO Who is't that cried?
 BIANCA O, my dear Cassio!
 75 My sweet Cassio! O Cassio, Cassio, Cassio!
 IAGO O notable strumpet! Cassio, may you suspect
 Who they should be that have thus mangled you?
 CASSIO No.
 GRATIANO I am sorry to find you thus; I have been 80 to seek
 you.
 IAGO Lend me a garter.<sup>3</sup> So . . . O for a chair<sup>o</sup>
 To bear him easily hence!
 BIANCA Alas, he faints! O Cassio, Cassio, Cassio!
 IAGO Gentlemen all, I do suspect this trash
 To be a party in this injury.—
 85 Patience awhile, good Cassio.—Come, come!
 Lend me a light. Know we this face or no?
 Alas! my friend and my dear countryman,
 Roderigo! No—yes, sure! O heaven, Roderigo!
 GRATIANO What, of Venice?
 IAGO Even he, sir. Did you
 90 know him?
 GRATIANO Know him? Ay.
 IAGO Signor Gratiano? I cry your gentle pardon.
 These bloody accidents must excuse my manners
 That so neglected you.
 GRATIANO I am glad to see you.
 IAGO How do you, Cassio? O, a chair, a chair!
 95

GRATIANO Roderigo?

IAGO He, he, 'tis he. [Enter attendants with a litter.]

O, that's well said, the chair.
Some good man bear him carefully from hence;
I'll fetch the general's surgeon.—For you, mistress,
Save you your labor.—He that lies slain here, Cassio, 100 Was my dear friend. What malice was between you?

CASSIO None in the world, nor do I know the man.

IAGO [to BIANCA] What, look you pale? [To attendants] O, bear him out o'th'air.<sup>4</sup>

[Exeunt attendants with CASSIO in the litter and with RODERIGO 's body.]

Stay you, good gentlemen.—Look you pale,
mistress?—

Do you perceive the gastness<sup>o</sup> of her eye?—
105 Nay, if you stare, we shall hear more anon.—
Behold her well; I pray you look upon her.
Do you see, gentlemen? Nay, guiltiness will speak
Though tongues were out of use.

Enter EMILIA.

EMILIA Alas, what is the matter? what is the matter,
110 husband?

IAGO Cassio hath here been set on in the dark
By Roderigo and fellows that are scaped.
He's almost slain, and Roderigo quite dead.

EMILIA Alas, good gentleman! alas, good Cassio!

IAGO This is the fruits of whoring. Prithee, Emilia, 115 Go know of Cassio where he supped tonight.—
What, do you shake at that?

BIANCA He supped at my house, but I therefore shake not.

IAGO O did he so? I charge you go with me.

EMILIA O fie upon thee, strumpet!
120

BIANCA I am no strumpet, but of life as honest
 As you that thus abuse me.

EMILIA As I? Fie upon thee!

IAGO Kind gentlemen, let's go see poor Cassio dressed.<sup>5</sup>—

Come, mistress, you must tell's another tale.
 Emilia, run you to the citadel

125 And tell my lord and lady what hath happed.
 [Exit EMILIA.]

Will you go on afore? Exeunt [all but
 IAGO].

This is the night
 That either makes me or fordoes<sup>o</sup> me quite. [Exit.]

Endnotes

- Note 5.1: Location: A street in Cyprus.Return to reference 5.1
- Note 1: Right away.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: To the quick.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: A band worn as a sash or belt. Iago wants to use one as a tourniquet.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Out of the open air (thought to be bad for wounds).Return to reference 4
- Note 5: That is, see his wound dressed.Return to reference 5

Notes

- °: shop stallReturn to reference °
- °: drive it into himReturn to reference °
- °: pimpleReturn to reference °
- °: if Roderigo livesReturn to reference °
- °: defrauded him ofReturn to reference °
- °: revealReturn to reference °
- °: thicker; more armoredReturn to reference °
- °: testReturn to reference °

- °: hussy (Desdemona)Return to reference °
- °: damnation hurries onReturn to reference °
- °: out ofReturn to reference °
- °: passerbyReturn to reference °
- °: darkReturn to reference °
- °: go nearReturn to reference °
- °: litterReturn to reference °
- °: terrorReturn to reference °
- °: undoesReturn to reference °

5.2

Enter OTHELLO with a light, DESDEMONA in her bed
[asleep].

OTHELLO It is the cause,<sup>1</sup> it is the cause, my soul.
Let me not name it to you, you chaste stars.
It is the cause. Yet I'll not shed her blood,
Nor scar that whiter skin of hers than snow,
And smooth as monumental alabaster.<sup>o</sup>
5 Yet she must die, else she'll betray more men.
Put out the light, and then put out the light.<sup>2</sup>
If I quench thee, thou flaming minister,<sup>o</sup>
I can again thy former light restore,
Should I repent me. But once put out thy light,
10 Thou cunning'st pattern of excelling nature,<sup>3</sup>
I know not where is that Promethean heat<sup>4</sup>
That can thy light relume.<sup>o</sup> When I have plucked thy rose
I cannot give it vital growth again;
It needs must wither. I'll smell thee on the tree.
15 [He smells, then kisses her.]
O balmy breath, that dost almost persuade Justice to break her sword! One more; one more.
[He kisses her.]
Be thus when thou art dead, and I will kill thee
And love thee after. One more, and that's the last.
He kisses her.
So sweet was ne'er so fatal. I must weep,
20 But they are cruel tears. This sorrow's heavenly:
It strikes where it doth love.<sup>5</sup> She wakes.
DESDEMONA Who's there? Othello?
OTHELLO Ay, Desdemona.
DESDEMONA Will you come to bed, my lord?
OTHELLO Have you prayed tonight, Desdemon?

25 DESDEMONA Ay,
 my lord.
 OTHELLO If you bethink yourself of any crime
 Unreconciled as yet to heaven and grace,
 Solicit<sup>o</sup> for it straight.
 DESDEMONA Alack, my lord, what may you mean by
 that?
 30 OTHELLO Well, do it, and be brief; I will walk by.
 I would not kill thy unprepared spirit.
 No, heavens forfend! I would not kill thy soul.
 DESDEMONA Talk you of killing?
 OTHELLO Ay, I do.
 DESDEMONA Then heaven
 Have mercy on me!
 OTHELLO Amen, with all my heart!
 DESDEMONA If you say so, I hope you will not kill
 35 me.
 OTHELLO Humh.
 DESDEMONA And yet I fear you, for you're fatal then When your eyes roll so. Why I should fear, I know
 not,
 Since guiltiness I know not; but yet I feel I fear.
 OTHELLO Think on thy sins.
 DESDEMONA They are loves I bear to
 40 you.
 OTHELLO Ay, and for that thou diest.
 DESDEMONA That death's unnatural that kills for loving.
 Alas, why gnaw you so your nether lip?
 Some bloody passion shakes your very frame.
 These are portents; but yet I hope, I hope,
 45 They do not point on me.
 OTHELLO Peace, and be still.
 DESDEMONA I will so. What's the matter?
 OTHELLO That
 handkerchief,

Which I so loved and gave thee, thou gav'st to Cassio.

DESDEMONA No, by my life and soul! Send for the man

And ask him.

50 OTHELLO Sweet soul, take heed; take heed of perjury;

Thou art on thy deathbed.

DESDEMONA Ay, but not yet to die.

OTHELLO Presently.°

Therefore confess thee freely of thy sin;

55 For to deny each article with oath
Cannot remove nor choke the strong conception
That I do groan withal.° Thou art to die.

DESDEMONA Then Lord have mercy on me!

OTHELLO I say
amen.

60 DESDEMONA And have you mercy too! I never did Offend you in my life, never loved Cassio
But with such general warranty of heaven
As I might love. I never gave him token.

OTHELLO By heaven, I saw my handkerchief in's
hand!

65 O perjured woman! thou dost stone° my heart,
And makes me call what I intend to do
A murder, which I thought a sacrifice.
I saw the handkerchief.

DESDEMONA He found it then.
I never gave it him. Send for him hither.
Let him confess a truth.

OTHELLO He hath confessed.

DESDEMONA What, my lord?

70 OTHELLO That he hath used thee.

DESDEMONA How? unlawfully?

OTHELLO

Ay.

DESDEMONA He will not say so.

OTHELLO No, his mouth is stopped.

Honest Iago hath ta'en order for't.

DESDEMONA O, my fear interprets! What, is he dead?

75 OTHELLO Had all his hairs been lives, my great revenge

Had stomach for them all.

DESDEMONA [weeping] Alas, he is betrayed and I undone!

OTHELLO Out, strumpet! Weep'st thou for him to my face?

DESDEMONA O banish me, my lord, but kill me not!

80 OTHELLO [attacking her] Down, strumpet!

DESDEMONA Kill me tomorrow, let me live tonight!

OTHELLO Nay, if you strive—

DESDEMONA But half an hour!

OTHELLO Being done, there is no pause.<sup>7</sup>

DESDEMONA But while I say one prayer!

OTHELLO It is too late.

Smothers her.

85 DESDEMONA O Lord, Lord, Lord!

EMILIA calls within My lord, my lord! What ho! My lord,
my lord!

OTHELLO What noise is this? Not dead? not yet quite dead?

I that am cruel am yet merciful;

I would not have thee linger in thy pain.

So, so.

90 EMILIA within What ho? my lord, my lord!

OTHELLO

Who's

there?

EMILIA [within] O good my lord, I would speak a word with you.

OTHELLO [calling] Yes.—'Tis Emilia.—[calling] By and by.◊—She's dead.

'Tis like she comes to speak of Cassio's death.

95 The noise was high.◊ Ha, no more moving?
Still as the grave. Shall she come in? Were't good?
I think she stirs again. No. What's best to do?
If she come in, she'll sure speak to my wife.
My wife, my wife! What wife? I have no wife.

100 O insupportable! O heavy hour!
Methinks it should be now a huge eclipse
Of sun and moon, and that th'affrighted globe
Should yawn at alteration.8

EMILIA [within] I do beseech you
That I may speak with you. O good my lord!

105 OTHELLO I had forgot thee. O, come in, Emilia.
Soft,◊ by and by; let me the curtains draw.

[He closes the bed curtains.]

Where art thou? What's the matter with thee now?

[He unlocks the door.] Enter EMILIA.

EMILIA O my good lord, yonder's foul murders done!

OTHELLO What? now?

110 EMILIA But◊ now, my lord.

OTHELLO It is the very error◊ of the moon;
She comes more nearer earth than she was wont
And makes men mad.

EMILIA Cassio, my lord, hath killed
A young Venetian called Roderigo.

115 OTHELLO Roderigo killed? and Cassio killed?

EMILIA No, Cassio is not killed.

OTHELLO Not Cassio killed? Then murder's out of tune,
 And sweet revenge grows harsh.
 DESDEMONA O falsely, falsely murdered!
 EMILIA O Lord! what cry is that?
 120 OTHELLO That? What?
 EMILIA Out and alas! that was my lady's voice.
       [She opens the bed curtains.]
 Help, help ho, help! O, lady, speak again!
 Sweet Desdemona, O sweet mistress, speak!
 DESDEMONA A guiltless death I die.
 125 EMILIA O, who hath done this deed?
 DESDEMONA Nobody. I myself. Farewell.
 Commend me to my kind lord. O, farewell!
       She dies.
 OTHELLO Why, how should she be murdered?
 EMILIA Alas, who knows?
 OTHELLO You heard her say herself it was not I.
 130 EMILIA She said so; I must needs report the truth.
 OTHELLO She's like a liar gone to burning hell!
 'Twas I that killed her!
 EMILIA O, the more angel she,
 And you the blacker devil!
 OTHELLO She turned to folly,<sup>o</sup> and she was a whore.
 135 EMILIA Thou dost belie her, and thou art a devil.
 OTHELLO She was false as water.
 EMILIA Thou art rash as fire to say
 That she was false. O, she was heavenly true!
 OTHELLO Cassio did top her. Ask thy husband else.<sup>o</sup>
 O, I were damned beneath all depth in hell
 140 But that I did proceed upon just grounds
 To this extremity! Thy husband knew it all.
 EMILIA My husband?
 OTHELLO Thy husband.

145 EMILIA That she was false to wedlock?
 OTHELLO Ay, with Cassio. Had she been true,
 If heaven would make me such another world
 Of one entire and perfect chrysolite,<sup>o</sup>
 I'd not have sold her for it.
 EMILIA My husband?
 150 OTHELLO Ay, 'twas he that told me on her first.
 An honest man he is, and hates the slime
 That sticks on filthy deeds.
 EMILIA My husband?
 OTHELLO What needs this iteration,<sup>o</sup> woman?
 I say, thy husband.
 155 EMILIA O mistress, villainy hath made mocks with<sup>o</sup> love!<sup>9</sup>
 My husband say she was false?
 OTHELLO He, woman;
 I say, thy husband; dost understand the word?
 My friend, thy husband; honest, honest Iago.
 EMILIA If he say so, may his pernicious soul
 Rot half a grain a day! He lies to th'heart.
 160 She was too fond of her most filthy bargain.<sup>1</sup>
 OTHELLO Ha?
 EMILIA Do thy worst.
 This deed of thine is no more worthy heaven
 Than thou wast worthy her.
 OTHELLO Peace, you were best!<sup>o</sup> 165 EMILIA Thou hast not half that power to do me harm
 As I have to be hurt. O gull,<sup>o</sup> O dolt!
 As ignorant as dirt! Thou hast done a deed—
 [He draws his sword.]
 I care not for thy sword; I'll make thee known,
 Though I lost twenty lives. Help, help, ho, help!
 170 The Moor hath killed my mistress! Murder, murder!
Enter MONTANO, GRATIANO, IAGO, and others.

MONTANO What is the matter? How now, general?
 EMILIA O, are you come, Iago? You have done well,
 That men must lay their murders on your neck.
 GRATIANO What is the matter?
 175 EMILIA [to IAGO] Disprove this villain, if thou be'st a
 man.
 He says thou told'st him that his wife was false.
 I know thou didst not; thou'rt not such a villain.
 Speak, for my heart is full.
 IAGO I told him what I thought, and told no more 180 Than what he found himself was apt and true.
 EMILIA But did you ever tell him she was false?
 IAGO I did.
 EMILIA You told a lie, an odious damnèd lie!
 Upon my soul, a lie! a wicked lie!
 185 She false with Cassio? Did you say with Cassio?
 IAGO With Cassio, mistress! Go to, charm<sup>o</sup> your tongue!
 EMILIA I will not charm my tongue; I am bound to
 speak:
 My mistress here lies murdered in her bed—<sup>2</sup>
 ALL O heavens forfend!—
 190 EMILIA [to IAGO] And your reports have set the murder on.
 OTHELLO Nay, stare not, masters; it is true indeed.
 GRATIANO 'Tis a strange truth.
 MONTANO O monstrous act!
 EMILIA Villainy, villainy, villainy!
 195 I think upon't, I think I smell't. O villainy!
 I thought so then.—I'll kill myself for grief!
 O villainy! villainy!
 IAGO What, are you mad? I charge you get you home!
 EMILIA Good gentlemen, let me have leave to 200 speak.

'Tis proper I obey him, but not now.
Perchance, Iago, I will ne'er go home.

OTHELLO O! O! O!

Falls on the bed.

EMILIA Nay, lay thee down and roar,
For thou hast killed the sweetest innocent
205 That e'er did lift up eye.°

OTHELLO [rising] O, she was foul!
[to GRATIANO] I scarce did know you, uncle. There lies your niece,
Whose breath, indeed, these hands have newly stopped.

I know this act shows° horrible and grim.

GRATIANO Poor Desdemon, I am glad thy father's 210 dead;

Thy match° was mortal to him, and pure grief
Shore his old thread in twain.³ Did he live now,
This sight would make him do a desperate turn;°
Yea, curse his better angel from his side
And fall to reprobance.⁴

215 OTHELLO 'Tis pitiful; but yet Iago knows
That she with Cassio hath the act of shame
A thousand times committed. Cassio confessed it,
And she did gratify his amorous works
With that recognizance° and pledge of love
220 Which I first gave her. I saw it in his hand;
It was a handkerchief, an antique token
My father gave my mother.

EMILIA O God! O heavenly God!

IAGO 'Swounds, hold your peace!

225 EMILIA 'Twill out, 'twill out! I peace?
No, I will speak as liberal as the north;⁵
Let heaven and men and devils, let them all,
All, all cry shame against me, yet I'll speak!

IAGO Be wise, and get you home.
 [IAGO threatens EMILIA with his sword.]
 EMILIA I will not!
 GRATIANO Fie! Your sword upon a woman?
 230 EMILIA O thou dull Moor, that handkerchief thou speak'st of
 I found by fortune and did give my husband;
 For often with a solemn earnestness—
 More than indeed belonged to such a trifle—
 He begged of me to steal't.
 IAGO Villainous whore!
 235 EMILIA She give it Cassio? No, alas, I found it,
 And I did giv't my husband.
 IAGO Filth, thou liest!
 EMILIA By heaven, I do not! I do not, gentlemen.—
 O murderous coxcomb!◊ What should such a fool
 Do with so good a wife?
 240 OTHELLO Are there no stones◊ in
 heaven
 But what serves for the thunder? Precious◊ villain!
The Moor runs at IAGO. [MONTANO disarms
 OTHELLO.]
 IAGO [stabs] his wife.
 GRATIANO The woman falls; sure he hath killed his wife.
 EMILIA Ay, ay. O lay me by my mistress' side. Exit
 IAGO.
 GRATIANO He's gone, but his wife's killed.
 245 MONTANO 'Tis a notorious villain. Take you this weapon,
 Which I have here recovered from the Moor.
 Come, guard the door without; let him not pass,
 But kill him rather. I'll after that same villain,
 For 'tis a damnèd slave.
Exeunt MONTANO, GRATIANO [and all but OTHELLO
and EMILIA].

OTHELLO I am not valiant neither,
 But every puny whipster<sup>o</sup> gets my sword.
 250 But why should honor outlive honesty?<sup>6</sup>
 Let it go all.

EMILIA What did thy song bode, lady?<sup>7</sup>
 Hark, canst thou hear me? I will play the swan,
 And die in music. [Sings] "Willow, willow, willow."
 Moor, she was chaste. She loved thee, cruel Moor.
 255 So come my soul to bliss as I speak true!
 So speaking as I think, alas, I die. She dies.

OTHELLO I have another weapon in this chamber;
 It was a sword of Spain, the ice-brook's temper.<sup>o</sup>
 O, here it is.—Uncle, I must come forth.
 260 GRATIANO [within] If thou attempt it, it will cost thee
 dear;
 Thou hast no weapon and perforce must suffer.

OTHELLO Look in upon me then and speak with me,
 Or, naked<sup>o</sup> as I am, I will assault thee.
 [Enter GRATIANO.]

GRATIANO What is the matter?

OTHELLO Behold, I have a
 265 weapon;
 A better never did itself sustain
 Upon a soldier's thigh. I have seen the day
 That with this little arm and this good sword
 I have made my way through more impediments
 Than twenty times your stop.<sup>o</sup> But O, vain boast!
 270 Who can control his fate? 'Tis not so now.
 Be not afraid, though you do see me weaponed.<sup>8</sup>
 Here is my journey's end, here is my butt<sup>o</sup>
 And very seamark<sup>o</sup> of my utmost sail.
 Do you go back dismayed? 'Tis a lost<sup>o</sup> fear.
 275 Man but a rush<sup>o</sup> against Othello's breast
 And he retires.<sup>o</sup> Where should Othello go?
 [to DESDEMONA] Now, how dost thou look now? O ill-starred wench,

Pale as thy smock. When we shall meet at count,<sup>o</sup>
This look of thine will hurl my soul from heaven, 280 And fiends will snatch at it.

[He touches her.]

Cold, cold, my girl?
Even like thy chastity. O cursèd, cursèd slave!
Whip me, ye devils,
From the possession of this heavenly sight!
Blow me about in winds, roast me in sulfur,
285 Wash me in steep-down gulfs of liquid fire!
O Desdemon! dead Desdemon; dead. O, O!

Enter LODOVICO, CASSIO in a chair, MONTANO, and IAGO, with OFFICERS.

LODOVICO Where is this rash and most unfortunate
man?

OTHELLO That's he that was Othello; here I am.

LODOVICO Where is that viper? Bring the villain
290 forth.

OTHELLO I look down towards his feet,<sup>9</sup> but that's a fable;

If that thou be'st a devil, I cannot kill thee.

[Wounds IAGO.]

LODOVICO Wrench his sword from him.

IAGO I bleed, sir, but not killed.

OTHELLO I am not sorry, neither; I'd have thee live,
For in my sense<sup>o</sup> 'tis happiness to die.

LODOVICO O thou Othello, that was once so good,
295 Fallen in the practice<sup>o</sup> of a cursèd slave,
What shall be said to thee?

OTHELLO Why, anything:
An honorable murderer, if you will;
For naught I did in hate, but all in honor.

300

LODOVICO This wretch hath part confessed his villainy.
 Did you and he consent in Cassio's death?
 OTHELLO Ay.
 CASSIO Dear general, I never gave you cause.
 OTHELLO I do believe it, and I ask your pardon.
 305 Will you, I pray, demand<sup>o</sup> that demi-devil
 Why he hath thus ensnared my soul and body?
 IAGO Demand me nothing. What you know, you know.
 From this time forth I never will speak word.
 LODOVICO What, not to pray?
 GRATIANO Torments<sup>o</sup> will ope your 310 lips.
 OTHELLO Well, thou dost best.
 LODOVICO Sir, you shall understand what hath befall'n,
 Which, as I think, you know not. Here is a letter
 Found in the pocket of the slain Roderigo,
 And here another. The one of them imports 315 The death of Cassio, to be undertook
 By Roderigo.
 OTHELLO O villain!
 CASSIO Most heathenish and most gross!
<sup>o</sup>
 LODOVICO Now here's another discontented paper
 Found in his pocket too; and this, it seems,
 320 Roderigo meant t'have sent this damnèd villain,
 But that, belike,<sup>o</sup> Iago in the interim
 Came in and satisfied him.
 OTHELLO O thou pernicious caitiff!
<sup>o</sup>—
 How came you, Cassio, by that handkerchief
 That was my wife's?
 CASSIO I found it in my chamber;
 325 And he himself confessed it, but even now,

That there he dropped it for a special purpose
Which wrought to his desire.

OTHELLO O fool, fool, fool!

CASSIO There is besides in Roderigo's letter
How he upbraids Iago that he made him
330 Brave<sup>o</sup> me upon the watch, whereon it came
That I was cast;<sup>o</sup> and even but now he spake,
After long seeming dead, Iago hurt him,
Iago set him on.

LODOVICO [to OTHELLO] You must forsake this room
335 and go with us.

Your power and your command is taken off,
And Cassio rules in Cyprus. For this slave,
If there be any cunning cruelty
That can torment him much and hold him<sup>o</sup> long,
It shall be his. You shall close<sup>o</sup> prisoner rest
340 Till that the nature of your fault be known To the Venetian state. [to officers] Come, bring away.

OTHELLO Soft you;<sup>o</sup> a word or two before you go.
I have done the state some service, and they know't;

345 No more of that. I pray you, in your letters,
When you shall these unlucky deeds relate,
Speak of me as I am. Nothing extenuate,
Nor set down aught in malice. Then must you speak
Of one that loved not wisely but too well;
Of one not easily jealous but, being wrought,
350 Perplexed in the extreme; of one whose hand,
Like the base Judean,<sup>1</sup> threw a pearl away Richer than all his tribe, of one whose subdued<sup>o</sup>
eyes,

Albeit unused to the melting mood,
Drops tears as fast as the Arabian trees
355

Their medicinable gum.◦ Set you down this;
 And say besides that in Aleppo once,
 Where a malignant and a turbaned Turk
 Beat a Venetian and traduced the state,
 I took by th'throat the circumcised dog
 And smote him—thus!
He stabs himself.
 LODOVICO O bloody period!◦
 GRATIANO All that is spoke is marred.
 OTHELLO [to DESDEMONA] I kissed thee ere I killed
 thee.
 No way but this,
 Killing myself, to die upon a kiss.
He [kisses DESDEMONA and] dies.
 CASSIO This did I fear, but thought he had no
 weapon;
 For he was great of heart.
 LODOVICO [to IAGO] O Spartan dog,<sup>2</sup>
 More fell◦ than anguish, hunger, or the sea,
 Look on the tragic loading of this bed:
 This is thy work. The object poisons sight;
 Let it be hid. Gratiano, keep the house
 And seize upon the fortunes of the Moor,
 For they succeed on you. [to CASSIO] To you, lord
 governor,
 Remains the censure◦ of this hellish villain;
 The time, the place, the torture—O, enforce it!
 Myself will straight aboard, and to the state
 This heavy act with heavy heart relate.
Exeunt.

- Note 5.2: Location: Desdemona and Othello's bedroom.Return to reference 5.2
- Note 1: That is, Desdemona's infidelity is the "cause" of—the thing that demands—justice, which Othello sees himself as being required to execute.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: This and the following lines compare the light of Othello's lamp or torch to Desdemona's "light" of life.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: You most cleverly wrought example of nature's surpassing work.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Life-giving fire. In Greek mythology, Prometheus stole fire from heaven to give it to humankind; in a different tradition, he is credited with animating humankind from clay.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: See Hebrews 12:6: "For whom the Lord loveth, he chasteneth."Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Cannot change the strong conviction I have of your guilt (or the firm plan to kill you), which makes me groan so. The metaphor is from childbirth.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Now that I've started, there's no stopping.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Should gape at the change. Earthquakes were associated with eclipses.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Lines 155–58 do not appear in Q.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: That is, her marriage, or her husband.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Lines 189–98 do not appear in Q.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Cut the thread of his life.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Suicide, the unforgivably sinful act of despair.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: As freely as the north wind.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Why should military reputation outlive integrity?Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Lines 252–54 ("What . . . willow.' ") do not appear in Q.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Lines 272–78 do not appear in Q.Return to reference 8

- Note 9: To look for the devil's cloven feet.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Probably alludes to Judas Iscariot, betrayer of Jesus. "Base Indian," in the quarto, suggests naive gullibility rather than malice.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: A bloodhound; hence a relentless, bloodthirsty man. Also, the people of ancient Sparta were reputed to be inhumane and unfeeling.Return to reference 2

Notes

- °: stone used in tombsReturn to reference °
- °: light that serves meReturn to reference °
- °: relightReturn to reference °
- °: ask forgivenessReturn to reference °
- °: immediatelyReturn to reference °
- °: hardenReturn to reference °
- °: in a momentReturn to reference °
- °: commotion was loudReturn to reference °
- °: quietReturn to reference °
- °: justReturn to reference °
- °: deviationReturn to reference °
- °: wantonnessReturn to reference °
- °: if you doubt itReturn to reference °
- °: topazReturn to reference °
- °: repetitionReturn to reference °
- °: atReturn to reference °
- °: it would be best for youReturn to reference °
- °: foolReturn to reference °
- °: silenceReturn to reference °
- °: (to heaven)Return to reference °
- °: appearsReturn to reference °
- °: marriageReturn to reference °
- °: actReturn to reference °
- °: tokenReturn to reference °
- °: foolReturn to reference °

- °: thunderboltsReturn to reference °
- °: absoluteReturn to reference °
- °: insignificant personReturn to reference °
- °: tempered in icy waterReturn to reference °
- °: unarmedReturn to reference °
- °: power to stopReturn to reference °
- °: destinationReturn to reference °
- °: beaconReturn to reference °
- °: an unnecessaryReturn to reference °
- °: aim even a reedReturn to reference °
- °: falls backReturn to reference °
- °: Judgment DayReturn to reference °
- °: state of feelingReturn to reference °
- °: plotReturn to reference °
- °: askReturn to reference °
- °: torturesReturn to reference °
- °: monstrousReturn to reference °
- °: most likelyReturn to reference °
- °: wretchReturn to reference °
- °: defyReturn to reference °
- °: dismissedReturn to reference °
- °: (alive)Return to reference °
- °: tightly confinedReturn to reference °
- °: waitReturn to reference °
- °: (by grief)Return to reference °
- °: myrrhReturn to reference °
- °: conclusionReturn to reference °
- °: cruelReturn to reference °
- °: sentenceReturn to reference °

The Tempest The title of this play, The Tempest, has its roots in the Latin tempestas, meaning “storm,” as well as tempus, or “time”—it is a storm/time drama. The storm is present in the opening stage direction, its sounds preceding any of the words of the play: “A tempestuous noise of thunder and lightning heard.” In the fiction, it is this storm that brings a shipload of dignitaries, on their way back from a wedding in Tunis in Africa, crashing onto a magical island. But the plot and relationships that form the rest of the drama are in their own way also tempestuous: Prospero meets again the brother who stole his dukedom and banished him, and survives an attempt on his life. His daughter, Miranda, sees a man for the first time, falls in love, and becomes engaged. Ferdinand, mourning the death of his father at sea, falls for Miranda before learning that his father miraculously lives. Ariel yearns for freedom from servitude and receives it. In private theaters like Blackfriars—the expensive indoor theater owned by Shakespeare’s company, for which this play was written—play titles were suspended on “title boards.” The word “tempest” would have hung throughout the performance, its meaning changing from literal to figurative as the play progressed.

That the play is equally about time is demonstrated by its conformity—unusual for a Shakespearean drama—to the “unities” of time, place, and action suggested in Aristotle’s Poetics: it happens in real time (between 2 and 6 P.M. in a single afternoon), is staged in one place (a magical island), and concerns—if not analyzed too closely—one action (the tempest and its aftermath). But Shakespeare is usually playful with rules, and this work is no exception. Ferdinand, falling in love with Miranda, says that “ ’tis fresh morning with me / When you are by at night” (3.1.33–34), though, given the play’s time constraints, he has never seen her in the morning or the evening. The story of the drama is beyond time, as is to be expected in a world in which shattered ships can be made instantly whole, wet clothes instantly dry, and swords freeze midstroke. Yet when Prospero, at the end of the play, declares that he will “retire me to my Milan, where / Every third thought shall be my grave” (5.1.312–13), he acknowledges that, magician though he may be, time has aged him, and he must prepare for death. This play, then, simultaneously explores stage, magic, and biological time.

Published for the first time in Shakespeare’s 1623 folio, seven years after the playwright’s death, The Tempest is somewhat easy to date. For a start, we know it to have been performed at court in 1611, and again in 1612–13, when it was one of the fourteen plays put on by Shakespeare’s company for the betrothal of King James’s daughter Elizabeth to Frederick, Elector Palatine of Germany. Indeed, the single version of The Tempest that has come down to us contains details that may have been added specifically for that royal wedding: its “betrothal masque,” featuring Juno, goddess of marriage and childbirth, as well as Iris and Ceres, goddesses of fruitfulness, is particularly suited to a noble marriage, which depended on fertility to ensure the continuance of bloodlines. But the play itself was probably first written around 1609/10; its plot, with its fearful storm and its wrecked seafarers finding themselves on a fertile but troubling island, closely resembles tales of the shipwreck of the Sea Venture onto the Bermudas in 1609, told vividly in this volume by William Strachey. Sometimes Strachey’s own account is said to be behind The Tempest, though it is just as likely that Shakespeare learned the story from returning mariners. The play’s pointed reference to the “still-vexed Bermudas” (1.2.229) ensures that those islands, and their storms, are at the forefront of the audience’s mind, even if—given that the wedding guests are sailing from Africa to Italy—Prospero’s actual island must itself be in the Mediterranean.

The play also touches on different narratives of colonialist expansion. We learn that when Prospero had originally arrived on the island he had been helped by Caliban, who had shown him where the fresh water was, and what berries he could eat. Later, however, Prospero had enslaved Caliban; indeed, he generally calls him “slave” instead of using his name. And while he is kinder to Ariel, Prospero has also enslaved that native island spirit; Ariel does his “master” Prospero’s magical bidding in order to win his longed-for freedom. In these respects, Prospero is a prototypical colonial enslaver. But Shakespeare confuses the narrative by his depiction of Caliban as a victimizer as well as a victim: he is a would-be rapist and killer (he falls victim to the drunken clowns, Stephano and Trinculo, because he thinks they can help him murder Prospero); and his very name seems intended to hint at the word “cannibal.” Moreover, though Caliban maintains that “this island’s mine” (1.2.331), his own right to it is dependent on an earlier act of colonization: his mother, the witch Sycorax, had claimed the island on her arrival and had herself made Ariel a slave, imprisoning him in a cloven pine when he refused to do her bidding. The strange parallels between Prospero and Sycorax may recall English and Spanish competing claims and bad behavior—as in Raleigh’s account of his “discovery” of Guiana in this volume. The play portrays the problems of contentions over ownership for other people’s land and people. At the end of the play, Ariel is finally freed by Prospero: but what will, or should, happen to Caliban?

The Tempest shares with Shakespeare’s other late plays—or “romances,” as they are often called—a set of themes: The Winter’s Tale, Cymbeline, Pericles, and The Tempest are all tragicomedies, meaning that they explore tragic issues but have happy endings; they all feature redemption and forgiveness, and all end with long-separated families coming together; they are all about fathers with daughters of marriageable age; they all contain fantastical plots, lengthy passages of narration, and extraordinarily lyrical poetry. They are also all highly musical. This was partly for practical reasons. Blackfriars, which Shakespeare’s company was able to use from 1608 on, was an enclosed, wooden indoor space, with fine acoustics. And Shakespeare’s company, which became the King’s Men in 1603—technically, servants to King James—now also had access to the court’s leading composers. Robert Johnson (1583–1633), lutenist to Prince Henry, King James’s son, wrote the music for The Tempest. The result is a play in which, like the other late plays, some of the most evocative passages had musical settings and were intended to be sung rather than spoken. Ferdinand is not told that his father has drowned, but instead hears a song about how a drowned man is metamorphosed into something rich and strange: "Those are pearls that were his eyes" (1.2.397). The song's refrain is the sound of a death knell—the bell rung for a funeral—rung under the water by sea nymphs.

But the play also picks up on ideas and themes from the period's earlier drama. Prospero recalls Doctor Faustus. His magic, which comes from books, gives him a sense that he has godlike powers: "I have bedimmed / The noontide sun"; "Graves at my command / Have waked their sleepers" (5.1.41–42, 48–49). When, at the play's close, he determines to burn his books and drown his magic staff, he rejects not just magic but also the claims of earlier drama, and perhaps the theater itself. This play, which some see as the last written solely by Shakespeare, has often been described as Shakespeare's own farewell to the stage. Certainly The Tempest, with its interest in the limitations of knowledge, in the abuse—but also the abusing nature—of power, and in the nature and purpose of art, gathers together many of the preoccupations of Shakespeare's writing career and brings them to a haunting conclusion. At the end of The Tempest, Prospero tells the spectators that he will remain trapped on the island unless released by their applause: "As you from crimes would pardoned be, / Let your indulgence set me free" (Epilogue 19–20). The epilogue may suggest that we, the audience, have found Prospero, a noble magician and magus, imprisoned on an island, and can now decide whether to continue his confinement or, in light of his good deeds, free him. Alternatively, the epilogue suggests that we are enslavers and, at that same shocking moment of discovery, that we can right our wrongs by forgiving and applauding Prospero, the play, and, by extension, Shakespeare.

The Tempest

THE PERSONS OF THE PLAY

PROSPERO, the right Duke of Milan

MIRANDA, daughter to Prospero

ANTONIO, his brother, the usurping Duke of Milan

ALONSO, King of Naples

SEBASTIAN, his brother

FERDINAND, son to Alonso

GONZALO, an honest old councillor

ADRIAN and FRANCISCO, lords

ARIEL, an airy spirit

CALIBAN, a savage and deformed slave

TRINCULO, a jester

STEFANO, a drunken butler

MASTER of a ship

BOATSWAIN

MARINERS

SPIRITS appearing as

IRIS

CERES

JUNO

Nymphs

Reapers

THE SCENE: An uninhabited island.

1.1

A tempestuous noise of thunder and lightning heard.

Enter a ship[ 's] MASTER and a BOATSWAIN.<sup>1</sup>

MASTER Boatswain!

BOATSWAIN Here, Master. What cheer?

MASTER Good,<sup>2</sup> speak to th' mariners. Fall to't yarely,<sup>o</sup> or we run ourselves aground. Bestir, bestir! Exit.

Enter MARINERS.

5 BOATSWAIN Heigh, my hearts!<sup>o</sup> Cheerly, cheerly, my hearts!

Yare, yare! Take in the topsail.<sup>3</sup> Tend<sup>o</sup> to th' Master's whistle.

[to the storm] Blow till thou burst thy wind, if room enough!<sup>4</sup>

Enter ALONSO, SEBASTIAN, ANTONIO, FERDINAND, GONZALO, and others.

ALONSO Good Boatswain, have care. Where's the Master?

10 [to the MARINERS] Play the men!<sup>o</sup>

BOATSWAIN I pray now, keep below.

ANTONIO Where is the Master, Boatswain?

BOATSWAIN Do you not hear him? You mar our labor. Keep your cabins: you do assist the storm!

15 GONZALO Nay, good,<sup>o</sup> be patient.

BOATSWAIN When the sea is. Hence! What cares these roarers for the name of king?<sup>5</sup> To cabin! Silence! Trouble us not.

GONZALO     Good, yet remember whom thou hast aboard.

20     BOATSWAIN     None that I more love than myself. You are a councillor:<sup>6</sup> if you can command these elements to silence
and work the peace of the present,<sup>7</sup> we will not hand<sup>o</sup> a rope more. Use your authority! If you cannot, give thanks
              you have lived so long, and make yourself ready in your cabin
25     for the mischance of the hour, if it so hap.<sup>o</sup> [to the
              MARINERS]
Cheerly, good hearts! [to GONZALO] Out of our way, I say!

Exit [BOATSWAIN with MARINERS].

GONZALO     I have great comfort from this fellow.
              Methinks

              he hath no drowning mark<sup>8</sup> upon him; his complexion is perfect gallows.<sup>9</sup> Stand fast, good Fate, to his hanging;
30     make the rope of his destiny our cable,<sup>1</sup> for our own doth little advantage.<sup>o</sup> If he be not born to be hanged, our case is miserable.

Exeunt [GONZALO, ALONSO, SEBASTIAN, ANTONIO, and FERDINAND].

Enter BOATSWAIN.

BOATSWAIN     Down with the topmast!<sup>2</sup> Yare! Lower, lower!

Bring her to try with main-course.<sup>3</sup> (A cry within.) A plague upon this howling! They are louder than the weather 35 or our office.<sup>4</sup>

Enter SEBASTIAN, ANTONIO, and GONZALO.
Yet again? What do you here? Shall we give o'er<sup>o</sup>
and drown? Have you a mind to sink?
SEBASTIAN A pox o' your throat, you bawling, blasphemous, incharitable dog!
40 BOATSWAIN Work you, then.
ANTONIO Hang, cur! Hang, you whoreson insolent noise-maker! We are less afraid to be drowned than thou art.

GONZALO I'll warrant him from drowning,<sup>5</sup> though<sup>o</sup>
the ship were no stronger than a nutshell and as leaky 45 as an unstanch'd<sup>o</sup> wench.

BOATSWAIN Lay her a-hold, a-hold! Set her two courses!<sup>6</sup>

Off to sea again! Lay her off!

Enter MARINERS, wet.

MARINERS All lost! To prayers, to prayers! All lost!

[Exeunt MARINERS.]

BOATSWAIN What, must our mouths be cold?<sup>7</sup>
50 GONZALO The King and Prince at prayers! Let's assist them, for our case is as theirs.

SEBASTIAN I'm out of patience.

ANTONIO We are merely<sup>o</sup> cheated of our lives by drunkards.

55 This wide-chopped<sup>o</sup> rascal—would thou mightst lie drowning the washing of ten tides!<sup>8</sup> GONZALO He'll be hanged yet, though every drop of water
 swear against it and gape at widest to glut<sup>o</sup> him.
A confused noise within.
 MARINERS [within] Mercy on us! We split, we split!
 Fare
 well, my wife and children! Farewell, brother! We 60 split,
 we split, we split!
[Exit BOATSWAIN.]
 ANTONIO Let's all sink wi'th' King.
 SEBASTIAN Let's take leave of him. Exit [with ANTONIO].
 GONZALO Now would I give a thousand furlongs of sea for 65 an acre of barren ground: long heath, brown furze,<sup>9</sup> anything.
 The wills above be done, but I would fain die a dry death. Exit.

Endnotes

- Note 1.1: Location: A ship at sea.Return to reference 1.1
- Note 1: The Boatswain probably enters after the shipmaster calls him; the latter is perhaps on the upper stage.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Acknowledging the Boatswain's presence; or perhaps short for "good man."Return to reference 2
- Note 3: To reduce the surface area of the sail and thereby lessen the force of the wind pushing the ship toward the island.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Blow as hard as you like, as long as we have room between the ship and the rocks.Return to reference 4

- Note 5: “Roarers,” referring here to the waves, was also a term for riotous people.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Member of the king’s council; also an adviser or persuader.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Of the present circumstances.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Birthmark whose position was held to portend death by drowning. “He that was born to be hanged will never be drowned” was proverbial.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: His physiognomy, or appearance, shows that he will certainly be hanged.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Anchor cable (an anchor is actually useless in a storm).Return to reference 1
- Note 2: To reduce the top weight of the ship and make it more stable.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Bring the ship close to the wind, sailing only with the mainsail.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Duties (in shouting orders).Return to reference 4
- Note 5: I’ll guarantee him against drowning.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Set the foresail in addition to the mainsail.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: To be cold in the mouth—to be dead—was proverbial; may also suggest that the mariners warm their mouths with liquor.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Pirates were hanged on the shore at low-water mark and left there for the ebbing and flowing of three tides.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Heather and gorse—both shrubs that grow in poor soil.Return to reference 9

Notes

- °: promptlyReturn to reference °
- °: hearties Return to reference °
- °: attendReturn to reference °

- °: act like menReturn to reference °
- °: good manReturn to reference °
- °: handle Return to reference °
- °: happenReturn to reference °
- °: goodReturn to reference °
- °: upReturn to reference °
- °: even if Return to reference °
- °: freely menstruatingReturn to reference °
- °: utterly Return to reference °
- °: large-mouthedReturn to reference °
- °: its widest to swallowReturn to reference °

1.2

Enter PROSPERO and MIRANDA.

MIRANDA<sup>1</sup> If by your art,<sup>2</sup> my dearest father, you have Put the wild waters in this roar, allay them.
The sky, it seems, would pour down stinking pitch
But that the sea, mounting to th' welkin's<sup>o</sup> cheek, Dashes the fire out. Oh, I have suffered
5 With those that I saw suffer: a brave<sup>o</sup> vessel—
Who had, no doubt, some noble creature in her—
Dashed all to pieces! Oh, the cry did knock Against my very heart! Poor souls, they perished.
Had I been any god of power, I would
10 Have sunk the sea within the earth or ere<sup>o</sup>
It should the good ship so have swallowed and
The fraughting souls<sup>3</sup> within her.

PROSPERO<sup>4</sup> Be collected.
No more amazement.<sup>o</sup> Tell your piteous<sup>o</sup> heart
There's no harm done.

MIRANDA Oh, woe the day!

PROSPERO No harm.
15 I have done nothing but in care of thee—
Of thee, my dear one, thee, my daughter—who Art ignorant of what thou art, naught knowing
Of whence I am, nor that I am more better<sup>o</sup>
20 Than Prospero, master of a full poor cell<sup>5</sup>
And thy no greater father.

MIRANDA More to know
Did never meddle with<sup>o</sup> my thoughts.

PROSPERO 'Tis time
I should inform thee farther. Lend thy hand
And pluck my magic garment from me.—

[She helps him remove the cloak, and he puts it aside.]

—So,
Lie there, my art. —Wipe thou thine eyes; have 25 comfort.
The direful spectacle of the wreck, which touched
The very virtue of compassion in thee,
I have with such provision<sup>o</sup> in mine art
So safely ordered that there is no soul—
No, not so much perdition<sup>o</sup> as an hair
30 Betid<sup>o</sup> to any creature in the vessel Which<sup>o</sup> thou heard'st cry, which thou saw'st sink. Sit down,
For thou must now know farther.

MIRANDA You have often
Begun to tell me what I am, but stopped
And left me to a bootless inquisition,<sup>o</sup>
35 Concluding, "Stay: not yet."

PROSPERO The hour's now come;
The very minute bids thee ope<sup>o</sup> thine ear.
Obey, and be attentive. Canst thou remember
A time before we came unto this cell?
I do not think thou canst, for then thou wast not 40 Out<sup>o</sup> three years old.

MIRANDA Certainly, sir, I can.

PROSPERO By what? By any other house or person?
Of anything the image tell me that
Hath kept with thy remembrance.

MIRANDA 'Tis far off,
And rather like a dream than an assurance<sup>o</sup>
45 That my remembrance warrants.<sup>o</sup> Had I not Four or five women once that tended me?

PROSPERO Thou hadst, and more, Miranda. But how is it
That this lives in thy mind? What seest thou else
In the dark backward<sup>o</sup> and abysm of time?
50 If thou rememb'rest aught<sup>o</sup> ere thou cam'st here,
How thou cam'st here thou mayst.

MIRANDA
not.

But that I do

PROSPERO Twelve year since, Miranda, twelve year
since,

Thy father was the Duke of Milan<sup>6</sup> and
A prince of power.

55 MIRANDA Sir, are not you my father?

PROSPERO Thy mother was a piece<sup>o</sup> of virtue,<sup>o</sup> and
She said thou wast my daughter, and thy father
Was Duke of Milan, and his only heir
And princess no worse issued.<sup>o</sup>

60 MIRANDA O the heavens!
What foul play had we that we came from thence?
Or blessed<sup>o</sup> was't we did?

PROSPERO Both, both, my girl.
By foul play, as thou say'st, were we heaved thence,
But blessedly holp<sup>o</sup> hither.

MIRANDA Oh, my heart bleeds
To think o'th' teen<sup>o</sup> that I have turned you to,
Which is from<sup>o</sup> my remembrance! Please you,
65 farther.

PROSPERO My brother and thy uncle, called Antonio

—
I pray thee mark me, that a brother should
Be so perfidious!—he whom next<sup>o</sup> thyself
Of all the world I loved, and to him put
The manage<sup>o</sup> of my state, as at that time
70 Through all the signories<sup>o</sup> it was the first
And Prospero the prime<sup>o</sup> duke, being so reputed
In dignity, and for the liberal arts<sup>7</sup>
Without a parallel. Those being all my study,
The government I cast upon my brother
75 And to my state grew stranger, being transported<sup>8</sup>
And rapt in secret studies. Thy false uncle—
Dost thou attend me?

MIRANDA                      Sir, most heedfully.

PROSPERO    Being once perfected how to grant suits,<sup>9</sup>
How to deny them, who t'advance, and who 80 To trash for overtopping,<sup>1</sup> new created
The creatures<sup>o</sup> that were mine, I say, or changed
'em,
Or else new formed 'em;<sup>2</sup> having both the key<sup>o</sup>
Of officer and office, set all hearts i'th' state
To what tune pleased his ear, that<sup>o</sup> now he was 85 The ivy which had hid my princely trunk
And sucked my verdure<sup>o</sup> out on't. Thou attend'st
not.

MIRANDA     O good sir, I do.

PROSPERO I pray thee, mark me.
I, thus neglecting worldly ends, all dedicated
To closeness<sup>o</sup> and the bettering of my mind
90 With that which, but<sup>o</sup> by being so retired,
O'er-prized all popular rate,<sup>3</sup> in my false brother
Awaked an evil nature; and my trust,
Like a good parent,<sup>4</sup> did beget of him
A falsehood in its contrary<sup>o</sup> as great 95 As my trust was, which had indeed no limit,
A confidence sans<sup>o</sup> bound. He being thus lorded
Not only with what my revenue yielded,
But what my power might else exact, like one
Who, having into truth by telling of it,
100 Made such a sinner of his memory
To credit his own lie,<sup>5</sup> he did believe
He was indeed the duke, out o'th'<sup>o</sup> substitution
And executing<sup>o</sup> th'outward face<sup>o</sup> of royalty
With all prerogative. Hence his ambition growing—105 Dost thou hear?

MIRANDA                    Your tale, sir, would cure deafness.

PROSPERO To have no screen between this part he played

And him he played it for, he needs will be Absolute Milan.<sup>6</sup> Me,<sup>o</sup> poor man, my library
Was dukedom large enough. Of temporal royalties<sup>o</sup>
110 He thinks me now incapable; confederates,<sup>o</sup>
So dry<sup>o</sup> he was for sway,<sup>o</sup> wi'th' King of Naples
To give him annual tribute, do him homage,
Subject his coronet to his crown,<sup>7</sup> and bend
The dukedom yet unbowed—alas, poor Milan!—
115 To most ignoble stooping.<sup>8</sup>

MIRANDA O the heavens!

PROSPERO Mark his condition<sup>o</sup> and th'event;<sup>o</sup> then
tell me

If this might be a brother.

MIRANDA I should sin
To think but<sup>o</sup> nobly of my grandmother.
Good wombs have borne bad sons.<sup>9</sup>

PROSPERO Now the 120 condition.

This King of Naples, being an enemy
To me inveterate, hearkens my brother's suit;
Which was that he, in lieu o'th' premises<sup>1</sup>
Of homage and I know not how much tribute,
Should presently extirpate me and mine
125 Out of the dukedom and confer fair Milan,
With all the honors, on my brother. Whereon,
A treacherous army levied, one midnight
Fated to th' purpose did Antonio open
The gates of Milan, and i'th' dead of darkness, 130 The ministers<sup>o</sup> for th' purpose hurried thence
Me and thy crying self.

MIRANDA Alack, for pity!
I, not remembering how I cried out then,
Will cry it o'er again; it is a hint<sup>o</sup>
That wrings mine eyes to't.

PROSPERO Hear a little further,

135 And then I'll bring thee to the present business
Which now's upon's, without the which this story
Were most impertinent.°

MIRANDA Wherefore did they not
That hour destroy us?

PROSPERO Well demanded, wench:<sup>2</sup>
My tale provokes that question. Dear, they durst not, 140 So dear the love my people bore me, nor set
A mark so bloody on the business, but
With colors fairer painted their foul ends.
In few,° they hurried us aboard a bark,°
Bore us some leagues to sea, where they prepared 145 A rotten carcass of a butt,<sup>3</sup> not rigged,
Nor tackle, sail, nor mast—the very rats
Instinctively have quit it. There they hoist us
To cry to th' sea that roared to us; to sigh
To th' winds, whose pity, sighing back again,
150 Did us but loving wrong.<sup>4</sup>

MIRANDA Alack, what trouble
Was I then to you!

PROSPERO Oh, a cherubin
Thou wast that did preserve me. Thou didst smile,
Infusèd with a fortitude from heaven,
When I have decked° the sea with drops° full salt,
155 Under my burden groaned,<sup>5</sup> which° raised in me
An undergoing stomach° to bear up Against what should ensue.

MIRANDA How came we ashore?

PROSPERO By Providence divine.
Some food we had and some fresh water that 160 A noble Neapolitan, Gonzalo,
Out of his charity—who being then appointed Master of this design—did give us, with Rich garments, linens, stuffs, and necessities,

165 Which since have steaded<sup>o</sup> much. So, of his gentleness,<sup>6</sup>
 Knowing I loved my books, he furnished me
 From mine own library with volumes that
 I prize above my dukedom.
 MIRANDA Would I might
 But ever see that man.
 PROSPERO Now I arise.<sup>7</sup>
 Sit still,<sup>o</sup> and hear the last of our sea-sorrow.
 170 Here in this island we arrived, and here
 Have I, thy schoolmaster, made thee more profit<sup>o</sup>
 Than other princes<sup>8</sup> can, that have more time
 For vainer hours, and tutors not so careful.<sup>o</sup>
 MIRANDA Heavens thank you for't. And now I pray
 175 you, sir,
 For still 'tis beating in my mind, your reason
 For raising this sea-storm?
 PROSPERO Know thus far forth:
 By accident most strange, bountiful Fortune,
 Now my dear lady,<sup>9</sup> hath mine enemies
 Brought to this shore; and by my prescience
 180 I find my zenith<sup>1</sup> doth depend upon
 A most auspicious star,<sup>2</sup> whose influence
 If now I court not but omit,<sup>o</sup> my fortunes
 Will ever after droop. Here cease more questions.
 Thou art inclined to sleep. 'Tis a good dullness,<sup>o</sup>
 185 And give it way. I know thou canst not choose.
 [MIRANDA sleeps.]
 [to ARIEL] Come away,<sup>o</sup> servant, come! I am ready now.
 Approach, my Ariel.<sup>3</sup> Come!
Enter ARIEL.
 ARIEL All hail, great master; grave sir, hail! I come
 To answer thy best pleasure, be't to fly,
 190 To swim, to dive into the fire, to ride

On the curled clouds. To thy strong bidding task
Ariel and all his quality.o

PROSPERO                      Hast thou, spirit,
Performed to point<sup>o</sup> the tempest that I bade thee?

ARIEL To every article.

195 I boarded the King's ship. Now on the beak,<sup>o</sup>
Now in the waist,<sup>o</sup> the deck,<sup>o</sup> in every cabin,
I flamed amazement.<sup>4</sup> Sometimes I'd divide
And burn in many places;<sup>5</sup> on the topmast,
The yards, and bowsprit would I flame distinctly,
200 Then meet and join. Jove's lightning, the precursors
O'th' dreadful thunderclaps, more momentary
And sight-outrunning<sup>o</sup> were not. The fire and cracks
Of sulfurous<sup>6</sup> roaring the most mighty Neptune
Seem to besiege and make his bold waves tremble, 205 Yea, his dread trident shake.

PROSPERO                                      My brave spirit!
Who was so firm, so constant, that this coilo
Would not infect his reason?

ARIEL    Not a soul
But felt a fever of the mad<sup>o</sup> and played
Some tricks of desperation. All but mariners Plunged in the foaming brine and quit the vessel,
Then all afire with me; the King's son Ferdinand,
With hair upstaring<sup>o</sup>—then like reeds, not hair—
Was the first man that leapt, cried, "Hell is empty,
And all the devils are here!"

215 PROSPERO Why, that's my spirit.
But was not this nigh shore?

ARIEL                               Close by, my master.

PROSPERO But are they, Ariel, safe?

[illegible]

On their sustaining<sup>7</sup> garments not a blemish,
But fresher than before; and, as thou bad'st<sup>o</sup> me, 220 In troops<sup>o</sup> I have dispersed them 'bout the isle.

The King's son have I landed by himself,
Whom I left cooling of<sup>o</sup> the air with sighs
In an odd angle<sup>o</sup> of the isle, and sitting,
His arms in this sad knot.<sup>8</sup>

PROSPERO Of the King's ship,
225 The mariners, say how thou hast disposed,
And all the rest o'th' fleet.

ARIEL Safely in harbor
Is the King's ship; in the deep nook where once
Thou called'st me up at midnight to fetch dew
From the still-vexed<sup>o</sup> Bermudas, there she's hid;
The mariners all under hatches stowed,
230 Who, with<sup>o</sup> a charm joined to<sup>o</sup> their suffered labor,
I have left asleep; and for the rest o'th' fleet,
Which I dispersed, they all have met again
And are upon the Mediterranean float,<sup>o</sup>
Bound sadly home for Naples,
235 Supposing that they saw the King's ship wrecked
And his great person perish.

PROSPERO Ariel, thy charge
Exactly is performed; but there's more work.
What is the time o'th' day?

ARIEL Past the mid-season.<sup>o</sup>

PROSPERO At least two glasses.<sup>o</sup> The time twixt six 240 and now
Must by us both be spent most preciously.

ARIEL Is there more toil? Since thou dost give me pains,<sup>o</sup>

Let me remember<sup>o</sup> thee what thou hast promised,
Which is not yet performed me.

PROSPERO How now? Moody?
What is't thou canst demand?

ARIEL My liberty.

245 PROSPERO Before the time be out? No more.

ARIEL

I

prithce,

Remember I have done thee worthy service,
Told thee no lies, made no mistakings, served
Without or<sup>o</sup> grudge or grumblings. Thou did promise
To bate<sup>o</sup> me a full year.

250 PROSPERO Dost thou forget
From what a torment I did free thee?

ARIEL No.

PROSPERO Thou dost, and think'st it much to tread
the ooze
Of the salt deep,
To run upon the sharp wind of the north,
To do me business in the veins<sup>9</sup> o'th' earth
255 When it is baked<sup>o</sup> with frost.

ARIEL I do not, sir.

PROSPERO Thou liest, malignant thing! Hast thou forgot

The foul witch Sycorax, who with age and envy
Was grown into a hoop?<sup>o</sup> Hast thou forgot her?

ARIEL No, sir.

PROSPERO Thou hast. Where was she born?
260 Speak. Tell me.

ARIEL Sir, in Algiers.

PROSPERO Oh, was she so? I must
Once in a month recount what thou hast been,
Which thou forgett'st. This damned witch Sycorax,
For mischiefs manifold and sorceries terrible
To enter human hearing, from Algiers,
265 Thou know'st, was banished. For one thing she did
They would not take her life.<sup>1</sup> Is not this true?

ARIEL Ay, sir.

PROSPERO This blue-eyed<sup>2</sup> hag was hither brought with child
And here was left by th' sailors. Thou, my slave, 270

As thou report'st thyself, was then her servant;
And for<sub>o</sub> thou wast a spirit too delicate
To act her earthy<sub>3</sub> and abhorred commands,
Refusing her grand hests,<sub>o</sub> she did confine thee,
By help of her more potent ministers,<sub>o</sub>
275 And in her most unmitigable rage,
Into a cloven pine; within which rift
Imprisoned thou didst painfully remain
A dozen years, within which space she died
And left thee there, where thou didst vent thy 280 groans
As fast as millwheels strike.<sub>o</sub> Then was this island—
Save for the son that she did litter<sub>o</sub> here,
A freckled whelp, hag-born—not honored with
A human shape.

ARIEL Yes, Caliban her son.
285 PROSPERO Dull thing, I say so:<sub>4</sub> he, that Caliban
Whom now I keep in service. Thou best know'st
What torment I did find thee in: thy groans
Did make wolves howl, and penetrate<sub>o</sub> the breasts
Of ever-angry bears. It was a torment
To lay upon the damned, which Sycorax
290 Could not again undo. It was mine art,
When I arrived and heard thee, that made gape
The pine and let thee out.

ARIEL I thank thee, master.
PROSPERO If thou more murmur'st, I will rend an oak
And peg thee in his<sub>o</sub> knotty entrails till 295 Thou hast howled away twelve winters.

ARIEL Pardon,
master.
I will be correspondent<sub>o</sub> to command
And do my spriting gently.<sub>o</sub>

PROSPERO Do so, and after two days
 I will discharge thee.<sup>5</sup>
 ARIEL That's my noble master!
 What shall I do? Say what, what shall I do?
 300 PROSPERO Go make thyself like a nymph o'th' sea.
 Be subject
 To no sight but thine and mine, invisible
 To every eyeball else.<sup>6</sup> Go, take this shape<sup>o</sup>
 And hither come in't. Go! Hence with diligence.
Exit [ARIEL].
 305 [to MIRANDA] Awake, dear heart, awake! Thou hast slept well.
 Awake.
 MIRANDA The strangeness of your story put Heaviness<sup>o</sup> in me.
 PROSPERO Shake it off. Come on;
 We'll visit Caliban, my slave, who never Yields us kind answer.
 MIRANDA 'Tis a villain, sir,
 I do not love to look on.
 310 PROSPERO But, as 'tis,
 We cannot miss<sup>o</sup> him. He does make our fire,
 Fetch in our wood, and serves in offices<sup>o</sup>
 That profit us. What ho! Slave! Caliban!
 Thou earth, thou: speak!
 CALIBAN (within) There's wood enough
 within.
 315 PROSPERO Come forth, I say! There's other business for thee.
 Come, thou tortoise! When?
Enter ARIEL like a water nymph.
 —Fine apparition! My quaint<sup>7</sup> Ariel, Hark in thine ear.
[He whispers.]

ARIEL My lord, it shall be done. Exit.
 PROSPERO Thou poisonous slave, got<sub>o</sub> by the devil<sup>8</sup>
 himself
 Upon thy wicked dam,<sub>o</sub> come forth!
 320 Enter CALIBAN.
 CALIBAN As wicked dew as e'er my mother brushed<sup>9</sup>
 With raven's feather from unwholesome fen<sub>o</sub>
 Drop on you both! A southwest<sup>1</sup> blow on ye
 And blister you all o'er!
 PROSPERO For this, be sure, tonight thou shalt have 325 cramps,
 Side-stitches that shall pen thy breath up; urchins<sup>2</sup>
 Shall forth at vast of<sub>o</sub> night that they may work
 All exercise on thee;<sub>3</sub> thou shalt be pinched
 As thick as honeycomb,<sup>4</sup> each pinch more stinging
 Than bees that made 'em.<sub>o</sub>
 CALIBAN I must eat my dinner.
 330 This island's mine by Sycorax my mother,
 Which thou tak'st from me. When thou cam'st first Thou strok'st me and made much of me; wouldst give me
 Water with berries in't, and teach me how
 To name the bigger light and how the less<sup>5</sup>
 335 That burn by day and night. And then I loved thee
 And showed thee all the qualities o'th' isle:
 The fresh springs, brine-pits, barren place and fertile.
 Cursèd be I that did so! All the charms<sub>o</sub>
 Of Sycorax—toads, beetles, bats—light on you!
 340 For I am all the subjects that you have,
 Which first was mine own king; and here you sty me<sub>o</sub>
 In this hard rock whiles you do keep from me
 The rest o'th' island.
 PROSPERO Thou most lying slave,

345 Whom stripes<sup>o</sup> may move, not kindness. I have used<sup>o</sup> thee,
Filth as thou art, with humane care, and lodged thee
In mine own cell till thou didst seek to violate
The honor of my child.

CALIBAN Oh ho, oh ho! Would't had been done!

Thou didst prevent me; I had peopled else
This isle with Calibans.

350 MIRANDA<sup>6</sup> Abhorred slave,
Which any print<sup>o</sup> of goodness wilt not take,
Being capable of<sup>o</sup> all ill. I pitied thee, Took pains to make thee speak, taught thee each hour

One thing or other. When thou didst not, savage, Know thine own meaning but wouldst gabble like 355 A thing most brutish, I endowed thy purposes
With words that made them known. But thy vile race,<sup>o</sup>

Though thou didst learn, had that in't which good natures

Could not abide to be with; therefore wast thou
Deservedly confined into this rock,
360 Who hadst deserved more than a prison.

CALIBAN You taught me language, and my profit
on't

Is I know how to curse. The red plague rid you<sup>7</sup>
For learning me your language!

365 PROSPERO Hag-seed,<sup>o</sup> hence!
Fetch us in fuel; and be quick, thou'rt best,
To answer other business.<sup>o</sup> Shrugg'st thou, malice?
If thou neglect'st or dost unwillingly
What I command, I'll rack thee with old<sup>8</sup> cramps,
Fill all thy bones with aches,<sup>9</sup> make thee roar,
That beasts shall tremble at thy din.

370 CALIBAN No, pray thee.
 [aside] I must obey. His art is of such power
 It would control my dam's god Setebos<sup>1</sup>
 And make a vassal of him.
 PROSPERO So, slave, hence.
Exit CALIBAN.
Enter FERDINAND , and ARIEL , invisible, playing and singing.<sup>2</sup>
 ARIEL [sings] Come unto these yellow sands,
 And then take hands.
 375 Curtsied when you have, and kissed,
 The wild waves whist.<sup>3</sup>
 Foot it featly<sup>o</sup> here and there,
 And sweet sprites bear<sup>o</sup>
 The burden.<sup>4</sup>
 380 SPIRITS [within, sing the] (burden dispersedly)
 Hark, hark! Bow-wow!
 The watch-dogs bark: bow-wow!
 ARIEL Hark, hark. I hear
 The strain of strutting Chanticleer<sup>o</sup>
 Cry cock-a-diddle-dow.
 385 FERDINAND Where should this music be? I'th' air or th'earth?
 It sounds no more; and sure it waits<sup>o</sup> upon
 Some god o'th' island. Sitting on a bank,
 Weeping again the King my father's wreck,
 This music crept by me upon the waters,
 390 Allaying both their fury and my passion<sup>o</sup>
 With its sweet air.<sup>o</sup> Thence I have followed it,
 Or it hath drawn me rather; but 'tis gone.
 No, it begins again.
 ARIEL [sings] Full fathom five thy father lies;
 395 Of his bones are coral made;
 Those are pearls that were his eyes;
 Nothing of him that doth fade,

But doth suffer a sea-change
 Into something rich and strange.
 400 Sea-nymphs hourly ring his knell.
 SPIRITS [within, sing the] (burden) Ding dong.
 ARIEL Hark, now I hear them.
 SPIRITS [within] Ding dong, bell.
 FERDINAND The ditty does remember<sup>5</sup> my drowned
 father.
 405 This is no mortal<sup>o</sup> business, nor no sound
 That the earth owes.<sup>o</sup> I hear it now above me.
 PROSPERO [to MIRANDA] The fringed curtains of thine eye advance<sup>o</sup>
 And say what thou seest yond.
 MIRANDA What is't? A spirit?
 Lord, how it looks about. Believe me, sir,
 It carries a brave<sup>o</sup> form. But 'tis a spirit.
 410 PROSPERO No, wench, it eats and sleeps and hath such senses
 As we have—such. This gallant<sup>o</sup> which thou seest
 Was in the wreck; and but<sup>o</sup> he's something<sup>o</sup> stained With grief—that's beauty's canker<sup>6</sup>—thou mightst call
 him
 415 A goodly person. He hath lost his fellows
 And strays about to find 'em.
 MIRANDA I might call him
 A thing divine, for nothing natural
 I ever saw so noble.
 PROSPERO [aside]<sup>7</sup> It<sup>o</sup> goes on, I see,
 As my soul prompts it. [to ARIEL] Spirit, fine spirit, I'll free
 thee
 Within two days for this.
 420 FERDINAND Most sure, the goddess
 On whom these airs attend!<sup>8</sup> Vouchsafe<sup>o</sup> my prayer

May know if you remain<sup>o</sup> upon this island,
 And that you will some good instruction give
 How I may bear me<sup>o</sup> here. My prime request,
 Which I do last pronounce, is—O you wonder!<sup>9</sup>—
 425 If you be maid<sup>1</sup> or no?
 MIRANDA No wonder, sir,
 But certainly a maid.
 FERDINAND My language? Heavens!
 I am the best<sup>2</sup> of them that speak this speech,
 Were I but where 'tis spoken.
 PROSPERO How? The best?
 What wert thou if the King of Naples heard thee?
 430 FERDINAND A single<sup>3</sup> thing, as I am now, that wonders
 To hear thee speak of Naples. He does hear me,<sup>4</sup>
 And that he does I weep. Myself am Naples,<sup>o</sup>
 Who with mine eyes, never since at ebb,<sup>o</sup> beheld
 The King my father wrecked.
 MIRANDA Alack, for mercy!
 435 FERDINAND Yes, faith, and all his lords, the Duke of Milan
 And his brave son<sup>5</sup> being twain.
 PROSPERO [aside] The Duke of Milan
 And his more braver daughter could control<sup>6</sup> thee
 If now 'twere fit to do't. At the first sight
 They have changed eyes.<sup>7</sup> [to ARIEL] Delicate<sup>o</sup> Ariel, 440 I'll set thee free for this! [to FERDINAND] A word, good
                   sir.
 I fear you have done yourself some wrong.<sup>8</sup> A word.
 MIRANDA Why speaks my father so ungently?<sup>o</sup> This Is the third man that e'er I saw, the first
 That e'er I sighed for. Pity move my father 445 To be inclined my way.
 FERDINAND Oh, if a virgin,

And your affection not gone forth,<sup>9</sup> I'll make you
The Queen of Naples.

PROSPERO Soft, sir! One word more.
[aside] They are both in either's powers. But this swift business

450 I must uneasy<sub>o</sub> make, lest too light<sup>1</sup> winning Make the prize light. [to FERDINAND] One word more! I charge thee

That thou attend me. Thou dost here usurp
The name thou ow'st<sub>o</sub> not, and hast put thyself
Upon this island as a spy to win it
From me, the lord on't.<sub>o</sub>

455 FERDINAND No, as I am a man.
MIRANDA There's nothing ill can dwell in such a temple.<sup>2</sup>

If the ill spirit have so fair a house,
Good things will strive to dwell with't.

PROSPERO [to FERDINAND] Follow me.
[to MIRANDA] Speak not you for him: he's a traitor.
[to FERDINAND] Come!

460 I'll manacle thy neck and feet together.
Sea-water shalt thou drink; thy food shall be
The fresh-brook mussels,<sup>3</sup> withered roots, and husks
Wherein the acorn cradled. Follow!

FERDINAND No.
I will resist such entertainment<sub>o</sub> till
Mine enemy has more power.

He draws [his sword], and is charmed from moving.

465 MIRANDA O dear father,
Make not too rash a trial of him, for
He's gentle and not fearful.<sup>4</sup>

PROSPERO What, I say,
My foot<sub>o</sub> my tutor? [to FERDINAND] Put thy sword up,
traitor,

Who mak'st a show but dar'st not strike, thy conscience
 Is so possessed with guilt. Come from thy ward,<sup>o</sup>
 470 For I can here disarm thee with this stick<sup>o</sup>
 And make thy weapon drop.
 MIRANDA Beseech you, father—
 PROSPERO Hence! Hang not on my garments.
 MIRANDA Sir, have pity.
 I'll be his surety.
 PROSPERO Silence! One word more
 Shall make me chide thee, if not hate thee. What, 475 An advocate for an imposter? Hush!
 Thou think'st there is no more such shapes<sup>o</sup> as he,
 Having seen but him and Caliban. Foolish wench,
 To<sup>o</sup> th' most of men this is a Caliban,
 And they to him are angels.
 MIRANDA My affections
 480 Are then most humble. I have no ambition
 To see a goodlier man.
 PROSPERO [to FERDINAND] Come on, obey.
 Thy nerves<sup>o</sup> are in their infancy again,
 And have no vigor in them.
 FERDINAND So they are.
 My spirits,<sup>o</sup> as in a dream, are all bound up.
 485 My father's loss, the weakness which I feel,
 The wreck of all my friends, nor this man's threats
 To whom I am subdued, are but light to me,
 Might I but through my prison once a day
 Behold this maid. All corners else o'th' earth 490 Let liberty make use of; space enough
 Have I in such a prison.
 PROSPERO [aside] It works. [to FERDINAND]
 Come on!
 [to ARIEL] Thou hast done well, fine Ariel. [to FERDINAND] Follow me.
 [to ARIEL] Hark what thou else shalt do me.

MIRANDA [to FERDINAND] Be of comfort;
 My father's of a better nature, sir,
 495 Than he appears by speech. This is unwonted<sup>o</sup>
 Which now came from him.
 PROSPERO [to ARIEL] Thou shalt be as free
 As mountain winds; but then<sup>o</sup> exactly do
 All points of my command.
 ARIEL To th' syllable.
 500 PROSPERO [to FERDINAND] Come, follow. [to MIRANDA]
 Speak not for him. Exeunt.

Endnotes

- Note 1.2: Location: The rest of the play is set in various parts of Prospero's island. Return to reference 1.2
- Note 1: "Miranda" in Latin means "admirable" or "wondering." Miranda uses the formal "you," contrasting with Prospero's more familiar "thou." Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Skill; magic; learning; science. Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Souls constituting the freight; perhaps also suggesting "burdened." Return to reference 3
- Note 4: "Prospero" in Italian and Spanish means "fortunate" or "prosperous." Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Suggesting a hermit's or a poor man's dwelling. "Full": very. Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Pronounced with stress on the first syllable. Return to reference 6
- Note 7: As opposed to the "mechanical arts," the "liberal arts" encompassed the trivium (grammar, logic, and rhetoric) and the quadrivium (arithmetic, geometry, music, and astronomy). Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Enraptured, with suggestions of "conveyed to another place." "Grew stranger": grew alienated from; became a foreigner to. Return to reference 8

- Note 9: Having mastered the handling of formal requests.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: For rising too high. "Trash": restrain, hold back (as by a leash).Return to reference 1
- Note 2: "Changed . . . formed 'em": changed the duties and allegiance of existing officials, or created new ones.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Became too precious for the people to value or understand.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: From the colloquial "Good parents breed bad children."Return to reference 4
- Note 5: "Like one . . . lie": like someone who comes to believe his own repeatedly stated lie. "To": So as to.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: "To have . . . Milan": He wanted to be the Duke of Milan in actual fact, rather than merely exercising power as the Duke's proxy. "Screen": partition, barrier.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Subject Antonio's coronet to Alonso's crown. "Coronet": a lesser crown indicating the wearer's inferiority to the sovereign.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: "And bend . . . stooping": by making Milan, previously free, a tributary subject of Naples.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Antonio's character need not imply that his mother was a bad parent (see line 94).Return to reference 9
- Note 1: In return for the conditions agreed upon.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: A young woman; also, term of endearment to wife, daughter, or sweetheart.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Cask or tub: here, deprecatory for "boat."Return to reference 3
- Note 4: The winds, responding sympathetically to our sighs, only blew us farther out to sea.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: The secondary sense provides an image of giving birth.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Nobility; kindness.Return to reference 6

- Note 7: Referring to the action of standing; or to Prospero's rising fortunes (as in lines 179–84). The former might visually reinforce the latter, especially if Prospero also resumes his magical powers by putting on his cloak.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: A generic plural for "princes and princesses."Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Traditional characterization of Fortune as a woman changeable in her affections.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Highest point, as of a star in the sky.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Referring to the belief that celestial bodies had astrological influence on people and events.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Ariel's name, along with sounding like "airy," also means in Hebrew "lion of God." The name appears as that of a magical spirit in various occult texts.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: I appeared as flames, causing terror.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: The phosphorescent effect of St. Elmo's fire, caused in a thunderstorm by the charge of static electricity that builds up particularly around metal projections.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Sulfur was popularly associated with thunder and lightning.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Buoying up, and thus suggesting "life-giving."Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Folded sadly, like this (folded arms implied sorrow).Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Mineral veins or subterranean rivers.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: "For . . . life": Only because she got pregnant. Capital sentences were commuted for pregnant women; ordinarily, condemned witches were either hanged or burned at the stake.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: The description of Sycorax as "blue-eyed" has puzzled many readers, and editors have proposed a variety of emendations and interpretations.Return to reference 2

- Note 3: Difficult for Ariel, whose element is air; also, grossly material, coarse.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: You dullard, that's just what I said.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Prospero reduces this to within two days at lines 419–20 and actually releases Ariel in about four hours' time.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: "Be . . . else": Ariel may wear a conventional costume, indicating his invisibility to other characters onstage.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: The term could simultaneously mean "ingenious," "curious in appearance," and "elegant."Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Not merely an insult, but also an allusion to Caliban's birth from the devil (incubus) and witch.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Brushed up, collected. Dew was a common ingredient of magical potions.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: A southerly wind was considered plague-bearing.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Hedgehogs; but here spirits disguised as hedgehogs.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: In order that they may perform their habitual activity.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: The pinch marks will be as closely packed as, and of similar texture to, the cells of a honeycomb.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: See Genesis 1:16: "God then made two great lights: the greater light to rule the day, and the less light to rule the night."Return to reference 5
- Note 6: For roughly two and a half centuries, editors reassigned this speech to Prospero, finding it inappropriate for Miranda.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: The plague that gives red sores destroy, kill you.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: As of aged people; long-accustomed.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: As a noun, this was probably pronounced "aitches."Return to reference 9

- Note 1: A name found in travel narratives as a god of the Patagonians.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: This probably does not imply that Ferdinand enters first, even though such a staging is possible if Ferdinand is bewildered as to where this music is coming from. Ariel is invisible to all but Prospero and the audience. He is probably still dressed as a water nymph.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Become hushed and attentive.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: "Burden" is a technical term from Renaissance music meaning "refrain" or "undersong," but its other associations may lend extra significance to Ariel's use of the word in this song.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Commemorate. "Ditty": the words of the song.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Cankerworm; caterpillar ("beauty" being seen as a flower); spreading sore.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Prospero's asides here and at lines 437, 449, and 492 may be either private utterances or addressed to Ariel. If the former, Ariel may nevertheless hear them; Prospero speaks to Ariel after all these instances. Their import may well be purposefully enigmatic.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Probably spoken aside, but possibly an invocation. "Most sure, the goddess": an echo of Aeneas's reaction to seeing Venus after his shipwreck, "o dea certe" (Aeneid 1.328). "Airs": Ariel's melodies.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Miracle, punning on the meaning of Miranda's name.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Unmarried virgin; made (human).Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Highest in rank, assuming he has succeeded his father.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Weak and helpless; solitary; one and the same.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: "He" and "me" both refer to Ferdinand. Presuming his father to be dead, Ferdinand takes himself to be the new king of Naples (and as such, he hears himself speaking). Alternatively,

Ferdinand thinks his father's spirit hears him.Return to reference 4

- Note 5: The only instance in which Antonio is mentioned as having a son.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Challenge; take to task; exercise power over.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Exchanged loving glances; fallen in love at first sight.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Euphemistic for "told a lie about yourself."Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Given over to someone else.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Easy; playing on the meanings of "little valued" and also "promiscuous" in line 451.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: A common metaphor for the body; also, a conventional Renaissance notion that moral qualities were physically manifest.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Freshwater mussels are inedible.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: He's noble and, therefore, not cowardly. Alternatively, not fearsome.Return to reference 4

Notes

- °: sky'sReturn to reference °
- °: splendidReturn to reference °
- °: beforeReturn to reference °
- °: consternation Return to reference °
- °: pityingReturn to reference °
- °: higher in rankReturn to reference °
- °: intrude uponReturn to reference °
- °: foresightReturn to reference °
- °: lossReturn to reference °
- °: happenedReturn to reference °
- °: whomReturn to reference °
- °: profitless inquiryReturn to reference °
- °: openReturn to reference °

- °: fullyReturn to reference °
- °: a certaintyReturn to reference °
- °: guarantees is trueReturn to reference °
- °: pastReturn to reference °
- °: anythingReturn to reference °
- °: perfect example Return to reference °
- °: chastityReturn to reference °
- °: no less nobly bornReturn to reference °
- °: providentialReturn to reference °
- °: helpedReturn to reference °
- °: sorrow; troubleReturn to reference °
- °: out ofReturn to reference °
- °: afterReturn to reference °
- °: controlReturn to reference °
- °: lordshipsReturn to reference °
- °: foremostReturn to reference °
- °: dependentsReturn to reference °
- °: controlReturn to reference °
- °: so thatReturn to reference °
- °: vitality; powerReturn to reference °
- °: seclusionReturn to reference °
- °: merelyReturn to reference °
- °: inverse qualitiesReturn to reference °
- °: withoutReturn to reference °
- °: as a consequence of theReturn to reference °
- °: portraying Return to reference °
- °: imageReturn to reference °
- °: as for meReturn to reference °
- °: ruleReturn to reference °
- °: (he) plotsReturn to reference °
- °: thirsty Return to reference °
- °: powerReturn to reference °
- °: treaty Return to reference °
- °: outcomeReturn to reference °
- °: anything butReturn to reference °
- °: agentsReturn to reference °

- °: an occasionReturn to reference °
- °: irrelevantReturn to reference °
- °: short Return to reference °
- °: shipReturn to reference °
- °: covered; adorned Return to reference °
- °: tearsReturn to reference °
- °: (Miranda's smile)Return to reference °
- °: a courageReturn to reference °
- °: been usefulReturn to reference °
- °: continue to sitReturn to reference °
- °: profit moreReturn to reference °
- °: caringReturn to reference °
- °: disregardReturn to reference °
- °: drowsinessReturn to reference °
- °: come hereReturn to reference °
- °: cohorts; facultiesReturn to reference °
- °: in detailReturn to reference °
- °: prowReturn to reference °
- °: midship Return to reference °
- °: poopReturn to reference °
- °: quicker than the eyeReturn to reference °
- °: turmoilReturn to reference °
- °: such as madmen feelReturn to reference °
- °: standing on endReturn to reference °
- °: commandedReturn to reference °
- °: groupsReturn to reference °
- °: coolingReturn to reference °
- °: cornerReturn to reference °
- °: ever-stormyReturn to reference °
- °: by virtue of Return to reference °
- °: withReturn to reference °
- °: billow; seaReturn to reference °
- °: noonReturn to reference °
- °: hourglassesReturn to reference °
- °: tasksReturn to reference °
- °: remindReturn to reference °

- °: eitherReturn to reference °
- °: remit; excuseReturn to reference °
- °: dried and hardenedReturn to reference °
- °: bent over with ageReturn to reference °
- °: becauseReturn to reference °
- °: commandsReturn to reference °
- °: agents; slavesReturn to reference °
- °: hit the waterReturn to reference °
- °: give birth toReturn to reference °
- °: arouse sympathy inReturn to reference °
- °: itsReturn to reference °
- °: compliantReturn to reference °
- °: graciouslyReturn to reference °
- °: appearance; disguiseReturn to reference °
- °: sleepinessReturn to reference °
- °: avoid; do withoutReturn to reference °
- °: capacities; dutiesReturn to reference °
- °: begotReturn to reference °
- °: harmful, foul motherReturn to reference °
- °: bogReturn to reference °
- °: during the boundlessReturn to reference °
- °: (honeycomb cells)Return to reference °
- °: spellsReturn to reference °
- °: pen me upReturn to reference °
- °: lashesReturn to reference °
- °: treatedReturn to reference °
- °: impressionReturn to reference °
- °: susceptible toReturn to reference °
- °: hereditary natureReturn to reference °
- °: offspring of a hagReturn to reference °
- °: perform other tasksReturn to reference °
- °: dance nimblyReturn to reference °
- °: spirits singReturn to reference °
- °: a roosterReturn to reference °
- °: attendsReturn to reference °
- °: griefReturn to reference °

- °: melodyReturn to reference °
- °: humanReturn to reference °
- °: ownsReturn to reference °
- °: raiseReturn to reference °
- °: splendid; gallantReturn to reference °
- °: fine gentlemanReturn to reference °
- °: except that Return to reference °
- °: somewhatReturn to reference °
- °: (my plan)Return to reference °
- °: grantReturn to reference °
- °: dwellReturn to reference °
- °: conduct myselfReturn to reference °
- °: King of NaplesReturn to reference °
- °: ceasing to flowReturn to reference °
- °: graceful; artfulReturn to reference °
- °: discourteouslyReturn to reference °
- °: difficultReturn to reference °
- °: ownReturn to reference °
- °: of itReturn to reference °
- °: treatmentReturn to reference °
- °: inferiorReturn to reference °
- °: defensive stanceReturn to reference °
- °: magician's wandReturn to reference °
- °: forms; menReturn to reference °
- °: compared toReturn to reference °
- °: sinewsReturn to reference °
- °: mental powersReturn to reference °
- °: unusualReturn to reference °
- °: until thenReturn to reference °

2.1

Enter ALONSO, SEBASTIAN, ANTONIO, GONZALO, ADRIAN,
and FRANCISCO.

GONZALO    Beseech you, sir, be merry. You have cause—

So have we all—of joy; for our escape
Is much beyond our loss. Our hint<sup>o</sup> of woe
Is common: every day some sailor's wife,
The masters of some merchant, and the merchant<sup>1</sup>
Have just<sup>o</sup> our theme of woe. But for the miracle—
I mean our preservation—few in millions
Can speak like us. Then wisely, good sir, weigh
Our sorrow with<sup>o</sup> our comfort.

ALONSO Prithee, peace.<sup>2</sup>

10 SEBASTIAN [to ANTONIO] He receives comfort like cold porridge.◦

ANTONIO [to SEBASTIAN]    The visitor<sup>3</sup> will not give him o'er so.<sub>o</sub>

SEBASTIAN     Look, he's winding up the watch of his wit; by and by it will strike.

15 GONZALO [to ALONSO] Sir—

SEBASTIAN One. Tell. o

GONZALO When every grief is entertained<sup>o</sup> that's offered, comes to th'entertainer<sup>4</sup>—

SEBASTIAN     A dollar.<sup>5</sup>

GONZALO    Dolor<sup>o</sup> comes to him, indeed. You have spoken

truer than you purposed.

SEBASTIAN     You have taken it wiselier than I meant
you should.

25 GONZALO [to ALONSO] Therefore, my lord—
 ANTONIO Fie, what a spendthrift is he of his tongue!
 ALONSO I prithee, spare.<sup>5</sup>
 GONZALO Well, I have done. But yet—
 SEBASTIAN He will be talking.

30 ANTONIO Which of he or Adrian, for a good wager, first begins to crow?<sup>6</sup>
 SEBASTIAN The old cock.
 ANTONIO The cockerel.<sup>7</sup>
 SEBASTIAN Done. The wager?

35 ANTONIO A laughter.<sup>8</sup>
 SEBASTIAN A match.
 ADRIAN Though this island seem to be desert<sup>9</sup>—
 ANTONIO Ha, ha, ha!
 SEBASTIAN So, you're paid.<sup>9</sup>

40 ADRIAN Uninhabitable and almost inaccessible—
 SEBASTIAN Yet—
 ADRIAN Yet—
 ANTONIO He could not miss't.
 ADRIAN It must needs be of subtle, tender, and delicate<sup>1</sup> temperance.<sup>2</sup>

45 ANTONIO Temperance was a delicate wench.<sup>2</sup>
 SEBASTIAN Ay, and a subtle, as he most learnedly delivered.<sup>3</sup>

ADRIAN The air breathes upon us here most sweetly.

SEBASTIAN As if it had lungs, and rotten ones.
 ANTONIO Or as 'twere perfumed by a fen.<sup>4</sup>

50 GONZALO Here is everything advantageous to life.
 ANTONIO True, save<sup>5</sup> means to live.
 SEBASTIAN Of that there's none, or little.
 GONZALO How lush and lusty<sup>6</sup> the grass looks! How green!

55 ANTONIO The ground indeed is tawny.

SEBASTIAN With an eye<sup>4</sup> of green in't.

ANTONIO He misses not much.

SEBASTIAN No, he doth but mistake the truth totally.

60 GONZALO But the rarity<sup>5</sup> of it is, which is indeed almost beyond credit—

SEBASTIAN As many vouched<sup>o</sup> rarities are.

GONZALO That our garments being, as they were, drenched
in the sea, hold notwithstanding their freshness and gloss, being rather new-dyed than stained with salt

65 water.

ANTONIO If but one of his pockets<sup>6</sup> could speak, would it not say he lies?

SEBASTIAN Ay, or very falsely pocket up his report.<sup>7</sup>

GONZALO Methinks our garments are now as fresh
as when we put them on first in Africa, at the marriage

70 of the King's fair daughter Claribel to the King of Tunis.

SEBASTIAN 'Twas a sweet marriage, and we prosper
well
in our return.

ADRIAN Tunis was never graced before with such a paragon to<sup>o</sup> their queen.

75 GONZALO Not since widow Dido's<sup>8</sup> time.

ANTONIO Widow?<sup>9</sup> A pox o' that! How came that "widow"
in? Widow Dido!

SEBASTIAN What if he had said "widower Aeneas"
too?

80 Good Lord, how you take<sup>o</sup> it!
 ADRIAN "Widow Dido," said you? You make me study of<sup>o</sup> that: she was of Carthage, not of Tunis.
 GONZALO This Tunis, sir, was Carthage.<sup>1</sup>
 ADRIAN Carthage?
 GONZALO I assure you, Carthage.
 85 ANTONIO His word is more than the miraculous harp.<sup>2</sup>
 SEBASTIAN He hath raised the wall, and houses too.
 ANTONIO What impossible matter will he make easy next?
 SEBASTIAN I think he will carry this island home in his pocket and give it his son for an apple.
 90 ANTONIO And sowing the kernels<sup>o</sup> of it in the sea, bring forth more islands.
 GONZALO Ay.<sup>3</sup>
 ANTONIO Why, in good time.
 GONZALO [to ALONSO] Sir, we were talking, that our 95 garments seem now as fresh as when we were at Tunis at the marriage of your daughter, who is now queen.
 ANTONIO And the rarest that e'er came there.
 SEBASTIAN Bate,<sup>4</sup> I beseech you, widow Dido.
 ANTONIO Oh, widow Dido? Ay, widow Dido.
 100 GONZALO Is not, sir, my doublet as fresh as the first day I wore it? I mean, in a sort.<sup>5</sup>
 ANTONIO That "sort" was well fished for.
 GONZALO When I wore it at your daughter's marriage.
 ALONSO You cram these words into mine ears
 105 against

The stomach of my sense.<sup>6</sup> Would I had never Married my daughter there; for coming thence
 My son is lost, and, in my rate,<sup>o</sup> she too,
 Who is so far from Italy removed
 I ne'er again shall see her. O thou mine heir
 110 Of Naples and of Milan, what strange fish
 Hath made his meal on thee?
 FRANCISCO Sir, he may live.
 I saw him beat the surges under him
 And ride upon their backs. He trod the water
 Whose enmity he flung aside, and breasted 115 The surge, most swol'n, that met him. His bold head
 'Bove the contentious waves he kept, and oared
 Himself with his good arms in lusty<sup>o</sup> stroke
 To th' shore, that o'er his wave-worn basis bowed,<sup>z</sup>
 As<sup>o</sup> stooping to relieve him. I not<sup>o</sup> doubt 120 He came alive to land.
 ALONSO No, no, he's gone.
 SEBASTIAN Sir, you may thank yourself for this great loss,
 That would not bless our Europe with your daughter,
 But rather loose<sup>o</sup> her to an African,
 Where she, at least, is banished from your eye,
 125 Who<sup>o</sup> hath cause to set the grief on't.
 ALONSO Prithee,
 peace.
 SEBASTIAN You were kneeled to and importuned
 otherwise<sup>8</sup>
 By all of us; and the fair soul herself
 Weighed, between loathness and obedience, at Which end o'th' beam should bow.<sup>9</sup> We have lost 130 your son,
 I fear, forever. Milan and Naples have More widows in them of this business' making
 Than we bring men to comfort them. The fault's

Without sweat or endeavor. Treason, felony,
Sword, pike, knife, gun, or need of any engine<sup>o</sup>
160 Would I not have; but nature should bring forth
Of it own kind, all foison,<sup>o</sup> all abundance,
To feed my innocent people.

SEBASTIAN No marrying<sup>9</sup> 'mong his subjects?

ANTONIO None, man, all idle: whores and knaves.

165 GONZALO I would with such perfection govern, sir, T'excel the golden age.<sup>1</sup>

SEBASTIAN Save<sup>o</sup> his majesty!

ANTONIO Long live Gonzalo!

GONZALO And do you mark me, sir?

ALONSO Prithee, no more. Thou dost talk nothing to 170 me.

GONZALO I do well believe your highness, and did it
to minister occasion<sup>2</sup> to these gentlemen, who are of such sensible<sup>o</sup> and nimble lungs that they always use<sup>o</sup> to laugh at nothing.

ANTONIO 'Twas you we laughed at.

175 GONZALO Who in this kind of merry fooling am
nothing to you. So you may continue, and laugh at nothing still.

ANTONIO What a blow was there given!

SEBASTIAN An it had not fallen flatlong.<sup>3</sup>

180 GONZALO You are gentlemen of brave mettle;<sup>4</sup> you would lift the moon out of her sphere if she would continue
in it five weeks without changing.<sup>5</sup>

Enter ARIEL [invisible,] playing solemn music.

SEBASTIAN We would so, and then go a-bat-fowling.<sup>6</sup>

ANTONIO Do you not hear me speak?
 SEBASTIAN I do, and surely
 210 It is a sleepy language, and thou speak'st
 Out of thy sleep. What is it thou didst say?
 This is a strange repose, to be asleep
 With eyes wide open; standing, speaking, moving,
 And yet so fast asleep.
 ANTONIO Noble Sebastian,
 215 Thou lett'st thy fortune sleep—die rather; wink'st<sup>o</sup>
 Whiles thou art waking.
 SEBASTIAN Thou dost snore distinctly;<sup>o</sup>
 There's meaning in thy snores.
 ANTONIO I am more serious than my custom. You Must be so too, if heed<sup>o</sup> me; which to do
 Trebles thee o'er.<sup>8</sup>
 SEBASTIAN Well, I am standing water.<sup>9</sup>
 220 ANTONIO I'll teach you how to flow.
 SEBASTIAN Do so. To ebb
 Hereditary sloth<sup>1</sup> instructs me.
 ANTONIO Oh!
 If you but knew how you the purpose cherish
 Whiles thus you mock it;<sup>2</sup> how in stripping it
 You more invest<sup>o</sup> it. Ebbing<sup>o</sup> men, indeed, 225 Most often do so near the bottom run
 By their own fear or sloth.
 SEBASTIAN Prithee, say on.
 The setting<sup>o</sup> of thine eye and cheek proclaim
 A matter<sup>o</sup> from thee; and a birth, indeed,
 Which throes<sup>3</sup> thee much to yield.
 230 ANTONIO Thus, sir: [indicating GONZALO] Although this lord of weak remembrance,<sup>o</sup> this,
 Who shall be of as little memory<sup>o</sup>
 When he is earthed,<sup>o</sup> hath here almost persuaded—
 For he's a spirit of persuasion, only

235 Professes<sup>4</sup> to persuade—the King his son's alive,
'Tis as impossible that he's undrowned
As he that sleeps here swims.

SEBASTIAN I have no hope
That he's undrowned.

ANTONIO Oh, out of that no hope
What great hope have you! No hope that way<sup>o</sup> is Another way so high a hope that even 240 Ambition cannot pierce a wink<sup>o</sup> beyond,
But doubt discovery there.<sup>5</sup> Will you grant with me
That Ferdinand is drowned?

SEBASTIAN He's gone.

ANTONIO Then tell me,
Who's the next heir of Naples?

SEBASTIAN Claribel.

ANTONIO She that is Queen of Tunis; she that dwells 245 Ten leagues beyond man's life;<sup>o</sup> she that from Naples

Can have no note,<sup>o</sup> unless the sun were post<sup>o</sup>—
The man i'th' moon's too slow—till newborn chins
Be rough and razorable; she that from<sup>o</sup> whom 250 We all were sea-swallowed, though some cast again,<sup>6</sup>

And by that destiny to perform an act
Whereof what's past is prologue, what to come
In yours and my discharge.<sup>o</sup>

SEBASTIAN What stuff is this? How say you?

'Tis true my brother's daughter's Queen of Tunis;
So is she heir of Naples, twixt which regions
255 There is some space.

ANTONIO A space whose ev'ry cubit<sup>o</sup>
Seems to cry out, "How shall that Claribel Measure us<sup>o</sup> back to Naples? Keep<sup>o</sup> in Tunis,
And let Sebastian wake."<sup>o</sup> Say this were death

260 That now hath seized them: why, they were no worse
 Than now they are. There be that<sup>o</sup> can rule Naples
 As well as he that sleeps; lords that can prate
 As amply and unnecessarily
 As this Gonzalo; I myself could make 265 A chough of as deep chat.<sup>7</sup> Oh, that you bore
 The mind that I do! What a sleep were this
 For your advancement! Do you understand me?
 SEBASTIAN     Methinks I do.
 ANTONIO                                     And how does your content
 Tender<sup>o</sup> your own good fortune?
 SEBASTIAN                                     I remember
 You did supplant your brother Prospero.
 270 ANTONIO                                     True:
 And look how well my garments sit upon me,
 Much feater<sup>o</sup> than before. My brother's servants
 Were then my fellows; now they are my men.
 SEBASTIAN     But for your conscience?
 ANTONIO     Ay, sir, where lies that? If 'twere a kibe,<sup>8</sup>
 275 'Twould put me to<sup>o</sup> my slipper; but I feel not
 This deity in my bosom. Twenty consciences
 That stand twixt me and Milan, candied<sup>9</sup> be they,
 And melt ere they molest. Here lies your brother,
 No better than the earth he lies upon
 280 If he were that which now he's like—that's dead—
 Whom I with this obedient steel,<sup>o</sup> three inches of it,
 Can lay to bed forever; whiles you, doing thus,
 To the perpetual wink for aye<sup>o</sup> might put
 This ancient morsel, this Sir Prudence, who 285 Should not upbraid our course. For all the rest,
 They'll take suggestion<sup>o</sup> as a cat laps milk;
 They'll tell the clock<sup>o</sup> to any business that
 We say befits the hour.

SEBASTIAN Thy case, dear friend,
 Shall be my precedent. As thou gott'st Milan,
 290 I'll come by Naples. Draw thy sword: one stroke
 Shall free thee from the tribute which thou payest,
 And I the King shall love thee.

ANTONIO Draw together;
 And when I rear my hand, do you the like
 To fall it on Gonzalo.

SEBASTIAN Oh, but one word.
 295 Enter ARIEL, [invisible,] with music and song.

ARIEL My master through his art foresees the danger
 That you his friend are in, and sends me forth—
 For else<sub>o</sub> his project dies—to keep them<sup>1</sup> living.
 [He] sings in Gonzalo's ear.
 While you here do snoring lie,
 Open-eyed conspiracy
 300 His time<sub>o</sub> doth take.
 If of life you keep a care,
 Shake off slumber and beware.
 Awake, awake!

ANTONIO Then let us both be sudden.
 305 [ANTONIO and SEBASTIAN draw their swords.]

GONZALO [waking] Now, good angels preserve the King.
 [He wakes ALONSO.]

ALONSO Why, how now? Ho! Awake! Why are you<sub>o</sub> drawn?
 Wherefore this ghastly<sub>o</sub> looking?

GONZALO What's the matter?

SEBASTIAN Whiles we stood here securing<sub>o</sub> your repose,
 Even now we heard a hollow burst of bellowing,
 310 Like bulls, or rather lions. Did't not wake you?
 It struck mine ear most terribly.

ALONSO I heard nothing.

ANTONIO Oh, 'twas a din to fright a monster's ear,
To make an earthquake: sure it was the roar
Of a whole herd of lions.

315 ALONSO Heard you this, Gonzalo?

GONZALO Upon mine honor, sir, I heard a humming,
And that a strange one too, which did awake me.
I shook you, sir, and cried.° As mine eyes opened,
I saw their weapons drawn. There was a noise,
320 That's verily.° 'Tis best we stand upon our guard,
Or that we quit this place. Let's draw our weapons.

ALONSO Lead off this ground, and let's make further search
For my poor son.

GONZALO Heavens keep him from these beasts,
For he is sure i'th' island.

ALONSO Lead away.

325 ARIEL<sup>2</sup> Prospero my lord shall know what I have done.
So, King, go safely on to seek thy son. Exeunt.

Endnotes

- Note 1: The chief of and its owner. Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Sebastian takes this as "pease," as in "pease porridge." Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Antonio compares Gonzalo with one who visits and comforts the sick and distressed. Return to reference 3
- Note 4: There comes to the person who accepts that grief. Return to reference 4
- Note 5: English name for the German thaler. Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Which of the two will first begin to speak ("crow")? Return to reference 6

- Note 7: "The young cock crows as the old hears" was proverbial. "Old cock" refers to Gonzalo and "cockerel" to Adrian.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: From the proverb "He laughs that wins."Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Antonio's laugh is his prize.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Exquisite, but in Antonio's usage (line 46), "given to pleasure." "Subtle": fine, but in Sebastian's usage (line 47), "sexually expert" or "crafty."Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Antonio takes "Temperance" to be the name of a girl.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: "Learnedly delivered" was a popular phrase among Puritans who wanted to appear pious.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: A tinge. In Antonio's reply, an "eye of green" refers to Gonzalo's optimistic capacity to see green.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Exceptional quality; but in Sebastian's usage (line 62), "uncommon thing."Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Seen as the garments' "mouth"; also implying that Gonzalo's pockets are stained.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: The evidence of stained pockets would confute Gonzalo's words and reputation for honesty. "Pocket up": suppress, or keep silent; also, receive unprotestingly.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Queen of ancient Carthage, whose tragic love affair with Aeneas is related in Virgil's Aeneid.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Antonio picks on this designation for a woman abandoned by her lover as being either irrelevant or conspicuously prudish. Dido, however, was in fact a widow when she met Aeneas.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: The city of Tunis was actually built ten miles from the site of Carthage.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: A reference to Amphion's harp; at its music the walls (but not the houses) of Thebes arose.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Affirming his belief that Tunis was Carthage; Antonio mocks the length of time this took.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Except (as a verb); don't mention.Return to reference 4

- Note 5: Comparatively speaking; Antonio plays on “drawing lots.”Return to reference 5
- Note 6: The image is of one being force-fed words against the appetite (“stomach”) for hearing them.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: That extended out and drooped over the foot of the cliff, which had been eroded by waves.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: To act differently.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Weighed loathness to marry against obedience to her father to find out which end of the scales’ beam would sink.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: That is, the most grievous, or costliest, part of the loss is also my own.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: “To rub the sore” was proverbial. Return to reference 2
- Note 3: A soothing remedy.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Had I responsibility for colonization of the island; but also interpreted as “planting” by Antonio and Sebastian.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Cited as wild plants prone to grow on uncultivated land; but dock is a traditional soother of nettle stings, and mallow roots were used to make soothing ointment.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: I would advance the opposite to what would be usual. This speech is based on a passage in John Florio’s translation of Montaigne’s essay “Of Cannibals.”Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Inheritance of property.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Idleness proverbially begets lust.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Seen as irrelevant to sexually innocent people; also a form of contract.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: In classical mythology, the earliest of the ages—a time without strife, labor, or injustice, when abundant food grew without cultivation.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Afford opportunity.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: If it had not fallen on the flat, harmless side of the sword.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Courage; punning on “metal,” as of a sword blade.Return to reference 4

- Note 5: You would even steal the moon, if she were to stand still in her orbit ("sphere").Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Trapping birds by using light to attract them and bats to strike them down; may also mean swindling and victimizing the simple.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: I will not put my sound judgment at risk so foolishly.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Makes you three times as great.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Between tides, and thus open to suggestion; also, associated with being slothful.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Inherited laziness, or the slowness to attain prosperity arising from being born a younger brother.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: If you only understood that your mockery reveals how great your aspirations really are; also, the hereditary position you mock is actually to your advantage. "Cherish": hold dear; cultivate.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Which puts in agony, as in childbirth.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: "Only / Professes": his sole vocation is.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Doubt that there is anything to achieve beyond the high hope of the crown.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Regurgitated, cast ashore; also, possibly, theatrical role-playing.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: I could train a jackdaw (known for imitating speech) to speak as profoundly.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Chilblain; sore on the heel.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Turned to sugar; crystallized in sugar.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Gonzalo and Alonso.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Ariel's following lines are spoken as the other characters depart; he probably exits in another direction.Return to reference 2
- Note 2.1: 2.1Return to reference 2.1

Notes

- °: occasionReturn to reference °
- °: exactlyReturn to reference °
- °: againstReturn to reference °
- °: brothReturn to reference °
- °: leave him aloneReturn to reference °
- °: keep countReturn to reference °
- °: harboredReturn to reference °
- °: sorrowReturn to reference °
- °: spare your wordsReturn to reference °
- °: uninhabitedReturn to reference °
- °: climateReturn to reference °
- °: bogReturn to reference °
- °: exceptReturn to reference °
- °: tender and luxuriantReturn to reference °
- °: alleged; acceptedReturn to reference °
- °: forReturn to reference °
- °: fuss aboutReturn to reference °
- °: examineReturn to reference °
- °: seedsReturn to reference °
- °: considerationReturn to reference °
- °: vigorousReturn to reference °
- °: as ifReturn to reference °
- °: do notReturn to reference °
- °: lose; releaseReturn to reference °
- °: (Claribel)Return to reference °
- °: (appropriate time)Return to reference °
- °: surgeonlikeReturn to reference °
- °: commerceReturn to reference °
- °: writing; eruditionReturn to reference °
- °: servantsReturn to reference °
- °: boundaryReturn to reference °
- °: tillageReturn to reference °
- °: grainReturn to reference °

- °: for communal useReturn to reference °
- °: weaponReturn to reference °
- °: plentyReturn to reference °
- °: God saveReturn to reference °
- °: sensitive Return to reference °
- °: are accustomedReturn to reference °
- °: tired; seriousReturn to reference °
- °: neglect Return to reference °
- °: opportunityReturn to reference °
- °: consensusReturn to reference °
- °: opportunity speaks toReturn to reference °
- °: awakeReturn to reference °
- °: shut your eyesReturn to reference °
- °: meaningfullyReturn to reference °
- °: if you heedReturn to reference °
- °: clothe Return to reference °
- °: decliningReturn to reference °
- °: fixed lookReturn to reference °
- °: something importantReturn to reference °
- °: memoryReturn to reference °
- °: as little rememberedReturn to reference °
- °: buriedReturn to reference °
- °: (that he's not drowned)Return to reference °
- °: catch a glimpseReturn to reference °
- °: lifetime journeyReturn to reference °
- °: information Return to reference °
- °: messengerReturn to reference °
- °: returning fromReturn to reference °
- °: performanceReturn to reference °
- °: about 18 to 22 inchesReturn to reference °
- °: (the cubits) Return to reference °
- °: stayReturn to reference °
- °: (to his opportunity)Return to reference °
- °: those thatReturn to reference °
- °: regard; care forReturn to reference °
- °: more trimlyReturn to reference °

- °: make me wearReturn to reference °
- °: swordReturn to reference °
- °: sleep foreverReturn to reference °
- °: prompting to evilReturn to reference °
- °: chime; agreeReturn to reference °
- °: otherwiseReturn to reference °
- °: opportunityReturn to reference °
- °: your weaponsReturn to reference °
- °: fearfulReturn to reference °
- °: guardingReturn to reference °
- °: called outReturn to reference °
- °: the truthReturn to reference °

2.2

Enter CALIBAN with a burden of wood.

CALIBAN All the infections that the sun sucks up
From bogs, fens, flats, o on Prosper fall, and make
him

By inchmeal o a disease!

A noise of thunder heard. <sup>1</sup>

His spirits hear me,
And yet I needs must curse. But they'll nor pinch,
5 Fright me with urchin-shows, <sup>2</sup> pitch me i'th' mire,
Nor lead me like a firebrand in the dark
Out of my way, unless he bid 'em. But
For every trifle are they set upon me;
Sometime like apes that mow o and chatter at me
And after bite me; then like hedgehogs, which 10 Lie tumbling in my barefoot way and mount
Their pricks at my footfall; sometime am I
All wound with o adders, who with cloven tongues
Do hiss me into madness.

Enter TRINCULO. <sup>3</sup>

Lo, now, lo!
Here comes a spirit of his, and to torment me
15 For bringing wood in slowly. I'll fall flat.
Perchance he will not mind o me.
TRINCULO Here's neither bush nor scrub to bear off o
any weather at all, and another storm brewing: I hear it
sing
20 i'th' wind. Yond same black cloud, yond huge one, looks like a foul bombard <sup>4</sup> that would shed his liquor. If it should thunder as it did before, I know not where to hide my head. Yond same cloud cannot choose but fall by pailfuls. [He sees CALIBAN.] What have we here? A man or a fish? Dead or alive? A fish: he smells like a fish; a 25 very ancient and fishlike smell; a kind of not-of-the-newest poor-john.<sup>5</sup> A strange fish. Were I in England now, as once

I was, and had but this fish painted,<sup>6</sup> not a holiday fool there but would give a piece of silver. There would
this 30 monster make a man;<sup>7</sup> any strange beast there makes a man. When they will not give a doit<sup>8</sup> to relieve a lame beggar, they will lay out ten to see a dead Indian.<sup>8</sup> Legged
like a man, and his fins like arms. Warm, o' my troth!
I do
now let loose my opinion, hold it no longer: this is no
fish,
35 but an islander that hath lately suffered by a thunderbolt.
[Thunder.] Alas, the storm is come again. My best way is to creep under his gaberdine; there is no other shelter hereabout. Misery acquaints a man with strange bedfellows.
I will here shroud<sup>9</sup> till the dregs<sup>9</sup> of the storm be past.

40                   [He crawls under Caliban's cloak.]
                  Enter STEFANO singing.
STEFANO    I shall no more to sea, to sea,
                  Here shall I die ashore.
This is a very scurvy tune to sing at a man's funeral.
Well, here's my comfort.
                  [He] drinks [and] sings.
                  The master, the swabber, the boatswain and
45            I,
                  The gunner and his mate,
                  Loved Moll, Meg, and Marian, and Margery,
                  But none of us cared for Kate.
                  For she had a tongue with a tang,<sup>o</sup>
                  Would cry to a sailor, "Go hang!"
50            She loved not the savor of tar nor of pitch, Yet a tailor might scratch her where'er she did itch.<sup>1</sup>
                  Then to sea, boys, and let her go hang!
This is a scurvy tune, too; but here's my comfort.
                  [He] drinks.
55    CALIBAN    Do not torment me! Oh!
STEFANO    What's the matter?<sup>o</sup> Have we devils here?
                  Do
                  you put tricks upon 's with savages and men of Ind?<sup>o</sup> Ha? I have not scaped drowning to be afeared now
                  of your four legs; for it hath been said, "As proper a man as 60            ever went on four legs<sup>2</sup> cannot make him give ground";
                  and it shall be said so again, while Stefano breathes at'<sup>o</sup>
                  nostrils.
CALIBAN    The spirit torments me! Oh!

STEFANO    This is some monster of the isle with four legs
65    who hath got, as I take it, an ague.<sup>o</sup> Where the devil should he learn our language? I will give him some relief
             if it be but for that. If I can recover<sup>o</sup> him and keep
             him
             tame and get to Naples with him, he's a present for any emperor that ever trod on neat's leather.<sup>o</sup> 70    CALIBAN    Do not torment me, prithee! I'll bring my wood home faster.
STEFANO    He's in his fit now, and does not talk after<sup>o</sup>
             the wisest. He shall taste of my bottle. If he have never drunk wine afore, it will go near to<sup>o</sup> remove his fit. If I can recover
75    him and keep him tame, I will not take too much for him.<sup>3</sup>
             He shall pay for him that hath<sup>o</sup> him, and that soundly.
CALIBAN    Thou dost me yet but little hurt; thou wilt anon,
             I know it by thy trembling. Now Prosper works upon
             thee.
STEFANO    Come on your ways.<sup>o</sup> Open your mouth:
             here is 80    that which will give language to you, cat.<sup>4</sup> Open your mouth: this will shake<sup>o</sup> your shaking, I can tell you,
             and that soundly. [CALIBAN drinks.] You cannot tell who's your friend. Open your chaps again.

TRINCULO I should know that voice. It should be—but he is drowned, and these are devils. Oh, defend me!

85 STEFANO Four legs and two voices: a most delicate<sup>o</sup> monster!
His forward voice now is to speak well of his friend;
his backward voice is to utter foul speeches and to detract.
If all the wine in my bottle will recover him,<sup>5</sup> I will help his ache. Come. [CALIBAN drinks.] Amen.<sup>o</sup> I will pour 90 some in thy other mouth.
TRINCULO Stefano!
STEFANO Doth thy other mouth call me? Mercy,
mercy!
This is a devil and no monster. I will leave him; I have no long spoon.<sup>6</sup>

95 TRINCULO Stefano? If thou beest Stefano, touch me
and speak to me, for I am Trinculo—be not afeard—thy good friend Trinculo.
STEFANO If thou beest Trinculo, come forth: I'll pull thee by 100 the lesser legs. If any be Trinculo's legs, these are they. [He pulls him out.] Thou art very<sup>o</sup> Trinculo indeed! How can'st thou to be the siege<sup>o</sup> of this mooncalf?<sup>7</sup> Can
he vent<sup>o</sup> Trinculos?
TRINCULO I took him to be killed with a thunderstroke.
But art thou not drowned, Stefano? I hope now thou 105 art not drowned. Is the storm overblown? I hid me under the dead mooncalf's gaberdine, for fear of the storm.

And art thou living, Stefano? O Stefano, two Neapolitans scaped!

110 STEFANO Prithee, do not turn me about, my stomach is not constant.

CALIBAN [aside] These be fine things, an if<sup>o</sup> they be
not sprites. That's a brave<sup>o</sup> god, and bears celestial liquor. I will kneel to him.

115 STEFANO How didst thou scape? How cam'st thou hither?

Swear by this bottle how thou cam'st hither. I escaped upon a butt of sack<sup>8</sup> which the sailors heaved o'erboard,
by this bottle, which I made of the bark of a tree,
with mine own hands, since I was cast ashore.

120 CALIBAN I'll swear upon that bottle to be thy true
subject,
for the liquor is not earthly.

STEFANO Here. Swear then how thou escaped'st.

TRINCULO Swum ashore, man, like a duck. I can swim like a duck, I'll be sworn.

125 STEFANO [giving TRINCULO the bottle] Here, kiss the Book.<sup>9</sup>

Though thou canst swim like a duck, thou art made like a goose.<sup>1</sup>

TRINCULO O Stefano, hast any more of this?
 STEFANO The whole butt, man. My cellar is in a rock
 by 130 the seaside, where my wine is hid. [to CALIBAN] How now, mooncalf, how does thine ague?
 CALIBAN Hast thou not dropped from heaven?
 STEFANO Out o'th' moon I do assure thee. I was the man
 i'th' moon, when time was.<sup>o</sup> 135 CALIBAN I have seen thee in her, and I do adore
 thee.
 My mistress<sup>o</sup> showed me thee, and thy dog, and thy bush.<sup>2</sup>
 STEFANO [giving the bottle to CALIBAN] Come, swear
 to that: kiss the Book. I will furnish it anon with new contents.
 Swear.
 140 TRINCULO By this good light,<sup>o</sup> this is a very shallow monster.
 I afeared of him? A very weak monster. The man i'th' moon? A most poor credulous monster. Well drawn,<sup>o</sup> monster, in good sooth.
 CALIBAN I'll show thee every fertile inch o'th' island,
 and
 I will kiss thy foot. I prithee, be my god.
 145 TRINCULO By this light, a most perfidious and drunken monster! When 's god's asleep he'll rob his bottle.
 CALIBAN I'll kiss thy foot. I'll swear myself thy subject.
 STEFANO Come on, then: down and swear.
 150 TRINCULO I shall laugh myself to death at this puppy-headed monster. A most scurvy monster. I could find

in my heart to beat him—

STEFANO [to CALIBAN] Come, kiss.

TRINCULO —but that the poor monster's in drink. <sup>o</sup>

An

abominable monster.

155 CALIBAN I'll show thee the best springs; I'll pluck thee berries;

I'll fish for thee, and get thee wood enough.

A plague upon the tyrant that I serve!

I'll bear him no more sticks but follow thee,

Thou wondrous man.

160 TRINCULO A most ridiculous monster, to make a wonder of a poor drunkard.

CALIBAN I prithee, let me bring thee where crabs <sup>o</sup> grow;

And I with my long nails will dig thee pig-nuts, <sup>o</sup>

165 Show thee a jay's nest, and instruct thee how
To snare the nimble marmoset. I'll bring thee
To clust'ring filberts, and sometimes I'll get thee Young scamels <sup>3</sup> from the rock. Wilt thou go with
me?

STEFANO I prithee now lead the way without any
more

170 talking. Trinculo, the King and all our company else being

drowned, we will inherit here. [to CALIBAN] Here, bear my bottle. —Fellow Trinculo, we'll fill him <sup>o</sup> by and by again.

CALIBAN (sings drunkenly) <sup>4</sup> Farewell, master;
farewell,

farewell.

175 TRINCULO A howling monster, a drunken monster.

CALIBAN [continuing to sing] No more dams I'll make for<sup>o</sup>
 fish,
 Nor fetch in firing<sup>o</sup>
 At requiring,
 180 Nor scrape trencher, nor wash dish,
 'Ban, 'Ban, Ca-Caliban
 Has a new master: get a new man.<sup>5</sup>
 Freedom, high-day;<sup>o</sup> high-day, freedom; freedom, high-
 day, freedom!
 185 STEFANO O brave<sup>o</sup> monster, lead the way! Exeunt.

Endnotes

- Note 1: Caliban takes this as a response to his curse.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: With the sight of hedgehog-like spirits.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Trinculo is probably dressed in traditional fool's motley (many-colored garment).Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Large leather drinking vessel; stone-throwing military engine.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Dried hake, a poor person's staple.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: On a sign to attract spectators.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Make a fortune for a man; become a man.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: An allusion to exhibitions of Native Americans in London.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Last drinks, as from the bottom of a "bombard" of wine.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Implying sexual desire and gratification. Tailors were often mocked for supposed lack of virility.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Comically varying "on two legs" (upright); also suggesting "on crutches."Return to reference 2

- Note 3: No sum can be too high for him.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: "Ale will make a cat speak" was proverbial.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: If it takes all the wine in my bottle to cure him.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: From the proverbial "He should have a long spoon that sups with the devil."Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Deformed creature; miscarriage, owing to the supposed detrimental influence of the moon.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Cask of Spanish or Canary wine.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Confirming an oath by kissing the Bible; or the proverbial "Kiss the cup" ("Drink").Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Probably alluding to Trinculo's outstretched neck with the bottle as a beak; also, a byword for giddiness and unsteadiness on the feet.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: A dog and a thornbush were traditional attributes of the man in the moon.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Shakespeare may have invented this exotic word, which appears nowhere else in the English language, but it seems more likely that "scamel" was the result of an error in transmission.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: This stage direction may be misplaced and may actually refer to the following song, "No more dams."Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Addressed to the old master, Prospero.Return to reference 5
- Note 2.2: 2.2Return to reference 2.2

Notes

- °: marshesReturn to reference °
- °: inch by inchReturn to reference °
- °: grimaceReturn to reference °
- °: entwined byReturn to reference °
- °: noticeReturn to reference °

- °: ward off Return to reference °
- °: small coin Return to reference °
- °: take cover Return to reference °
- °: sting Return to reference °
- °: what's going on? Return to reference °
- °: India Return to reference °
- °: at the Return to reference °
- °: a fit of fever Return to reference °
- °: cure Return to reference °
- °: cowhide; shoes Return to reference °
- °: in the manner of Return to reference °
- °: almost Return to reference °
- °: gets Return to reference °
- °: come on Return to reference °
- °: dislodge Return to reference °
- °: exquisitely made Return to reference °
- °: enough Return to reference °
- °: actual Return to reference °
- °: excrement Return to reference °
- °: defecate Return to reference °
- °: an if = if Return to reference °
- °: excellent; fine Return to reference °
- °: once upon a time Return to reference °
- °: (Miranda) Return to reference °
- °: sun Return to reference °
- °: drunk Return to reference °
- °: drunk Return to reference °
- °: crab apples Return to reference °
- °: edible tubers Return to reference °
- °: it Return to reference °
- °: to trap Return to reference °
- °: firewood Return to reference °
- °: holiday Return to reference °
- °: excellent; fine Return to reference °

3.1

Enter FERDINAND, bearing a log.

FERDINAND    There be some sports are painful, and their labor

Delight in them sets off.<sup>1</sup> Some kinds of baseness
Are nobly undergone, and most poor matters
Point to rich ends. This my mean<sup>o</sup> task

5 Would be as heavy to me as odious, but<sup>o</sup>
The mistress which I serve quickens<sup>o</sup> what's dead
And makes my labors pleasures. Oh, she is

Ten times more gentle than her father's crabbed,
And he's composed of harshness. I must remove

10      Some thousands of these logs and pile them up,
Upon a soreo injunction. My sweet mistress

Weeps when she sees me work and says such baseness

Had never like executor. I forget;

But these sweet thoughts do even refresh my labors,
Most busil'est, <sup>2</sup> when I do it. <sup>o</sup>

Enter MIRANDA, and PROSPERO [unseen].

MIRANDA                                Alas now, pray you,

15 Work not so hard. I would the lightning had Burnt up those logs that you are enjoined to pile.

Pray set it down and rest you. When this burns
'Twill weep<sup>3</sup> for having wearied you. My father

Is hard at study. Pray now, rest yourself.

20 He's safeo for these three hours.

FERDINAND O most dear
mistress,

The sun will set before I shall discharge
What I must strive to do.

MIRANDA                                If you'll sit down
I'll bear your logs the while. Pray give me that:

I'll carry it to the pile.

25 FERDINAND No, precious creature,
I had rather crack my sinews, break my back,
Than you should such dishonor undergo While I sit lazy by.

MIRANDA It would become me
As well as it does you; and I should do it 30 With much more ease, for my goodwill is to it,
And yours it is against.

PROSPERO [aside] Poor worm, thou art infected:<sup>4</sup>

This visitation<sup>5</sup> shows it.

MIRANDA You look wearily.

FERDINAND No, noble mistress, 'tis fresh morning with me

When you are by at night. I do beseech you,
Chiefly that I may set it in my prayers,
35 What is your name?

MIRANDA Miranda. —O my father,
I have broke your hest<sup>o</sup> to say so!

FERDINAND Admired<sup>6</sup> Miranda!
Indeed the top of admiration, worth
What's dearest to the world. Full many a lady
I have eyed with best regard, and many a time
40 Th' harmony of their tongues hath into bondage Brought my too diligent<sup>o</sup> ear. For several virtues
Have I liked several<sup>o</sup> women; never any
With so full soul but some defect in her
Did quarrel with the noblest grace she owed<sup>o</sup>
45 And put it to the foil.<sup>7</sup> But you, O you,
So perfect and so peerless, are created
Of every creature's best.

MIRANDA I do not know
One of my sex; no woman's face remember
Save, from my glass,<sup>o</sup> mine own. Nor have I seen

50 More that I may call men than you, good friend,
And my dear father. How features are abroad<sup>8</sup>
I am skillless<sup>o</sup> of; but by my modesty,<sup>o</sup>
The jewel in my dower,<sup>o</sup> I would not wish
Any companion in the world but you,
55 Nor can imagination form a shape
Besides<sup>o</sup> yourself to like of. But I prattle Something<sup>o</sup> too wildly, and my father's precepts
I therein do forget.

FERDINAND I am in my condition<sup>o</sup>
A prince, Miranda; I do think a king—
60 I would<sup>o</sup> not so!—and would no more endure
This wooden slavery<sup>9</sup> than to suffer
The flesh fly<sup>1</sup> blow my mouth. Hear my soul speak:
The very instant that I saw you did
My heart fly to your service, there resides
65 To make me slave to it, and for your sake
Am I this patient log-man.

MIRANDA Do you love me?

FERDINAND O heaven, O earth, bear witness to this sound,
And crown what I profess with kind event<sup>o</sup>
If I speak true! If hollowly,<sup>o</sup> invert 70 What best is boded<sup>o</sup> me to mischief!<sup>o</sup> I,
Beyond all limit of what<sup>o</sup> else i'th' world,
Do love, prize, honor you.

MIRANDA I am a fool
To weep at what I am glad of.

PROSPERO [aside] Fair encounter
Of two most rare affections. Heavens rain grace
75 On that which breeds between 'em.

FERDINAND Wherefore weep
you?

MIRANDA At mine unworthiness, that dare not offer
What I desire to give, and much less take

What I shall die to want.<sup>2</sup> But this is trifling,
 And all the more it seeks to hide itself
 80 The bigger bulk it shows.<sup>3</sup> Hence, bashful cunning,<sup>o</sup>
 And prompt me, plain and holy innocence!
 I am your wife if you'll marry me;
 If not, I'll die your maid.<sup>o</sup> To be your fellow<sup>o</sup>
 85 You may deny me, but I'll be your servant
 Whether you will or no.
 FERDINAND My mistress,<sup>o</sup> dearest,
 And I thus humble ever.
 MIRANDA My husband, then?
 FERDINAND Ay, with a heart as willing<sup>o</sup>
 As bondage e'er of freedom. Here's my hand.<sup>4</sup> 90 MIRANDA And mine, with my heart in't. And now
 farewell
 Till half an hour hence.
 FERDINAND A thousand thousand!<sup>o</sup>
Exeunt [FERDINAND and MIRANDA, separately].
 PROSPERO So glad of this as they I cannot be,
 Who are surprised withal;<sup>o</sup> but my rejoicing
 At nothing can be more. I'll to my book,<sup>o</sup>
 95 For yet ere supertime must I perform
 Much business appertaining.
Exit.

Endnotes

- Note 1: The greater effort invested amounts to more pleasure; the labor of painful activities ("sports") is offset by whatever delight we take in them.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Most busily (giving a double superlative).Return to reference 2
- Note 3: By exuding drops of resin.Return to reference 3

- Note 4: Afflicted with lovesickness. "Worm": an expression of tenderness; but a worm was often thought to carry disease.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Suggesting a pastoral or charitable visit to the sick; or perhaps indicating a visit by the plague—here, lovesickness.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Playing on the meaning of Miranda's name.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Foiled it, or made it ineffectual; challenged it, as in a fencing match (see "quarrel" in line 45).Return to reference 7
- Note 8: What people look like elsewhere.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: The log as a symbol of Prospero's oppression.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Species of fly that deposits its eggs ("blows") in dead flesh.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Miranda is not at liberty to bestow her virginity or to obtain the consummation that she desires and lacks.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: An image of secret pregnancy.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: "I am your wife . . . hand" (lines 83–89): such an exchange could actually have constituted a marriage ceremony. In Shakespeare's time, weddings did not need to be witnessed and performed in a church to be valid (compare 4.1.14–19).Return to reference 4
- Note 3.1: 3.1Return to reference 3.1

Notes

- °: lowlyReturn to reference °
- °: except thatReturn to reference °
- °: enlivensReturn to reference °
- °: harshReturn to reference °
- °: (labor)Return to reference °
- °: we are safe from himReturn to reference °
- °: disobeyed your commandReturn to reference °

- °: attentiveReturn to reference °
- °: variousReturn to reference °
- °: ownedReturn to reference °
- °: mirrorReturn to reference °
- °: ignorant Return to reference °
- °: virginityReturn to reference °
- °: dowryReturn to reference °
- °: other thanReturn to reference °
- °: somewhatReturn to reference °
- °: rankReturn to reference °
- °: wish it wereReturn to reference °
- °: favorable outcomeReturn to reference °
- °: falselyReturn to reference °
- °: foretold to Return to reference °
- °: misfortuneReturn to reference °
- °: whatsoeverReturn to reference °
- °: artful shynessReturn to reference °
- °: virgin; servant Return to reference °
- °: equalReturn to reference °
- °: sweetheartReturn to reference °
- °: desirousReturn to reference °
- °: (farewells)Return to reference °
- °: overwhelmed by allReturn to reference °
- °: book of magicReturn to reference °

3.2

Enter CALIBAN, STEFANO, and TRINCULO.

STEFANO Tell not me. When the butt is out we will drink water, not a drop before. Therefore bear up and board 'em.<sup>1</sup>

—Servant monster, drink to me!

TRINCULO "Servant monster"? The folly<sup>o</sup> of this island!

5 They say there's but five upon this isle. We are three
of them; if th'other two be brained<sup>o</sup> like us, the state totters.

STEFANO Drink, servant monster, when I bid thee.
Thy eyes are almost set<sup>o</sup> in thy head.

TRINCULO Where should they be set<sup>o</sup> else? He were
a

10 brave monster indeed if they were set in his tail.

STEFANO My man-monster hath drowned his tongue
in sack. For my part, the sea cannot drown me. I swam, ere

I could recover the shore, five and thirty leagues,<sup>o</sup> off and on.<sup>2</sup> By this light, thou shalt be my lieutenant, monster, or

15 my standard.<sup>3</sup>

TRINCULO Your lieutenant, if you list;<sup>o</sup> he's no standard.

STEFANO We'll not run, Monsieur Monster.

TRINCULO Nor go<sup>o</sup> neither, but you'll lie<sup>4</sup> like dogs
and

yet say nothing neither.
 20 STEFANO Mooncalf, speak once in thy life, if thou beest a good mooncalf.
 CALIBAN How does thy honor? Let me lick thy shoe.
 I'll not serve him; he is not valiant.
 TRINCULO Thou liest, most ignorant monster; I am in case<sup>o</sup> 25 to jostle a constable. Why, thou debauched fish
     thou,
     was there ever man a coward that hath drunk so much sack as I do today? Wilt thou tell a monstrous lie, being
     but half a fish and half a monster?
 CALIBAN Lo, how he mocks me. Wilt thou let him,
     my lord?
 TRINCULO "Lord," quoth he? That a monster should 30 be such a natural!<sup>5</sup>
 CALIBAN Lo, lo again! Bite him to death, I prithee.
 STEFANO Trinculo, keep a good tongue in your head.
     If you prove a mutineer, the next tree!<sup>o</sup> The poor monster's
     my subject, and he shall not suffer indignity.
 35 CALIBAN I thank my noble lord. Wilt thou be pleased
     To hearken once again to the suit I made to thee?
 STEFANO Marry, will I. Kneel and repeat it. I will stand,
     and so shall Trinculo.
         Enter ARIEL invisible.
 CALIBAN As I told thee before, I am subject to a 40 tyrant,
     A sorcerer, that by his cunning hath

Cheated me of the island.

ARIEL

Thou liest.

CALIBAN [to TRINCULO] Thou liest, thou jesting monkey, thou!

I would my valiant master would destroy thee.
I do not lie.

45

STEFANO Trinculo, if you trouble him any more in 's tale,

by this hand, I will supplant<sup>o</sup> some of your teeth.

TRINCULO Why, I said nothing.

STEFANO Mum, then, and no more. —Proceed.

50

CALIBAN I say by sorcery he got this isle;
From me he got it. If thy greatness will Revenge it on him—for I know thou dar'st,
But this thing<sup>6</sup> dare not—

STEFANO That's most certain.

55

CALIBAN Thou shalt be lord of it, and I'll serve thee.

STEFANO How now shall this be compassed?<sup>o</sup> Canst
thou

bring me to the party?<sup>o</sup>

CALIBAN Yea, yea, my lord. I'll yield him thee
asleep,

Where thou mayst knock a nail into his head.<sup>7</sup>

60

ARIEL Thou liest; thou canst not.

CALIBAN What a pied ninny's<sup>o</sup> this! Thou scurvy patch!<sup>o</sup>

I do beseech thy greatness give him blows
And take his bottle from him. When that's gone,
He shall drink naught but brine, for I'll not show him
Where the quick freshes<sup>o</sup> are.

65

STEFANO Trinculo, run into no further danger.

Interrupt

the monster one word further and, by this hand, I'll turn

my mercy out o'doors and make a stockfish of thee.<sup>8</sup>

TRINCULO Why, what did I? I did nothing. I'll go farther off.
 STEFANO Didst thou not say he lied?
 70 ARIEL Thou liest.
 STEFANO Do I so?
 [He beats TRINCULO.]
 Take thou that! As you like this, give me the lie<sup>o</sup> another time.
 TRINCULO I did not give the lie! Out o'your wits, and 75 hearing too? A pox o'your bottle. This can sack and drinking do. A murrain<sup>o</sup> on your monster, and the devil
 take your fingers!
 CALIBAN Ha, ha, ha!
 STEFANO Now forward with your tale. —Prithee 80 stand
 further off.
 CALIBAN Beat him enough. After a little time I'll beat
 him
 too.
 STEFANO Stand farther. —Come, proceed.
 CALIBAN Why, as I told thee, 'tis a custom with him 85 I'th' afternoon to sleep. There<sup>o</sup> thou mayst brain
 him,
 Having first seized his books; or with a log
 Batter his skull, or paunch<sup>o</sup> him with a stake,
 Or cut his weasand<sup>o</sup> with thy knife. Remember
 First to possess his books, for without them
 90 He's but a sot<sup>o</sup> as I am, nor hath not
 One spirit to command—they all do hate him
 As rootedly as I. Burn but his books.
 He has brave utensils,<sup>9</sup> for so he calls them,
 Which, when he has a house, he'll deck withal.
 95 And that most deeply to consider is
 The beauty of his daughter. He himself

100        Calls her a nonpareil.° I never saw a woman
              But only Sycorax my dam and she;
              But she as far surpasseth Sycorax
              As great'st does least.
 STEFANO                                Is it so brave° a lass?
 CALIBAN    Ay, lord. She will become thy bed, I
              warrant,
              And bring thee forth brave brood.
 STEFANO    Monster, I will kill this man. His daughter and I
 105        will be king and queen—save° our graces—and Trinculo
              and thyself shall be viceroys. Dost thou like the plot, Trinculo?
 TRINCULO    Excellent.
 STEFANO    Give me thy hand. I am sorry I beat thee.
              But
 110        while thou liv'st, keep a good tongue in thy head.
 CALIBAN    Within this half hour will he be asleep.
              Wilt thou destroy him then?
 STEFANO                                Ay, on mine honor.
 ARIEL [aside]    This will I tell my master.
 CALIBAN    Thou mak'st me merry. I am full of
              pleasure;
 115        Let us be jocund. Will you troll° the catch°
              You taught me but whilere?°
 STEFANO    At thy request, monster, I will do reason,
              any ° reason. Come on, Trinculo, let us sing.
              (Sings.)<sup>1</sup>                Flout 'em, and scout 'em
    And scout°'em, and flout 'em.
 120                                Thought is free.
 CALIBAN    That's not the tune.
              ARIEL plays the tune on a tabor and pipe.<sup>2</sup>
 STEFANO    What is this same?

TRINCULO This is the tune of our catch, played by
 the picture of Nobody.<sup>3</sup> 125 STEFANO If thou beest a man, show thyself in thy likeness. If thou beest a devil, take't as thou list.<sup>o</sup> TRINCULO Oh, forgive me my sins!
 STEFANO He that dies pays all debts.<sup>4</sup> I defy thee!
 Mercy
 upon us!<sup>5</sup>
 130 CALIBAN Art thou afeard?
 STEFANO No, monster, not I.
 CALIBAN Be not afeard: the isle is full of noises, Sounds and sweet airs<sup>o</sup> that give delight and hurt
 not.
 Sometimes a thousand twangling instruments
 135 Will hum about mine ears; and sometimes voices,
 That, if I then had waked after long sleep,
 Will make me sleep again; and then, in dreaming,
 The clouds methought would open and show riches
 Ready to drop upon me, that when I waked
 140 I cried to dream again.
 STEFANO This will prove a brave kingdom to me,
 where I shall have my music for nothing.<sup>6</sup>
 CALIBAN When Prospero is destroyed.
 STEFANO That shall be by and by:<sup>o</sup> I remember the 145 story.

[Exit ARIEL playing music.]

 TRINCULO The sound is going away; let's follow it,
 and
 after do our work.
 STEFANO Lead, monster, we'll follow. I would I could see this taborer: he lays it on.<sup>7</sup>

Exeunt.

Endnotes

- Note 1: Force a way aboard, continuing the terminology of naval warfare; take onboard (drink). "Bear up": sail to the attack.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Tacking away from and toward the shore.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Standard-bearer; but in Trinculo's reply, "one who can stand up."Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Lie (down); tell lies; excrete.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: An idiot, punning on the idea that monsters were unnatural.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Trinculo; or perhaps Caliban himself.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: As Jael murdered the sleeping the Sisera in Judges 4:21 and 5:26.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Proverbial allusion to the beating of dried fish before cooking it.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Perhaps confusing implements for magic and household goods.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: The stage direction suggests that the others cannot manage the catch and remain in bewildered silence. But Trinculo, and perhaps Caliban, may attempt to join in.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: The tabor was a small drum slung on the left-hand side of the body; the tabor pipe was a long narrow pipe played with the left hand. The combination was associated with rustic dances and merrymaking.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: "Nobody" was a character in a comedy who was depicted on the title page of the printed text. Large breeches up

- to his neck made him appear to have no trunk.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Varying the proverbial “Death pays all debts.”Return to reference 4
  - Note 5: Stefano’s defiance comically collapses.Return to reference 5
  - Note 6: James I spent large sums on court music, but not typically of the popular kind Ariel now plays.Return to reference 6
  - Note 7: He sets himself to his music vigorously. Stefano deserts Caliban in order to follow the music. Trinculo and Caliban in turn follow Stefano.Return to reference 7
  - Note 3.2: 3.2Return to reference 3.2

Notes

- °: absurdity Return to reference °
- °: have brains Return to reference °
- °: fixed by drunkenness Return to reference °
- °: placed Return to reference °
- °: about 100 miles Return to reference °
- °: wish Return to reference °
- °: walk Return to reference °
- °: prepared Return to reference °
- °: (for a gallows) Return to reference °
- °: uproot Return to reference °
- °: accomplished Return to reference °
- °: person concerned Return to reference °
- °: fool in motley Return to reference °
- °: jester; idiot Return to reference °
- °: fast-flowing springs Return to reference °
- °: call me a liar Return to reference °
- °: plague Return to reference °
- °: then Return to reference °
- °: disembowel Return to reference °

- °: windpipeReturn to reference °
- °: stupid foolReturn to reference °
- °: one without equalReturn to reference °
- °: excellent; fineReturn to reference °
- °: God saveReturn to reference °
- °: sing Return to reference °
- °: round; songReturn to reference °
- °: a short time agoReturn to reference °
- °: anything reasonableReturn to reference °
- °: mockReturn to reference °
- °: wishReturn to reference °
- °: tunesReturn to reference °
- °: very soonReturn to reference °

3.3

Enter ALONSO, SEBASTIAN, ANTONIO, GONZALO, ADRIAN,
and FRANCISCO.

GONZALO By'r lakin,<sup>1</sup> I can go no further, sir.
My old bones aches. Here's a maze trod indeed Through forthrights and meanders.° By your patience,
I needs must rest me.

ALONSO Old lord, I cannot blame thee,
Who am myself attached° with weariness
5 To th' dulling of my spirits. Sit down and rest.
Even° here I will put off my hope, and keep it
No longer for° my flatterer: he is drowned
Whom thus we stray to find, and the sea mocks
Our frustrate° search on land. Well, let him go.

10 ANTONIO [aside to SEBASTIAN ] I am right glad that he's so out of hope.

Do not, for° one repulse, forgo the purpose
That you resolved t'effect.

SEBASTIAN [aside to ANTONIO] The next advantage
Will we take throughly.°

ANTONIO [aside to SEBASTIAN] Let it be tonight;
15 For now they are oppressed with travail,° they Will not nor cannot use such vigilance
As when they are fresh.

SEBASTIAN [aside to ANTONIO] I say tonight: no more.
Solemn and strange music. [Enter] PROSPERO on the top,<sup>2</sup> invisible.

ALONSO What harmony is this? My good friends,
hark!

GONZALO Marvelous sweet music.

Enter several strange shapes, bringing a banquet; and dance about it with gentle actions of salutations, and inviting the King etc. to eat, they depart.

20 ALONSO Give us kind keepers,<sup>o</sup> heavens! What were these?

SEBASTIAN A living drollery.<sup>3</sup> Now I will believe
That there are unicorns; that in Arabia
There is one tree, the phoenix' throne, one phoenix<sup>4</sup>
At this hour reigning there.

ANTONIO I'll believe both;
And what does else want credit,<sup>o</sup> come to me,
25 And I'll be sworn 'tis true. Travelers ne'er did lie,<sup>5</sup>
Though fools at home condemn 'em.

GONZALO If in Naples
I should report this now, would they believe me?
If I should say I saw such islanders—
30 For certes<sup>o</sup> these are people of the island—
Who, though they are of monstrous shape, yet note
Their manners are more gentle, kind, than of Our human generation you shall find Many, nay, almost any.

PROSPERO [aside] Honest lord,
35 Thou hast said well; for some of you there present
Are worse than devils.

ALONSO I cannot too much muse<sup>o</sup>
Such shapes, such gesture, and such sound, expressing—
Although they want the use of tongue<sup>o</sup>—a kind
Of excellent dumb discourse.

PROSPERO [aside] Praise in departing.<sup>6</sup>

FRANCISCO They vanished strangely.

40 SEBASTIAN No matter,
since

They have left their viands<sup>o</sup> behind; for we have stomachs.<sup>o</sup>

Wilt please you taste of what is here?

ALONSO

Not I.

GONZALO Faith, sir, you need not fear. When we were boys,

45 Who would believe that there were mountaineers,<sup>o</sup>
Dewlapped like bulls, whose throats had hanging at
'em

Wallets<sup>o</sup> of flesh? Or that there were such men Whose heads stood in their breasts?<sup>7</sup> Which now we find

Each putter-out of five for one<sup>8</sup> will bring us
Good warrant of.

ALONSO I will stand to and feed;<sup>o</sup>

50 Although my last, no matter, since I feel
The best is past. Brother, my lord the duke, Stand to and do as we.

[ALONSO, SEBASTIAN, and ANTONIO approach the table.] Thunder and lightning.

Enter ARIEL, like a harpy;<sup>9</sup> claps his wings upon the table, and with a quaint device<sup>o</sup> the banquet vanishes.<sup>1</sup>

55 ARIEL You are three men of sin, whom destiny—
That hath to<sup>o</sup> instrument this lower world
And what is in't—the never-surfeited sea
Hath caused to belch up you, and on this island,
Where man doth not inhabit—you 'mongst men
Being most unfit to live. I have made you mad;
And even with suchlike valor<sup>2</sup> men hang and drown
Their proper selves.<sup>o</sup>

[ALONSO, SEBASTIAN, and ANTONIO draw their swords.]<sup>3</sup>

60 You fools, I and my fellows
Are ministers of fate. The elements
Of whom your swords are tempered<sup>4</sup> may as well
Wound the loud winds, or with bemocked-at stabs
Kill the still-closing<sup>5</sup> waters, as diminish

65 One dowl<sup>o</sup> that's in my plume.<sup>o</sup> My fellow ministers
Are like<sup>o</sup> invulnerable. If you could hurt,
Your swords are now too massy<sup>o</sup> for your strengths
And will not be uplifted. But remember—
For that's my business to you—that you three 70 From Milan did supplant good Prospero;
Exposed unto the sea, which hath requit it,
Him and his innocent child; for which foul deed
The powers, delaying not forgetting,<sup>6</sup> have Incensed the seas and shores—yea, all the creatures<sup>7</sup>—
Against your peace. Thee of thy son, Alonso,
75 They have bereft; and do pronounce by me
Ling'ring perdition<sup>8</sup>—worse than any death
Can be at once—shall step by step attend
You and your ways; whose<sup>9</sup> wraths to guard you
from,
80 Which here in this most desolate<sup>1</sup> isle else falls
Upon your heads, is nothing<sup>o</sup> but heart's sorrow
And a clear life<sup>o</sup> ensuing.
He vanishes<sup>2</sup> in thunder; then, to soft music, enter the shapes again, and dance with mocks and mows,<sup>o</sup> and [then exeunt], carrying out the table.
PROSPERO [aside] Bravely the figure of this harpy hast thou
Performed, my Ariel; a grace it had, devouring.<sup>3</sup>
Of my instruction hast thou nothing bated<sup>o</sup>
85 In what thou hadst to say. So with good life<sup>4</sup>
And observation strange<sup>5</sup> my meaner ministers<sup>o</sup>
Their several kinds<sup>o</sup> have done.<sup>o</sup> My high charms
work,
And these mine enemies are all knit up
In their distractions. They now are in my power;
90 And in these fits I leave them, while I visit

Young Ferdinand, whom they suppose is drowned,
 And his and mine loved darling. [Exit.]

GONZALO I'th' name of something holy, sir, why stand you
 In this strange stare?

95 ALONSO Oh, it is monstrous, monstrous!

Methought the billows spoke and told me of it,
 The winds did sing it to me, and the thunder,
 That deep and dreadful organ pipe, pronounced
 The name of Prosper. It did bass my trespass.<sup>6</sup> 100 Therefore<sup>o</sup> my son i'th' ooze is bedded, and I'll seek him deeper than e'er plummet sounded,
 And with him there lie mudded. [Exit.]

SEBASTIAN But one fiend at a
 time,
 I'll fight their legions o'er!<sup>o</sup>

ANTONIO I'll be thy second.
Exeunt [SEBASTIAN and ANTONIO].

GONZALO All three of them are desperate:<sup>o</sup> their great guilt,
 105 Like poison given to work<sup>o</sup> a great time after,
 Now gins to bite the spirits. I do beseech you
 That are of suppler joints, follow them swiftly,
 And hinder them from what this ecstasy<sup>o</sup>
 May now provoke them to.

ADRIAN Follow, I pray you.
Exeunt.

Endnotes

- Note 1: Ladykin: a colloquial form of reference to the Virgin Mary.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: A small acting area above the upper stage.Return to reference 2

- Note 3: A puppet show with live actors.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: The unicorn and phoenix, a bird, were two mythological creatures that sometimes figured in travelers' tales. Only one phoenix was said to exist in the world at any one time.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Proverbially, "A traveler may lie with authority."Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Reserve your praise until the end of the event.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Such headless people were described by classical writers, including Pliny the Elder (Natural History 5.8), as located in North Africa.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: A traveler could profit from a voyage by laying down a sum with a broker before departing and undertaking to bring back evidence of having reached his destination; if successful, he was repaid fivefold.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: A mythological monster with a vulture's wings and claws and a woman's face. Aeneas and his companions encountered these harpies, who stole their meals and threatened to punish them with slow starvation. "Thunder and lightning": both spectacular and functional for disguising the mechanics of the "quaint device."Return to reference 9
- Note 1: The simplest effective staging is by means of a rotating tabletop with the vessels of the banquet fixed to its surface. Leg-to-leg planks supporting the tabletop or a hanging cloth would conceal the vanished banquet. The harpy's wings would hide the mechanics from the audience, and clapping them would provide a visual distraction.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Fearlessness that comes from madness.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Ariel perhaps ascends beyond their reach here. Aeneas's companions, like Alonso here, similarly attempted to kill the harpies with swords.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Compounded and hardened. Metal was sometimes thought of as being compounded of earth and fire, here contrasted with winds and waters.Return to reference 4

- Note 5: Self-healing, since they close immediately once parted.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Related to the proverb “God stays long but strikes at last.”Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Compare Genesis 1:21: “Then God created . . . everything living and moving.”Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Slow starvation; hell on earth of spiritual suffering. The phrase is first the object of “pronounce” and then the subject of “shall . . . attend.”Return to reference 8
- Note 9: That is, “the powers” in line 73.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Joyless, wretched; barren, deserted.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Ariel is raised out of sight into the canopy.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: In clapping his wings, Ariel has created the illusion of having devoured the banquet.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Convincingly; with vitality. “So”: in the same way.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Remarkable attention to the requirements of their parts, or instructions.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: The thunder proclaimed my sin (“trespass”) in a bass voice, or with a bass background; perhaps, wordplay on the “utter baseness” of trespass.Return to reference 6
- Note 3.3: 3.3Return to reference 3.3

Notes

- °: direct and winding pathsReturn to reference °
- °: seizedReturn to reference °
- °: exactlyReturn to reference °
- °: asReturn to reference °
- °: vainReturn to reference °
- °: on account ofReturn to reference °
- °: thoroughlyReturn to reference °
- °: journey; effortReturn to reference °

- °: guardian angelsReturn to reference °
- °: lack beliefReturn to reference °
- °: certainlyReturn to reference °
- °: marvel atReturn to reference °
- °: languageReturn to reference °
- °: food Return to reference °
- °: good appetitesReturn to reference °
- °: mountain dwellersReturn to reference °
- °: pouchesReturn to reference °
- °: begin eatingReturn to reference °
- °: an ingenious mechanismReturn to reference °
- °: as itsReturn to reference °
- °: themselvesReturn to reference °
- °: featherlet Return to reference °
- °: plumageReturn to reference °
- °: similarlyReturn to reference °
- °: heavyReturn to reference °
- °: there is no alternativeReturn to reference °
- °: a life innocent of sinReturn to reference °
- °: grimacesReturn to reference °
- °: omittedReturn to reference °
- °: lesser spiritsReturn to reference °
- °: various roles Return to reference °
- °: performedReturn to reference °
- °: for thatReturn to reference °
- °: from beginning to endReturn to reference °
- °: in despair; recklessReturn to reference °
- °: take effectReturn to reference °
- °: madnessReturn to reference °

4.1

Enter PROSPERO, FERDINAND, and MIRANDA.

PROSPERO [to FERDINAND] If I have too austerely punished you,
Your compensation makes amends, for I
Have given you here a third<sup>1</sup> of mine own life—
Or that for which I live—who<sup>o</sup> once again
I tender<sup>o</sup> to thy hand. All thy vexations
5 Were but my trials of thy love, and thou Hast strangely<sup>o</sup> stood the test. Here, afore heaven,
I ratify this my rich gift. O Ferdinand,
Do not smile at me that I boast her off,<sup>o</sup>
For thou shalt find she will outstrip all praise
10 And make it halt<sup>o</sup> behind her.

FERDINAND I do believe it against an oracle.<sup>2</sup>

PROSPERO Then, as my guest, and thine own acquisition
Worthily purchased,<sup>o</sup> take my daughter. But If thou dost break her virgin-knot<sup>o</sup> before 15 All sanctimonious<sup>o</sup> ceremonies may
With full and holy rite be ministered,
No sweet aspersion<sup>o</sup> shall the heavens let fall
To make this contract grow; but barren hate,
Sour-eyed disdain, and discord shall bestrew
20 The union of your bed with weeds<sup>3</sup> so loathly
That you shall hate it both. Therefore take heed,
As Hymen's<sup>4</sup> lamps shall light you.

FERDINAND As I hope
For quiet days, fair issue,<sup>o</sup> and long life,
With such love as 'tis now, the murkiest den,<sup>o</sup>
25 The most opportune place, the strong'st suggestion<sup>o</sup>
Our worser genius can,<sup>5</sup> shall never melt

Mine honor into lust, to take away
The edge<sup>o</sup> of that day's celebration
When I shall think or<sup>o</sup> Phoebus' steeds are 30 foundered,<sup>6</sup>
Or night kept chained below.
PROSPERO Fairly spoke.
Sit then and talk with her: she is thine own.
—What,<sup>o</sup> Ariel! My industrious servant, Ariel!
Enter ARIEL.
ARIEL What would my potent master? Here I am.
PROSPERO Thou and thy meaner<sup>o</sup> fellows your last 35 service
Did worthily perform, and I must use you
In such another trick. Go bring the rabble<sup>7</sup>
O'er whom I give thee pow'r here to this place.
Incite them to quick motion, for I must Bestow upon the eyes of this young couple 40 Some vanity<sup>8</sup> of mine art. It is my promise,
And they expect it from me.
ARIEL Presently?<sup>o</sup>
PROSPERO Ay, with a twink.<sup>9</sup>
ARIEL Before you can say "come" and "go,"
45 And breathe twice and cry "so, so,"
Each one tripping on his toe,
Will be here with mop and mow.<sup>1</sup>
Do you love me, master? No?
PROSPERO Dearly, my delicate Ariel. Do not approach
Till thou dost hear me call.
ARIEL Well; I conceive.<sup>o</sup>
50 Exit.
PROSPERO [to FERDINAND] Look thou be true;<sup>2</sup> do not give dalliance
Too much the rein.<sup>3</sup> The strongest oaths are straw
To th' fire i'th' blood. Be more abstemious,

Or else good night your vow.

FERDINAND I warrant you, sir,
The white cold virgin snow upon my heart
55 Abates the ardor of my liver.<sup>4</sup>

PROSPERO Well.
—Now come, my Ariel: bring a corollary<sup>o</sup>
Rather than want<sup>o</sup> a spirit. Appear, and pertly.<sup>o</sup>

Soft music.

No tongue, all eyes! Be silent!

Enter IRIS.<sup>5</sup>

60 IRIS Ceres, most bounteous lady, thy rich leas<sup>6</sup>
Of wheat, rye, barley, vetches,<sup>7</sup> oats, and peas;
Thy turfy mountains where live nibbling sheep,
And flat meads<sup>o</sup> thatched with stover,<sup>8</sup> them to keep;

Thy banks with pionèd and twillèd<sup>9</sup> brims,
Which spongy<sup>o</sup> April at thy hest betrim<sup>1</sup> 65 To make cold nymphs chaste crowns; and thy broom-groves,<sup>2</sup>
Whose shadow the dismissed bachelor<sup>o</sup> loves,
Being lass-lorn; thy poll-clipped vineyard,<sup>3</sup>
And thy sea-marge,<sup>o</sup> sterile and rocky-hard,
70 Where thou thyself dost air<sup>o</sup>—the queen o'th' sky,<sup>4</sup>
Whose wat'ry arch<sup>o</sup> and messenger am I,
Bids thee leave these, and with her sovereign grace,
Here on this grass-plot,<sup>5</sup> in this very place
To come and sport. Her peacocks fly amain.<sup>6</sup>
Approach, rich Ceres, her to entertain.

75 Enter CERES.<sup>7</sup>

CERES Hail, many-colored messenger, that ne'er
Dost disobey the wife of Jupiter;<sup>o</sup>
Who with thy saffron wings upon my flowers
Diffusest honey-drops, refreshing showers,
And with each end of thy blue bow dost crown

80 My bosky<sup>8</sup> acres and my unshrubbed down,
 Rich scarf<sup>9</sup> to my proud earth. Why hath thy queen Summoned me hither to this short-grassed green?
 IRIS A contract of true love to celebrate 85 And some donation freely to estate<sup>o</sup>
 On the blessed lovers.
 CERES Tell me, heavenly bow,<sup>o</sup>
 If Venus or her son,<sup>1</sup> as<sup>o</sup> thou dost know,
 Do now attend the Queen? Since they did plot
 The means that dusky Dis<sup>2</sup> my daughter got,
 Her and her blind boy's scandaled<sup>o</sup> company
 90 I have forsworn.
 IRIS Of her society
 Be not afraid. I met her deity
 Cutting the clouds towards Paphos,<sup>3</sup> and her son Dove-drawn<sup>4</sup> with her. Here thought they to have done
 95 Some wanton charm upon<sup>5</sup> this man and maid,
 Whose vows are that no bed-right<sup>6</sup> shall be paid
 Till Hymen's torch be lighted;<sup>7</sup> but in vain.
 Mars's hot minion<sup>o</sup> is returned again;
 Her waspish-headed<sup>8</sup> son has broke his arrows,
 Swears he will shoot no more but play with 100 sparrows,<sup>9</sup>
 And be a boy right out.<sup>o</sup>
 JUNO descends.<sup>1</sup>
 CERES Highest queen of state,
 Great Juno comes; I know her by her gait.<sup>o</sup>
 JUNO How does my bounteous sister? Go with me
 To bless this twain that they may prosperous be
 And honored in their issue.
 105 [JUNO and CERES] sing.<sup>2</sup>
 Honor, riches, marriage-blessing,
 Long continuance and increasing,

Hourly joys be still<sup>o</sup> upon you,
 Juno sings her blessings on you.

110 CERES      Earth's increase and foison<sup>o</sup> plenty,
 Barns and garner<sup>o</sup> never empty,
 Vines with clust'ring bunches growing,
 Plants with goodly burden bowing;
 Spring come to you at the farthest,
 115 In the very end of harvest.<sup>3</sup>
 Scarcity and want shall shun you,
 Ceres' blessing so is on you.

FERDINAND      This is a most majestic vision, and Harmonious charmingly.<sup>4</sup> May I be bold<sup>o</sup>
 To think these spirits?

120 PROSPERO      Spirits, which by mine art
 I have from their confines<sup>5</sup> called to enact
 My present fancies.

FERDINAND      Let me live here ever!
 So rare a wondered<sup>o</sup> father and a wise<sup>6</sup>
 Makes this place paradise.

        JUNO and CERES whisper, and send IRISON employment.

PROSPERO      Sweet<sup>o</sup> now, silence.
 Juno and Ceres whisper seriously.

125 There's something else to do. Hush and be mute,
 Or else our spell is marred.

IRIS      You nymphs called naiads of the wind'ring<sup>7</sup>
         brooks,
 With your sedged crowns<sup>o</sup> and ever-harmless looks,
 Leave your crisp channels, and on this green land
 130 Answer your summons; Juno does command.
 Come, temperate nymphs, and help to celebrate
 A contract of true love. Be not too late.

Enter certain Nymphs.
 —You sunburned sicklemen<sup>o</sup> of August weary,
 Come hither from the furrow and be merry;

135        Make holiday; your rye-straw hats put on,
And these fresh nymphs encounter every one
In country footing.

Enter certain Reapers, properly habited.<sup>8</sup> They join with the Nymphs in a graceful dance, towards the end whereof PROSPERO starts suddenly and speaks, after which, to a strange, hollow, and confused noise, they heavily vanish.<sup>9</sup>

140        PROSPERO    I had forgot that foul conspiracy
Of the beast Caliban and his confederates
Against my life. The minute of their plot Is almost come. [to the Spirits] Well done. Avoid;<sup>o</sup> no more!

FERDINAND    This is strange: your father's in some passion
That works<sup>o</sup> him strongly.

145        MIRANDA                    Never till this day
Saw I him touched with anger so distempered.<sup>o</sup>
PROSPERO    You do look, my son, in a movèd sort,<sup>o</sup>
As if you were dismayed. Be cheerful, sir.

Our revels<sup>1</sup> now are ended. These our actors,
As I foretold you,<sup>o</sup> were all spirits and
Are melted into air, into thin air;
150        And like the baseless fabric<sup>2</sup> of this vision,
The cloud-capped towers, the gorgeous palaces,
The solemn temples, the great globe<sup>3</sup> itself,
Yea, all which it inherit,<sup>4</sup> shall dissolve,
And, like this insubstantial pageant faded,
155        Leave not a rack<sup>o</sup> behind. We are such stuff
As dreams are made on,<sup>o</sup> and our little life
Is rounded<sup>5</sup> with a sleep. Sir, I am vexed.

Bear with my weakness: my old brain is troubled.
Be not disturbed with my infirmity.
160        If you be pleased, retire into my cell

And there repose. A turn or two I'll walk
To still my beating mind.

FERDINAND and MIRANDA We wish your peace.
Exeunt.

PROSPERO Come with a thought.<sup>6</sup> I thank thee,
Ariel. Come.

Enter ARIEL.

ARIEL Thy thoughts I cleave to. What's thy pleasure?

165 PROSPERO Spirit,
We must prepare to meet with Caliban.

ARIEL Ay, my commander. When I presented<sup>7</sup> Ceres
I thought to have told thee of it, but I feared
Lest I might anger thee.

170 PROSPERO Say again, where didst thou leave these varlets?<sup>8</sup>

ARIEL I told you, sir, they were red hot with
drinking;

So full of valor that they smote the air
For breathing in their faces, beat the ground
For kissing of their feet; yet always bending<sup>9</sup>
Towards their project. Then I beat my tabor,<sup>10</sup>
175 At which like unbacked<sup>11</sup> colts they pricked their ears, Advanced<sup>12</sup> their eyelids, lifted up their noses
As<sup>13</sup> they smelt music. So I charmed their ears
That calf-like they my lowing<sup>14</sup> followed through Toothed briars, sharp furzes, pricking gorse,<sup>15</sup> and 180 thorns,

Which entered their frail shins. At last I left them
I'th' filthy-mantled<sup>16</sup> pool beyond your cell,
There dancing up to th' chins, that<sup>17</sup> the foul lake
O'erstunk<sup>18</sup> their feet.

PROSPERO This was well done, my bird.<sup>19</sup>

Thy shape invisible retain thou still.

185 The trumpery<sup>o</sup> in my house, go bring it hither
For stale<sup>o</sup> to catch these thieves.

ARIEL I go, I go. Exit.

PROSPERO A devil, a born devil, on whose nature
Nurture can never stick; on whom my pains,
Humanely taken, all, all lost, quite lost;
190 And, as with age his body uglier grows,
So his mind cankers.<sup>o</sup> I will plague them all,
Even to roaring.

Enter ARIEL, laden with glistering apparel, etc.
—Come, hang them on this line.<sup>1</sup>

Enter CALIBAN, STEFANO, and TRINCULO, all wet.

CALIBAN Pray you tread softly, that the blind mole may not Hear a foot fall. We now are near his cell.

195 STEFANO Monster, your fairy, which you say is a harmless fairy, has done little better than played the jack<sup>o</sup> with us.

TRINCULO Monster, I do smell<sup>o</sup> all horse-piss, at which my nose is in great indignation.

STEFANO So is mine. Do you hear, monster? If I 200 should take a displeasure against you, look you—

TRINCULO Thou wert but a lost monster.

CALIBAN Good my lord, give me thy favor still.
Be patient, for the prize I'll bring thee to 205 Shall hoodwink<sup>2</sup> this mischance. Therefore speak softly;
All's hushed as midnight yet.

TRINCULO Ay, but to lose our bottles in the pool!

STEFANO There is not only disgrace and dishonor in that, monster, but an infinite loss.

TRINCULO That's more to me than my wetting. Yet 210 this is your harmless fairy, monster.

STEFANO I will fetch off<sup>3</sup> my bottle, though I be o'er ears<sup>o</sup> for my labor.

215 CALIBAN Prithee, my king, be quiet. Seest thou
here:
This is the mouth o'th' cell. No noise, and enter.
Do that good mischief which may make this island
Thine own forever, and I, thy Caliban,
For aye<sup>o</sup> thy foot-licker.

220 STEFANO Give me thy hand. I do begin to have bloody thoughts.

TRINCULO O King Stefano, O peer! O worthy
Stefano, look what a wardrobe here is for thee.<sup>4</sup>

CALIBAN Let it alone, thou fool. It is but trash.

225 TRINCULO Oh ho, monster! We know what belongs to a frippery.<sup>o</sup> O King Stefano!

STEFANO Put off that gown, Trinculo: by this hand,
I'll have that gown.

TRINCULO Thy grace shall have it.

230 CALIBAN The dropsy<sup>5</sup> drown this fool! What do you mean
To dote thus on such luggage?<sup>o</sup> Let't alone
And do the murder first. If he awake,
From toe to crown he'll fill our skins with pinches,
Make us<sup>o</sup> strange stuff.

235 STEFANO Be you quiet, monster. Mistress line, is not this my jerkin?<sup>o</sup> Now is the jerkin under the line.<sup>6</sup> Now, jerkin, you are like to lose your hair and prove a bald jerkin.<sup>7</sup>

TRINCULO Do, do! We steal by line and level,<sup>8</sup> an't like<sup>o</sup> your grace.

240 STEFANO I thank thee for that jest. Here's a garment for't. Wit shall not go unrewarded while I am king of this country. "Steal by line and level" is an excellent pass of pate.<sup>9</sup> There's another garment for't.

TRINCULO Monster, come, put some lime upon your fingers<sup>1</sup> and away with the rest.

245 CALIBAN I will have none on't. We shall lose our time
And all be turned to barnacles,<sup>2</sup> or to apes
With foreheads villainous<sup>o</sup> low.
STEFANO Monster, lay to<sup>o</sup> your fingers. Help to bear this away, where my hogshead of wine is, or I'll turn you out of my kingdom. Go to, carry this.

250 TRINCULO And this.
STEFANO Ay, and this.
A noise of hunters heard. Enter diverse<sup>o</sup> SPIRITS in shape of dogs and hounds, hunting them about, PROSPERO and ARIEL setting them on.
PROSPERO Hey, Mountain, hey!
ARIEL Silver! There it goes, Silver!

255 PROSPERO Fury, Fury! There, Tyrant, there! Hark, hark!
[CALIBAN, STEFANO, and TRINCULO are chased off by SPIRITS.]
[to ARIEL] Go, charge my goblins that they grind their joints
With dry convulsions, shorten up their sinews
With agèd cramps, and more pinch-spotted<sup>3</sup> make them
Than pard or cat o'mountain.<sup>4</sup>

260 ARIEL Hark, they roar!
PROSPERO Let them be hunted soundly.<sup>o</sup> At this hour
Lies at my mercy all mine enemies.
Shortly shall all my labors end, and thou Shalt have the air at freedom. For a little,
Follow and do me service. Exeunt.

265

Endnotes

- Note 1: Miranda. The usual poetic conceit was a half; commentators variously conjecture the other third to be his

- dukedom, his books, or his late wife.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: I would believe it even if an oracle said otherwise.Return to reference 2
  - Note 3: Weeds in place of the flowers traditionally strewn on the marriage bed; wordplay on both “marriage bed” and “seedbed.”Return to reference 3
  - Note 4: Classical god of marriage.Return to reference 4
  - Note 5: Is capable of. “Worser genius”: evil spirit corresponding to a guardian angel.Return to reference 5
  - Note 6: Collapsed and made lame. “Phoebus’ steeds”: the mythological horses that drew the chariot of the sun. Ferdinand anticipates that on his wedding day he will, in his impatience, think that the night will never come.Return to reference 6
  - Note 7: Troupe of lesser spirits. “Trick”: theatrical device, or clever artifice.Return to reference 7
  - Note 8: Trifle; conceit; illusion; display.Return to reference 8
  - Note 9: In the twinkling of an eye.Return to reference 9
  - Note 1: With derisive and grimacing gestures.Return to reference 1
  - Note 2: Take care that you remain faithful to your promise. Prospero may have caught the lovers just indulging in dalliance.Return to reference 2
  - Note 3: To “give the rein” is to make a horse gallop.Return to reference 3
  - Note 4: Virgin snow lies on his heart because he has remained chaste, never having given in to his ardent liver. The liver was held to be the seat of passion.Return to reference 4
  - Note 5: Goddess of the rainbow and messenger of Juno; her apparel is in the colors of the rainbow, and she wears “saffron wings” (line 78).Return to reference 5
  - Note 6: Arable land. Ceres was the Roman goddess of agriculture and generative nature.Return to reference 6
  - Note 7: Pealike plants grown for fodder.Return to reference 7
  - Note 8: Hay for winter fodder.Return to reference 8
  - Note 9: Reinforced with channels (“pioned”) and with entwined branches (“twilled”) to prevent riverbank erosion.Return to

reference 9

- Note 1 : Adorns with flowers; this recalls the colloquial "April showers bring forth May flowers."Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Thickets of gorse, yellow-flowered shrubs. "Cold": chaste.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Vineyard with vines embracing, twined around, their supporting poles; pruned vineyard. "Vineyard" was pronounced as three syllables. "Lass-lorn": abandoned by the girl he wooed. "Poll-clipped": pruned short.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Juno, queen of the heavens and goddess of women, held to protect marriages and preside over childbirth.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Compare "this short-grassed green" (line 83) and "this green land" (line 130): a green carpet on the acting area is indicated.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: In haste. Peacocks, sacred to Juno, drew her chariot.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Her part is probably played by Ariel (see line 167).Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Covered with bushes and thickets.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Ornamental and hung across the body rather than around the neck.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Cupid, proverbially blind.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: King of the underworld in classical mythology. Venus and her son Cupid made him fall in love with Ceres' daughter Proserpine, whom he abducted (Ovid, Metamorphoses 5.385–571).Return to reference 2
- Note 3: City in Cyprus associated with Venus.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Doves were sacred to Venus and drew her chariot.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: "Done . . . upon": cast a lustful spell upon.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Right to consummate the marriage; also, suggesting a rite, as in line 17.Return to reference 6

- Note 7: Until the wedding ceremony is performed.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Peevish, irritable, and with arrows like the wasp's sting.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Sparrows were associated with Venus because they were proverbially lustful.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Although most editors place "JUNO*descends*" at the point where Juno enters and speaks, in the Folio (1623) this stage direction appears around line 74.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Ceres and Juno might be raised together in the flight apparatus and sing suspended above the stage. They would then vanish (line 138 stage direction) by being raised into the heavens.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Let spring return immediately after harvest, without any intervening winter. (In Greek mythology, winter was originally caused by Ceres abandoning the earth in search of Proserpine.)Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Delightfully; magically; harmoniously.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Regions of dwelling. The word is accented on the second syllable.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Since the eighteenth century, some editors have changed "wise" to "wife," an emendation backed by disputed typographical evidence but with implications for the play's representation of women.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Perhaps a conflation of "wandering" and "winding." The naiads were mythical river nymphs.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Either appropriately or finely dressed.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Sorrowfully depart (probably not implying a trick of staging).Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Entertainment, in both festive and theatrical senses.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: An edifice or substance without foundations; insubstantial, alluding to buildings in masque scenery.Return to reference 2

- Note 3: World; also a passing allusion to the Globe theater.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: All who come into possession of it.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Rounded off; surrounded; or, possibly, crowned.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Come as fast as thought, a colloquial simile.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Acted; produced the masque of; introduced while playing Iris.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Covered with filthy scum.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Made smelly; smelled worse than.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Variant of lind, the lime tree or linden, probably indicating a stage property tree.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Blind with a hood, as was done to pacify a hawk—hence, make harmless; also, put out of sight.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Recover; rescue; drink off.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Recalling “King Stephen was and a worthy peer, / His breeches cost him but a crown,” a popular ballad about King Stephen, sung in part in Othello 2.3.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: A disease characterized by the accumulation of fluid in connective tissue.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Below the lime tree; south of the equator; below the waist. Also, a possible allusion to the proverb “Thou hast stricken the ball under the line,” meaning “You have cheated.” Stefano has taken the jerkin from the lime tree.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Baldness caused either through tropical disease or by sailors who customarily shaved the heads of passengers when they crossed the line of the equator for the first time. “Under the [waist]line” could also be an allusion to baldness from syphilis.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: An idiomatic expression for “properly, by the rules”—literally, “by plumb line and carpenter’s level”; also, punning on “lime.” “Do, do”: an expression of approval.Return to reference 8

- Note 9: Thrust of wit (fencing term).Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Be "lime-fingered," sticky-fingered (alluding to birdlime, a gluey substance used to catch birds).Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Barnacle geese, also known as "tree geese" and supposed to begin life as barnacle shells.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Spotted with bruises from pinches. "Agèd cramps": the convulsions of old age.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Both terms are synonymous with "leopard"; the second is from Jeremiah 13:23: "May a man of Ind change his skin, and the cat of the mountain her spots?" (Bishops' Bible).Return to reference 4
- Note 4.1: 4.1Return to reference 4.1

Notes

- °: whomReturn to reference °
- °: offerReturn to reference °
- °: wonderfullyReturn to reference °
- °: sing her praisesReturn to reference °
- °: limpReturn to reference °
- °: gained by effortReturn to reference °
- °: hymenReturn to reference °
- °: holyReturn to reference °
- °: shower of graceReturn to reference °
- °: childrenReturn to reference °
- °: caveReturn to reference °
- °: temptationReturn to reference °
- °: unblunted desireReturn to reference °
- °: eitherReturn to reference °
- °: now thenReturn to reference °
- °: lesserReturn to reference °
- °: at onceReturn to reference °
- °: understandReturn to reference °
- °: surplusReturn to reference °
- °: lack Return to reference °

- °: brisklyReturn to reference °
- °: meadowsReturn to reference °
- °: wetReturn to reference °
- °: rejected suitorReturn to reference °
- °: seashoreReturn to reference °
- °: take fresh air Return to reference °
- °: rainbowReturn to reference °
- °: (Juno)Return to reference °
- °: bestowReturn to reference °
- °: rainbowReturn to reference °
- °: as far asReturn to reference °
- °: scandalous; notoriousReturn to reference °
- °: lover; VenusReturn to reference °
- °: an ordinary boyReturn to reference °
- °: majestic bearingReturn to reference °
- °: alwaysReturn to reference °
- °: abundanceReturn to reference °
- °: granariesReturn to reference °
- °: would I be rightReturn to reference °
- °: endowed with wondersReturn to reference °
- °: softlyReturn to reference °
- °: garlands of reedsReturn to reference °
- °: harvestersReturn to reference °
- °: begoneReturn to reference °
- °: agitatesReturn to reference °
- °: troubled; distractedReturn to reference °
- °: disturbed mannerReturn to reference °
- °: told you beforeReturn to reference °
- °: wisp of cloudReturn to reference °
- °: ofReturn to reference °
- °: ruffiansReturn to reference °
- °: aimingReturn to reference °
- °: side drumReturn to reference °
- °: never-riddenReturn to reference °
- °: openedReturn to reference °
- °: as ifReturn to reference °

- °: mooringReturn to reference °
- °: prickly shrubsReturn to reference °
- °: so thatReturn to reference °
- °: chick; dearReturn to reference °
- °: cheap goodsReturn to reference °
- °: decoy; baitReturn to reference °
- °: festersReturn to reference °
- °: knave; will-o'-the-wispReturn to reference °
- °: smell ofReturn to reference °
- °: drownedReturn to reference °
- °: everReturn to reference °
- °: old-clothes shopReturn to reference °
- °: encumbrancesReturn to reference °
- °: turn us intoReturn to reference °
- °: leather jacketReturn to reference °
- °: if it pleaseReturn to reference °
- °: wretchedlyReturn to reference °
- °: applyReturn to reference °
- °: variousReturn to reference °
- °: thoroughlyReturn to reference °

5.1

Enter PROSPERO in his magic robes, and ARIEL.

PROSPERO Now does my project gather to a head:<sup>1</sup>
My charms crack not, my spirits obey, and time
Goes upright with his carriage.<sup>2</sup> How's the day?

ARIEL On the sixth hour; at which time, my lord,
You said our work should cease.

5 PROSPERO I did say so
When first I raised the tempest. Say, my spirit,
How fares the King and 's<sup>o</sup> followers?

ARIEL Confined
together
In the same fashion as you gave in charge,
Just as you left them; all prisoners, sir,
10 In the line-grove which weather-fends<sup>3</sup> your cell:
They cannot budge till your release.<sup>o</sup> The King,
His brother, and yours abide all three distracted,<sup>o</sup>
And the remainder mourning over them,
Brimful of sorrow and dismay; but chiefly
15 Him that you termed, sir, the good old Lord Gonzalo:
His tears runs down his beard like winter's drops
From eaves of reeds.<sup>o</sup> Your charm so strongly works
'em
That if you now beheld them, your affections<sup>o</sup>
Would become tender.

PROSPERO Dost thou think so, spirit?

ARIEL Mine would, sir, were I human.

20 PROSPERO And mine
shall.

Hast thou, which art but air, a touch,<sup>o</sup> a feeling
Of their afflictions, and shall not myself—
One of their kind, that relish all as sharply

Passion as they<sup>4</sup>—be kindlier<sup>5</sup> moved than thou art?
Though with their high<sub>o</sub> wrongs I am struck to th'
25 quick,
Yet with my nobler reason 'gainst my fury
Do I take part.<sub>o</sub> The rarer action is
In virtue than in vengeance. They being penitent,
The sole drift of my purpose doth extend
Not a frown further. Go, release them, Ariel.
30 My charms I'll break, their senses I'll restore,
And they shall be themselves.

ARIEL I'll fetch them, sir.

Exit.

[PROSPERO makes a circle on the stage.]<sup>6</sup>

PROSPERO<sup>7</sup> Ye elves of hills, brooks, standing lakes, and groves,
And ye that on the sands with printless foot
Do chase the ebbing Neptune, and do fly him 35 When he comes back; you demi-puppets<sup>8</sup> that
By moonshine do the green sour ringlets<sup>9</sup> make,
Whereof the ewe not bites; and you, whose pastime
Is to make midnight<sub>o</sub>-mushrooms, that rejoice
To hear the solemn curfew;<sup>1</sup> by whose aid—
40 Weak masters<sup>2</sup> though ye be—I have bedimmed
The noontide sun, called forth the mutinous winds,
And twixt the green sea and the azured vault<sub>o</sub>
Set roaring war; to the dread rattling thunder
Have I given fire, and rifted<sub>o</sub> Jove's stout oak 45 With his own bolt;<sub>o</sub> the strong-based promontory
Have I made shake, and by the spurs<sub>o</sub> plucked up
The pine and cedar. Graves at my command
Have waked their sleepers, oped, and let 'em forth
By my so potent art. But this rough<sup>3</sup> magic 50 I here abjure; and when I have required<sub>o</sub>
Some heavenly music—which even now I do—
To work mine end upon their senses that<sub>o</sub>

55 This airy<sup>4</sup> charm is for, I'll break my staff,
Bury it certain<sup>o</sup> fathoms in the earth,
And deeper than did ever plummet sound
I'll drown my book.

Solemn music.

Here enters ARIEL before; then ALONSO with a frantic gesture, attended by GONZALO; SEBASTIAN and ANTONIO in like manner, attended by ADRIAN and FRANCISCO. They all enter the circle which PROSPERO had made, and there stand charmed; which PROSPERO observing, speaks. <sup>5</sup>

60 A solemn air<sup>o</sup> and<sup>o</sup> the best comforter
To an unsettled fancy<sup>o</sup> cure thy brains,
Now useless, boiled within thy skull. There stand,
For you are spell-stopped.

Holy Gonzalo, honorable man,
Mine eyes, e'en sociable<sup>o</sup> to the show<sup>o</sup> of thine,
Fall fellowly drops. [aside] The charm dissolves apace

65 And, as the morning steals upon the night,
Melting the darkness, so their rising senses
Begin to chase the ignorant fumes<sup>6</sup> that mantle<sup>o</sup>
Their clearer<sup>o</sup> reason. —O good Gonzalo,
My true preserver and a loyal sir<sup>o</sup>

70 To him thou follow'st, I will pay<sup>o</sup> thy graces
Home<sup>o</sup> both in word and deed. Most cruelly Didst thou, Alonso, use me and my daughter.
Thy brother was a furtherer<sup>o</sup> in the act:
Thou art pinched<sup>o</sup> for't now, Sebastian. Flesh and blood,

75 You, brother mine, that entertained ambition,
Expelled remorse and nature,<sup>7</sup> whom<sup>o</sup> with Sebastian—

Whose inward pinches therefore are most strong—
Would here have killed your king, I do forgive thee,

Unnatural though thou art. [aside] Their understanding
 Begins to swell,<sup>o</sup> and the approaching tide
 80 Will shortly fill the reasonable shore
 That now lies foul and muddy. Not<sup>o</sup> one of them
 That yet looks on me or would know me. —Ariel,
 Fetch me the hat and rapier<sup>8</sup> in my cell.
 [ARIEL exits and returns.]
 I will discase<sup>o</sup> me and myself present
 85 As I was sometime Milan.<sup>9</sup> Quickly, spirit!
 Thou shalt ere long be free.
 [ARIEL sings and helps to attire him.]
 ARIEL Where the bee sucks, there suck
 I;
 In a cowslip's bell I lie;
 There I couch when owls do cry;
 90 On the bat's back I do fly
 After summer merrily.
 Merrily, merrily shall I live now,
 Under the blossom that hangs on the bough.
 PROSPERO Why, that's my dainty Ariel! I shall miss 95 Thee, but yet thou shalt have freedom.—So, so, so.<sup>1</sup>
 To the King's ship, invisible as thou art;
 There shalt thou find the mariners asleep
 Under the hatches. The Master and the Boatswain
 Being awake, enforce them to this place,
 100 And presently,<sup>o</sup> I prithee.
 ARIEL I drink the air before me and return
 Or ere<sup>o</sup> your pulse twice beat. Exit.
 GONZALO All torment, trouble, wonder, and amazement<sup>o</sup>
 Inhabits here. Some heavenly power guide us
 105 Out of this fearful<sup>o</sup> country!
 PROSPERO Behold, sir King,

The wrongèd Duke of Milan, Prospero.
 For more assurance that a living prince
 Does now speak to thee, I embrace thy body
 And to thee and thy company I bid
 110 A hearty welcome.

ALONSO                      Whe'er<sup>o</sup>thou beest he or no,
 Or some enchanted trifle<sup>2</sup> to abuse<sup>o</sup> me—
 As late I have been—I not know. Thy pulse Beats as of flesh and blood; and since I saw thee, Th'affliction of my mind amends, with which,
 115 I fear, a madness held me. This must crave<sup>o</sup>—
 An if this be at all<sup>3</sup>—a most strange story.
 Thy dukedom<sup>4</sup> I resign and do entreat Thou pardon me my wrongs. But how should Prospero
 Be living, and be here?

PROSPERO [to GONZALO]      First, noble friend, 120 Let me embrace thine age,<sup>o</sup> whose honor cannot Be measured or confined.

GONZALO                      Whether this be
 Or be not, I'll not swear.

PROSPERO                      You do yet taste
 Some subtleties<sup>5</sup> o'th' isle, that will not let you Believe things certain. Welcome, my friends all.
 125 [aside to SEBASTIAN and ANTONIO ] But you, my brace <sup>o</sup> of lords, were I so minded
 I here could pluck his highness' frown upon you
 And justify<sup>o</sup> you traitors. At this time
 I will tell no tales.

SEBASTIAN [to ANTONIO]      The devil speaks in him!

PROSPERO
 No.
 130 [to ANTONIO] For you, most wicked sir, whom to call brother
 Would even infect my mouth, I do forgive

Thy rankest fault—all of them—and require
My dukedom of thee, which perforce<sup>o</sup> I know
Thou must restore.

135 ALONSO If thou beest Prospero,
Give us particulars of thy preservation;
How thou hast met us here, whom three hours since
Were wrecked upon this shore, where I have lost—
How sharp the point of this remembrance is—
My dear son Ferdinand.

PROSPERO I am woe<sup>o</sup> for't, sir.

140 ALONSO Irreparable is the loss, and patience
Says it is past her cure.

PROSPERO I rather think
You have not sought her help, of<sup>o</sup> whose soft grace<sup>o</sup>
For the like loss I have her sovereign aid
And rest myself content.

ALONSO You the like loss?

145 PROSPERO As great to me as late;<sup>o</sup> and supportable
To make the dear loss<sup>6</sup> have I means much weaker
Than you may call to comfort you, for I
Have lost my daughter.<sup>7</sup>

ALONSO A daughter?

150 O heavens, that they were living both in Naples,
The King and Queen there! That they were, I wish Myself were mudded in that oozy bed Where my son lies. When did you lose your daughter?

PROSPERO In this last tempest. I perceive these lords

155 At this encounter do so much admire<sup>o</sup>
That they devour their reason<sup>8</sup> and scarce think
Their eyes do offices of truth,<sup>o</sup> their words
Are natural breath. But, howsoe'er you have Been jostled from your senses, know for certain
That I am Prospero, and that very duke

160 Which was thrust forth of Milan, who most strangely Upon this shore where you were wrecked, was landed

To be the lord on't. No more yet of this,
For 'tis a chronicle of day by day,
Not a relation for a breakfast, nor Befitting this first meeting. Welcome, sir;
165 This cell's my court. Here have I few attendants
And subjects none abroad.<sup>9</sup> Pray you look in.
My dukedom since you have given me again,
I will requite you with as good a thing;
At least bring forth a wonder to content ye 170 As much as me my dukedom.

Here PROSPERO discovers<sup>1</sup> FERDINAND and MIRANDA playing at chess.

MIRANDA Sweet lord, you play me false.<sup>o</sup>

FERDINAND No, my dearest love,
I would not for the world.

MIRANDA Yes, for a score of kingdoms you should wrangle,

And I would call it fair play.<sup>2</sup>

175 ALONSO If this prove
A vision of the island, one dear son
Shall I twice lose.

SEBASTIAN A most high miracle!

FERDINAND Though the seas threaten, they are merciful:

I have cursed them without cause.

[FERDINAND kneels.]

ALONSO Now all the blessings

180 Of a glad father compass thee about!<sup>o</sup>
Arise, and say how thou cam'st here.

MIRANDA Oh, wonder!

How many goodly creatures are there here!
How beauteous mankind is! Oh, brave new world
That has such people in't!

PROSPERO 'Tis new to thee.

185 ALONSO [to FERDINAND] What is this maid with whom thou wast at play?
Your eld'st<sup>o</sup> acquaintance cannot be three hours.
Is she the goddess that hath severed us
And brought us thus together?

FERDINAND Sir, she is mortal;
But by immortal Providence she's mine.
190 I chose her when I could not ask my father
For his advice, nor thought I had one. She Is daughter to this famous Duke of Milan—
Of whom so often I have heard renown
But never saw before—of whom I have Received a second life; and second father
195 This lady makes him to me.

ALONSO I am hers.<sup>3</sup>
But oh, how oddly will it sound that I
Must ask my child<sup>o</sup> forgiveness!

PROSPERO There, sir, stop.
Let us not burden our remembrances with
A heaviness<sup>o</sup> that's gone.

200 GONZALO I have inly wept,
Or should have spoke ere this. Look down, you gods,
And on this couple drop a blessed crown.
For it is you that have chalked forth<sup>o</sup> the way
Which brought us hither.

ALONSO I say "Amen," Gonzalo.

205 GONZALO Was Milan<sup>o</sup> thrust from Milan that his issue
Should become kings of Naples? Oh, rejoice
Beyond a common joy and set it down
With gold on lasting pillars:<sup>4</sup> in one voyage

Did Claribel her husband find at Tunis,
 And Ferdinand her brother found a wife
 210 Where he himself was lost; Prospero his dukedom
 In a poor isle; and all of us ourselves
 When no man was his own.<sup>5</sup>
 ALONSO [to FERDINAND and MIRANDA] Give me your hands.
 Let grief and sorrow still<sup>o</sup> embrace his heart
 That<sup>o</sup> doth not wish you joy.
 GONZALO Be it so. Amen.
 215 Enter ARIEL, with the MASTER and BOATSWAIN
amazedly following.
 Oh, look, sir, look, sir: here is more of us.
 I prophesied if a gallows were on land
 This fellow could not drown. [to BOATSWAIN] Now, blasphemy,<sup>o</sup>
 That swear'st grace o'erboard, not an oath on shore?
 Hast thou no mouth by land? What is the news?
 220 BOATSWAIN The best news is that we have safely
 found
 Our king and company; the next, our ship,
 Which but three glasses<sup>o</sup> since we gave out<sup>o</sup> split,
 Is tight and yare<sup>6</sup> and bravely rigged as when
 We first put out to sea.
 225 ARIEL [to PROSPERO] Sir, all this service
 Have I done since I went.
 PROSPERO [to ARIEL] My tricky<sup>o</sup> spirit!
 ALONSO These are not natural events; they strengthen<sup>o</sup>
 From strange to stranger. Say, how came you hither?
 230 BOATSWAIN If I did think, sir, I were well awake,
 I'd strive to tell you. We were dead of<sup>o</sup> sleep
 And—how we know not—all clapped<sup>o</sup> under hatches,
 Where but even now with strange and several<sup>o</sup> noises

235 Of roaring, shrieking, howling, jingling chains,
 And more diversity of sounds, all horrible,
 We were awaked; straightway at liberty,
 Where we, in all our trim, freshly beheld
 Our royal, good, and gallant ship, our Master
 240 Cap'ring to eye<sup>o</sup> her. On<sup>o</sup> a trice, so please you,
 Even in a dream were we divided from them
 And were brought moping<sup>o</sup> hither.
 ARIEL [to PROSPERO] Was't well done?
 PROSPERO [to ARIEL] Bravely, my diligence. Thou shalt be free.
 ALONSO This is as strange a maze as e'er men trod,
 And there is in this business more than nature
 245 Was ever conduct<sup>o</sup> of. Some oracle
 Must rectify our knowledge.
 PROSPERO Sir, my liege,
 Do not infest<sup>o</sup> your mind with beating on<sup>z</sup>
 The strangeness of this business. At picked leisure,
 Which shall be shortly, single<sup>o</sup> I'll resolve you—250 Which to you shall seem probable<sup>o</sup>—of every
 These happened accidents.<sup>o</sup> Till when, be cheerful
 And think of each thing well. [to ARIEL] Come hither, spirit.
 Set Caliban and his companions free:
 Untie the spell. [Exit
 ARIEL.]
 255 [to ALONSO] How fares my gracious sir?
 There are yet missing of your company
 Some few odd lads that you remember not.
Enter ARIEL, driving in CALIBAN, STEFANO, and TRINCULO in their stolen apparel.
 STEFANO Every man shift for all the rest, and let no man take care for himself;<sup>8</sup> for all is but fortune.
Coraggio, bully monster,<sup>9</sup> coraggio!

TRINCULO If these<sup>o</sup> be true spies which I wear in my head, here's a goodly sight!
 CALIBAN O Setebos, these be brave spirits indeed!
 How fine<sup>o</sup> my master is! I am afraid
 He will chastise me.
 265 SEBASTIAN Ha, ha! What things are these, my lord
 Antonio?
 Will money buy 'em?
 ANTONIO Very like.<sup>o</sup> One of them
 Is a plain<sup>o</sup> fish, and no doubt marketable.
 PROSPERO Mark but the badges<sup>1</sup> of these men, my
 lords;
 Then say if they<sup>o</sup> be true. This misshapen knave,
 His mother was a witch, and one so strong 270 That could control the moon, make flows and ebbs,
 And deal in her command without her power.<sup>2</sup>
 These three have robbed me, and this demi-devil<sup>3</sup>—
 For he's a bastard one—had plotted with them
 275 To take my life. Two of these fellows you Must know and own;<sup>4</sup> this thing of darkness I Acknowledge mine.
 CALIBAN I shall be pinched to death.
 ALONSO Is not this Stefano, my drunken butler?
 SEBASTIAN He is drunk now. Where had he wine?
 280 ALONSO And Trinculo is reeling-ripe.<sup>o</sup> Where should
 they
 Find this grand liquor that hath gilded<sup>5</sup> 'em?
 How cam'st thou in this pickle?<sup>6</sup> TRINCULO I have been in such a pickle since I saw you last that I fear me will never out of my bones:
 I shall not fear flyblowing.<sup>7</sup>
 SEBASTIAN Why, how now, Stefano?
 285 STEFANO Oh, touch me not! I am not Stefano, but a cramp.
 PROSPERO You'd be king o'the isle, sirrah?

290 STEFANO I should have been a sore<sup>o</sup> one then.
 ALONSO [indicating CALIBAN] This is a strange thing as e'er I looked on.
 PROSPERO He is as disproportioned in his manners<sup>8</sup>
 As in his shape. Go, sirrah, to my cell;
 Take with you your companions. As you look
 To have my pardon, trim<sup>o</sup> it handsomely.
 295 CALIBAN Ay, that I will; and I'll be wise hereafter
 And seek for grace. What a thrice-double ass
 Was I to take this drunkard for a god
 And worship this dull fool!
 PROSPERO Go to, away.
 300 ALONSO Hence, and bestow your luggage where you found it.
 SEBASTIAN Or stole it rather.
 [Exeunt CALIBAN, STEFANO, and TRINCULO.]
 PROSPERO Sir, I invite your highness and your train
 To my poor cell, where you shall take your rest
 For this one night; which—part of it<sup>o</sup>—I'll waste<sup>o</sup>
 With such discourse as, I not doubt, shall make it
 305 Go quick away: the story of my life
 And the particular accidents<sup>o</sup> gone by Since I came to this isle. And in the morn
 I'll bring you to your ship, and so to Naples,
 Where I have hope to see the nuptial
 310 Of these our dear-belovèd solemnized,
 And thence retire me to my Milan, where Every third thought shall be my grave.
 ALONSO I long
 To hear the story of your life, which must Take<sup>o</sup> the ear strangely.
 PROSPERO I'll deliver<sup>o</sup> all,
 315 And promise you calm seas, auspicious gales,
 And sail so expeditious that shall<sup>o</sup> catch

Your royal fleet far off. —My Ariel, chick,
That is thy charge. Then to the elements
Be free, and fare thou well. —Please you draw near.
Exeunt all [except

PROSPERO].<sup>9</sup>

Endnotes

- Note 1: Draw to its fulfillment. “Project” suggests an alchemical projection or experiment.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Because his carriage, or burden, is now light.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Which protects from the weather.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Who feel as much strong emotion as they do.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: More tenderly; more naturally.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: The original text does not indicate when the circle is drawn. Other possibilities are at the beginning of the scene or before the entry at line 57.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Prospero’s speech closely follows Ovid’s Metamorphoses 7.265–77, in Arthur Golding’s translation (1567); the speaker in Ovid is the sorceress Medea, who uses her witchcraft to vengeful ends.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Puppets; elves; quasi-puppets.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Fairy rings: distinctive circles of grass supposed to be caused by dancing fairies but actually caused by mushrooms.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: The bell rung at nightfall, indicating the time when spirits are abroad.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Ineffectual when acting independently; without supernatural power; subordinate spirits.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Violent; discordant; crudely approximate.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Wrought by spirits of the air.Return to reference 4

- Note 5: Prospero remains invisible and inaudible to Alonso and his party until he greets Alonso at line 106.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Fogs of ignorance; the image is of the sun ("rising senses") dissipating morning mist.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Pity and brotherly affection.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Elements of normal aristocratic dress.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Formerly, when duke of Milan.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Prospero arranges his attire approvingly.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: With a suggestion of the old sense of "trifle" as "deception."Return to reference 2
- Note 3: If this is really happening.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Alonso's rights of homage and tribute from it.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: You still experience some of the illusions. "Subtleties" were also sweet confections shaped like castles, temples, beasts, allegorical figures, and the like, and arranged like a pageant.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: "Supportable . . . loss": in order to make the heartfelt loss bearable.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Prospero apparently means that Alonso still has a child, his daughter Claribel, to comfort him.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: "Reason" has the additional sense of "discourse"; hence, the phrase is an extension of "swallow their words."Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Elsewhere about the island; beyond the cell.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Reveals by drawing back a curtain hanging in front of the discovery space.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: You could quarrel for twenty kingdoms, and I would still call it fair play.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: I will be her second father: Alonso's assent to the betrothal.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Suggesting, perhaps, the triumphal arches commissioned to celebrate notable occasions.Return to

reference 4

- Note 5: When we all had lost our senses.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Is sound and ready to sail.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: With repeatedly worrying about.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Stefano drunkenly confuses the saying "Every man for himself."Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Gallant monster. "Coraggio": take courage (Italian).Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Livery. Servants often wore their master's emblem, but Prospero probably refers to the stolen apparel.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: And wield her (the moon's) power without her authority, or beyond the reach of her might.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Being the offspring of Sycorax and the devil.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: And acknowledge to be yours.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Probably alluding to the alchemical elixir ("liquor") known as aurum potabile (drinkable gold); hence, "gilded" (flushed).Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Sorry plight; Trinculo takes up the literal sense of "preserving liquid," recalling both his drunkenness and his drenching in the lake.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Not fear being infested with flies, since he has been "pickled" (preserved).Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Behavior; moral character.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: The general exeunt is through Prospero's cell; Ariel departs in another direction.Return to reference 9
- Note 5.1: 5.1Return to reference 5.1

Notes

- °: and hisReturn to reference °
- °: you release themReturn to reference °
- °: out of their witsReturn to reference °
- °: thatched roofsReturn to reference °

- °: feelingsReturn to reference °
- °: senseReturn to reference °
- °: greatReturn to reference °
- °: sideReturn to reference °
- °: springing up overnightReturn to reference °
- °: the skyReturn to reference °
- °: splitReturn to reference °
- °: lightning boltReturn to reference °
- °: rootsReturn to reference °
- °: summonedReturn to reference °
- °: the senses of whomReturn to reference °
- °: severalReturn to reference °
- °: song Return to reference °
- °: which isReturn to reference °
- °: imaginationReturn to reference °
- °: sympathetic Return to reference °
- °: appearanceReturn to reference °
- °: envelopReturn to reference °
- °: growing clearerReturn to reference °
- °: gentlemanReturn to reference °
- °: requiteReturn to reference °
- °: fullyReturn to reference °
- °: an accompliceReturn to reference °
- °: tortured; afflictedReturn to reference °
- °: whoReturn to reference °
- °: (as does a tide)Return to reference °
- °: there is notReturn to reference °
- °: undressReturn to reference °
- °: immediatelyReturn to reference °
- °: beforeReturn to reference °
- °: bewildermentReturn to reference °
- °: fearsomeReturn to reference °
- °: whetherReturn to reference °
- °: delude; maltreatReturn to reference °
- °: requires, as explanationReturn to reference °
- °: old bodyReturn to reference °

- °: pairReturn to reference °
- °: proveReturn to reference °
- °: necessarilyReturn to reference °
- °: I grieveReturn to reference °
- °: by Return to reference °
- °: mercyReturn to reference °
- °: recentReturn to reference °
- °: wonderReturn to reference °
- °: function accuratelyReturn to reference °
- °: trick meReturn to reference °
- °: surround youReturn to reference °
- °: longestReturn to reference °
- °: (Miranda)Return to reference °
- °: sorrowReturn to reference °
- °: marked outReturn to reference °
- °: the Duke of MilanReturn to reference °
- °: alwaysReturn to reference °
- °: whoReturn to reference °
- °: blasphemerReturn to reference °
- °: hourglasses Return to reference °
- °: declaredReturn to reference °
- °: capricious; neatReturn to reference °
- °: increaseReturn to reference °
- °: withReturn to reference °
- °: shut upReturn to reference °
- °: variousReturn to reference °
- °: dancing to see Return to reference °
- °: inReturn to reference °
- °: dazedReturn to reference °
- °: conductorReturn to reference °
- °: troubleReturn to reference °
- °: in privateReturn to reference °
- °: plausibleReturn to reference °
- °: occurrencesReturn to reference °
- °: these eyesReturn to reference °
- °: splendidly dressedReturn to reference °

- °: likelyReturn to reference °
- °: mereReturn to reference °
- °: (the men); (the badges)Return to reference °
- °: drunkReturn to reference °
- °: an inept; severe; painedReturn to reference °
- °: tidy; decorateReturn to reference °
- °: part of which Return to reference °
- °: spendReturn to reference °
- °: eventsReturn to reference °
- °: captivateReturn to reference °
- °: relateReturn to reference °
- °: it willReturn to reference °

Epilogue

Spoken by PROSPERO.

Now my charms are all o'erthrown,
And what strength I have's mine own,
Which is most faint. Now 'tis true
I must be here confined by you,
Or sent to Naples. Let me not,
5 Since I have my dukedom got
And pardoned the deceiver, dwell
In this bare island<sup>o</sup> by your spell,
But release me from my bands<sup>o</sup>
With the help of your good hands.<sup>o</sup>
10 Gentle breath<sup>o</sup> of yours my sails
Must fill or else my project fails,
Which was to please. Now I want<sup>o</sup>
Spirits to enforce, art to enchant;
And my ending<sup>1</sup> is despair,
15 Unless I be relieved by prayer,
Which pierces so that it assaults
Mercy itself and frees all faults.
As you from crimes would pardoned be,
Let your indulgence<sup>2</sup> set me free.
20 [Exit.]

Endnotes

- Note 1: Punning on the sense "death." Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Approval; appeasement; remission for sin. Return to reference 2
- Note Epilogue: Epilogue Return to reference Epilogue

Notes

- °: (the stage)Return to reference °
- °: fettersReturn to reference °
- °: (applause)Return to reference °
- °: favorable commentReturn to reference °
- °: lackReturn to reference °

England and the World

Othello first captured Desdemona's attention, he recalls, by telling her his "traveler's history,"

Wherein of antars [caves] vast and deserts idle,
Rough quarries, rocks, and hills whose heads touch heaven,
It was my hint to speak—such was my process—
And of the cannibals that each other eat,
The anthropophagi, and men whose heads
Do grow beneath their shoulders. (1.3.139–44)

The Venetian heiress was not the only person who found such stories thrilling. In the sixteenth century, narratives of adventure, exploration, trade, and reconnaissance proliferated throughout western Europe, circulating widely in both manuscript and print. Public interest in them was not entirely new. Shakespeare probably found some of the details in Othello's stories in Mandeville's Travels, an immensely popular fourteenth-century text still widely read in the Renaissance. Columbus took a copy with him on his first voyage, and even a century later, despite growing skepticism about the book's wilder claims, Sir Walter Raleigh continued to be on the lookout for "men whose heads / Do grow beneath their shoulders" in what is now Venezuela.

But in the wake of Columbus's encounter with the Americas and the voyages and colonial projects that followed, there came a flood of new reports about places and peoples whose existence had been unknown to Europeans. Readers' interest was about far more than idle curiosity. With Muslim powers in control of the key eastern Mediterranean ports and trade routes, Europeans had long been searching for an alternative route to the spices and silks of the East. Columbus believed that he had discovered such a route—he initially thought he had reached islands off the coast of India or China when he arrived at the Americas—but the enormous quantities of gold, silver, and pearls that treasure fleets began to carry back to Spain after the brutal conquests of the Mexica-

Aztec and Inca empires heralded a new world orientation in trade, colonization, and enslavement. The major European states strengthened their fleets, supplied them with weapons, recruited armies and navies, and fiercely competed with one another to reach, and claim ownership of, potentially lucrative overseas territories.

The New World was not the only site of contest. Islands in the Mediterranean, including Sicily, Cyprus, Malta, and Rhodes were particularly vulnerable to attempted invasion by one or another European power and by the Muslim states of Turkey and North Africa. Competition existed as well along the coast of Africa, where access to trade in gold, ivory, and, increasingly, human beings, aroused the greed of privateers and merchants and their royal protectors. Wherever there was the promise of gain—in Russia, Scandinavia, Poland, and elsewhere—there were diplomatic maneuverings and trade agreements. In such a constantly shifting scene, traditional allies could suddenly become dangerous rivals; conversely, bitter enemies could forge convenient alliances. From a position of relative isolation—a Protestant island-nation at the geographical margins of Europe—England proved itself a remarkably energetic and brutal participant in this increasingly global, and increasingly genocidal, competition.

Though the English failed to equal the astonishing Spanish and Portuguese enterprises of exploration and conquest, they nonetheless undertook many naval, overland, and colonial ventures in the sixteenth century. While several other Englishmen had already taken and enslaved people from Africa by the mid-fifteenth century, John Hawkins effectively set the pattern for English triangular trade between England, Africa, and the Americas. In 1562, Hawkins led an expedition in which he captured 300 Africans in Sierra Leone (and from other slavers) and transported them to Spanish plantations in the Americas, where he traded them for pearls, animal hides, and sugar. His mission was so lucrative that Queen Elizabeth I sponsored his subsequent journeys, providing ships, supplies, and guns. She also gave him coat of arms, reproduced above, which featured an enslaved African man. In four voyages to Sierra Leone between 1564 and 1569, Hawkins took a total of 1,200 Africans across the Atlantic to sell to Spanish colonists in the Caribbean. Several West Africans returned to England from these voyages as well, assimilating into English life. In a three-year voyage from 1577 to 1580, Hawkins's protégé Sir Francis Drake circumnavigated the globe on his ship The Golden Hind, laying claim to California on behalf of the queen and bringing home untold riches. (His crew of wage-earning sailors included Diego, a Cimarron—an African fleeing slavery—who had joined him in Panama in 1572.) At one point in his journey, Drake, who was said to be critical of the trade in human beings, left two Black men and “a proper Negro wench” taken from a Spanish ship during an earlier raid on a deserted island off the Celebes in what is now Indonesia. In addition to the queen (who retained the right to “disavow” responsibility for any actions taken by the men), Drake's investors in his raids on the Spanish West Indies included Robert Dudley, Earl of Leicester, and Sir Walter Raleigh. Sometime before 1591, Elizabeth gave Drake a jewel, reproduced in the color insert in this volume, which features profile heads of a Black male figure in front of a White female head. The jewel was enclosed in a case featuring a Nicholas Hilliard miniature of the queen. A few years later, Thomas Cavendish followed Drake in circumnavigating the globe. His 120-ton, eighteen-cannon ship was called the Desire.

John Hawkins's coat of arms, granted in 1568, features an enslaved person, with arms bound, representing the trade that Hawkins himself introduced to the English. The text, expanded and modernized, reads: "Sir John Hawkins Knight: The canton [that is, emblem for a shield] given by Robert Cook, clarenceux [that is, officer of arms]: 1568."

---

The English desire for territory and colonies in the Americas led Philip Amadas and Arthur Barlowe to make an expedition, financed by Sir Walter Raleigh, to Virginia in the mid-1580s. The failure of the short-lived colony at Roanoke would haunt all subsequent colonial efforts in North America. Included below are accounts in which Raleigh himself ventures up the Orinoco delta in what is now Venezuela in search of the golden city of “El Dorado”; Thomas Hariot visits Virginia to see how many of its commodities might support a settlement there and/or be imported back to England; and Thomas Strachey, landing unexpectedly in the Bermudas, realizes that the island is, as he carefully puts it, “habitable”; it was to be officially added to England’s territories in 1612. Also included below are Captain John Smith’s later account of Virginia, which shows the progress, and fantasies, of English colonial efforts in America, and Richard Ligon’s account of the colonization of Barbados in the 1650s, which reveals how the work of enslaved Indians from Guiana, enslaved Africans, and indentured and enslaved Europeans made the West Indian sugar colony “one of the richest spots of earth” in the world.

Many accounts of England’s early exploratory and colonial efforts were collected by the clergyman, geographer, and tireless promoter of empire Richard Hakluyt (1552?–1616), and published as The principal navigations, voyages, traffiques, and discoveries of the English Nation (1589; three-volume edition 1598–1600). Bartolomé de las Casas’ Brevísima relación de la destrucción de las Indias (1552), which described Spanish atrocities against the Indigenous peoples of the Americas, was printed in English for the first time in 1583, and Spain’s Protestant Northern European rivals used this account to demonize the Spanish Empire and counter its influence and power. English commentators and writers, including Hakluyt, amplified Catholic mistreatment of Indigenous Americans in order to suggest an apparent contrast with “reformed” English behavior. Hakluyt also understood that his nation’s success in the competitive, often violent struggle to explore, chart, and exploit the natural and human resources of the globe depended on assembling as much reliable information as possible, preferably from European eyewitnesses. To be of full use, both for England’s practical endeavors and for the general goal of understanding the world, that information would have to reach beyond physical geography to the social practices and beliefs of the Indigenous inhabitants of the territories being explored and colonized. Hence, for example, Sir Walter Raleigh sent the mathematician and natural scientist Thomas Hariot to observe the Algonquin natives of Virginia and to describe in detail their technology, society, and conceptions of the world. Hariot's ethnographic observations were supplemented by beautiful watercolors by the artist and cartographer John White, one of which is included in the color insert in this volume. Expeditions brought back native plants and their products (including tomatoes, potatoes, pineapples, chocolate, and tobacco), animals, cultural artifacts, and, on occasion, native people themselves, most often seized against their will. There were exhibitions in London of a kidnapped Inuit with his kayak and of Algonquins with their canoes. Most of these captives, violently uprooted and vulnerable to European diseases, quickly perished, but even in death they were evidently valuable property: while the English will not give one small coin "to relieve a lame beggar," one of the characters in The Tempest remarks, "they will lay out ten to see a dead Indian" (2.2.30–31). As we see in the selections from John Smith below, the Powhatan "Princess" Pocahontas died during a much-publicized embassy to England, right before she was set to sail for home.

The Algonquin were new to the English and therefore aroused particular curiosity, but a comparable attention extended to parts of the world that were at least partially known and to peoples traditionally regarded as mortal enemies. In 1600 a protégé of Hakluyt, John Pory, translated and published the Geographical History of Africa (completed in 1526) by "John Leo Africanus," a Muslim-born traveler whose vivid descriptions were widely regarded as a crucial resource for understanding that entire continent. Also around the turn of the seventeenth century, Thomas Dallam and Richard Knolles wrote accounts of the Ottoman Empire that displayed often nuanced and ambivalent attitudes to the great and fearsome Islamic power. During the sixteenth century around 35,000 Europeans, including captured English sailors, were enslaved on the Barbary Coast. ("Barbary" was the name given to the coastal regions of North Africa, or Maghreb, specifically the Ottoman borderlands consisting of the regencies in Algiers and Tripoli, as well as the Beylik of Tunis and the Sultanate of Morocco.) Popular plays on the Elizabethan stage featured parodic versions of the Muslim enemy—and the occasional “Christian turned Turk”—but Queen Elizabeth’s foreign policy contemplated the possibility of an alliance with rulers in Turkey and Morocco against the Spanish. For the first time in this period English readers begin to find reasonably detailed accounts not only of the Ottoman Sultan’s court and the organization of his state, but also of Islam. Elizabeth I’s negotiations with the Moroccan ruler Mulay Ahmed al-Mansur for a proposed military alliance against Spain is commemorated by the remarkable portrait of his ambassador, Abd al-Wahid bin Masoud bin Muhammad-al-Annuri, which is included in the color insert in this volume.

The principal way in which English men and women encountered the wider world was through eyewitness accounts, some in print, many others in manuscript or in casual conversation—Strachey’s narration below, for instance, is still in letter form. Travelers’ tales had an ancient and well-deserved reputation for self-inflation, exaggeration, and lying, and Elizabethan and Jacobean writers strove for the effect of factual directness, simplicity, and trustworthiness rather than for rhetorical brilliance, from title onward: Hariot’s account is called a “true report,” Strachey’s a “true repertory,” and Ligon’s “a true and exact history.” Their content, however, was nonetheless often fantastical.

SIR WALTER RALEGH

The brilliant and versatile Sir Walter Raleigh (1552–1618) was a soldier, courtier, philosopher, explorer and colonist, student of science, historian, and poet. Born to West Country gentry of modest means, Raleigh amassed great wealth thanks to his position at court, leading him to be denounced by some as a social upstart and hated by others as a greedy monopolist. He fought ruthlessly in Ireland and the Spanish city of Cádiz, directed the colonization of Virginia, made the smoking of tobacco fashionable in England, brought Edmund Spenser from Ireland to the English court, conducted scientific experiments, led a 1595 expedition to Guiana (now part of Venezuela) in an unsuccessful effort to find gold, and urged England to challenge Spanish dominance in the New World. A selection from his account of the 1595 expedition to Guiana is included here. His goal was to find and take possession of the fabled “El Dorado,” or golden city, before the Spanish did: his failure to find such a city is downplayed in his exaggerated account of the golden promise of the area. The alliances he made with the native peoples of Guiana laid the groundwork for future colonization.

Raleigh was known for his violent temper, his dramatic sense of life, his extravagant dress, his skepticism in religious matters, his bitter hatred of Spain, and his great favor with Queen Elizabeth, who knighted him in 1585. (A portrait of Raleigh is included in the color insert to this volume.) In 1592, after Raleigh seduced and married one of her ladies-in-waiting, Elizabeth Throckmorton, Elizabeth suspended her favor and briefly imprisoned him in the Tower of London. His long, remorseful poem to the queen, “The Ocean to Cynthia,” survived in manuscript fragments, one of more than five hundred lines. Released from the tower in 1593, Raleigh was elected to Parliament, traveled, and built what is now Sherborne New Castle in Dorset.

After Elizabeth's death Raleigh was again imprisoned, this time for his supposed role in a plot to remove James I from the throne and put Lady Arbella Stuart in his place. He remained in the Tower for the rest of his life, save for an ill-fated second expedition to Guiana in 1618, which again failed to discover gold but succeeded in infuriating the Spanish. To appease the Spanish, with whom James I hoped to be on better terms, Raleigh was beheaded on the old treason charge in October 1618.

From The Discovery of the Large, Rich, and Beautiful Empire of Guiana, with a Relation of the Great and Golden City of Manoa (Which the Spaniards Call El Dorado)

* * *

The next day we arrived at the port of Morequito, and anchored there, sending away one of our pilots<sup>1</sup> to seek the king of Aromaia, uncle to Morequito, slain by Berreo<sup>2</sup> as aforesaid. The next day following, before noon, he came to us on foot from his house, which was fourteen English miles, himself being a hundred and ten years old, and returned on foot the same day; and with him many of the borderers,<sup>3</sup> with many women and children, that came to wonder at our nation and to bring us down victual,<sup>o</sup> which they did in great plenty, as venison, pork, hens, chickens, fowl, fish, with divers sorts of excellent fruits and roots, and great abundance of pinas,<sup>o</sup> the princess of fruits that grow under the sun, especially those of Guiana. They brought us, also, store of bread and of their wine, and a sort of paraquitos<sup>o</sup> no bigger than wrens, and of all other sorts both small and great. One of them gave me a beast called by the Spaniards armadillo, which they call cassacam, which seemeth to be all barred over with small plates somewhat like to a rhinoceros, with a white horn growing in his hinder parts as big as a great hunting-horn, which they use to wind<sup>o</sup> instead of a trumpet. Monardus writeth that a little of the powder of that horn put into the ear cureth deafness.<sup>4</sup>

After this old king had rested awhile in a little tent that I caused to be set up, I began by my interpreter to discourse with him of the death of Morequito his predecessor, and afterward of the Spaniards; and ere I went any farther, I made him know the cause of my coming thither, whose servant I was, and that the Queen's pleasure was I should undertake the voyage for their defense, and to deliver them from the tyranny of the Spaniards, dilating<sup>o</sup> at large, as I had done before to those of Trinidad, her Majesty's greatness, her justice, her charity to all oppressed nations, with as many of the rest of her beauties and virtues as either I could express or they conceive.<sup>o</sup> All which being with great admiration attentively heard and marvelously<sup>o</sup> admired, I began to sound<sup>o</sup> the old man as touching Guiana and the state thereof, what sort of commonwealth it was, how governed, of what strength and policy, how far it extended, and what nations were friends or enemies adjoining, and finally of the distance and way to enter the same. He told me that himself and his people, with all those down the river towards the sea as far as Emeria, the province of Carapana, were of Guiana, but that they called themselves Orenoqueponi,<sup>5</sup> and that all the nations between the river and those mountains in sight, called Wacarima, were of the same cast<sup>o</sup> and appellation;<sup>o</sup> and that on the other side of those mountains of Wacarima there was a large plain (which after I discovered in my return) called the valley of Amariocapana. In all that valley the people were also of the ancient Guianians.

I asked what nations those were which inhabited on the further side of those mountains, beyond the valley of Amariocapana. He answered with a great sigh (as a man which had inward feeling of the loss of his country and liberty, especially for that<sup>o</sup> his eldest son was slain in a battle on that side of the mountains, whom he most entirely loved) that he remembered in his father's lifetime, when he was very old and himself a young man, that there came down into that large valley of Guiana a nation from so far off as the sun slept (for such were his own words), with so great a multitude as they could not be numbered nor resisted, and that they wore large coats and hats of crimson color, which color he expressed by shewing a piece of red wood wherewith my tent was supported, and that they were called Orejones and Epuremei;<sup>6</sup> that those had slain and rooted out<sup>o</sup> so many of the ancient people as there were leaves in the wood upon all the trees, and had now made themselves lords of all, even to that mountain foot called Curaa, saving only of two nations, the one called Iwarawaqueri and the other Cassipagotos; and that in the last battle fought between the Epuremei and the Iwarawaqueri his eldest son was chosen to carry to the aid of the Iwarawaqueri a great troop of the Orenoqueponi, and was there slain with all his people and friends, and that he had now remaining but one son; and farther told me that those Epuremei had built a great town called Macureguarai at the said mountain foot, at the beginning of the great plains of Guiana, which have no end; and that their houses have many rooms, one over the other, and that therein the great king of the Orejones and Epuremei kept three thousand men to defend the borders against them, and withal<sup>o</sup> daily to invade and slay them; but that of late years, since the Christians offered to<sup>o</sup> invade his territories and those frontiers, they were all at peace, and traded one with another, saving only the Iwarawaqueri and those other nations upon the head of the river of Caroli called Cassipagotos, which we afterwards discovered, each one holding the Spaniard for a common enemy.

After he had answered thus far, he desired leave to depart, saying that he had far to go, that he was old and weak, and was every day called for by death (which was also his own phrase). I desired him to rest with us that night, but I could not entreat him; but he told me that at my return from the country above he would again come to us, and in the meantime provide for us the best he could of all that his country yielded. The same night he returned to Orocotona, his own town; so as<sup>o</sup> he went that day eight-and-twenty miles, the weather being very hot, the country being situate between four and five degrees of the equinoctial.<sup>o</sup> This Topiawari is held for the proudest and wisest of all the Orenoqueponi, and so he behaved himself towards me in all his answers at my return, as I marveled to find a man of that gravity and judgment and of so good discourse that had no help of learning nor breed.<sup>o</sup> The next morning we also left the port and sailed westward up to the river to view the famous river called Caroli, as well because<sup>o</sup> it was marvelous of itself, as also for that I understood it led to the strongest nations of all the frontiers, that were enemies to the Epuremei, which are subjects to Inga, emperor of Guiana and Manoa.<sup>7</sup> And that night we anchored at another island called Caiama, of some five or six miles in length; and the next day arrived at the mouth of Caroli. When we were short of it<sup>o</sup> as low or further down as the port of Morequito, we heard the great roar and fall of the river. But when we came to enter with our barge and wherries,<sup>o</sup> thinking to have gone up some forty miles to the nations of the Cassipagotos, we were not able with a barge of eight oars to row one stone's cast<sup>o</sup> in an hour; and yet the river is as broad as the Thames at Woolwich, and we tried both sides, and the middle, and every part of the river. So as<sup>o</sup> we encamped upon the banks adjoining, and sent off our Orenoquepone, which came with us from Morequito, to give knowledge to the nations upon the river of our being there, and that we desired to see the lords of Canuria which dwelt within the province upon that river, making them know that we were enemies to the Spaniards; for it was on this river side that Morequito slew the friar, and those nine Spaniards which came from Manoa, the city of Inga, and took from them 14,000 pesos of gold. So as the next day there came down a lord or cacique,<sup>8</sup> called Wanuretona, with many people with him, and brought all store of provisions to entertain us as the rest had done. And as I had before made my coming known to Topiawari, so did I acquaint this cacique therewith, and how I was sent by her Majesty for the purpose aforesaid and gathered also what I could of him touching<sup>o</sup> the estate of Guiana. And I found that those also of Caroli were not only enemies to the Spaniards, but most of all to the Epuremei, which abound in gold. And by this Wanuretona I had knowledge that on the head of this river were three mighty nations, which were seated on a great lake from whence this river descended, and were called Cassipagotos, Eparegotos, and Arawagotos, and that all those either against the Spaniards or the Epuremei would join with us, and that if we entered the land over the mountains of Curaa we should satisfy ourselves with gold and all other good things. He told us farther of a nation called Iwarawaqueri, before spoken of, that held daily war with the Epuremei that inhabited Macureguarai, and first civil town of Guiana, of the subjects of Inga, the emperor.

Upon this river one Captain George, that I took with Berreo, told me that there was a great silver mine, and that it was near the banks of the said river. But by this time as well Orenoque, Caroli, as all the rest of the rivers were risen four or five feet in height, so as it was not possible by the strength of any men, or with any boat whatsoever, to row into the river against the stream. I therefore sent Captain Thynn, Captain Greenville, my nephew John Gilbert, my cousin Butthead<sup>9</sup> Gorges, Captain Clarke, and some thirty shot<sup>o</sup> more to coast<sup>o</sup> the river by land, and to go to a town some twenty miles over the valley called Amnatapoi; and they found guides there to go farther towards the mountain foot to another great town called Capurepana, belonging to a cacique called Haharacoa, that was a nephew to old Topiawari, king of Aromaia, our chiefest friend, because this town and province of Capurepana adjoined to Macureguarai, which was a frontier town of the empire. And the meanwhile myself with Captain Gifford, Captain Caulfield, Edward Hancock, and some half-a-dozen shot marched overland to view the strange overfalls<sup>o</sup> of the river of Caroli, which roared so far off; and also to see the plains adjoining, and the rest of the province of Canuri. I sent also Captain Whiddon, William Connock, and some eight shot with them to see if they could find any mineral stone amongst the river's side. When we were come to the tops of the first hills of the plains adjoining to the river, we beheld that wonderful breach of waters<sup>o</sup> which ran down Caroli; and might from that mountain see the river how it ran in three parts, above<sup>o</sup> twenty miles off, and there appeared some ten or twelve overfalls in sight, every one as high over the other as a church tower, which fell with that fury that the rebound of water made it seem as if it had been all covered over with a great shower of rain; and in some places we took it at the first for a smoke that had risen over some great town. For mine own part I was well persuaded from thence to have returned, being a very ill footman;<sup>o</sup> but the rest were all so desirous to go near the said strange thunder of waters as<sup>o</sup> they drew me on by little and little till we came into the next valley where we might better discern the same. I never saw a more beautiful country nor more lively prospects;<sup>o</sup> hills so raised here and there over the valleys; the river winding into divers branches;<sup>o</sup> the plains adjoining without bush or stubble, all fair green grass; the ground of hard sand, easy to march on, either for horse or foot; the deer crossing in every path; the birds towards the evening singing on every tree with a thousand several<sup>o</sup> tunes; cranes and herons of white, crimson, and carnation, perching in the river's side; the air fresh with a gentle easterly wind; and every stone that we stooped to take up promised either gold or silver by his complexion.<sup>1</sup> Your Lordship shall see of<sup>o</sup> many sorts, and I hope some of them cannot be bettered under the sun; and yet we had no means but with our daggers and fingers to tear them out here and there, the rocks being most hard of that mineral spar<sup>o</sup> aforesaid, which is like a flint, and is altogether as hard or harder, and, besides, the veins lie a fathom or two deep in the rocks. But we wanted<sup>o</sup> all things requisite<sup>o</sup> save only<sup>o</sup> our desires and good will to have performed more if it had pleased God. To be short, when both our companies returned, each of them brought also several sorts of stones that appeared very fair but were such as they found loose on the ground, and were for the most part but colored, and had not any gold fixed in them. Yet such as had no judgment or experience kept all that glistered and would not be persuaded but<sup>2</sup> it was rich because of the luster;<sup>o</sup> and brought of those, and of marcasite<sup>3</sup> withal, from Trinidad, and have delivered of<sup>o</sup> those stones to be tried in many places and have thereby bred an opinion that all the rest is of the same. Yet some of these stones I shewed afterward to a Spaniard of the Caracas who told me that it was "el madre del oro" that is, the mother of gold, and that the mine was farther in the ground.

But it shall be found a weak policy in me either to betray myself or my country with imaginations; neither am I so far in love with that lodging, watching,<sup>o</sup> care, peril, diseases, ill savors,<sup>o</sup> bad fare,<sup>o</sup> and many other mischiefs that accompany these voyages as to woo myself again into any of them, were I not assured that the sun covereth not so much riches in any part of the earth. Captain Whiddon, and our chirurgion,<sup>o</sup> Nicholas Millechamp, brought me a kind of stones like sapphires; what they may prove<sup>o</sup> I know not. I shewed them to some of the Orenoqueponi, and they promised to bring me to a mountain that had of them very large pieces growing diamond-wise; whether it be crystal of the mountain, Bristol diamond,<sup>4</sup> or sapphire, I do not yet know, but I hope the best; sure I am that the place is as likely as<sup>o</sup> those from whence all the rich stones are brought and in the same height or very near. On the left hand of this river Caroli are seated those nations which I called Iwarawaqueri before remembered,<sup>o</sup> which are enemies to the Epuremei; and on the head of it, adjoining to the great lake Cassipa, are situated those other nations which also resist Inga, and the Epuremei, called Cassipagotos, Eparegotos, and Arawagotos. I farther understood that this lake of Cassipa is so large as<sup>o</sup> it is above<sup>o</sup> one day's journey for one of their canoas to cross, which may be some forty miles; and that thereinto fall divers rivers, and that great store<sup>o</sup> of grains of gold are found in the summer time when the lake falleth by the banks in those branches.

There is also another goodly river beyond Caroli, which is called Arui, which also runneth through the lake Cassipa, and falleth into Orenoque farther west, making all that land between Caroli and Arui an island; which is likewise a most beautiful country. Next unto Arui there are two rivers, Atoica and Caura, and on that branch which is called Caura are a nation of people whose heads appear not above their shoulders,<sup>5</sup> which though it may be thought a mere fable, yet for mine own part I am resolved it is true, because every child in the provinces of Aromaia and Canuri affirm the same. They are called Ewaipanoma; they are reported to have their eyes in their shoulders and their mouths in the middle of their breasts, and that a long train of hair groweth backward between their shoulders.

* * *

For the rest, which myself have seen, I will promise these things that follow which I know to be true. Those that are desirous to discover and to see many nations may be satisfied within this river which bringeth forth so many arms and branches leading to several countries and provinces, above 2,000 miles east and west and 800 miles south and north, and of these the most either rich in gold or in other merchandises. The common soldier shall here fight for gold, and pay himself, instead of pence, with plates of half-a-foot broad, whereas he breaketh his bones in other wars for provant<sup>o</sup> and penury. Those commanders and chieftains that shoot at<sup>o</sup> honor and abundance shall find there more rich and beautiful cities, more temples adorned with golden images, more sepulchers filled with treasure than either Cortes found in Mexico or Pizarro in Peru.<sup>6</sup> And the shining glory of this conquest will eclipse all those so far-extended beams of the Spanish nation. There is no country which yieldeth more pleasure to the inhabitants, either for those common delights of hunting, hawking, fishing, fowling and the rest, than Guiana doth; it hath so many plains, clear rivers, and abundance of pheasants, partridges, quails, rails, cranes, herons, and all other fowl; deer of all sorts, porks, hares, lions, tigers, leopards, and divers other sorts of beasts, either for chase or food. It hath a kind of beast called cama or anta, as big as an English beef, and in great plenty. To speak of the several sorts of every kind I fear would be troublesome to the reader, and therefore I will omit them, and conclude that both for health, good air, pleasure, and riches, I am resolved it cannot be equaled by any region either in the east or west. Moreover, the country is so healthful as, of an hundred persons and more, which lay without shift<sup>o</sup> most sluttishly,<sup>o</sup> and were every day almost melted with heat in rowing and marching, and suddenly wet again with great showers, and did eat of all sorts of corrupt fruits, and made meals of fresh fish without seasoning, of tortugas,<sup>o</sup> of lagartos or crocodiles, and of all sorts good and bad, without either order or measure, and besides lodged in the open air every night, we lost not any one, nor had one ill-disposed to my knowledge; nor found any calenture<sup>7</sup> or other of those pestilent diseases which dwell in all hot regions and so near the equinoctial line.

Where there is store of gold it is in effect needless to remember other commodities for trade. But it hath, towards the south part of the river, great quantities of Brazil-wood and divers berries that dye a most perfect crimson and carnation; and for painting,<sup>o</sup> all France, Italy, or the East Indies yield none such. For the more the skin is washed, the fairer the color appeareth, and with which even those brown and tawny women spot themselves and color their cheeks. All places yield abundance of cotton, of silk, of balsamum<sup>8</sup> and of those kinds most excellent and never known in Europe, of all sorts of gums, of Indian pepper,<sup>o</sup> and what else the countries may afford within the land we know not, neither had we time to abide the trial and search. The soil besides is so excellent and so full of rivers as it will carry sugar, ginger, and all those other commodities which the West Indies have.

The navigation is short, for it may be sailed with an ordinary wind in six weeks and in the like time back again; and, by the way,<sup>o</sup> neither lee shore,<sup>9</sup> enemies' coast, rocks, nor sands. All which in the voyages to the West Indies and all other places we are subject unto; as the channel of Bahama, coming from the West Indies, cannot well be passed in the winter, and when it is at the best it is a perilous and a fearful place; the rest of the Indies for calms<sup>o</sup> and diseases very troublesome, and the sea about the Bermudas a hellish sea for thunder, lightning, and storms.

This very year<sup>o</sup> there were seventeen sail<sup>1</sup> of Spanish ships lost in the channel of Bahama, and the great Philip,<sup>2</sup> like to have sunk at the Bermudas, was put back to St. Juan de Puerto Rico; and so it falleth out in that navigation every year for the most part. Which in this voyage are not to be feared; for the time of year to leave England is best in July, and the summer in Guiana is in October, November, December, January, February and March, and then the ships may depart thence in April and so return again into England in June. So as they shall never be subject to winter weather, either coming, going, or staying there: which, for my part, I take to be one of the greatest comforts and encouragements that can be thought on, having, as I have done, tasted in this voyage by the West Indies so many calms, so much heat, such outrageous gusts, such weather and contrary winds.

To conclude, Guiana is a country that hath yet her maidenhead, never sacked, turned, nor wrought; the face of the earth hath not been torn, nor the virtue and salt of the soil spent by manurance.<sup>3</sup> The graves have not been opened for gold, the mines not broken with sledges,<sup>o</sup> nor their images pulled down out of their temples. It hath never been entered by any army of strength, and never conquered or possessed by any Christian prince. It is, besides, so defensible<sup>o</sup> that if two forts be builded in one of the provinces which I have seen, the flood<sup>o</sup> setteth in so near the bank—where the channel also lieth—that no ship can pass up but within a pike's length of the artillery, first of the one, and afterwards of the other. Which two forts will be a sufficient guard both to the empire of Inga, and to an hundred other several kingdoms lying within the said river, even to the city of Quito in Peru.

There is therefore great difference between the easiness of the conquest of Guiana, and the defense of it being conquered,<sup>4</sup> and the West or East Indies. Guiana hath but one entrance by the sea, if it hath that, for any vessels of burden.<sup>5</sup> So as whosoever shall first possess it, it shall be found unaccessible for any enemy, except<sup>o</sup> he come in wherries, barges, or canoas, or else in flat-bottomed boats; and if he do offer<sup>o</sup> to enter it in that manner, the woods are so thick two hundred miles together upon the rivers of such entrance, as a mouse cannot sit in a boat unhit from the bank. By land it is more impossible to approach, for it hath the strongest situation of any region under the sun, and it is so environed<sup>o</sup> with impassable mountains on every side as it is impossible to victual any company in the passage. Which hath been well proved by the Spanish nation, who since the conquest of Peru have never left five years free from attempting<sup>o</sup> this empire or discovering some way into it; and yet of three-and-twenty several gentlemen, knights, and noblemen, there was never any that knew which way to lead an army by land, or to conduct ships by sea, anything near the said country. Orellana, of whom the river of Amazons taketh name, was the first, and Don Antonio de Berreo, whom we displanted,<sup>o</sup> the last: and I doubt much whether he himself—or any of his—yet know the best way into the said empire. It can therefore hardly be regained, if any strength<sup>o</sup> be formerly set down, but in one or two places, and but two or three crumsters<sup>6</sup> or galleys built and furnished<sup>o</sup> upon the river within. The West Indies have many ports, watering places,<sup>7</sup> and landings; and nearer than three hundred miles to Guiana, no man can harbor a ship, except he know one only place, which is not learned in haste, and which I will undertake<sup>o</sup> there is not any one of my companies that knoweth, whosoever hearkened<sup>o</sup> most after it.

Besides, by keeping one good fort, or building one town of strength, the whole empire is guarded; and whatsoever companies shall be afterwards planted within the land, although in twenty several provinces, those shall be able all to reunite themselves upon any occasion either by the way of one river or be able to march by land without either wood, bog, or mountain. Whereas in the West Indies there are few towns or provinces that can succor or relieve one the other by land or sea. By land the countries are either desert, mountainous, or strong enemies. By sea, if any man invade to the eastward, those to the west cannot in many months turn against the breeze and eastern wind. Besides, the Spaniards are therein so dispersed as they are nowhere strong but in Ñueva Espana<sup>8</sup> only; the sharp mountains, the thorns, and poisoned prickles, the sandy and deep ways in the valleys, the smothering heat and air, and want of water in other places are their only and best defense; which, because those nations that invade them are not victualled or provided to stay, neither have any place to friend<sup>o</sup> adjoining, do serve them instead of good arms and great multitudes.

The West Indies were first offered her Majesty's grandfather by Columbus,<sup>9</sup> a stranger,<sup>o</sup> in whom there might be doubt<sup>o</sup> of deceit; and besides it was then thought incredible that there were such and so many lands and regions never written of before. This Empire is made known to her Majesty by her own vassal,<sup>o</sup> and by him that oweth to her more duty than an ordinary subject; so that it shall ill sort<sup>o</sup> with the many graces and benefits which I have received to abuse her Highness, either with fables or imaginations. The country is already discovered, many nations won to her Majesty's love and obedience, and those Spaniards which have latest and longest labored about the conquest, beaten out, discouraged and disgraced, which among these nations were thought invincible. Her Majesty may in this enterprise employ all those soldiers and gentlemen that are younger brethren,<sup>1</sup> and all captains and chieftains that want<sup>o</sup> employment, and the charge<sup>o</sup> will be only the first setting out in victualling and arming them; for after the first or second year I doubt not but to see in London a contractation-house of more receipt<sup>o</sup> for Guiana than there is now in Seville for the West Indies.<sup>2</sup>

And I am resolved<sup>o</sup> that if there were but a small army afoot in Guiana, marching towards Manoa, the chief city of Inga, he would yield to her Majesty by composition<sup>o</sup> so many hundred thousand pounds yearly as should both defend all enemies abroad, and defray all expenses at home; and that he would besides pay a garrison of three or four thousand soldiers very royally to defend him against other nations. For he cannot but know how his predecessors, yea, how his own great uncles, Guascar and Atabalipa, sons to Guiana-Capac, emperor of Peru, were, while they contended for the empire, beaten out by the Spaniards, and that both of late years and ever since the said conquest, the Spaniards have sought the passages and entry of his country; and of their cruelties used to the borderers he cannot be ignorant. In which respects no doubt but he will be brought to tribute with great gladness; if not, he hath neither shot nor iron weapon in all his empire and therefore may easily be conquered.

And I further remember that Berreo confessed to me and others, which I protest<sup>o</sup> before the Majesty of God to be true, that there was found among the prophecies in Peru, at such time as the empire was reduced to the Spanish obedience, in their chiefest temples, amongst divers others which foreshadowed the loss of the said empire, that from Inglatierra<sup>o</sup> those Ingas should be again in time to come restored, and delivered from the servitude of the said conquerors. And I hope, as we with these few hands have dislodged the first garrison and driven them out of the said country, so her Majesty will give order for the rest, and either defend it, and hold it as tributary,<sup>3</sup> or conquer and keep it as empress of the same. For whatsoever prince shall possess it shall be greatest; and if the king of Spain enjoy it, he will become irresistible. Her Majesty hereby shall confirm and strengthen the opinions of all nations as touching<sup>o</sup> her great and princely actions. And where the south border of Guiana reacheth to the dominion and empire of the Amazons, those women shall hereby bear the name of a virgin, which is not only able to defend her own territories and her neighbors, but also to invade and conquer so great empires and so far removed.

To speak more at this time I fear would be but troublesome: I trust in God, this being true, will suffice, and that he which is King of all Kings, and Lord of Lords, will put it into her heart which is Lady of Ladies to possess it. If not, I will judge those men worthy to be kings thereof, that by her grace and leave will undertake it of themselves.

1596, 1599

Endnotes

- Note 1: Those who steer ships.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Antonio de Berrío (1527–1597), Spanish soldier, governor, and explorer; one of Raleigh's informants.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: People dwelling close by.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Nicolás Monardes, trader between Seville and the New World, wrote the Historia Medicinal (in three parts, 1565, 1571, and 1574). It detailed treatments that he learned from indigenous people and medicines that he made using products from the New World.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: That is, people who live on the borders of the Orenoque River.Return to reference 5

- Note 6: Orejones: a Spanish term meaning 'having big ears,' used to describe native noble Guianians who wore plugs in their pierced earlobes; Epuremei: supposedly elite native Guianians, but possibly, given their Spanish characteristics, an invention of Raleigh's.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: The Inga, or Inca; the supposed ruler of Guiana and its chief city, Manoa.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Indigenous chief. The term is a Spanish transliteration of a word from a Central American Indian language.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Name for a historic estate in the parish of St. Budeaux in Devon, now known as Budockshed; it was lived in by the Gorges family.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Seemed by its texture and appearance to give promise of containing gold or silver.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Could not be dissuaded from the idea that.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: White iron pyrite; sometimes known as "fool's gold."Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Quartz crystals found in the Avon Gorge in Bristol, England.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: See Othello 1.3.143–44 and the image on p. 641 for reference to this notion.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Hernán Cortés (1485–1547), leader of a Spanish expedition that conquered the Aztec empire in Mexico; Francisco Pizarro (ca. 1476–1541), leader of a Spanish expedition that conquered the Inca empire in Peru.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: A tropical sailors' disease, characterized by delirium in which the patient, it is said, believes the sea to be green fields and wants to leap into it.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: An aromatic resinous vegetable juice.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: The shore that the wind blows on.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: A collective singular for sailing vessels.Return to reference 1

- Note 2: The Saint Philip was the largest ship in the navy of Spain.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Guiana is here described as a virgin country that has not been raped, plundered, or exhausted through labor. “Manurance”: manuring; that is, (over)cultivating the land—so, here, an occupation.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Once it has been conquered.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Ships capable of carrying a significant load.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Kromsteven or Kromster (Dutch), a vessel with a bent prow.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Places where fresh water can be obtained.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Literally, “New Spain”—the territorial land claimed by Spain extended over large parts of the Americas and had its capital in Mexico City.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: In 1488 Bartholomew Columbus petitioned Henry VII to sponsor his brother Christopher in an attempt to find a new route to the (East) Indies by sailing west. The king declined, so Christopher sought the sponsorship of Queen Isabella of Spain.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Younger brothers were seen as likely recruits because they were without patrimony.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: An exchange or treasury in Seville, the Casa de Contratación, where contracts were made in connection with West Indian trade.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Nation that pays tribute to the sovereign nation.Return to reference 3

Notes

- °: food Return to reference °
- °: pineapples Return to reference °
- °: parrots Return to reference °
- °: to blow wind into Return to reference °

- °: describing Return to reference °
- °: understand Return to reference °
- °: greatly Return to reference °
- °: examine Return to reference °
- °: type Return to reference °
- °: designation Return to reference °
- °: because Return to reference °
- °: eradicated Return to reference °
- °: likewise Return to reference °
- °: proposed Return to reference °
- °: in such a way that Return to reference °
- °: equator Return to reference °
- °: racial origin Return to reference °
- °: not only because Return to reference °
- °: not quite at it Return to reference °
- °: light rowing boats Return to reference °
- °: throw Return to reference °
- °: for that reason Return to reference °
- °: concerning Return to reference °
- °: soldiers Return to reference °
- °: skirt Return to reference °
- °: waterfalls Return to reference °
- °: breaking of waves Return to reference °
- °: over Return to reference °
- °: poor pedestrian Return to reference °
- °: that Return to reference °
- °: vistas Return to reference °
- °: streams Return to reference °
- °: separate Return to reference °
- °: have sight of Return to reference °
- °: crystalline minerals Return to reference °
- °: lacked Return to reference °
- °: appropriate Return to reference °
- °: except Return to reference °
- °: sheen Return to reference °
- °: presented Return to reference °

- °: wakefulness Return to reference °
- °: bad smells Return to reference °
- °: bad food Return to reference °
- °: surgeon Return to reference °
- °: turn out to be Return to reference °
- °: similar to Return to reference °
- °: reflected on Return to reference °
- °: that Return to reference °
- °: over Return to reference °
- °: abundant supply Return to reference °
- °: an allowance of food Return to reference °
- °: aspire to Return to reference °
- °: underclothing Return to reference °
- °: repulsively Return to reference °
- °: tortoises Return to reference °
- °: cosmetics Return to reference °
- °: probably chili pepper Return to reference °
- °: along the way Return to reference °
- °: absences of wind Return to reference °
- °: 1595 Return to reference °
- °: sledgehammers Return to reference °
- °: easy to defend Return to reference °
- °: tide Return to reference °
- °: unless Return to reference °
- °: attempt Return to reference °
- °: surrounded Return to reference °
- °: attacking Return to reference °
- °: uprooted Return to reference °
- °: fortress Return to reference °
- °: fitted with appliances Return to reference °
- °: affirm Return to reference °
- °: eavesdropped Return to reference °
- °: on intimate terms Return to reference °
- °: foreigner Return to reference °
- °: fear Return to reference °
- °: subordinate Return to reference °

- °: badly fit Return to reference °
- °: lack Return to reference °
- °: cost Return to reference °
- °: money Return to reference °
- °: certain Return to reference °
- °: treaty Return to reference °
- °: affirm Return to reference °
- °: England Return to reference °
- °: concerning Return to reference °

THOMAS HARIOT

Thomas Hariot (1560–1621), mathematician, astronomer, linguist, and surveyor in the service of Sir Walter Raleigh, was observing sunspots and using a telescope at about the same time as Galileo; he also made important discoveries in algebra, navigational techniques, and optics.

Hariot matriculated at Oxford University in 1577, where he met Richard Hakluyt, who may have interested him in the subject of travel and colonization. After Hariot graduated in 1580, Raleigh hired him to keep accounts, design ships, and improve navigational methods with a view to traveling to the New World. Over that period, Hariot also became friendly with two Native Americans, the Algonquins Manteo and Wanchese, who had been brought to England, and who taught him their language. Hariot accompanied Sir Richard Grenville's expedition to the Roanoke Colony in 1585, and his account of it, extracted here, was intended to describe the virtues of the place and people and to promote colonization. To this end, he supplies information about the geography and climate, details the vegetation and wildlife that can be eaten, and offers an account of the inhabitants, about whom the English were intensely curious. Reports had begun to circulate in England about tensions with the Algonquin Indians, on whom the colonists were almost completely dependent for food, and Hariot's brief ethnographic observations are meant to reassure readers that the Indigenous people "are not to be feared." First published in 1588, his account was printed by Theodor de Bry in 1590, with maps and engravings of Native American life based on the watercolors by John White.

After he returned to England in 1586, Hariot worked for Henry Percy, ninth Earl of Northumberland, and continued to do so when his patron was imprisoned for his close connections with the 1605 Gunpowder Plot. Hariot was among the first people to use a telescope; in 1611, he produced the first map of the moon. Hariot died in 1621, apparently from cancer of the nose—possibly caused by the habit of taking tobacco that he had acquired in the New World.

From A Brief and True Report of the New-Found land of Virginia

A brief and true report of the new-found land of Virginia; of the commodities there found and to be raised—as well merchantable,<sup>o</sup> as others for victual, building and other necessary uses—for those that are and shall be the planters there, and of the nature and manners of the natural inhabitants. Discovered by the English Colony there seated<sup>o</sup> by Sir Richard Grenville Knight<sup>1</sup> in the year 1585, which remained under the government of Ralph Lane Esquire,<sup>2</sup> one of her Majesty's Esquires, during the space of twelve months, at the special charge and direction of the Honorable SIR WALTER RALEGH, Knight, lord Warden of the Stannaries,<sup>3</sup> who therein hath been favored and authorized by her MAJESTY and her letters patents.

Directed to the adventurers, favorers and well-willers of the action for the inhabiting and planting there. By Thomas Hariot, servant to the above-named Sir WALTER, a member of the colony, and there employed in discovering. 1588

The first part: of merchantable commodities.

* * *

The second part: of such commodities as Virginia is known to yield for victual and sustenance of man's life, usually fed upon by the natural inhabitants, as also by us during the time of our abode. And first of such as are sowed and husbanded.<sup>o</sup>

* * *

The third and last part: of such other things as is behoveful<sup>o</sup> for those which shall plant and inhabit to know of, with a description of the nature and manners of the people of the country.

Of commodities for building and other necessary uses.

Those other things which I am more to make rehearsal of<sup>o</sup> are such as concern building and other mechanical necessary uses—as diverse sorts of trees for house and ship timber and other uses else; also lime, stone, and brick, lest that being not mentioned some might have been doubted of, or by some that are malicious reported the contrary.

Oaks there are as fair, straight, tall, and as good timber as any can be, and also great store,<sup>o</sup> and in some places very great.

Walnut trees, as I have said before, very many. Some have been seen excellent fair timber of four and five fathom<sup>4</sup> and above fourscore<sup>o</sup> foot straight without bough.

Fir trees fit for masts of ships, some very tall and great.

Rakiock,<sup>5</sup> a kind of trees so called that are sweet wood of which the inhabitants that were near unto us do commonly make their boats or canoes of the form of trows,<sup>6</sup> only with the help of fire, hatchets of stones, and shells; we have known some so great being made in that sort<sup>o</sup> of one tree that they have carried well twenty men at once besides much baggage; the timber being great, tall, straight, soft, light, and yet tough enough I think (besides other uses) to be fit also for masts of ships.

Cedar, a sweet wood good for ceilings, chests, boxes, bedsteads, lutes, virginals<sup>7</sup> and many things else, as I have also said before. Some of our company, which have wandered in some places where I have not been, have made certain affirmation of Cyprus which for such and other excellent uses is also a wood of price and no small estimation.<sup>o</sup>

Maple, and also Witch-hazel, whereof the inhabitants use to make their bows.

Holly, a necessary thing for the making of birdlime.<sup>8</sup>

Willows, good for the making of weirs and weels<sup>9</sup> to take fish after the English manner, although the inhabitants use only reeds which, because they are so strong as also<sup>o</sup> flexible, do serve for that turn<sup>o</sup> very well and sufficiently.

Beech and Ash, good for cask, hoops,<sup>1</sup> and if need require,<sup>o</sup> plough work, as also for many things else.

Elm.

Sassafras trees.

Ascopo<sup>o</sup> a kind of tree very like unto laurel. The bark is hot in taste and spicy; it is very like to that tree which Monardus<sup>2</sup> describeth to be Cassia Lignea of the West Indies.<sup>3</sup>

There are many other strange trees whose names I know not but in the Virginian language, of which I am not now able, neither is it so convenient for the present, to trouble you with particular relation, <sup>o</sup> seeing that for timber and other necessary uses I have named sufficient. And of many of the rest, but that they may be applied to good use, I know no cause to doubt.

Now for stone, brick, and lime, thus it is. Near unto the seacoast where we dwelt, there are no kind of stones to be found (except a few small pebbles about four miles off) but such as have been brought from farther out of the main.<sup>o</sup> In some of our voyages, we have seen diverse hard, raggy<sup>o</sup> stones, great pebbles, and a kind of grey stone like unto marble, of which the inhabitants make their hatchets to cleave wood. Upon enquiry we heard that a little further up into the country were of all sorts very many, although of quarries they are ignorant, neither have they use of any store whereupon they should have occasion to seek any. For if every household have one or two to crack nuts, grind shells, whet copper, and sometimes other stones for hatchets, they have enough. Neither use they any digging, but only for graves about three foot deep, and therefore no marvel that they know neither quarries nor limestones, which both may be in places nearer than they wot<sup>o</sup> of.

In the meantime, until there be discovery of sufficient store in some place or other convenient, the want<sup>o</sup> of you which are and shall be the planters therein may be as well supplied by brick, for the making whereof in diverse places of the country there is clay both excellent good and plenty, and also by lime<sup>o</sup> made of oyster shells, and of others burnt, after the manner as they use in the isles of Thanet and Sheppey,<sup>4</sup> and also in diverse other places of England, which kind of lime is well known to be as good as any other. And of oyster shells there is plenty enough. For besides diverse other particular places where are abundance, there is one shallow sound along the coast where, for the space of many miles together in length and two or three miles in breadth, the ground is nothing else being but half a foot or a foot under water for the most part.

This much can I say furthermore of stones: that about one hundred twenty miles from our fort near the water in the side of a hill was found by a gentleman of our company a great vein of hard raggy stones, which I thought good to remember<sup>o</sup> unto you.

OF THE NATURE AND MANNERS OF THE PEOPLE

It resteth<sup>o</sup> I speak a word or two of the natural inhabitants, their natures and manners * * *

They are a people clothed with loose mantles<sup>o</sup> made of deerskins, and aprons of the same round about their middles, all else naked; of such a difference of statures only as we in England; having no edge tools<sup>5</sup> or weapons of iron or steel to offend us withal, neither know they how to make any. Those weapons that they have are only bows made of witch hazel and arrows of reeds, flat-edged truncheons also of wood about a yard long, neither have they anything to defend themselves but targets<sup>o</sup> made of barks, and some armors made of sticks wickered<sup>o</sup> together with thread.

Their towns are but small and near the seacoast but few, some containing but ten or twelve houses, some twenty. The greatest that we have seen hath been but of thirty houses. If they be walled, it is only done with barks of trees made fast<sup>o</sup> to stakes, or else with poles only fixed upright and close one by another.

Their houses are made of small poles made fast at the tops in round form after the manner as is used in many arbories<sup>o</sup> in our gardens of England, in most towns covered with barks, and in some with artificial<sup>o</sup> mats, made of long rushes, from the tops of the houses down to the ground. The length of them is commonly double to the breadth. In some places they are but twelve and sixteen yards long, and in other some we have seen of four-and-twenty.

In some places of the country only one town belongs to the government, of a werowance or chief lord;<sup>6</sup> in other some two or three, on some six, eight, and more. The greatest werowance that yet we had dealing with had but eighteen towns in his government, and able to make<sup>o</sup> not above seven or eight hundred fighting men at the most. The language of every government is different from any other, and the farther they are distant, the greater is the difference.

Their manner of wars amongst themselves is either by sudden surprising one another, most commonly about the dawning of the day or moonlight, or else by ambushes, or some subtle devices. Set battles are very rare, except it fall out<sup>o</sup> where there are many trees, where either part may have some hope of defense, after the delivery of every arrow, in leaping behind some or other.

If there fall out any wars between us and them, what their fight is likely to be, we having advantages against them for many manner of ways—as by our discipline, our strange<sup>o</sup> weapons and devices else,<sup>o</sup> especially ordnance<sup>o</sup> great and small—it may be easily imagined, by the experience we have had in some places, the turning up of their heels against us in running away was their best defense.

In respect of<sup>o</sup> us they are a people poor, and for want of skill and judgement in the knowledge and use of our things, do esteem<sup>o</sup> our trifles before things of greater value. Notwithstanding in their proper<sup>o</sup> manner, considering the want of such means as we have, they seem very ingenious. For although they have no such tools nor any such crafts, sciences, and arts as we, yet in those things they do, they show excellency of wit.<sup>o</sup> And by how much they upon due consideration shall find our manner of knowledges and crafts to exceed theirs in perfection, and speed for doing or execution,<sup>o</sup> by so much the more is it probable that they should desire our friendship and love and have the greater respect for pleasing and obeying us. Whereby may be hoped if means of good government be used that they may in short time be brought to civility and the embracing of true religion.

Some religion they have already which although it be far from the truth, yet being as it is, there is hope it may be the easier and sooner reformed.

They believe that there are many gods, which they call Mantoac, but of different sorts and degrees, one only chief and great god, which hath been from all eternity. Who, as they affirm, when he purposed to make the world, made, first, other gods of a principal order to be as means and instruments to be used in the creation and government to follow; and, after, the sun, moon, and stars as petty gods and the instruments of the other order more principal. First, they say, were made waters, out of which by the gods was made all diversity of creatures that are visible or invisible.

For mankind, they say, a woman was made first, which by the working of one of the gods conceived and brought forth children. And in such sort, they say, they had their beginning.

But how many years have passed since, they say, they can make no relation,° having no letters° nor other such means as we do to keep records of the particularities of times past, but only tradition from father to son.

They think that all the gods are of human shape, and therefore they represent them by images in the forms of men, which they call Kewasowok. One alone is called Kewas. Then they place in houses appropriate, or temples which they call Machicomuck, where they worship, pray, sing, and make many times offering unto them. In some Machicomuck we have seen but one Kewas, in some two, and in other some three. The common sort think them to be also gods.

They believe also the immortality of the soul: that after this life, as soon as the soul is departed from the body according to the works it hath done, it is either carried to heaven, the habitacle° of gods, there to enjoy perpetual bliss and happiness, or else to a great pit or hole, which they think to be in the furthest parts of their part of the world toward the sunset, there to burn continually. The place they call Popogusso.

For the confirmation of this opinion, they told me two stories of two men that had been lately dead and renewed<sup>o</sup> again. The one happened but few years before our coming, in the country of a wicked man which, having been dead and buried, the next day the earth of the grave being seen to move, was taken up again, who made declaration where his soul had been—that is to say very near entering into Popogusso—had not one of the gods saved him and gave him leave to return again, and teach his friends what they should do to avoid that terrible place of torment.

The other happened in the same year we were there, but in a town that was threescore<sup>o</sup> miles from us, and it was told me for strange news: that one being dead, buried, and taken up again as the first, showed that although his body had lien dead in the grave, yet his soul was alive, and had traveled far in a long broad way, on both sides whereof grew most delicate and pleasant trees, bearing more rare and excellent fruits than ever he had seen before or was able to express;<sup>o</sup> and at length came to most brave<sup>o</sup> and fair houses, near which he met his father that had been dead before, who gave him great charge<sup>7</sup> to go back again and show his friends what good they were to do to enjoy the pleasures of that place, which, when he had done he should after come again.

What subtlety<sup>o</sup> soever be in the Wiroances and priests, this opinion<sup>o</sup> worketh so much in many of the common and simple sort of people that it maketh them have a great respect to their governors and also great care what they do to avoid torment after death and to enjoy bliss. Although, notwithstanding, there is punishment ordained for malefactors, as<sup>o</sup> stealers, whoremongers,<sup>8</sup> and other sorts of wicked-doers: some punished with death, some with forfeitures,<sup>o</sup> some with beating, according to the greatness of the facts.<sup>o</sup>

And this is the sum of their religion, which I learned by having special familiarity with some of their priests. Wherein they were not so sure grounded, nor gave such credit to their traditions and stories, but through conversing with us they were brought into great doubts of their own,<sup>9</sup> and no small admiration of ours, with earnest desire in many to learn more than we had means—for want of perfect utterance in their language—to express.

Most things they saw with us, as mathematical instruments, sea compasses, the virtue<sup>o</sup> of the lodestone<sup>o</sup> in drawing iron, a perspective glass<sup>o</sup> whereby was showed many strange sights, burning glasses,<sup>1</sup> wildfire works,<sup>o</sup> guns, books, writing and reading, spring-clocks that seem to go of themselves, and many other things that we had were so strange unto them and so far exceeded their capacities to comprehend the reason and means how they should be made and done, that they thought they were rather the works of gods than of men, or at the leastwise they had been given and taught us of the gods. Which made many of them to have such opinion of us as, that if they knew not the truth of God and religion already, it was rather to be had from us, whom God so especially loved, than from a people that were so simple (as they found themselves to be in comparison of us). Whereupon greater credit was given unto that we spake of concerning such matters.

Many times, and in every town where I came according as<sup>o</sup> I was able, I made declaration of the contents of the bible: that therein was set forth the true and only God and his mighty works; that therein was contained the true doctrine of salvation through Christ; with many particularities of miracles and chief points of religion as I was able then to utter and thought fit<sup>o</sup> for the time. And although I told them the book materially and of itself was not of any such virtue, as I thought they did conceive, but only the doctrine therein contained, yet would many be glad to touch it, to embrace it, to kiss it, to hold it to their breasts, and heads, and stroke over all their body with it to show their hungry desire of that knowledge which was spoken of.

The Wiroans with whom we dwelt [was] called Wingina, and many of his people would be glad many times to be with us at our prayers and many times call upon us, both in his own town, as also in others (whither he sometimes accompanied us to pray and sing psalms) hoping thereby to be partaker of the same effects which we by that means also expected.

Twice this Wiroance was so grievously sick that he was like to die, and as he lay languishing, doubting of any help by his own priests—and thinking he was in such danger for offending us and thereby our God—sent for some of us to pray and be a means to our God that it would please Him either that he might live or after death dwell with Him in bliss, so likewise were the requests of many others in the like case.

On a time also when their corn began to wither by reason of a drought which happened extraordinarily,<sup>o</sup> fearing that it had come to pass by reason that in something they had displeased us, many would come to us and desire us to pray to our God of England that he would preserve their corn, promising that, when it was ripe, we also should be partakers of the fruit.

There could at no time happen any strange sickness, losses, hurts, or any other cross<sup>o</sup> unto them, but that they would impute<sup>o</sup> to us the cause or means thereof for offending or not pleasing us.

One other rare and strange accident,<sup>o</sup> leaving others, will I mention before I end, which moved the whole country that either knew or heard of us to have us in wonderful admiration.<sup>o</sup> There was no town where we had any subtle device<sup>o</sup> practiced against us we leaving it unpunished or not revenged (because we sought by all means possible to win them by gentleness) but that within a few days after our departure, from every such town, the people began to die very fast, and many in short space; in some towns about twenty, in some forty, in some sixty, and in one sixscore,<sup>o</sup> which in truth was very many in respect of<sup>o</sup> their numbers. This happened in no place that we could learn but where we had been, where they used some practice against us, and after such time. The disease also was so strange that they neither knew what it was nor how to cure it; the like by report of the oldest men in the country never happened before, time out of mind, a thing specially observed by us as also by the natural inhabitants themselves.

Insomuch that when some of the inhabitants which were our friends and especially the Wiroance Wingina had observed such effects in four of five towns to follow their<sup>2</sup> wicked practices, they were persuaded that it was the work of our God through our means, and that we by Him might kill and slay whom we would<sup>o</sup> without weapons and not come near them.

And thereupon when it had happened that they had understanding that any of their enemies had abused us in our journeys, hearing that we had wrought no revenge with our weapons, and fearing upon some cause the matter should so rest, did come and entreat us that we would be a means to our God that they, as others that had dealt ill with us, might in like sort die, alleging how much it would be for our credit and profit as also theirs, and hoping furthermore that we would do so much at their requests in respect of the friendship we profess them.

Whose entreaties, although we showed that they were ungodly, affirming that our God would not subject Himself to any such prayers and requests of men; that indeed all things have been and were to be done according to His good pleasure as he had ordained; and that we, to show ourselves His true servants, ought rather to make petition for the contrary, that they with them might live together with us, be made partakers of His truth, and serve Him in righteousness, but notwithstanding in such sort that we refer that, as all other things, to be done according to His divine will and pleasure, and as by His wisdom He had ordained to be best.

Yet because the effect fell out<sup>o</sup> so suddenly and shortly after, according to their desires, they thought nevertheless it came to pass by our means, and that we in using such speeches unto them did but dissemble the matter, and therefore came unto us to give us thanks in their manner, that although we satisfied them not in promise, yet in deeds and effect we had fulfilled their desires.

This marvelous accident in all the country wrought so strange opinions of us that some people could not tell whether to think us gods or men, and the rather because that all the space of their sickness there was no man of ours known to die or that was especially sick. They noted also that we had no women amongst us, neither that we did care for any of theirs.

Some, therefore, were of opinion that we were not born of women and therefore not mortal, but that we were men of an old generation many years past then risen again to immortality.

Some would likewise seem to prophesy that there were more of our generation yet to come to kill theirs and take their places—as some thought the purpose was, by<sup>o</sup> that which was already done.

Those that were immediately to come after us they imagined to be in the air yet invisible and without bodies, and that they by our entreaty and for the love of us did make the people to die in that sort<sup>o</sup> as they did by shooting invisible bullets into them.

To confirm this opinion, their physicians (to excuse<sup>o</sup> their ignorance in curing disease), would not be ashamed to say, but earnestly make the simple people believe, that the strings of blood that they sucked out of the sick bodies were the strings wherewithal the invisible bullets were tied and cast.

Some also thought that we shot them ourselves out of our pieces<sup>o</sup> from the place where we dwelled and killed the people in any such town that had offended us as we listed,<sup>o</sup> how far distant from us soever it were.

And other some said that it was the special work of God for our sakes, as we ourselves have cause in some sort<sup>o</sup> to think no less, whatsoever some do or may imagine to the contrary, specially some astrologers, knowing of the eclipse of the sun which we saw the same year before in our voyage thitherward which unto them appeared very terrible. And also of a comet which began to appear but a few days before the beginning of the said sickness. But to exclude them from being the special causes of so special an accident, there are further reasons than I think fit<sup>o</sup> at this present to be alleged.

These their opinions I have set down the more at large,<sup>o</sup> that it may appear unto you that there is good hope they may be brought, through discreet dealing and government, to the embracing of the truth, and consequently to honor, obey, fear, and love us.

And although some of our company towards the end of the year showed themselves so fierce in slaying some of the people in some towns, upon causes that on our part might easily enough have been borne withal, yet notwithstanding (because it was on their part justly deserved), the alteration of their opinions generally and for the most part concerning us is the less to be doubted.° And whatsoever else they may be, by carefulness of ourselves need nothing at all to be feared.

The Conclusion.

* * * Although all which I have before spoken of have been discovered and experimented not far from the seacoast where was our abode and most of our traveling, yet sometimes, as we made our journeys farther into the main° and country, we found the soil to be fatter,° the trees greater and to grow thinner, the ground more firm and deeper mold, more and larger champions,³ finer grass and as good as ever we saw any in England, in some places rocky and far more high and hilly ground, more plenty of their fruits, more abundance of beasts, the more inhabited with people, and of greater policy and larger dominions, with greater towns and houses.

Why may we not, then, look for in good hope—from the inner parts—of more and greater plenty, as well of other things, as of those which we have already discovered? Unto the Spaniards happened the like in discovering the main of the West Indies. The main also of this country of Virginia, extending some ways so many hundreds of leagues, as otherwise° than by the relation of the inhabitants we have most certain knowledge of, where yet no Christian prince hath any possession or dealing, cannot but yield many kinds of excellent commodities, which we in our discovery have not yet seen.

What hope there is else to be gathered of the nature of the climate, being answerable to the island of Japan, the land of China, Persia, Jewry, the islands of Cyprus and Candy,° the south parts of Greece, Italy, and Spain, and of many other notable and famous countries, because I mean not to be tedious, I leave to your own consideration.

Whereby also the excellent temperature of the air there at all seasons—much warmer than in England, and never so violently hot as sometimes is under and between the Tropics or near them—cannot be unknown unto you without farther relation.

For the wholesomeness thereof I need to say but thus much. That for all the want of provision, as, first, of English victual—excepting for twenty days, we lived only by drinking water and by the victual of the country, of which some sorts were very strange unto us, and might have been thought to have altered our temperatures in such sort as to have brought us into some grievous and dangerous diseases—secondly, the want of English means for the taking of beasts, fish, and fowl, which by the help only of the inhabitants and their means, could not be so suddenly and easily provided for us, nor in so great numbers and quantities, nor of that choice as otherwise might have been to our better satisfaction and contentment. Some want also we had of clothes. Furthermore, in all our travails which were most special and often in the time of winter, our lodging was in the open air upon the ground. And yet I say for all of this, there were but four of our whole company (being one hundred and eight) that died all the year and that but at the latter end thereof and upon none of the aforesaid causes. For all four, especially three, were feeble and sickly persons before ever they came thither, and those that knew them much marveled that they lived so long being in that case<sup>o</sup> or had adventured<sup>o</sup> to travel.

Seeing therefore the air there is so temperate and wholesome, the soil so fertile—and yielding such commodities as I have before mentioned—the voyage also thither to and fro being sufficiently experimented<sup>4</sup> to be performed thrice a year with ease and at any season thereof, and the dealing of Sir Walter Raleigh so liberal in large giving and granting land there, as is already known, with many helps and furtherances<sup>o</sup> else (the least that he hath granted hath been five hundred acres to a man only for the adventure<sup>o</sup> of his person) I hope there remain no cause whereby the action should be misliked.

If that those which shall thither travel to inhabit and plant be but reasonably provided for the first year—as those are which were transported the last—and being there do use but that diligence and care as is requisite, and as they may with ease, there is no doubt but for the time following they may have victuals that is excellent good and plenty enough: some more English sorts of cattle<sup>o</sup> also hereafter, as some have been before and are there yet remaining, may and shall be, God willing, thither transported. So likewise our kind of fruits, roots, and herbs may be there planted and sowed, as some have been already, and prove well.<sup>o</sup> And in short time also they may raise of<sup>o</sup> those sorts of commodities which I have spoken of as shall both enrich themselves as also others that shall deal with them.

And this is all the fruits<sup>o</sup> of our labors that I have thought necessary to advertise you of at this present.

* * *

Thus referring my relation<sup>o</sup> to your favorable constructions, expecting good success of the action from Him<sup>o</sup> which is to be acknowledged the author and governor not only of this but of all else, I take my leave of you this month of February, 1588.

Finis.

1588, 1589, 1590

Endnotes

- Note 1: Richard Grenville (1542–1591), English privateer and explorer.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Ralph Lane (ca. 1532–1603), English explorer and colonizer.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Tin mines in Cornwall and Devon.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Six feet (the length covered by the outstretched arms).Return to reference 4

- Note 5: What tree this is has not been determined. A tulip tree, perhaps.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: A type of boat used for fishing in early modern England.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Instruments consisting of keyboards in a box.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: A sticky substance spread on trees to catch birds.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Weirs were fences in rivers that would channel fish toward a trap; weels were wicker traps for catching fish.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: That is, the staves of barrels and the hoops that bind themReturn to reference 1
- Note 2: Nicolás Monardes (1493–1588) wrote an account of the plants of the New World and their medical uses in 1574; it was translated into English 1580.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: A variety of cinnamon.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: A peninsula and island respectively off the coast of Kent in southern England. Oyster shells can be burned to create lime, then mixed with water, sand, ash, and other shells to create a kind of concrete (to be known, later, as tabby).Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Tools with sharp, cutting edges.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Name for a chief among the Native Americans of what is now Virginia, Maryland, and North Carolina.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Commanded him powerfully.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: People who use/procure prostitutes.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: That is, of their own religion.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Concave mirrors used to concentrate the sun's rays.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Following on from their.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Areas of level open country.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Tried by experiment.Return to reference 4

Notes

- °: salable Return to reference °
- °: placed Return to reference °
- °: cultivated Return to reference °
- °: necessary Return to reference °
- °: further to relate Return to reference °
- °: in abundance Return to reference °
- °: eighty Return to reference °
- °: in that manner Return to reference °
- °: in great number Return to reference °
- °: as well as Return to reference °
- °: fulfil the purpose Return to reference °
- °: necessary Return to reference °
- °: sweet bay tree Return to reference °
- °: tell you Return to reference °
- °: sea Return to reference °
- °: ragged Return to reference °
- °: know Return to reference °
- °: lack Return to reference °
- °: mortar Return to reference °
- °: mention Return to reference °
- °: remains that Return to reference °
- °: sleeveless cloaks Return to reference °
- °: shields Return to reference °
- °: enclosed with wicker Return to reference °
- °: fastened Return to reference °
- °: arbors Return to reference °
- °: manufactured (woven) Return to reference °
- °: muster Return to reference °
- °: happen Return to reference °
- °: unfamiliar Return to reference °
- °: in addition Return to reference °
- °: artillery Return to reference °
- °: in comparison with Return to reference °

- °: regard, value Return to reference °
- °: own Return to reference °
- °: intelligence Return to reference °
- °: carrying into effect Return to reference °
- °: cannot tell Return to reference °
- °: writing Return to reference °
- °: habitation Return to reference °
- °: spiritually reborn Return to reference °
- °: sixty Return to reference °
- °: put into words Return to reference °
- °: splendid Return to reference °
- °: craftiness Return to reference °
- °: belief Return to reference °
- °: such as Return to reference °
- °: finer Return to reference °
- °: deeds Return to reference °
- °: power Return to reference °
- °: magnet Return to reference °
- °: magnifying glass Return to reference °
- °: fireworks Return to reference °
- °: as far as Return to reference °
- °: proper Return to reference °
- °: very unusually Return to reference °
- °: affliction Return to reference °
- °: attribute Return to reference °
- °: occurrence Return to reference °
- °: high regard Return to reference °
- °: contrivance, plot Return to reference °
- °: one hundred and twenty Return to reference °
- °: in proportion to Return to reference °
- °: wanted to Return to reference °
- °: happened Return to reference °
- °: judging by Return to reference °
- °: in that manner Return to reference °
- °: clear from blame Return to reference °
- °: firearms Return to reference °

- °: as we pleased Return to reference °
- °: in some fashion Return to reference °
- °: suitable Return to reference °
- °: at length Return to reference °
- °: feared Return to reference °
- °: mainland Return to reference °
- °: richer Return to reference °
- °: in other ways Return to reference °
- °: Crete Return to reference °
- °: condition Return to reference °
- °: dared Return to reference °
- °: aids Return to reference °
- °: risk Return to reference °
- °: livestock Return to reference °
- °: thrive Return to reference °
- °: grow Return to reference °
- °: results Return to reference °
- °: account Return to reference °
- °: that is, God Return to reference °

WILLIAM STRACHEY

In 1625 the Reverend Samuel Purchas (1577–1626) first published the “True Reportory” by William Strachey (1572–1621). Purchas included it in a huge set of travel narratives he had gathered and printed in the style of his predecessor, Richard Hakluyt (1553–1616), from whom—or from whose surviving papers—he probably received Strachey’s text. Strachey’s account is in the form of a letter to an “Excellent Lady” (who is unclear) dated 15 July 1610. It is autobiographical and tells the story of Strachey’s 1609 voyage on the colonial ship The Sea Venture, intended to be a relief fleet for the Jamestown colony of Virginia; how he and his company survived a powerful hurricane by crash-landing on the islands of Bermuda; how they lived on the main island, constructing two small boats there, Patience and Deliverance, and overcoming potential mutinies; and how they finally made their way from the Bermudas to Virginia.

Of farming and merchant stock, Strachey’s family was aggrandized during his life time when his father acquired a gentleman’s coat of arms. Strachey seems at first to have supported himself from his father’s, and then his wife’s, estates: he went to Cambridge but did not complete a degree; he also studied law at Gray’s Inn, but there is no record of his practicing. His interests seem to have been in literature and the theatre. Thomas Campion and John Donne were friends; and Strachey himself was a shareholder in the Blackfriars playhouse when the boy company, the Children of the Revels, performed there. His first publication, in 1605, was a poem in praise of Ben Jonson’s unsuccessful play Sejanus (1603), with which it was printed. Struggling financially, in 1606 Strachey traveled to the Ottoman Empire’s capital, Constantinople, as secretary to its ambassador—a post from which he was dismissed—then to Venice, where he was unable to find a job. Finally, in 1609, he purchased two shares in the Virginia Company with which he then traveled to Virginia, the story he tells in this letter. After his arrival in Virginia, Strachey was appointed secretary and recorder of the colony. He returned to England in 1611, where he wrote a long account of the Virginia colony and its prospects. Yet the Virginia Company found his History of the Travel into Virginia Britania too critical and refused to publish it. It is unclear whether he ever had another job; he died in poverty in 1621.

The letter, extracted below, seems intended to be a public rather than private account. It tactfully praises General Thomas Gates, who had been sent out as Virginia's governor-designate, and Admiral Sir George Somers, who was commander of the fleet, for their leadership after landing on the Bermudas. It also promotes the Bermudas' natural resources—plants, animals, and potentially merchantable qualities—making the case for settling on the uninhabited islands. The account's second half, not supplied here, is rather less full of praise for the state and management of the Virginia colony.

Strachey's letter seems to have circulated before printing; thus it is sometimes suggested that Shakespeare read it, and that it influenced The Tempest. Shakespeare could have heard what happened in the Bermudas without reading Strachey's account. News would have reached England in 1609 that The Sea Venture had not arrived in Virginia, and oral accounts from the survivors themselves would certainly have been circulating by 1610. But it is clear that around 1609 Shakespeare became interested in a story like this one: of a tempest that miraculously brings a ship of troubled people to a fertile, and haunting, island.

From A True Reportory . . . of the Wreck

A true reportory of the wreck and redemption of Sir THOMAS GATES, Knight,<sup>1</sup> upon, and from the islands of the Bermudas; his coming to Virginia, and the estate<sup>o</sup> of that Colony then and after, under the government of the Lord LA WARR,<sup>2</sup> July 15. 1610, written by WILLIAM STRACHEY, Esquire

I

A most dreadful tempest (the manifold deaths whereof are here to the life<sup>o</sup> described); their wrack<sup>o</sup> on Bermuda, and the description of those islands

Excellent lady,<sup>3</sup> know that upon Friday late in the evening, we brake ground<sup>o</sup> out of the sound<sup>4</sup> of Plymouth, our whole fleet then consisting of seven good ships and two pinnaces<sup>5</sup>* * * on St. James his day, July 24, being Monday (preparing for no less all the black night before), the clouds gathering thick upon us and the winds singing and whistling most unusually * * * A dreadful storm and hideous began to blow from out the north east, which swelling and roaring as it were by fits, some hours with more violence than others, at length did beat all light from heaven—which, like an hell of darkness, turned black upon us, so much the more fuller of horror, as in such cases horror and fear use<sup>o</sup> to overrun the troubled and overmastered senses of all, which (taken up with amazement) the ears lay so sensible<sup>6</sup> to the terrible cries and murmurs of the winds, and distraction of our company, as who was<sup>o</sup> most armed and best prepared was not a little shaken. For surely (noble lady) as death comes not so sudden nor apparent, so he comes not so elvish<sup>o</sup> and painful (to men especially even then in health and perfect habitudes<sup>o</sup> of body) as at sea. * * *

For four-and-twenty hours, the storm, in a restless tumult, had blown so exceedingly as we could not apprehend in our imaginations any possibility of greater violence, yet did we still find it not only more terrible, but more constant, fury added to fury, and one storm urging a second more outrageous than the former, whether it so wrought upon o our fears or indeed met with new forces. Sometimes strikes in our ship amongst women and passengers not used to such hurly o and discomforts made us look one upon the other with troubled hearts and panting bosoms, our clamors drowned in the winds and the winds in thunder. Prayers might well be in the heart and lips but drowned in the outcries of the officers. * * * There was not a moment in which the sudden splitting or instant oversetting of the ship was not expected.

Howbeit o this was not all. It pleased God to bring a greater affliction yet upon us, for in the beginning of the storm we had received likewise a mighty leak. And the ship, in every joint almost, having spued out her oakum z * * * was grown five foot suddenly deep with water above her ballast, 8 and we almost drowned within, whilst we sat looking when o to perish from above. This, imparting no less terror than danger, ran through the whole ship with much fright and amazement, startled and turned the blood, and took down the braves o of the most hardy mariner of them all, insomuch as he that before happily felt not the sorrow of others, now began to sorrow for himself, when he saw such a pond of water so suddenly broken in, and which he knew could not (without present avoiding) but instantly sink him. * * * [T]here might be seen master, master's mate, boatswain, quartermaster, coopers, carpenters, and who not, with candles in their hands, creeping along the ribs, viewing the sides, searching every corner, and listening in every place if they could hear the water run. Many a weeping leak was this way found and hastily stopped, and at length one in the gunner room made up o with I know not how many pieces of beef; but all was to no purpose, the leak (if it were but one), which drunk in our greatest seas and took in our destruction fastest, could not then be found, nor ever was, by any labor, counsel, or search. * * *

Our governor,<sup>9</sup> upon the Tuesday morning * * * had caused the whole company (about one hundred and forty, besides women), to be equally divided into three parts, and opening the ship in three places (under the forecastle, in the waist, and hard by the bittacle),<sup>1</sup> appointed each man where to attend * * * Then men might be seen to labor, I may well say, for life, and the better sort, even our governor and admiral themselves, not refusing their turn, and to spell<sup>o</sup> each the other, to give example to other. The common sort, stripped naked as men in galleys,<sup>2</sup> the easier both to hold out<sup>3</sup> and to shrink<sup>o</sup> from under the salt water which continually leaped in among them, kept their eyes waking and their thoughts and hands working, with tired bodies and wasted spirits, three days and four nights, destitute<sup>o</sup> of outward comfort and desperate of any deliverance, testifying how mutually willing they were yet by labor to keep each other from drowning, albeit each one drowned whilst he labored.

Once, so huge a sea brake upon the poop<sup>o</sup> and quarter upon us as it covered our ship from stern to stem.<sup>4</sup> Like a garment or a vast cloud, it filled her brimful for a while within, from the hatches up to the spar deck.<sup>5</sup> This source or confluence of water was so violent as it rushed and carried the helmman from the helm and wrested the whipstaff<sup>o</sup> out of his hand. * * * Our governor was at this time below at the capstan,<sup>6</sup> both by his speech and authority heartening<sup>o</sup> every man unto his labor. It struck him from the place where he sat and grovelled him<sup>7</sup> and all us about him on our faces, beating together with our breaths all thoughts from our bosoms else<sup>o</sup> than that we were now sinking.

* * * East and by South we steered away as much as we could to bear upright, which was no small carefulness nor pain to do, albeit we much unrigged our ship, threw overboard much luggage, many a trunk and chest (in which I suffered no mean<sup>o</sup> loss) and staved<sup>8</sup> many a butt of beer, hogsheads of oil, cider, wine, and vinegar, and heaved away all our ordnance<sup>o</sup> on the starboard side, and had now purposed to have cut down the main mast, the more to lighten her, for we were much spent<sup>o</sup> and our men so weary as<sup>o</sup> their strengths together failed them with their hearts, having travailed now from Tuesday till Friday morning, day and night, without either sleep or food; for the leakage taking up all the hold, we could neither come by beer nor fresh water; fire we could keep none in the cook-room to dress<sup>o</sup> any meat; and carefulness, grief, and our turn at the pump or bucket were sufficient to hold sleep from our eyes.

* * * [I]t being now Friday, the fourth morning, it wanted little but<sup>9</sup> that there had been a general determination to have shut up hatches, and commending our sinful souls to God, committed the ship to the mercy of the sea. Surely that night we must have done it and that night had we then perished;<sup>1</sup> but see the goodness and sweet introduction of better hope, by our merciful God, given unto us. Sir George Somers,<sup>2</sup> when no man dreamed of such happiness, had discovered and cried land. * * * We had got her<sup>o</sup> within a mile under the southeast point of the land where we had somewhat smooth water. But having no hope to save her by coming to an anchor in the same, we were enforced to run her ashore, as near the land as we could, which brought us within three quarters of a mile of shore, and by the mercy of God unto us, making out our boats, we had ere<sup>o</sup> night brought all our men, women, and children, about the number of one hundred and fifty, safe into the island.

We found it to be the dangerous and dreaded island, or rather islands, of the Bermuda, whereof let me give your ladyship a brief description before I proceed to my narration. And that, the rather, because they be so terrible to all that ever touched on them, and such tempests, thunders, and other fearful objects are seen and heard about them that they be called commonly "The Devil's Islands" and are feared and avoided of<sup>o</sup> all sea travelers alive above any other place in the world. Yet it pleased our merciful God to make even this hideous and hated place both the place of our safety and means of our deliverance.

And hereby also I hope to deliver<sup>o</sup> the world from a foul and general error: it being counted<sup>o</sup> of most that they can be no habitation for men, but rather given over to devils and wicked spirits; whereas indeed we find them now by experience to be as habitable and commodious as most countries of the same climate and situation, insomuch as if the entrance into them were as easy as the place itself is contenting,<sup>o</sup> it had long ere this been inhabited as well as other islands.

* * *

The soil of the whole island is one and the same, the mold dark, red, sandy, dry, and uncapable, I believe, of any of our commodities or fruits. Sir George Somers, in the beginning of August, squared out<sup>3</sup> a garden by the quarter<sup>4</sup>—the quarter being set down before a goodly bay upon which our governor did first leap ashore, and therefore called it, as aforesaid, “Gates his bay,” which opened into the east, and into which the sea did ebb and flow according to their tides—and sowed muskmelons,<sup>o</sup> peas, onions, radish, lettuce, and many English seeds and kitchen herbs. All which, in some ten days, did appear above ground, but whether by the small birds, of which there be many kinds, or by flies (worms I never saw any, nor any venomous thing as toad or snake or any creeping beast hurtful, only some spiders which, as many affirm, are signs of great store of gold—but they were long- and slender-leg spiders, and whether venomous or no I know not; I believe not, since we should still find them amongst our linen in our chests, and drinking cans; but we never received any danger from them: * * *) whether, I say, hindered by these, or by the condition or vice of the soil, they came to no proof,<sup>5</sup> nor thrived. * * *

Likewise there grow great store of palm trees, * * * in the uppermost part thereof, and in the top, grow leaves about the head of it (the most inmost part whereof they call “palmetto,” and it is the heart and pith of the same trunk, so white and thin as it will peel off into pleats<sup>o</sup> as smooth and delicate as white satin into twenty folds, in which a man may write as in paper, where they spread and fall downward about the tree like an overblown rose, or saffron flower not early gathered). So broad are the leaves as an “Italian umbrello":<sup>6</sup> a man may well defend his whole body under one of them from the greatest storm rain that falls. For they being stiff and smooth, as if so many flags were knit together, the rain easily slideth off. * * * With these leaves we thatched our cabins, and roasting the palmetto or soft top thereof, they had a taste like fried melons, and being sod<sup>o</sup> they eat like cabbages, but not so offensively thankful to the stomach. Many an ancient burgher was therefore heaved at and fell not for his place but for his head. For our common people, whose bellies never had ears, made it no breach of charity in their hot bloods and tall stomachs to murder thousands of them.<sup>7</sup>

* * *

Other kinds of high and sweet-smelling woods there be, and divers colors, black, yellow, and red, and one which bears a round blue berry, much eaten by our own people, of a styptic<sup>o</sup> quality and rough taste on the tongue, like a sloe to stay or bind the flux,<sup>8</sup> which the often eating of the luscious palm berry would bring them into, for the nature of sweet things is to cleanse and dissolve.

A kind of pea[r] of the bigness and shape of a Katherine pear we found growing upon the rocks, full of many sharp subtle pricks (as a thistle) which we therefore called "the prickly pear," the outside green, but being opened of a deep murrey,<sup>o</sup> full of juice like a mulberry, and just of the same substance and taste; we both ate them raw and baked.

Sure it is that there are no rivers nor running springs of fresh water to be found upon any of them. When we came first we digged and found certain gushings and soft bubblings, which being either in bottoms or on the side of hanging ground were only fed with rain water, which nevertheless soon sinketh into the earth and vanisheth away * * * howbeit some low bottoms (which the continual descent from the hills filled full, and in those flats could have no passage away) we found to continue<sup>o</sup> as fishing ponds, or standing pools, continually summer and winter full of fresh water.

The shore and bays round about when we landed first afforded great store of fish, and that of divers kinds, and good; but it should seem that our fires, which we maintained on the shore's side, drove<sup>o</sup> them from us, so as we were in some want until we had made a flat bottom gondal<sup>o</sup> of cedar with which we put off<sup>o</sup> farther into the sea, and then daily hooked great store of many kinds, as excellent angelfish, salmon, peal,<sup>o</sup> bonitos, stingray, cavalli,<sup>o</sup> snappers, hogfish, sharks, dogfish, pilchards, mullets, and rockfish, of which be divers kinds. And of these our governor dried and salted and, barreling them up, brought to sea five hundred. For he had procured salt to be made with some brine, which happily was preserved, and once having made a little quantity, he kept three or four pots boiling, and two or three men attending nothing else in an house (some little distance from his bay) set up on purpose for the same work.

* * * A kind of web-footed fowl there is, of the bigness of an English green plover, or seamew,<sup>o</sup> which all the summer we saw not, and in the darkest nights of November and December (for in the night they only feed) they would come forth, * * * I have been at the taking of three hundred in an hour, and we might have laden<sup>o</sup> our boats. Our men found a pretty way to take them, which was by standing on the rocks or sands by the seaside, and hollowing,<sup>o</sup> laughing, and making the strangest outcry that possibly they could, with the noise whereof the birds would come flocking to that place, and settle upon the very arms and head of him that so cried, and still creep nearer and nearer, answering the noise themselves; by which our men would weigh them with their hand, and which weighed heaviest they took for the best and let the others alone, and so our men would take twenty dozen in two hours of the chiefest of them;<sup>o</sup> and they were a good and well-relished<sup>o</sup> fowl, fat and full as a partridge. In January we had great store of their eggs, which are as great as an hen's egg, and so fashioned<sup>o</sup> and white-shelled, and have no difference in yolk nor white from an hen's egg. There are thousands of these birds, and two or three islands full of their burrows, whither at any time (in two hours' warning) we could send our cockboat<sup>o</sup> and bring home as many as would serve the whole company; which birds for their blindness (for they see weakly in the day) and for their cry and hooting we called the "sea owl"; they will bite cruelly with their crooked bills.

We had knowledge that there were wild hogs upon the island, at first by our own swine preserved from the wrack<sup>o</sup> and brought to shore, for they straying into the woods, an huge wild boar followed down to our quarter, which at night was watched and taken * * * Our people would go a-hunting with our ship dog, and sometimes bring home thirty, sometimes fifty, boars, sows, and pigs in a week alive; for the dog would fasten on them and hold, whilst the huntsmen made in: and there be thousands of them in the islands, and at that time of the year, in August, September, October, and November, they were well fed with berries that dropped from the cedars and the palms, and in our quarter we made sties for them, and gathering of these berries served them twice a day, by which means we kept them in good plight<sup>o</sup> * * * But in February when the palm berries began to be scant or dry, * * * the tortoises came in again, of which we daily both turned up great store, finding them on land, as also, sculling after them in our boat, stroke<sup>o</sup> them with an iron goad,<sup>9</sup> and sod,<sup>o</sup> baked, and roasted them. The tortoise is reasonable toothsome<sup>o</sup> (some say) wholesome meat. I am sure our company liked the meat of them very well, and one tortoise would go further amongst them than three hogs. One turtle (for so we called them) feasted well a dozen messes,<sup>o</sup> appointing six to every mess. It is such a kind of meat, as a man can neither absolutely call fish nor flesh, keeping mostwhat<sup>o</sup> in the water, and feeding upon seagrass like a heifer, in the bottom of the coves and bays, and laying their eggs (of which we should find five hundred at a time in the opening of a she-turtle) in the sand by the shore side. * * *

II

Actions and occurrents whiles they continued in the islands; Ravens sent for Virginia; Divers mutinies; PAINE executed: two pinnaces built.

So soon as we were a little settled after our landing, with all the conveniency we might, and as the place and our many wants would give us leave, we made up our longboat<sup>1</sup> (as your ladyship hath heard) in fashion of a pinnace, fitting her with a little deck, made of the hatches of our ruined ship, so close<sup>o</sup> that no water could go in her, gave her sails and oars, and intreating with our master's mate Henry Ravens (who was supposed<sup>o</sup> a sufficient pilot), we found him easily won to make over therewith,<sup>2</sup> as a barque of aviso<sup>o</sup> for Virginia, * * * promising if he lived and arrived safe there, to return unto us the next new moon with the pinnace belonging to the colony there. * * *

* * * Sir George Somers coasted the islands and drew the former plat<sup>o</sup> of them, and daily fished and hunted for our whole company, until the seven-and-twentieth of November, when then well perceiving that we were not likely to hear from Virginia and conceiving how the pinnace which Richard Frobisher was a-building would not be of burthen<sup>o</sup> sufficient to transport all our men from thence into Virginia (especially considering the season of the year wherein we were likely to put off),<sup>o</sup> he consulted with our governor that if he might have two carpenters (for we had four, such as they were) and twenty men over with him into the main island, he would quickly frame up another little bark<sup>o</sup> to second ours, for the better fitting and convenience of our people. Our governor, with many thanks * * *, made ready for him all such tools and instruments as our own use required not. And for him were drawn forth twenty of the ablest and stoutest<sup>o</sup> of the company and the best of our men, to hew and square timber, when himself then, with daily pains and labor, wrought upon a small vessel, which was soon ready as ours—at which we leave him a while busied, and return to ourselves.

* * * Some dangerous and secret discontents nourished amongst us had like to have been the parents of bloody issues and mischiefs. They began first in the seamen, who in time had fastened unto them (by false baits) many of our landmen likewise * * * A conspiracy was discovered, of which six were found principals, who had promised each unto the other not to set their hands to any travail or endeavor which might expedite or forward this pinnacle. And each of these had severally<sup>o</sup> (according to appointment) sought his opportunity to draw<sup>o</sup> the smith, and one of our carpenters, Nicholas Bennet (who made much profession of<sup>o</sup> scripture, a mutinous and dissembling imposter), the captain and one of the chief persuaders of others—who afterwards brake from the society of the colony, and like outlaws retired into the woods to make a settlement and habitation there—on their party, with whom they purposed<sup>o</sup> to leave our quarter, and possess another island by themselves. But this happily<sup>o</sup> found out, they were condemned to the same punishment which they would have chosen (but without smith or carpenter) and to an island far by itself they were carried and there left. * * * But soon they missed comfort * * * insomuch as many humble petitions were sent unto our governor, fraught<sup>o</sup> full of their seeming sorrow and repentance and earnest vows to redeem the former trespass with example of duties in them all to the common cause and general business. Upon which our governor (not easy to admit<sup>o</sup> any accusation and hard to remit<sup>o</sup> an offence, but at all times sorry in the punishment of him in whom may appear either shame or contrition) was easily content to reacknowledge them again.

Yet could not this be any warning to others, who more subtly began to shake the foundation of our quiet safety. * * * They * * * purposed to have made a surprise of<sup>o</sup> the storehouse and to have forced from thence what was therein, either of meal, cloth, cables, arms, sails, oars or what else it pleased God that we had recovered from the wrack<sup>o</sup> and was to serve our general necessity and use, either for the relief of us, while we stayed here, or for the carrying of us from this place again when our pinnacle should have been furnished.

But * * * there were some of the association who, not strong enough fortified in their own conceits,<sup>o</sup> break from the plot itself, and (before the time was ripe for the execution thereof) discovered<sup>o</sup> the whole order, and every agent and actor thereof * * * A gentleman amongst them, one Henry Paine, the thirteenth of March, full of mischief, and every hour preparing something or other, stealing swords, adzes,<sup>o</sup> axes, hatchets, saws, augers,<sup>3</sup> planes, mallets, etc. to make good his own bad end, * * * did not only give his said commander evil language, but struck at him, doubled his blows, and when he was not suffered to close with<sup>4</sup> him, went off<sup>o</sup> the guard, scoffing at the double diligence and attendance of the watch<sup>o</sup> appointed by the governor for much purpose, as he said; upon which, the watch telling him if the governor should understand of this his insolency, it might turn him to much blame, and happily<sup>o</sup> be as much as his life were worth, the said Paine replied with a settled<sup>o</sup> and bitter violence and in such unreverent terms as I should offend the modest ear too much to express it in his own phrase, but the contents were how that the governor had no authority of that quality to justify upon anyone (how mean soever in the colony) an action of that nature, and therefore let the governor, said he, kiss etc.<sup>5</sup> Which words being with the omitted additions brought the next day unto every common and public discourse, at length<sup>o</sup> they were delivered over to the governor, who * * * calling the said Paine before him, * * * condemned him to be instantly hanged; and the ladder being ready, after he had made many confessions, he earnestly desired, being a gentleman, that he might be shot to death; and towards the evening he had his desire, the sun and his life setting together.

But for the other * * * they sent an audacious and formal petition to our governor subscribed with all their names and seals, not only intreating him that they might stay here, but (with great art) importuned<sup>o</sup> him, that he would perform<sup>o</sup> other conditions with them * * * as, namely, to furnish each of them with two suits of apparel, and contribute meal<sup>o</sup> rateably<sup>o</sup> for one whole year, so much among them, as they had weekly now, which was one pound and an half a week (for such had been our proportion for nine months). Our governor answered this their petition, writing to Sir George Somers * * * to do his best to give this revolted<sup>o</sup> company (if he could send unto them) the consideration of these particulars and so work with them, if he might, that by fair means (the mutiny reconciled) they would at length survey their own errors * * * In which good office Sir George Somers did so nobly work, and heartily labor, as he brought most of them in, and indeed all but Christopher Carter and Robert Waters, who * * * grew so cautelous<sup>o</sup> and wary for their own ill as, at our coming away, we were fain to leave them behind. * * *

During our time of abode upon these islands, we had daily every Sunday two sermons, preached by our Minister; besides, every morning and evening, at the ringing of a bell, we repaired all<sup>o</sup> to public prayer, at what time the names of our whole company were called by bill, and such as were wanting<sup>o</sup> were duly punished.

The contents, for the most part, of all our preacher's sermons, were especially of thankfulness and unity, etc.

It pleased God also to give us opportunity to perform all the other offices and rites of our Christian profession in this island: as marriage, for the six-and-twentieth of November we had one of Sir George Somers his men, his cook named Thomas Powell, who married a maidservant of one Mistress Horton, whose name was Elizabeth Persons; and upon Christmas Eve, as also once before, the first of October, our minister preached a godly sermon, which being ended he celebrated a communion at the partaking whereof our governor was and the greatest part of our company; and the eleventh of February we had the child of one John Rolf christened, a daughter, to which Captain Newport and myself were witnesses and the aforesaid Mistress Horton and we named it Bermuda; as also, the five and twentieth of March, the wife of one Edward Eason, being delivered the week before of a boy, had him then christened, to which Captain Newport and myself and Master James Swift were godfathers, and we named it Bermudas.

Likewise, we buried five of our company: Jeffery Briars, Richard Lewis, William Hitchman, and my Goddaughter Bermuda Rolf, and one untimely, Edward Samuel, a sailor, being villainously killed by the foresaid Robert Waters (a sailor likewise) with a shovel, who strake him therewith<sup>o</sup> under the list<sup>6</sup> of the ear, for which he was apprehended and appointed to be hanged the next day (the fact being done in the twilight), but being bound fast to a tree all night, with many ropes and a guard of five or six to attend him, his fellow sailors, watching the advantage<sup>o</sup> of the sentinels sleeping, in despite and disdain that justice should be showed upon a sailor, and that one of their crew should be an example to others—not taking into consideration the unmanliness of the murder nor the horror of the sin—they cut his bands, and conveyed him into the woods, where they fed him nightly and closely, who afterward by the mediation of Sir George Somers, upon many conditions, had his trial respited<sup>o</sup> by our governor.

We had brought our pinnace so forward by this time as, the eight-and-twentieth of August, we having laid her keel, the six-and-twentieth of February we now began to caulk.<sup>7</sup> Old cables we had preserved unto us, which afforded oakum enough; and one barrel of pitch, and another of tar we likewise saved, which served our use some little way upon the bilge. We breamed her<sup>8</sup> otherwise with lime made of whelk shells and an hard white stone which we burned in a kiln, slaked<sup>o</sup> with fresh water and tempered with tortoises' oil. * * * The most part of her timber was cedar, which we found to be bad for shipping, for that it is wondrous false inward, and besides it is so spalt or brickle<sup>o</sup> that it will make no good planks. Her beams were all oak of our ruined ship, and some planks in her bow of oak, and the rest as is aforesaid. When she began to swim<sup>o</sup> (upon her launching) our governor called her "The Deliverance," and she might be some eighty tons of burthen.

Before we quitted our old quarter and dislodged<sup>o</sup> to the fresh water with our pinnace, our governor set up in Sir George Somers' garden a fair mnemosynon<sup>o</sup> in figure of a cross made of some of the timber of our ruined ship, which was screwed in with strong and great trunnels<sup>9</sup> to a mighty cedar which grew in the midst of the said garden and whose top and upper branches he caused to be lopped that the violence of the wind and weather might have the less power over her.

In the midst of the cross, our governor fastened the picture of His Majesty in a piece of silver of twelve pence, and on each side of the cross he set an inscription graven<sup>o</sup> in copper in the Latin and English to this purpose:

In memory of our great deliverance both from a mighty storm and leak, we have set up this to the honor of God. It is the spoil<sup>o</sup> of an English ship (of three hundred ton) called the "Sea Venture," bound with seven ships more (from which the storm divided us) to Virginia, or Nova Britania, in America. In it were two knights, Sir Thomas Gates, Knight, Governor of the English Forces and Colony there; and Sir George Somers, Knight, Admiral of the Seas. Her captain was Christopher Newport; passengers and mariners she had beside (which came all safe to land) one hundred and fifty. We were forced to run her ashore, by reason of her leak, under a point that bore southeast from the northern point of the island, which we discovered first the eight-and-twentieth of July, 1609.

Endnotes

- Note 1: Thomas Gates (fl? 1622), governor-designate and then governor of Jamestown, Virginia.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Thomas West, third Baron De La Warr (1577–1618), first governor of Jamestown, Virginia.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: It is not clear to whom this is addressed.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Narrow stretch of water.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Small sailing vessels with two masts.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Perceptible through the senses.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: The fibers used as caulking material for ships.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Heavy material, such as gravel, sand, metal, water, etc., placed in the hold of a ship to weigh it down in the water and prevent it from capsizing.Return to reference 8

- Note 9: That is, General Thomas Gates, Virginia's governor-designate.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Binnacle—a box near the helm in which the compass is kept. "Forecastle": fore part of a ship. "Waist": middle part of the upper deck of a ship.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Low flat-built seagoing vessels with one deck, propelled by sails and oars. The rowers were mostly slaves or condemned criminals.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Maintain their positions.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Timber at the extremity of the vessel. "Quarter": upper part of a ship's side aft of the beam.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Light upper deck.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Mechanism for weighing the anchor.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Laid him prone on the ground.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Broke up (a cask) into staves.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: It would not have taken much for.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: We would then have perished.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: George Somers (fl. 1554–1610), English privateer and sea captain who colonized the Bermudas for Britain.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Marked out into squares.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: A measurement (one fourth of an ell); or nautical quarter point by compass or other instrument.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Did not come to fulfillment.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Parasol that shades one from the sun; the predecessor of the umbrella.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: A burgher is a citizen. In this metaphor the trees are being described as old men murdered for their heads.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Stop or hinder the flow of dysentery.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Rod with a sharpened point.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Large, open ship's boat.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Transform with that.Return to reference 2

- Note 3: Devices for boring holes in wood.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Engage in hand-to-hand fighting with.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Presumably the omitted addition is “my arse,” in which case, this is one of the earliest recorded uses of the phrase.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: List = lobe. The original word, “lift,” is a typo.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Stop up the crevices with melted pitch.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Cleared her of rubbish.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Cylindrical wooden pins.Return to reference 9

Notes

- °: stateReturn to reference °
- °: with exact fidelity Return to reference °
- °: wreckReturn to reference °
- °: heaved the anchor Return to reference °
- °: customarily Return to reference °
- °: even those who were Return to reference °
- °: troublesomely Return to reference °
- °: constitutionReturn to reference °
- °: caused Return to reference °
- °: tumultReturn to reference °
- °: however Return to reference °
- °: expecting Return to reference °
- °: bravado Return to reference °
- °: stopperedReturn to reference °
- °: relieve Return to reference °
- °: draw back Return to reference °
- °: devoidReturn to reference °
- °: stern Return to reference °
- °: steering device Return to reference °
- °: encouraging Return to reference °

- °: other Return to reference °
- °: small Return to reference °
- °: military supplies Return to reference °
- °: exhausted Return to reference °
- °: that Return to reference °
- °: prepare Return to reference °
- °: that is, the ship Return to reference °
- °: before Return to reference °
- °: by Return to reference °
- °: rid Return to reference °
- °: recounted Return to reference °
- °: gives contentment Return to reference °
- °: nutmeg melons Return to reference °
- °: folds Return to reference °
- °: boiled Return to reference °
- °: harsh and raw Return to reference °
- °: reddish purple color Return to reference °
- °: maintain Return to reference °
- °: drove Return to reference °
- °: gondola Return to reference °
- °: launched Return to reference °
- °: sea trout Return to reference °
- °: crevalle jack Return to reference °
- °: gull Return to reference °
- °: loaded Return to reference °
- °: calling out Return to reference °
- °: main ones Return to reference °
- °: appetizing Return to reference °
- °: shaped Return to reference °
- °: small, light boat Return to reference °
- °: wreck Return to reference °
- °: condition Return to reference °
- °: struck Return to reference °
- °: boiled Return to reference °
- °: palatable Return to reference °
- °: courses or meals Return to reference °

- °: almost all Return to reference °
- °: tight Return to reference °
- °: thought Return to reference °
- °: dispatch vessel Return to reference °
- °: earlier map Return to reference °
- °: carrying capacity Return to reference °
- °: leave Return to reference °
- °: small ship Return to reference °
- °: strongest Return to reference °
- °: separately Return to reference °
- °: influence Return to reference °
- °: laid great claim to Return to reference °
- °: intended Return to reference °
- °: by chance Return to reference °
- °: supplied Return to reference °
- °: concede Return to reference °
- °: forgive Return to reference °
- °: made an assault on Return to reference °
- °: wreck Return to reference °
- °: opinions Return to reference °
- °: revealed Return to reference °
- °: wood axes Return to reference °
- °: reproached Return to reference °
- °: watchmen Return to reference °
- °: perhaps Return to reference °
- °: fixed Return to reference °
- °: eventually Return to reference °
- °: begged Return to reference °
- °: fulfill Return to reference °
- °: flour Return to reference °
- °: proportionately Return to reference °
- °: rebellious Return to reference °
- °: deceitful Return to reference °
- °: all traveled Return to reference °
- °: absent Return to reference °
- °: with it Return to reference °

- °: awaiting the chance Return to reference °
- °: reprieved Return to reference °
- °: wetted Return to reference °
- °: brittle Return to reference °
- °: float Return to reference °
- °: moved Return to reference °
- °: monument Return to reference °
- °: engraved Return to reference °
- °: remains Return to reference °

JOHN SMITH

After years spent as a soldier and an adventurer abroad, including being taken captive in war and sold into slavery under the Turks, Captain John Smith (1580–1631) sailed on England's first fleet to Virginia in 1607. Smith helped to establish England's first permanent settlement in North America, "Jamestown," in the territory that the native Algonquins called Tsenacommacah ("densely inhabited land"). The colony was plagued with difficulties from the beginning, and Smith's published accounts of the venture, culminating in The General History of Virginia, New England, and the Summer Isles (1624), defended and promoted England's colonies in North America, as well as his own extraordinary skills. (In addition to serving as the de facto governor of Jamestown until he was replaced by Christopher Newport—the captain of the ship wrecked in the Bermudas discussed in William Strachey's account—Smith served as New England's first admiral.) The General History records Smith's challenges as governor of the emerging colony, and his imprisonment by and negotiations with the powerful chieftan Powhatan and Powhatan's daughter, Pocahontas. Smith credits Pocahontas with saving his life, as well as that of the colony. The selection below offers an account of Pocahontas's role in the 1616 Powhatan embassy to England, which assured her place in colonial legend—as well as her death. While we do not have direct access to the Algonquins' views of the colonists, we can glimpse in Smith's reported first-person accounts of Pocahontas's and Powhatan's speeches traces of their criticism of and resistance to the colonists, as well as their skills as political leaders and negotiators.

Portrait of Matoaka or Rebecca, better known as Pocahontas, made by the royal engraver Simon van de Passe during Pocahontas's 1616 trip to England.

---

From The General History of Virginia, New England, and the Summer Isles

During this time, the Lady Rebecca,<sup>1</sup> alias Pocahontas, daughter to Powhatan, by the diligent care of Master John Rolfe her husband and his friends, was taught to speak such English as might well be understood, well instructed in Christianity, and was become very formal and civil after our English manner; she had also by him a child which she loved most dearly, and the Treasurer and Company<sup>2</sup> took order both for the maintenance of her and it, besides there were divers<sup>o</sup> persons of great rank and quality had been very kind to her; and before she arrived at London, Captain Smith, to deserve<sup>o</sup> her former courtesies, made her qualities known to the Queen's most excellent Majesty and her Court, and writ a little book to this effect to the Queen, an abstract whereof followeth.

To the most high and virtuous Princess Queen Anne of Great Britain.

Most admired Queen,

The love I bear my God, my King, and Country hath so oft emboldened me in the worst of extreme dangers, that now honesty doth constrain me presume thus far beyond myself to present your Majesty this short discourse: if ingratitude be a deadly poison to all honest virtues, I must be guilty of that crime if I should omit any means to be thankful.

So it is that some ten years ago being in Virginia, and taken prisoner by the power of Powhatan, their chief king, I received from this great savage<sup>3</sup> exceeding great courtesy, especially from his son Nantaquaus, the most manliest, comeliest, boldest spirit I ever saw in a savage, and his sister Pocahontas, the king's most dear and well-beloved daughter, being but a child of twelve or thirteen years of age, whose compassionate pitiful heart of<sup>o</sup> my desperate estate gave me much cause to respect her. I being the first Christian this proud King and his grim attendants ever saw, and thus enthralled in their barbarous power, I cannot say I felt the least occasion of want<sup>o</sup> that was in the power of those my mortal foes to prevent, notwithstanding all their threats. After some weeks fattening<sup>o</sup> among those savage courtiers, at the minute of my execution, she hazarded the beating out of her own brains to save mine, and not only that, but so prevailed with her father, that I was safely conducted to Jamestown,<sup>4</sup> where I found about eight and thirty miserable poor and sick creatures to keep possession of all those large territories of Virginia. Such was the weakness of this poor Commonwealth, as had the savages not fed us, we had directly starved.

And this relief, most gracious Queen, was commonly brought us by this Lady Pocahontas, notwithstanding all these passages when inconstant Fortune turned our peace to war, this tender virgin would still not spare to dare to visit us, and by her our jars<sup>o</sup> have been oft appeased, and our wants still supplied; were it the policy of her father thus to employ her, or the ordinance of God thus to make her his instrument, or her extraordinary affection to our nation, I know not, but of this I am sure: when her father with the utmost of his policy and power sought to surprise me, having but eighteen with me, the dark night could not affright her from coming through the irksome woods, and with watered eyes gave me intelligence, with her best advice to escape his fury; which had he known, he had surely slain her. Jamestown with her wild train<sup>o</sup> she as freely frequented as her father's habitation; and during the time of two or three years, she next under God was still the instrument to preserve this colony from death, famine, and utter confusion, which if in those times had once been dissolved, Virginia might have lain as it was at our first arrival to this day. Since then, this business having been turned and varied by many accidents from that I left it at, it is most certain, after a long and troublesome war after my departure betwixt her father and our colony, all which time she was not heard of, about two years after she herself was taken prisoner, being so detained near two years longer, the colony by that means was relieved, peace concluded, and at last rejecting her barbarous condition, was married to an English gentleman, with whom at this present she is in England;<sup>5</sup> the first Christian ever of that nation, the first Virginian ever spoke English, or had a child in marriage by an Englishman, a matter surely, if my meaning be truly considered and well understood, worthy a prince's understanding.

Thus, most gracious Lady, I have related to your Majesty what at your best leisure our approved histories will account you at large, and done in the time of your Majesty's life, and however this might be presented you from a more worthy pen, it cannot from a more honest heart, as yet I never begged anything of the state, or any, and it is my want of ability and her exceeding desert, your birth, means, and authority, her birth, virtue, want, and simplicity, doth make me thus bold, humbly to beseech your Majesty to take this knowledge of her, though it be from one so unworthy to be the reporter as myself, her husband's estate not being able to make her fit to attend your Majesty. The most and least I can do is to tell you this, because none so oft hath tried it as myself, and the rather being of so great a spirit, however her stature: if she should not be well received, seeing this kingdom may rightly have a kingdom by her means, her present love to us and Christianity might turn to such scorn and fury as to divert all this good to the worst of evil, where finding so great a Queen should do her some honor more than she can imagine, for being so kind to your servants and subjects, would so ravish her with content as endear her dearest blood to effect that your Majesty and all the king's subjects most earnestly desire. And so I humbly kiss your gracious hands.<sup>6</sup>

Being about this time preparing to set sail for New England,<sup>7</sup> I could not stay to do her that service I desired and she well deserved; but hearing she was at Branford with divers of my friends, I went to see her. After a modest salutation, without any word she turned about, obscured her face, as not seeming well contented; and in that humor her husband, with divers others, we all left her two or three hours, repenting myself to have writ she could speak English. But not long after, she began to talk, and remembered<sup>o</sup> me well what courtesies she had done: saying, "You did promise Powhatan what was yours should be his, and he the like to you; you called him father being in his land a stranger, and by the same reason so must I do you," which though I would have excused, I durst<sup>o</sup> not allow of that title, because she was a king's daughter; with a well-set countenance she said, "Were you not afraid to come into my father's country, and caused fear in him and all his people (but me) and fear you here I should call you father; I tell you then I will, and you shall call me child, and so I will be forever and ever your countryman. They did tell us always you were dead, and I knew no other till I came to Plymouth; yet Powhatan did command Uttamatomakkin<sup>8</sup> to seek you, and know the truth, because your countrymen will lie much."

This savage, one of Powhatan's council, being amongst them held<sup>o</sup> an understanding fellow, the King purposely sent him, as they say, to number the people here, and inform him well what we were and our state. Arriving at Plymouth, according to his directions, he got a long stick, whereon by notches he did think to have kept the number of all the men he could see, but he was quickly weary of that task. Coming to London, where by chance I met him, having renewed our acquaintance, where many were desirous to hear and see his behavior, he told me Powhatan did bid him to find me out, to show him our God, the King, Queen, and Prince, I so much had told them of. Concerning God, I told him the best I could, the King I heard he had seen, and the rest he should see when he would. He denied ever to have seen the King, till by circumstances he was satisfied he had. Then he replied very sadly, You gave Powhatan a white dog, which Powhatan fed as himself, but your King gave me nothing, and I am better than your white dog.

The small time I stayed in London, divers courtiers and others my acquaintances hath gone with me to see her,<sup>o</sup> that generally concluded they did think God had a great hand in her conversion, and they have seen many English ladies worse favored, proportioned, and behavioered, and, as since I have heard, it pleased both the King and Queen's Majesty honorably to esteem her, accompanied with that honorable Lady, the Lady De la Warr,<sup>9</sup> and that honorable Lord her husband, and divers other persons of good qualities, both publicly at the masques<sup>1</sup> and otherwise, to her great satisfaction and content, which doubtless she would have deserved<sup>o</sup> had she lived to arrive in Virginia.<sup>2</sup>

[In January 1608, Captain Christopher Newport, the representative of the Virginia Company, arrived with supplies for the colony, saving Smith from the vengeance of the settlers. Smith disagreed with Newport over many matters of Indian policy. In the excerpt below, from fall 1608, Smith has come to see Powhatan crowned as a vassal of the king of England, a "coronation" he considers a foolish diversion from the colony's need to prepare for winter. When Smith and his men arrive, Powhatan is thirty miles away, and while they wait for him to arrive, Pocahontas and "her women" entertain the visitors.]

In a fair plain field they<sup>o</sup> made a fire, before which he<sup>o</sup> sitting upon a mat, suddenly among the woods was heard such a hideous noise and shrieking, that the English betook themselves to their arms, and seized on two or three old men by them, supposing Powhatan with all his power was come to surprise them. But presently Pocahontas came, willing him to kill her if any hurt were intended, and the beholders, which were men, women, and children, satisfied<sup>o</sup> the captain there was no such matter. Then presently they were presented with this antic:<sup>o</sup> thirty young women came naked out of the woods, only covered behind and before with a few green leaves, their bodies all painted, some of one color, some of another, but all differing. Their leader had a fair pair of buck's horns on her head, and an otter's skin at her girdle<sup>o</sup> and another at her arm, a quiver of arrows at her back, a bow and arrows in her hand; the next had in her hand a sword, another a club, another a pot-stick,<sup>3</sup> all horned alike: the rest every one with their several devices.<sup>4</sup> These fiends, with most hellish shouts and cries rushing from among the trees, cast themselves in a ring about the fire, singing and dancing with most excellent ill variety, oft falling into their infernal passions, and solemnly again to sing and dance; having spent near an hour in this mascarado,<sup>o</sup> as they entered, in like manner they departed.

Having reaccommodated<sup>o</sup> themselves, they solemnly invited him to their lodgings, where he was no sooner within the house but all these nymphs<sup>5</sup> more tormented him than ever, with crowding, pressing, and hanging about him, most tediously crying, "Love you not me? Love you not me?" This salutation ended, the feast was set, consisting of all the savage dainties they could devise: some attending, other singing and dancing about them; which mirth being ended, with firebrands<sup>6</sup> instead of torches they conducted him to his lodging.

*Thus did they show their feats of arms, and others art in dancing:
Some other used their oaten pipe, others voices chanting.<sup>7</sup>*

The next day came Powhatan. Smith delivered his message of the presents sent him, and redelivered him Namontack<sup>8</sup> he had sent for<sup>o</sup> England, desiring him to come to his Father Newport to accept those presents, and conclude their revenge against the Monacans.<sup>9</sup> Whereunto this subtle<sup>o</sup> savage thus replied:

If your king have sent me presents, I also am a king, and this is my land: eight days I will stay to receive them. Your father is to come to me, not I to him, nor yet to your fort, neither will I bite at such a bait. As for the Monacans, I can revenge my own injuries, and as for Atquanachuk, where you say your brother was slain, it is a contrary way from those parts you suppose it; but for any salt water beyond the mountains, the relations you have had from my people are false.

Whereupon he began to draw plots upon the ground (according to his discourse) of all those regions. Many other discourses they had (yet both content to give each other content in complemental<sup>o</sup> courtesies) and so Captain Smith returned with this answer.

Upon this the presents were sent by water, which is near a hundred miles, and the captains went by land with fifty good shot. All being met at Werowocomoco,<sup>1</sup> the next day was appointed for his coronation, then the presents were brought him: his basin and ewer,<sup>o</sup> bed and furniture set up, his scarlet cloak and apparel with much ado put on him, being persuaded by Namontack they would not hurt him. But a foul trouble there was to make him kneel to receive his crown, he neither knowing the majesty nor meaning of a crown, nor bending of the knee, endured so many persuasions, examples, and instructions as tired them all. At last, by leaning hard on his shoulders, he a little stooped, and three, having the crown in their hands, put it on his head, when by the warning of a pistol the boats were prepared with such a volley of shot, that the king started up in a horrible fear, till he saw all was well. Then, remembering himself, to congratulate their kindness he gave his old shoes and his mantle to Captain Newport: but perceiving his<sup>o</sup> purpose was to discover the Monacans, he labored to divert his resolution, refusing to lend him either men or guides more than Namontack; and so after some small complemental kindness on both sides, in requital of his presents, he presented Newport with a heap of wheat ears that might contain some seven or eight bushels, and as much more we bought in the town, wherewith we returned to the fort.

* * *

[Powhatan explains the differences between peace and war]

Captain Smith you may understand, that I, having seen the death of all my people thrice, and not one living of those three generations but myself, I know the difference of peace and war better than any in my country.<sup>2</sup> But now I am old and ere long must die, my brethren, namely Opichapam, Opechankanough, and Kekataugh, my two sisters, and their two daughters, are distinctly each other's successors, I wish their experiences no less than mine, and your love to them, no less than mine to you. But this bruit<sup>o</sup> from Nansamund<sup>3</sup> that you are come to destroy my country so much affrighteth all my people as they dare not visit you; what will it avail you to that that perforce<sup>o</sup> you may quietly have with love, or to destroy them that provide your food?<sup>4</sup> What can you get by war, when we can hide our provision and fly to the woods, whereby you must famish, by wronging us your friends; and why are you thus jealous of our loves, seeing us unarmed, and both do, and are willing still, to feed you with that you cannot get but by our labors? Think you I am so simple not to know it is better to eat good meat, lie well, and sleep quietly with my women and children, laugh and be merry with you, have copper, hatchets, or what I want, being your friend, than be forced to fly from all, to lie cold in the woods, feed upon acorns, roots, and such trash:<sup>o</sup> and be so hunted by you that I can neither rest, eat, nor sleep, but my tired men must watch, and if a twig but break, everyone cry 'There comes Captain Smith,' then must I fly I know not whether,<sup>o</sup> and thus with miserable fear end my miserable life, leaving my pleasures to such youths as you, which, through your rash unadvisedness may quickly as miserably end for want of that you never know where to find. Let this therefore assure you of our loves, and every year our friendly trade shall furnish you with corn, and now also, if you would come in friendly manner to see us, and not thus with your guns and swords as to invade your foes.

1624

Endnotes

- Note 1: Pocahontas was given the English name "Rebecca" when she was baptized. Return to reference 1
- Note 2: The Virginia Company was an English trading company chartered by King James I on April 10, 1606, with the object of colonizing the eastern coast of America. The coast was named

Virginia, after Elizabeth I, and it stretched from present-day Maine to the Carolinas. John Smith was the treasurer in 1616, when the party set forth for England.Return to reference 2

- Note 3: The term Smith uses for Native Americans throughout his History is “Salvage.” Unlike its near-synonym, “savage,” the Latin root of “salvage,” salve, or save, hints at the Algonquins’ role in saving the colonists from certain death.Return to reference 3
- Note 4:
Jamestown, named after James I, was the first permanent English settlement in North America, on land Indigenous peoples had inhabited for at least 12,000 years. About thirty Algonquin tribes were allied in the Powhatan Paramount Chiefdom, or Confederacy, along the coast, which was estimated to include around 15,000 people at the time of colonization. One hundred and four settlers arrived in 1607, and despite the dispatch of more settlers and supplies in 1608 (including eight Polish and German colonists and the first two European women), over 80 percent of the colonists died in 1609–10, mostly from starvation and disease. In 1610, those shipwrecked on the Bermudas, including John Rolfe finally arrived in Jamestown. In 1619, the first Africans, enslaved people originally from the Kingdom of Ndongo in what is now Angola, arrived in the colony via the efforts of English privateers. One hundred European women arrived in the same year.
Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Powhatan removed his daughter from contact with the English when she moved from childhood into puberty; she was found and kidnapped by an English trading ship in 1613.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: The letter to Queen Anna ends here.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Smith went to the coast of Massachusetts and Maine in 1614, which he then mapped and labeled as “New England” (his coinage). This map, published in A Description of New England

(1616), proved useful to the New England colonists.Return to reference 7

- Note 8: Uttamatomakkin, also known as Tomocomo, was Powhatan's emissary. He traveled with Pocahontas's party to London in 1616. His wife was Pocahontas's half sister. In January 1617, Pocahontas and Tomocomo were brought before the king at the Banqueting House in Whitehall Place, at a performance of Ben Jonson's masque The Vision of Delight. Anne Clifford and Mary Sidney Herbert were present as well.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Lady De La Warr (Cecilia Shirley West) was the wife of Thomas West, third Baron De La Warr, the English merchant and politician for whom "Delaware" (state, river, First Nation) was named. De La Warr was the nominal governor of Virginia at the time, and in fall 1616, he and his wife introduced Pocahontas and her husband, John Rolfe, into English society.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Elaborate court entertainments that celebrated and idealized the court and its rulers.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Pocahontas died in England in March 1617, right as her ship was about to leave for America. She was buried under the chancel of St. George's Church in Gravesend. She had been away for less than a year. John Rolfe returned to Virginia, leaving their son in England.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Stick for stirring a pot.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Things artistically devised or invented for dramatic representation.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: In classical mythology, any class of semi-divine spirits, imagined as taking the form of young maidens and inhabiting the sea, rivers, and mountains, and often portrayed in poetry as attendants on a particular god or goddess. The term was also used to describe beautiful young women and prostitutes.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Pieces of burning wood.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Smith included many italicized verse couplets like this one in his work, many of them taken (and modified) from Martin

Fotherby's collection of commonplaces, Atheomastic (1622). These lines are from Homer's Iliad. "Oaten pipe": pipe made of straw or a stem of an oat.Return to reference 7

- Note 8: Namontack was a young Powhatan man who was traded to the English as a hostage or ward in exchange for the young Englishman, Thomas Savage, who served in a similar capacity with the Native Americans. An accomplished guide, interpreter, and diplomatic mediator, Namontack made at least one trip to England.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Traders with and rivals of the Powhatan Confederacy. The Monacans spoke Siouan languages. Those in the Powhatan Confederacy spoke Algonquian languages.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: A village that served as Powhatan's headquarters. The name comes from the Powhatan words werowans (leader) and komakah (settlement). It is now an archeological site. Powhatan never went to Jamestown. Smith was captured and brought to Powhatan at Werowocomoco in January 1608, and it was there that Pocohantas purportedly saved him.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Powhatan may be referring to the devastating effects on the Algonquins of European diseases contracted from other European visitors before the arrival of the Jamestown colonists.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: In fall 1608, Smith and his men sailed up the Nansemond River, where they obtained corn from the Nansemond Indians by threatening to destroy their canoes.Return to reference 3
- Note 4:
Smith presented his opinions on Indian policy through his exchanges with Powhatan and his brother, Opechancanough. These exchanges reveal Smith's desire to maintain a dominant position as well as his awareness of the colony's dependence on the knowledge, labor, and cooperation of the Native Americans. While this is Smith's account of Powhatan's speech, it nonetheless presents Powhatan as a formidable political opponent who was well aware of the colonists' vulnerability.Return to reference 4

Notes

- °: various, several Return to reference °
- °: requite Return to reference °
- °: sympathy for Return to reference °
- °: need Return to reference °
- °: growing fat Return to reference °
- °: disagreements Return to reference °
- °: attendants Return to reference °
- °: reminded Return to reference °
- °: dare Return to reference °
- °: considered to be Return to reference °
- °: Pocahontas Return to reference °
- °: returned in kind Return to reference °
- °: Algonquins Return to reference °
- °: Smith Return to reference °
- °: reassured Return to reference °
- °: grotesque performance Return to reference °
- °: belt; waist Return to reference °
- °: masked ball; masque Return to reference °
- °: redressed Return to reference °
- °: to Return to reference °
- °: clever, crafty Return to reference °
- °: formal Return to reference °
- °: pitcher Return to reference °
- °: Newport's Return to reference °
- °: report Return to reference °
- °: by force Return to reference °
- °: rubbish, dross Return to reference °
- °: where Return to reference °

RICHARD LIGON

Richard Ligon's A True and Exact History of the Island of Barbados (1657) is the first account of the English colonization of the Caribbean island of Barbados, and of the rise of the sugar industry that would turn the island into "one of the richest Spots of earth under the Sun" and change the global economy forever. Ligon (1585?–1662) left for the Caribbean in 1647, following the failure of his efforts at land reclamation and enclosure in England, and the defeat of the royalists in the English Civil Wars. He wrote his history in London in the 1650s, while in prison for debt. The history served not only as a description of Barbados' plantations and "Sugarworks" and a prospectus (and how-to manual) for investors and future planters, but also as an account of Ligon's own value: as plantation overseer, natural scientist, draughtsman (the volume included detailed diagrams of the industrial parts of the sugar works), colonial apologist, and self-described "limner," or watercolorist.

Ligon's account (and voyage) begins with a trip to the Cape Verde Islands off the western coast of Africa, where the colonists plan to collect "Negroes, Horses, and Cattle" to sell in Barbados. The first selection below recounts a dinner in "St. Iago" (Santiago) at the Portuguese governor's house, in which Ligon's knowledge of European art, including court masques like Ben Jonson's Masque of Blackness, provides the lens through which he sees Black women.

The Barbados selections illustrate Ligon's views of life on the plantations, from the spectre of rebellions by enslaved people and servants (including one by servants who, Tempest-like, sought to make themselves "Masters of the Island"), and the challenges presented by both the diversity of languages spoken by the Africans, and a natural environment whose fertility and intractability often threatened to overwhelm the colonists' fantasies of mastery and ease. The account also displays Ligon's critique of "Christian" violence and hypocrisy, not least in his account of the Indian “maiden” Yarico, which became, much like Smith’s account of Pocahontas, the stuff of legend.

From A True and Exact History of the Island of Barbados

* * *

Dinner being near half done (the Padre, Bernardo,<sup>1</sup> and the other black attendants, waiting on us), in comes an old fellow whose complexion was raised out of the red sack,<sup>2</sup> for near that colour it was: his head and beard milk white, his countenance bold and cheerful, a lute in his hand, and played us for a novelty, the passamezzo galliard,<sup>3</sup> a tune in great esteem in Harry the fourth's days; for when Sir John Falstaff<sup>4</sup> makes his amours to Mistress Doll Tear sheet, Sneak and his company, the admired fiddlers of that age, play this tune, which put a thought into my head, that if time and tune be the composites of music, what a long time this tune had in sailing from England to this place. But we being sufficiently satisfied with this kind of harmony, desired a song, which he performed in as antique<sup>5</sup> a manner, both favoring much of antiquity<sup>o</sup>; no graces, double relishes, trillos, gropos, or pianofortes,<sup>6</sup> but plain as a packstaff.<sup>7</sup> His lute, too, was but of ten strings, and that was in fashion in King David's days,<sup>8</sup> so that the rarity of this antique piece pleased me beyond measure.

Dinner being ended and the Padre were near weary of his waiting, we rose and made room for better company; for now the Padre and his Black mistress were to take their turns; a Negro of the greatest beauty and majesty together that ever I saw in one woman. Her stature large and excellently shaped, well-favored, full-eyed, and admirably graced; she wore on her head a roll of green taffety, striped with white and philiamort,<sup>9</sup> made up in manner of a turban; and over that a slight veil, which she took off at pleasure. On her body next to her linen, a petticoat of orange tawny and sky colors, not done with straight stripes, but waved; and upon that a mantle of purple silk, engrailed<sup>o</sup> with straw color. This mantle was large, and tied with a knot of very broad black ribbon, with a rich jewel on her right shoulder, which came under her left arm, and so hung loose and carelessly almost to the ground. On her legs she wore buskins<sup>1</sup> of watchet<sup>o</sup> silk, decked with silver lace and fringe; Her shoes, of white leather, laced with sky color and pinked<sup>2</sup> between those laces. In her ears, she wore large pendants; about her neck and on her arms, fair pearls. But her eyes were her richest jewels: for they were the largest and most oriental<sup>3</sup> that I have ever seen.

Seeing all these perfections in her only at passage,<sup>o</sup> but not yet heard her speak, I was resolved after dinner to make an essay what a present of rich silver, silk, and gold ribbon would do to persuade her to open her lips, partly out of a curiosity to see whether her teeth were exactly white and clean as I hoped they were; for 'tis a general opinion that all Negroes have white teeth, but that is a common error, for the black and white being so neer together, they set off one another with the greater advantage, but look to them and you shall find those teeth, which at a distance appeared rarely white, are yellow and foul. This knowledge wrought this curiosity in me, but it was not the end of my enquiries, for there was now but one thing more to set her off in my opinion, the rarest black swan that I had ever seen, and that was her language, and graceful delivery of that which was to unite and confirm a perfection in all the rest. And to that end I took a gentleman that spoke good Spanish with me, and awaited her coming out, which was with far greater majesty and gracefulness than I have seen Queen Anne descend from the chair of state to dance the measures with a baron of England at a masque in the Banqueting House.<sup>4</sup> And truly, had her followers and friends with other perquisites<sup>5</sup> (that ought to be the attendants on such a state and beauty) waited on her, I had made a stop and gone no farther. But finding her but slightly attended, and considering she was but the Padre's mistress and therefore the more accessible, I made my addresses to her by my interpreter and told her I had some trifles made by the people of England, which for their value were not worthy her acceptance, yet for their novelty they might be of some esteem, such having been worn by the great queens of Europe, and intreated her to vouchsafe to receive them. She, with much gravity and reservedness, opened the paper, but when she looked on them, the colors pleased her so as she put her gravity into the loveliest smile that I have ever seen. And then showed her rows of pearls, so clean, white, Orient, and well-shaped as Neptune's court was never paved with such as these; and to show which was whiter or more Orient, those or the whites of her eyes, she turned them up and gave me such a look as was a sufficient return for a far greater present, and withall wished I would think of somewhat wherein she might pleasure me, and I should find her both ready and willing. And so with a graceful bow of her neck, she took her way towards her own house, which was not above a stone's cast from the Padre's. Other addresses were not to be made without the dislike of the Padre, for they are there as jealous of their mistresses as the Italians of their wives.

In the afternoon we took leave and went aboard, where we remained three or four days; about which time some passengers of the ship who had no great store of linen for shift,<sup>9</sup> desired leave to go ashore and took divers women along with them to wash their linen. But (it seemed) the Portuguese, and Negroes too, found them handsome and fit for their turns,<sup>6</sup> and were a little rude; I cannot say ravished<sup>7</sup> them, for the major part of them, being taken from Bridewell, Turnbull Street,<sup>8</sup> and such like places of education, were better natured than to suffer such violence. Yet complaints were made when they came aboard, both of such abuses, and stealing their linen.

But such a praise they gave of the place as we all were desirous to see it: for after the rain, every day gave an increase to the beauty of the place by the budding out of new fruits and flowers.

* * *

No sooner were we landed, but the captain of the castle, with one soldier with him, came towards us with a slow formal pace, who desired to speak with one of us alone. Colonel Modyford,<sup>9</sup> being the chief man in the company, went with an interpreter to meet him, and being at the distance of speech desired to know his pleasure, which he told him was this: That he understood divers of our women had been ashore the day before and received some injury from the people of the island, and that it was conceived we were come armed to take revenge on those that did the affront. He therefore advised us either to make speedy return to the boat that brought us, or to send back our swords and pistols and commit our selves to his protection; and if one of those were not presently put in act, we should in a very short time have all our throats cut.

We told him we had no intention of revenge for any wrong done, and that the only cause of our landing was to see the beauty of the place we had heard so much commended by our people that were ashore, of which they had given a very large testimony both of the pleasantness and fruitfulness of it, and that our visit was out of love, both to the place and people. But for sending our weapons back to the boat, we desired his pardon for this reason: that the billows going so very high at that time, we could not send them to the boat without being dipped in sea water, which would spoil them, and the most of them being rich swords and pistols, we were loath to have their beauty covered with rust, which the salt water would be the occasion of. We desired rather that he would command a soldier of his to stay with a man of ours, and keep them safe till our return; which he being content to do, we committed ourselves to his protection, who put a guard upon us of ten soldiers, part Portuguese, part Negroes; the most part of either kind as proper men as I have seen, and as handsomely clothed.

* * *

In this valley of pleasure, adorned as you have heard, we marched with our guard, fair and softly, near a quarter of a mile before we came to the much-praised fountain from whence we fetches our water. The circle whereof was about 60 foot, the diameter about 20 from the ground to the top of the well (which was of freestone), 3 foot and a half; from thence within down to the surface of the water, about 15 foot. The spring itself, not so much to be praised for the excellency of the taste, though clear enough, as for the nymphs that repair thither. For whilst we stayed there seeing the sailors fill their casks, and withall contemplating the glory of the place, there appeared to our view many pretty young Negro virgins, playing about the well. But amongst those, two that came down with either of them a natural pitcher, a calabash,<sup>1</sup> upon their arm, to fetch water from this fountain, creatures of Durer,<sup>2</sup> the great master of proportion, but to have imitated; and Titian, or Andrea del Sarto, for softness of muscles, and curiosity of coloring, though with a studied diligence, and a love both to the party and the work. To express all the perfections of nature, and parts these virgins were owners of, would ask a more skillful pen or pencil than mine. Sure I am, though all were excellent, their motions were the highest, and that is a beauty no painter can express, and therefore my pen may well be silent. Yet a word or two would not be amiss to express the difference between these and those of high Africa; as of Morocco, Guinea, Binny, Cutchew, Angola, Æthiopia, and Mauritania, or those that dwell nere the River of Gambia,<sup>3</sup> who are thicklipped, short-nosed, and commonly low foreheads. But these are composed of such features as would mar the judgment of the best painters to undertake to mend. Wanton as the soil that bred them, sweet as the fruits they fed on; for being come so near as their motions and graces might perfectly be discerned, I guessed that nature could not, without help of art, frame such accomplished beauties not only of colors and favor, but of motion too, which is the highest part of beauty. If dancing had been in fashion in this island, I might have been persuaded that they had been taught those motions by some who had studied that art. But considering the Padre's music to be the best the island afforded, I could not but cast away that thought and attribute all to pure nature; innocent as youthful, their ages about 15. Seeing their beauties so fresh and youthful with all the perfections I have named, I thought good to try whether the uttering of their language would be as sweet and harmonious as their other parts were comely. And by the help of a gentleman that spoke Portuguese, I accosted them, and began to praise their beauties, shapes, and manner of dressings, which was extremely pretty. Their hair not shorn as the Negroes in the places I have named, close to their heads, nor in quarters and mazes,<sup>4</sup> as they use to wear it, which is ridiculous to all that see them but themselves, but in a due proportion of length so as having their shortenings by the natural curls, they appeared as wires<sup>5</sup> and artificial<sup>o</sup> dressings to their faces. On the sides of their cheeks, they plait<sup>o</sup> little of it of purpose to tie small ribbon, or some small beads of white amber or bugle,<sup>o</sup> sometimes of the rare flowers that grow there; their ears hung with pendants, their necks and arms adorned with bracelets of counterfeit pearls and blue bugle<sup>6</sup> such as the Portuguese bestow on them, for these are free Negroes, and wear upon the small of one of their legs the badge of their freedom, which is a small piece of silver or tin, as big as the stale<sup>o</sup> of a spoon, which comes round about the leg, and by reason of the smoothness and lightness is no impediment to their going. Their clothes were petticoats of striped silk next to their linen, which reach to their middle leg, and upon that a mantle of blue taffety, tied with a ribbon on the right shoulder, which coming under the left arm, hung down carelessly somewhat lower than the petticoat, so as a great part of the natural beauty of their backs and necks before lay open to the view, their breast round, firm, and beautifully shaped.

Upon my addresses to them, they appeared a little disturbed, and whispered to one another, but had not the confidence to speak aloud. I had in my hat a piece of silver and silk ribbon, which I perceived their well-shaped eyes often to dart at, but their modesties would not give them confidence to ask. I took it out and divided it between them, which they accepted with much alacrity, and in return, drank to one another my health in the liquor of the pure fountain, which I perceived by their wanton smiles and jesticulations, and casting their eyes towards me. When they thought they had expressed enough they would take in their countenances and put themselves in the modestest of postures that could be. But we having brought a case of bottles of English spirits with us, I called for some and drunk a health to them in a small dram cup, and gave it to one of them, which they smelled so, and finding it too strong for their temper poured some of it into one of their calabashes and put to it as much water as would temper it to their palates. They drank again, but all this would not give them the confidence to speak, but in mute language and extremely pretty motions, showed they wanted neither wit nor discretion to make an answer. But it seemed it was not the fashion there for young maids to speak to strangers in so public a place.

I thought I had been sufficiently armed with the perfections I found in the Padre's mistress as to be free from the darts of any other beauty of that place, and in so short a time, but I found the difference between young fresh beauties and those that are made up with the addition of state and majesty: for though they counsel and persuade our loves, yet young beauties force and so commit rapes upon our affections. In sum, had not my heart been fixed fast in my breast and dwelt there above sixty years, and therefore loath to leave his long-kept habitation, I had undoubtedly left it between them for a legacy. For, so equal were their beauties and my love, as it was not, nor could be, particular to either.

* * *

Being now come in sight of this happy island,<sup>o</sup> the nearer we came, the more beautiful it appeared to our eyes; for that being in itself extremely beautiful was best discerned, and best judged of, when our eyes became full masters of the object. There we saw the high, large, and lofty trees, with their spreading branches and flourishing tops, seemed to be beholding to the earth and roots that gave them such plenty of sap for their nourishment, as to grow to that perfection of beauty and largeness. Whilst they, in gratitude, return their cool shade to secure and shelter them from the sun's heat, which without it would scorch and dry away. So that bounty and goodness in the one, and gratefulness in the other, serve to make up this beauty which otherwise would lie empty and waste.<sup>o</sup> And truly these vegetatives may teach both the sensible and reasonable creatures what it is that makes up wealth, beauty, and all harmony in that Leviathan,<sup>7</sup> a well-governed common-wealth where the mighty men and rulers of the earth, by their prudent and careful protection, secure them from harms, whilst they retribute<sup>o</sup> their pains and faithful obedience to serve them in all just commands; and both these, interchangeably and mutually in love, which is the cord that binds up all imperfect harmony, and where these are wanting, the roots dry and leaves fall away, and a general decay and devastation ensues. Witness the woeful experience of these sad times we live in.

* * *

A little before I came from thence,<sup>8</sup> there was such a combination amongst them<sup>o</sup> as the like was never seen there before. Their sufferings being grown to a great height, and their daily complainings to one another (of the intolerable burdens they labored under) being spread throughout the island, at the last, some amongst them, whose spirits were not able to endure such slavery, resolved to break through it or die in the act, and so conspired with some others of their acquaintance, whose sufferings were equal if not above theirs and their spirits no way inferior, resolved to draw as many of the discontented party into this plot as possibly they could, and those of this persuasion were the greatest numbers of servants in the island. So that a day was appointed to fall upon their masters and cut all their throats, and by that means to make themselves not only freemen but masters of the island. And so closely was this plot carried as no discovery was made till the day before they were to put it in act, and then one of them, either by the failing of his courage, or some new obligation from the love of his master, revealed this long-plotted conspiracy, and so by this timely advertishment the masters were saved: Justice Hetherfall (whose servant this was) sending letters to all his friends, and they to theirs, and so one to another till they were all secured; and by examination found out the greatest part of them, whereof eighteen of the principal men in the conspiracy, and they the first leaders and contrivers of the plot, were put to death for example to the rest. And the reason why they made examples of so many was they found these so haughty in their resolutions, and so incorrigible, as they were like enough to become actors in a second plot; and so they thought good to secure them, and for the rest, to have a special eye over them.

It has been accounted a strange thing that the Negroes, being more than double the numbers of the Christians that are there,<sup>9</sup> and they accounted a bloody people where they think they have power or advantages, and the more bloody by how much they are more fearful than others, that these should not commit some horrid massacre upon the Christians, thereby to enfranchise themselves and become masters of the island. But there are three reasons that take away this wonder: the one is, they are not suffered to touch or handle any weapons; the other, that they are held in such awe and slavery as they are fearful to appear in any daring act; and seeing the mustering of our men and hearing their gunshot, (than which nothing is more terrible to them), their spirits are subjugated to so low a condition as they dare not look up to any bold attempt. Besides these, there is a third reason which stops all designs of that kind, and that is, they are fetched from several parts of Africa, who speak several languages, and by that means one of them understands not another: For some of them are fetched from Guinea and Binny, some from Cutchew, some from Angola, and some from the River of Gambia. And in some of these places where petty kingdoms are, they sell their subjects, and such as they take in battle, whom they make slaves; and some mean men sell their servants, their children, and sometimes their wives, and think all good traffic for such commodities as our merchants send them.

When they are brought to us, the planters buy them out of the ship, where they find them stark naked and therefore cannot be deceived in any outward infirmity. They choose them as they do horses in a market; the strongest, youthfulest, and most beautiful yield the greatest prices. Thirty pound sterling is a price for the best man Negro; and twenty five, twenty six, or twenty seven pound for a woman; the children are at easier rates. And we buy them so, as the sexes may be equal; for if they have more men than women, the men who are unmarried will come to their masters and complain that they cannot live without wives and desire him they may have wives.

* * *

What their<sup>o</sup> other opinions are in matter of religion, I know not, but certainly they are not altogether of the sect of the Sadducees,<sup>1</sup> for they believe a resurrection, and that they shall go into their own country again and have their youth renewed. And lodging this opinion in their hearts, they make it an ordinary practice, upon any great fright or threatening by their masters, to hang themselves.

But Colonel Walrond,<sup>2</sup> having lost three or four of his best Negroes this way, and in a very little time, caused one of their heads to be cut off and set upon a pole a dozen foot high; and having done that, caused all his Negroes to come forth and march round about this head, and bid them look on it, whether this were not the head of such a one that hanged himself. Which they acknowledging, he then told them that they were in a main error in thinking they went into their own countries after they were dead; for this man's head was here, as they all were witnesses of, and how was it possible the body could go without a head. Being convinced by this sad yet lively spectacle, they changed their opinions; and after that, no more hanged themselves.

* * *

We had an Indian woman,<sup>3</sup> a slave in the house, who was of excellent shape and color, for it was a pure bright bay,<sup>4</sup> small breasts, with the nipples of a porphyry<sup>5</sup> color, this woman would not be wooed by any means to wear clothes. She chanced to be with child, by a Christian<sup>6</sup> servant, and lodging in the Indian house amongst other women of her own country, where the Christian servants, both men and women, came, and being very great, and, that her time was come to be delivered, loath to fall in labour before the men, walked down to a wood in which was a pond of water, and there by the side of the pond, brought her self abed;<sup>o</sup> and presently washing her child in some of the water of the pond, lapped<sup>o</sup> it up in such rags as she had begged of the Christians, and in three hours' time came home with her child in her arms, a lusty boy, frolic and lively.

This Indian dwelling near the sea coast upon the main, an English ship put in to a bay and sent some of her men ashore to try what victuals or water they could find, for in some distress they were. But the Indians perceiving them to go up so far into the country as they were sure they could not make a safe retreat, intercepted them in their return and fell upon them, chasing them into a wood, and being dispersed there, some were taken, and some killed. But a young man amongst them straggling from the rest was met by this Indian maid, who upon the first sight fell in love with him, and hid him close from her countrymen (the Indians) in a cave,<sup>7</sup> and there fed him till they could safely go down to the shore, where the ship lay at anchor, expecting the return of their friends, but at last seeing them upon the shore, sent the long boat for them, took them aboard, and brought them away. But the youth, when he came ashore in the Barbados, forgot the kindness of the poor maid that had ventured her life for his safety, and sold her for a slave, who was as free born as he: and so poor Yarico for her love, lost her liberty.<sup>8</sup>

Now for the masters, I have said but little, nor am able to say half of what they deserve. They are men of great abilities and parts, otherwise they could not go through with such great works as they undertake, the managing of one of their plantations being a work of such a latitude as will require a very good headpiece,<sup>o</sup> to put in order and continue it so.

* * *

This tree<sup>9</sup> wants little of the beauty of the plantain, yet she has somewhat to delight the eyes which the other wants, and that is the picture of Christ upon the cross, so lively expressed as no limner can do it (with one color) more exactly. And this is seen when you cut the fruit just cross as you do the root of fern, to find a spread eagle. But this is much more perfect, the head hanging down, the arms extended to the full length, with some little elevation, and the feet cross upon one another. This I will speak as an artist: let a very excellent limner<sup>9</sup> paint a crucifix, only with one color, in limning, and let his touches be as sharp and as masterly as he pleases, the figure no bigger than this, which is about an inch long, and remove that picture at such a distance from the eye as to lose some of the curiosity, and dainty touches of the work, so as the outmost stels<sup>9</sup> or profile of the figure may be perfectly discerned, and at such a distance, the figure in the fruit of the banana shall seem as perfect as it. Much may be said upon this subject by better wits and abler souls than mine, my contemplation being only this: that since those men dwelling in that place professing the names of Christians, and denying to preach to those poor ignorant harmless souls, the Negroes, the doctrine of Christ crucified, which might convert many of them to his worship, he himself has set up his own cross to reproach these men, who rather than lose the hold they have of them as slaves, will deny them the benefit and blessing of being Christians. Otherwise why is this figure set up for these to look on, that never heard of Christ, and God never made anything useless or in vain?

* * *

1657

Endnotes

- Note 1:

Bernardo Mendes de Sousa was a Portuguese national whom the expedition brought with them as a translator. He was released from jail in London to serve in this capacity. The Cape Verde islands, named for their proximity to the verdant cape on the African coast, had been largely uninhabited until the Portuguese colonized them in the 15th century. Santiago (Ligon's "St. Iago") had been the bishop's seat for the islands and adjacent coast for almost a century when Ligon arrived. Portugal signed a treaty with England in 1642 that opened Portuguese territory to English traders. The "Padre" in Ligon's account is the current bishop.

Return to reference 1

- Note 2: Wine, imported from Spain or the Canary Islands.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: passamezzo galliard : from passer, to walk, and mezzo, the middle or half, was a popular dance, and popular tune, in the period.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Sir John Falstaff courts the prostitute Doll Tearsheet and "Sneak and his company" provide musical entertainment in Shakespeare's Henry IV, Part II.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Old-fashioned or "antic," grotesque or absurd.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Graces, double relishes, trillos, and grops were musical flourishes, usually consisting of trills or vibrations made by alternating rapidly between adjacent notes. Pianofortes were alterations between loud and soft playing.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: The stick on which a beggar supported their pack while resting. The phrase "plain as a packstaff" referred to something low or contemptible.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: King David was the third king of Israel in the Bible.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Philiamort (feuilles mortes, in French): the color of dead leaves.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Calf- or knee-high boots.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Ornamented with cut-outs.Return to reference 2

- Note 3: Characteristic of countries/regions to the east of the Mediterranean, ancient Roman empire, or early Christian world. The term was also used to describe a precious stone, especially a pearl.Return to reference 3
- Note 4:
Ligon refers to court masques, elaborate court entertainments that celebrated and idealized the court and its rulers. The members of the royal family did often “descend” to dance with the nobility (“barons”) at the conclusion of the masque. Queen Anna commissioned and performed in many masques at the Banqueting House in Whitehall, including Jonson’s The Masque of Blackness (see above, p. 1039). For resonances between Ligon’s description of the Black woman’s attire and court masque costumes, see the illustration on p. C12 in the color insert to this volume.
Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Adjuncts, proper accompaniments.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: To serve their sexual desires.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Carried away by force, raped.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Bridewell was a London hospital that served as a workhouse and correctional facility, primarily for women. Turnbull Street was a notorious center of crime and prostitution.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Colonel Thomas Modyford was the leader of the Barbados expedition. Ligon had fought with him in the royalist garrison in Exeter. Modyford amassed a huge fortune in Barbados. He moved to Jamaica as royal governor in the early 1660s, where he became the richest planter in the English Caribbean.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Shell of an emptied gourd or pumpkin used to carry liquid.Return to reference 1
- Note 2:
Albrecht Dürer (1471–1528), German printer, painter, and theorist of the Northern Renaissance. Titian (1488–1576), Italian Renaissance painter. A Black woman is represented attending to Diana in Titian’s Diana and Actaeon (1556–59).

Andrea del Sarto (1486–1530), Italian Renaissance painter. Dürer's Four Books on Human Proportions was influenced by Leonardo da Vinci and Marcus Vitruvius. Dürer thought that there were "many forms of relative beauty . . . conditioned by the diversity of breeding, vocation, and natural disposition."

Return to reference 2

- Note 3: Morocco and Mauritania are in North Africa. Cacheo ("Cutchew") and the River of Gambia, centers of the trade in enslaved Africans, were in Guinea and Benin. Angola lay farther south along the West African coast. The location of Ethiopia was indeterminate in the period.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: "Quarters and mazes" are ways of creating patterns on the scalp with the hair.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Forms used to support complex hairstyles.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Tube-shaped glass bead.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Thomas Hobbes was, like Ligon, a royalist and an exile. He published Leviathan in 1651, the year he returned to England. Ligon's is the second recorded use of the term "Leviathan" to refer to the state or commonwealth.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Right before this section, Ligon discusses the living and working conditions of servants and enslaved workers.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Ligon overestimated the island's population, which by 1660 was roughly 40,000, equally divided between people of European and of African or Indian descent.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: The Sadducees were a Jewish sect that denied the immortality of the soul and the possibility of resurrection. The name was applied to all those who rejected such beliefs.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Colonel Humphrey Walrond emigrated to Barbados in 1646 after a royalist defeat and became a sugar planter. After trying to seize control of the island, largely by stoking fears of servant and slave rebellions, Walrond was sent back to England

- in 1652. He returned in 1656 and became president of the council in 1660.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: The Indians enslaved in Barbados were from the mainland of South America, likely Guiana.Return to reference 3
  - Note 4: Reddish-brown color, usually used to describe a horse.Return to reference 4
  - Note 5: Porphyry was a hard purplish-red rock quarried in the eastern desert of Egypt for ornamental use, especially during the Roman period.Return to reference 5
  - Note 6: "Christian" here means non-Indian or African.Return to reference 6
  - Note 7: Later in the book, Ligon tells us that "runaway Negroes" often shelter themselves in such caves, and "range abroad" in the night, stealing "pigs, plantains, potatoes and pullen [chicken]," "the nights being dark, and their bodies black, they escape undiscerned."Return to reference 7
  - Note 8: Yarico's story is taken up by later authors, including Richard Steele.Return to reference 8
  - Note 9: A limner is an illuminator of manuscripts or a painter, especially in watercolors.Return to reference 9

Notes

- °: the ancient pastReturn to reference °
- °: variegated, mixed Return to reference °
- °: light blueReturn to reference °
- °: in passingReturn to reference °
- °: change (of clothing)Return to reference °
- °: artful Return to reference °
- °: braid Return to reference °
- °: tube-shaped glass bead Return to reference °
- °: handleReturn to reference °
- °: Barbados Return to reference °
- °: uncultivated Return to reference °
- °: repayReturn to reference °

- °: servants Return to reference °
- °: the enslaved Africans Return to reference °
- °: gave birth Return to reference °
- °: swaddled Return to reference °
- °: brain or intellect Return to reference °
- °: the banana tree Return to reference °
- °: outlines Return to reference °

THE EARLY SEVENTEENTH CENTURY (1603–1660)

The Early Seventeenth Century 1603–1660

Charles I at the Hunt, a portrait of Charles I of England by Anthony Van Dyck, ca. 1635. See the Image Gallery for this volume for another portrait of Charles I by Van Dyck.

---

- 1603: Death of Elizabeth I; accession of James I, first Stuart king of England
- 1605: The Gunpowder Plot, a failed effort by Catholic extremists to blow up Parliament and the king
- 1607: Establishment of first permanent English colony in the New World at Jamestown, Virginia
- 1625: Death of James I; accession of Charles I
- 1642: Outbreak of civil war; theaters closed
- 1649: Execution of Charles I; beginning of Commonwealth and Protectorate, known inclusively as the Interregnum (1649–60)
- 1660: End of the Protectorate; restoration of Charles II

Queen Elizabeth died on March 24, 1603, after ruling England for more than four decades. The Virgin Queen had not, of course, produced a child to inherit her throne, but her kinsman, the thirty-six-year-old James Stuart, James VI of Scotland, succeeded her as James I without the violence that many had feared. Worries over the succession, which had plagued the reigns of the Tudor monarchs since Henry VIII, could finally subside: James already had several children with his queen, Anna of Denmark. Writers and scholars jubilantly noted that their new ruler had literary inclinations. He was the author of treatises on government and witchcraft, as well as some youthful efforts at poetry. Nonetheless, there were grounds for disquiet. James had come to maturity in Scotland, a foreign land with a different church, different customs, and different institutions of government. Two of his books, The True Law of Free Monarchies (1598) and Basilikon Doron (1599), expounded authoritarian theories of kingship, and James's views seemed incompatible with the English tradition of "mixed" government, in which power was shared by the monarch, the House of Lords, and the House of Commons. As Thomas Howard wrote in 1611, while Elizabeth "did talk of her subjects' love and good affection," James "talketh of his subjects' fear and subjection." James liked to imagine himself as a modern version of the wise, peace-loving Roman Augustus Caesar, who autocratically governed a vast empire. The Romans had deified their emperors, and while the Christian James could not expect the same, he insisted on his closeness to divinity. Kings, he believed, derived their powers from God rather than from the people. As God's specially chosen delegate, surely he deserved his subjects' reverent, unconditional obedience.

Yet unlike the charismatic Elizabeth, James was personally unprepossessing. One contemporary, Anthony Weldon, provides a barbed description: "His tongue too large for his mouth, which ever made him speak full in the mouth, and drink very uncomely as if eating his drink . . . he never washed his hands . . . his walk was ever circular, his fingers ever in that walk fiddling about his codpiece." Unsurprisingly, James did not always inspire in his subjects the deferential awe to which he thought himself entitled.

The relationship between the monarch and his people, and the relationship between England and Scotland, would be sources of friction throughout James's reign. James had hoped to unify his domains as a single nation, "the empire of Britain." But the two realms' legal and ecclesiastical systems proved difficult to reconcile, and the English Parliament, traditionally a sporadically convened body providing advice to the monarch, offered robustly xenophobic opposition. The failure of unification was only one of the king's several clashes with the English Parliament, especially with the House of Commons, which had authority over taxation. After James died in 1625 and his son Charles I succeeded him, tensions persisted and intensified. Charles attempted to rule without summoning Parliament at all between 1629 and 1638. By 1642 England was up in arms. The civil war between the king's forces and those loyal to the House of Commons ended with Charles's defeat and beheading in 1649.

In the early 1650s the monarchy as an institution seemed as dead as the man who had last worn the crown, but an adequate replacement proved difficult to devise and sustain. In 1653, executive power devolved upon a "Lord Protector," Oliver Cromwell, former general of the parliamentary forces, who wielded power nearly as autocratically as Charles had done. Yet without an institutionally sanctioned method of transferring power upon Cromwell's death, the attempt to fashion a commonwealth without a hereditary monarch eventually failed. In 1660 Parliament invited the eldest son of the old king home from exile. He succeeded to the throne as King Charles II.

As James's accession marks the beginning of "the early seventeenth century," his grandson's marks the end. Literary periods often fail to correlate neatly with the reigns of monarchs, and the period 1603–60 can seem especially arbitrary. Many important cultural trends in seventeenth-century Europe neither began nor ended in these years but unfolded slowly over several centuries. The Protestant Reformation of the sixteenth century was still ongoing in the seventeenth, and still producing turmoil. The European printing press, an invention of the fifteenth century, continued to make books ever more widely available, contributing to an expansion of literacy and to a changed conception of authorship. Although the English economy remained primarily agrarian, its manufacturing and trade sectors were expanding rapidly. England was also establishing itself as a leading maritime nation, as a colonial power, and increasingly, particularly in the 1650s, as a major participant in the transatlantic slave trade. From 1550 on, London grew explosively as a center of population, trade, and literary endeavor. Each of these developments was under way before James came to the throne, and many of them would continue after the 1714 death of James's great-granddaughter Queen Anne, the last of the Stuarts to reign in England.

From a literary point of view, 1603 can seem a particularly capricious dividing line; many of England's most famous writers were midcareer when James came to the throne. The professional lives of William Shakespeare, Ben Jonson, John Donne, Francis Bacon, Walter Raleigh, and many less famous writers—including George Chapman, Samuel Daniel, Thomas Dekker, Michael Drayton, Thomas Heywood, and Aemilia Lanyer—straddle the reigns of Elizabeth and James. The restoration of Charles II, with which this section ends, is likewise a more significant political than literary milestone: John Milton completed Paradise Lost and wrote two other major poems in the 1660s, and Margaret Cavendish, Katherine Philips, and Lucy Hutchinson wrote their most important works across the dividing line between the "early" seventeenth century and the Restoration. Nonetheless, recognizing the years 1603–60 as a period sharpens our awareness of some important political, intellectual, cultural, and stylistic currents that bear directly upon literary production. It also helps focus attention upon the seismic shift in national consciousness that, in 1649, could permit the formal trial, conviction, and execution of an anointed king at the hands of his former subjects.

STATE AND CHURCH, 1603–1640

In James's reign, the most pressing difficulties were apparently financial, but money troubles were merely symptoms of deeper quandaries about the proper relationship between king and people. Compared to James's native Scotland, England seemed prosperous, but James was less wealthy than he believed. Except in times of war, the Crown was supposed to fund the government not through regular taxation but through its own extensive land revenues and by exchanging Crown prerogatives, such as the collection of taxes on luxury imports, in return for money or services. Yet the Crown's independent income had declined throughout the sixteenth century as inflation eroded the value of land rents. Meanwhile, innovations in military technology and shipbuilding dramatically increased the cost of port security and other defenses, traditional Crown responsibilities. Elizabeth had responded to straitened finances with parsimony, transferring much of the expense of her court, for instance, onto wealthy subjects, whom she visited for extended periods on her summer "progresses." She also kept a tight lid on honorific titles, creating new knights or peers very rarely, even though the years of her reign saw considerable upward social mobility. Many of those who became wealthy during her reign, including Sir Francis Drake, did so as pirates and privateers. In consequence, by 1603 there was considerable pent-up pressure both for honors and for more tangible rewards for courtiers and government officials. As soon as James came to power he was besieged with supplicants.

James responded with what seemed to him appropriate royal munificence, knighting and ennobling many of his courtiers and endowing them with opulent gifts. His expenses were much higher than Elizabeth's; the Crown had to maintain not only his own household but also separate establishments for his queen, Anna, and for the heir apparent, Prince Henry. Yet James quickly became notorious for his financial heedlessness. Compared to Elizabeth's, his court was disorderly and wasteful, marked by hard drinking, gluttonous feasting, and a craze for hunting. "It is not possible for a king of England . . . to be rich or safe, but by frugality," warned James's lord treasurer, Robert Cecil, but James seemed unable to restrain himself. Soon after assuming the throne he was deeply in debt and unable to persuade Parliament to bankroll him by raising taxes. As the republican writer Lucy Hutchinson put it, in "setting honors to public sale," James empowered people "to invent projects to pill [plunder] the people, and pick their purses for the maintenance of vice and lewdness."

The king's financial difficulties set his authoritarian assertions about the monarch's supremacy at odds with Parliament's control over taxation. How were his prerogatives as a ruler to coexist with the rights of his subjects? Particularly disturbing to many was James's tendency to bestow high offices upon favorites apparently chosen for good looks rather than for good judgment. James's openly romantic attachment first to Robert Carr, Earl of Somerset, and then to George Villiers, Duke of Buckingham, gave rise to widespread rumors of homosexuality at court. James's own letters, in which he refers to his "Steenie" (a diminutive of St. Stephen) in headily erotic terms, make it clear that James's homosexuality was more than a rumor. The period had complex attitudes toward same-sex relationships; on the one hand, "sodomy" was a capital (though rarely prosecuted) crime; on the other hand, passionately intense male friendship, sometimes suffused with eroticism, constituted an important cultural ideal. In James's case, at least, contemporaries considered his susceptibility to lovely, expensive youths a political rather than a moral calamity. For his critics, it crystallized what was wrong with unlimited royal power: the ease with which a king could confuse his own desires with a divine mandate. There were also occasional conflicts between the king and Prince Henry, who was often seen as more martially Protestant and interventionist than his peace-keeping father, as well as between the king and Queen Anna, whose reputed Catholicism—and alliances with powerful courtiers, including Lucy Harington Russell, Countess of Bedford—often put her at odds with her husband. A 1617 diary entry by Lady Anne Clifford, who was engaged in a fierce battle for the Clifford properties, gives a vivid sense of the complex personal and political relations in the Jacobean (from Jacobus, Latin for James) court: "I went presently . . . to the Drawing Chamber where my Lady Derby told the Queen how my business stood, and that I was to go to the King; so she promised me she would do all the good in it she could. When I had stayed but a little while there I was sent for . . . , my Lord and I going through my Lord Buckingham's Chamber, who brought us into the King." "The Queen gave me a warning not to trust my matters absolutely to the King," Clifford concludes her entry, "lest he should deceive me." The Jacobean court was neither as authoritarian nor as centralized as one might imagine.

Despite James's frictions with Parliament, and his chronic problems of self-management, he was nonetheless politically astute. Like Elizabeth, he often succeeded not through decisiveness but through canny inaction. Cautious by temperament, he characterized himself as a peacemaker and for many years successfully kept England out of the religious wars raging on the Continent. His 1604 peace treaty with England's old enemy, Spain, made the Atlantic safe for English ships, a prerequisite for the colonization of the New World and for regular long-distance trading expeditions into the Mediterranean and down the African coast into the Indian Ocean. James's reign saw the establishment of the first permanent English settlements in North America, first at Jamestown and then in the Bermudas, at Plymouth, and in the Caribbean. In 1611, the East India Company established England's first foothold in India. Even when expeditions ended disastrously, as did Henry Hudson's 1611 attempt to find the Northwest Passage, and Walter Raleigh's 1617 expedition to Guiana, they often asserted territorial claims that England would exploit in later decades. While Jamestown certainly struggled, the decimation of Indigenous populations and the arrival of the first enslaved Africans in 1619 laid the groundwork for future colonial success. England itself was not immune to threats from abroad. In 1625, for example, Barbary pirates (Muslim privateers who operated from North Africa) captured and enslaved sixty people from the Cornwall coast. Despite late Elizabethan "Edicts of Expulsion" authorizing the removal of "blackamoors" from England,

Black people were nonetheless present in England (and Scotland) in a variety of capacities during the period; the archives include records of a trumpeter, a needle maker, a decorated soldier, and “Grace Robinson, a Black moor” who had a seat at the laundress’s table in Anne Clifford’s household.

Although the Crown’s deliberate attempts to manage the economy were often misguided, its frequent inattention or refusal to interfere often had the unintentional effect of stimulating growth. Early seventeenth-century entrepreneurs undertook a wide variety of schemes for industrial and agricultural improvement. Some ventures were almost as loony as Sir Politic Would-be’s ridiculous moneymaking notions in Ben Jonson’s Volpone (1606), but others were serious, profitable enterprises. In the south, domestic industries began manufacturing goods like pins and light woollens that had previously been imported. In the north, newly developed coal mines provided fuel for England’s growing cities. In the east, landowners drained wetlands, producing more arable land to feed England’s rapidly growing population and to accrue wealth for themselves. These endeavors gave rise to a new respect for the practical arts, a faith in technology as a means of improving human life, and a conviction that the future might be better than the past: all important influences on the scientific theories of Francis Bacon and his seventeenth-century followers, even as thinkers such as Margaret Cavendish offered resistance and critique. Economic growth in this period owed as much to the initiative of individuals and small groups as to government policy, a factor that encouraged a reevaluation of the role of self-interest, the profit motive, and the role of business contracts in society. This reevaluation was a prerequisite for the secular, contractual political theories proposed by Thomas Hobbes and John Locke later in the seventeenth century. There were also multiple uprisings and riots by common people in the period, primarily over food scarcity and the enclosure of common lands. In March 1629, for example, hundreds of starving women and children boarded a Flemish ship in the Essex port town of Maldon and forced its crew to fill their caps and aprons with grain from its hold. The period also saw fierce contestations over vagrancy (including the mere presence of itinerant “Gypsies” and “Irish”), poor laws, and policing.

The Church of England also faced many challenges in the early seventeenth century, and James was again often most successful when he was least activist. Since the Reformation, English rulers considered themselves heads of the Church of England, and, largely for reasons of political order, demanded that their subjects belong to one unified church. Yet the Reformation itself had opened up many areas of religious debate, and England’s own history of vacillating between Protestant and Catholic rule meant that those debates were still very much alive. Sixteenth- and seventeenth-century English people argued over many aspects of ritual and faith. How should public worship be conducted, and what sorts of qualifications should ministers possess? How should scripture be understood? How should people pray? What did the sacrament of Communion mean? What happened to people’s souls after they died? Elizabeth’s government had needed to devise a common religious practice when actual consensus was impossible. Sensibly, it sought a middle ground between traditional and reformed views. Everyone was legally required to attend Church of England services, and the form of the services themselves was mandated in the Elizabethan Book of Common Prayer. The Book of Common Prayer deliberately avoided addressing abstruse theological controversies. The language of the English church service was carefully chosen to be open to several interpretations and acceptable to both Protestant- and Catholic-leaning subjects.

The Elizabethan compromise effectively tamed many of the Reformation’s divisive energies and proved acceptable to the majority of English people. Yet to staunch Catholics on one side, and ardent Protestants on the other, the Elizabethan church seemed to have sacrificed truth to political expediency. Catholics wanted to return England to the Roman fold; while some of them were loyal subjects of the queen, others advocated invasion by a foreign Catholic power. Meanwhile the “Puritans,” as they were disparagingly called—they referred to themselves as the “godly”—pressed for more thoroughgoing reformation in doctrine, ritual, and church government, urging the elimination of “popish” elements from worship services and “idolatrous” religious images from churches. Some, the Presbyterians, wanted to separate lay and clerical power in the national church, so that church leaders would be appointed by other ministers rather than the state. Others, known as separatists, advocated abandoning a national church in favor of small congregations of the “elect.”

The resistance of religious minorities to Elizabeth’s established church opened them to state persecution. In the 1580s and 1590s, Catholic priests and the laypeople who harbored them were executed for treason, and radical Protestants for heresy. Both groups thus greeted James’s accession enthusiastically; his mother, Mary, Queen of Scots, had been Catholic, while his upbringing had been in the strict reformed tradition of the Scottish Presbyterian Kirk. James began his reign with a conference at Hampton Court, one of his palaces, during which advocates debated a variety of religious views. Yet the Puritans failed to persuade him to make any substantive reforms. Practically speaking, the Puritan belief that congregations should choose their leaders diminished the monarch’s power by stripping him of authority over ecclesiastical appointments. More generally, allowing people to choose their leaders in any sphere of life threatened to subvert the entire system of deference and hierarchy upon which the institution of monarchy itself seemed to rest. As James famously remarked: “No bishop, no king.”

The Execution of the Gunpowder Plot Conspirators. This engraving by the Dutch artist Crispijn van de Passe shows the execution of the Gunpowder Conspirators for treason in January 1606. The punishment for treason was deliberately "cruel and unusual": the traitor was sentenced to be dragged through town on a wicker hurdle "at horse's tail," hanged but cut down while still conscious, and then castrated, disemboweled, beheaded, and his body cut into four pieces and parboiled. Though the punishment was often commuted to simple beheading or hanging, in the case of the Gunpowder Conspirators it was carried out in its entirety. On the left, the condemned men are taken to the place of execution. In the middle, the heart of one of the conspirators is being torn out, to be thrown into the fire. On the right, the heads of the conspirators are mounted on poles for display.

---

Catholics did not fare well in the new reign either. Initially inclined to lift Elizabethan sanctions against them, James hesitated when he realized the popular extent of the opposition to toleration. Then, barely two years into his reign, a small group of disaffected Catholics packed a cellar adjacent to the Houses of Parliament with gunpowder, intending to detonate it on the day that the king formally opened Parliament, with Prince Henry, the Houses of Lords and Commons, and the leading justices in attendance. The conspirators were arrested before they could effect their plan, but if the "Gunpowder Plot" had succeeded, it would have eliminated much of England's ruling class in a single tremendous explosion, and exposed the country to invasion by a foreign Catholic power. Not surprisingly, the Gunpowder Plot dramatically heightened anti-Catholic paranoia in England, and its apparently miraculous revelation was widely seen as a sign of God's care for England's Protestant governors. Many Catholics, known as "recusants" for their refusal to attend Church of England services, went underground.

In the end, James's ecclesiastical policies continued along the lines laid down by Elizabeth. By appointing bishops of varying doctrinal views, he restrained any single faction from controlling church policy. The most important religious event (and literary accomplishment) of James's reign was a newly commissioned translation of the Bible. First published in 1611, the King James Bible was a typically moderating document. A much more graceful rendering than its predecessor, the Geneva version produced by Puritan expatriates in the 1550s, the King James Bible immediately became the standard English scripture. Its impressive rhythms and memorable phrasing would influence writers for centuries. On the one hand, the new translation contributed to the Protestant aim of making the Bible widely available to every reader in their own language. On the other hand, unlike the Geneva Bible, the King James version translated controversial and ambiguous passages in ways that bolstered conservative preferences for a ceremonial church and for a hierarchically organized church government. Regardless, the widespread availability of an English Bible invited a range of interpreters, and interpretations, beyond the control of church or state. As the royalist William Cavendish wrote in a letter to the future Charles II in 1658, when the monarchy and nobility were in full crisis, "The Bible in English under every weaver's and chambermaid's arms hath done us much hurt."

James's moderation was not universally popular. Some Protestants yearned for a more confrontational policy toward Catholic powers—particularly toward England's old enemy, Spain. In the first decade of James's reign, this party clustered around James's eldest son and heir apparent, Prince Henry, who cultivated a militantly Protestant persona. When Henry died of typhoid fever in 1612, those who favored his policies were forced to seek avenues of power outside the royal court. By 1621, the House of Commons was developing a vigorous sense of its own independence, debating policy agendas often quite at odds with the Crown's, and openly attempting to use its power to approve taxation as a means of exacting concessions from the king.

James's second son, Prince Charles, came to the throne upon James's death in 1625. Unlike his father, Charles was not a theorist of royal absolutism, but he acted on that principle with an inflexibility that far exceeded his father's. By 1629 he had dissolved Parliament three times in frustration with its recalcitrance. He then embarked upon more than a decade of “personal rule” without summoning Parliament at all. Charles was more prudent in some respects than his father had been—he not only restrained the costs of his own court, but paid off his father’s staggering debts as well. Throughout his reign, he conscientiously applied himself to the business of government. Yet his refusal to involve powerful individuals and factions in the workings of the state inevitably alienated them and cut him off from important channels of information about the opinions and reactions of his people. Money was also a problem. Even a relatively frugal king required some funds for ambitious government initiatives; but without parliamentary approval, any taxes Charles imposed were widely perceived as illegal. As a result, even popular policies, such as Charles’s effort to build up the English navy, spawned misgivings among many of his subjects.

Religious conflicts also intensified. Charles’s queen, the French princess Henrietta Maria, supported an entourage of Roman Catholic priests and French women courtiers, protected English Catholics, and encouraged several noblewomen in her court to convert to Catholicism. While Charles remained a staunch member of the Church of England, he loved visual splendor and majestic ceremony in all aspects of life, spiritual and otherwise—proclivities that led his Puritan subjects to suspect him of popish sympathies. Charles’s profound attachment to his wife, so different from James’s sparring with Anna, only deepened their qualms. Like many fellow Puritans, Lucy Hutchinson blamed the debacle of Charles’s reign on his wife’s influence: concerned only with “the meritoriousness of advancing her own religion,” Hutchinson wrote, the queen used her “great wit and parts, and the power her haughty spirit kept over her husband” to “promote her own designs.”

Charles’s appointment of William Laud as archbishop of Canterbury, the ecclesiastical head of the English Church, further alienated the godly. Laud subscribed to a theology that most Puritans rejected. As followers of the sixteenth-century reformer John Calvin, Puritans held that salvation depended on faith in Christ, not “works.” Works were meaningless, because the deeds of sinful human beings could not be sanctified in the absence of faith; moreover, the Fall had so thoroughly corrupted human beings that they could not muster this faith without the help of God's grace. God chose (or refused) to extend grace to particular individuals on grounds that human beings were incapable of comprehending, and his decision had been made from eternity, before the individuals concerned were even born. In other words, the godly believed that God predestined people to be saved or damned, and Christ's redemptive sacrifice was designed only for those who were saved, the "elect." Laud, by contrast, advocated the Arminian doctrine that through Christ, God made redemption freely available to all human beings. (Arminius was a Dutch theologian.) Individuals could choose whether to respond to God's grace, and they could work toward their salvation by acts of charity, ritual devotion, and generosity to the church.

Although Laud's theology appears more generously inclusive than the Calvinist alternative, his ecclesiastical policies were uncompromising. Stripping many "Puritan" ministers of their posts, Laud aligned the doctrine and ceremonies of the English church with those of Roman Catholicism, which, like Arminianism, held works in high regard. In an ambitious project of church renovation, Laud also installed religious paintings and images in churches; he thought they promoted reverence in worshippers, but the more godly Protestants believed they encouraged idolatry. Laud also rebuilt and resituated church altars, making them more ornate and prominent—another change that dismayed Puritans, since it implied that the Eucharist, rather than the sermon, was the central element of worship. Herbert's magnificent poem "The Altar" nods toward this controversy. In the 1630s, thousands of Puritans departed for the New England colonies, but many more remained at home, deeply discontented and often resistant. In 1637 the Puritan writer William Prynne was found guilty of sedition, along with a fellow divine (Henry Burton) and a doctor (John Bastwick). As punishment, Prynne's nose was slit and the initials "S. L." were burned into his cheeks. The letters stood for "Seditious Libeller," but Prynne claimed that they signified "Stigma of Laud." This story, which Prynne wrote about in A New Discovery of the Prelates Tyranny (1641), and which Milton alludes to in his sonnet "On the New Forcers of Conscience," became fodder in the battle against Laud.

As the 1630s drew to a close, Archbishop Laud and Charles attempted to impose a version of the English liturgy and episcopal organization on Presbyterian Scotland. Unlike his father, Charles had little acquaintance with his northern realm, and he drastically underestimated the difficulties involved. The Scots objected on both nationalist and religious grounds, and they were not shy about expressing their objections: the bishop of Brechin, obliged to conduct divine service in the prescribed English style, mounted the pulpit armed with two pistols against his unruly congregation, while his wife, stationed on the floor below, backed him up with a blunderbuss. In the conflict that followed, the Bishops' Wars of 1639 and 1640, Charles's forces met with abject defeat. Exacerbating the situation, Laud at the same time was insisting on greater conformity within the English church. Riots in the London streets and the Scots' occupation of several northern English cities forced Charles to call into session the so-called Long Parliament, which would soon be managing a revolution.

LITERATURE AND CULTURE, 1603–1640

Old Ideas and New

In the first part of the seventeenth century, exciting new scientific theories were in the air; but older ways of thinking about the nature of things had not yet been superseded. Writers such as John Donne and Ben Jonson often invoked an inherited body of concepts even though they were aware that those concepts were being questioned or displaced. The Ptolemaic universe, with its fixed earth and circling sun, moon, planets, and stars, was a rich source of poetic imagery. So were the four elements—fire, earth, water, and air—that together were thought to constitute all matter, and the four bodily humors—choler, blood, phlegm, and black bile—that were supposed to determine a person's temperament and to cause physical and mental disease when out of balance. Late Elizabethans and Jacobeans considered themselves especially prone to melancholy, an ailment of scholars and thinkers stemming from an excess of black bile. Shakespeare's Hamlet is melancholic, as is Bosola in John Webster's The Duchess of Malfi and Milton's title figure in "Il Penseroso" ("the serious-minded one"). In his panoramic Anatomy of Melancholy (1621), Robert Burton argued that melancholy was universal.

Key concepts of this inherited system of knowledge were analogy and order. Donne was especially fond of drawing parallels between the macrocosm, or "big world," and the microcosm, or "little world," of the individual human being. (See also George Herbert's "Man".) Also widespread were versions of the "chain of being" that linked and ordered various kinds of beings in hierarchies. The order of nature, for instance, put God above angels, angels above human beings, human beings above animals, animals above plants, plants above rocks. The social order installed the king over his nobles, nobles over the gentry, gentry over yeomen, yeomen over common laborers. The order of the family set husband above wife, parents above children, master and mistress above servants, the elderly above the young. Each level had its particular function, and each was connected to those above and beneath in a tight network of obligation and dependency. Items that occupied similar positions in different hierarchies were related by analogy: thus a monarch was like God, and he was also like a father, the head of the family, or like a lion, most majestic of beasts, or like the sun, the most excellent of heavenly bodies. Medieval or Renaissance poets who call a king a sun or a lion, then, imagine themselves not to be forging a metaphor in their own creative imagination, but to be describing something like an obvious fact of nature. Many Jacobean tragedies depict the catastrophes that ensue when these hierarchies rupture and both the social order and the natural order disintegrate.

The Great Chain of Being. This illustration of the "Great Chain of Being" from Diego Valadés's 1579 Rhetorica Christiana shows the hierarchy of the universe according to Christian orthodoxy. God is at the top of the diagram surrounded by angels, with the blessed souls in heaven sitting on clouds just beneath; below them is the layer of humans, with Eve emerging from Adam's rib in the center; below that are layers of birds, fish, and beasts; below that is a layer of plants upon the earth. All these layers are connected by a chain running down the middle, imagined as connecting all of God's creation. At the bottom, detached from the Great Chain, are Satan and his rebel angels, who can be seen falling from heaven into hell in the right margin.

---

Yet this conceptual system was itself beginning to crumble. Francis Bacon advocated rooting out of the mind all the intellectual predilections that had made the old ideas so attractive: love of ingenious correlations, reverence for tradition, and a priori assumptions about what was possible in nature. Instead, he argued, groups of collaborators ought to design controlled experiments to find the truths of nature by empirical means. Even as Bacon was promoting his views in The Advancement of Learning, Novum Organum, and The New Atlantis, actual experiments and discoveries were calling the old verities into question. From the far-flung territories that England was beginning to colonize or to trade with, collectors brought animal, plant, and ethnological novelties, many of which were hard to subsume under old categories of understanding. Some of the materials that Richard Ligon collected in Barbados, for example, formed the basis of what would become the British Museum. William Harvey's discovery that blood circulated in the body shook received views on the function of blood, casting doubt on the theory of the humors. Galileo's telescope provided evidence confirming Copernican astronomical theory, which dislodged the earth from its stable central position in the cosmos and, in defiance of all ordinary observation, set it whirling around the sun. Galileo found evidence as well of change in the heavens, which were supposed to be perfect and incorruptible above the level of the moon. Donne, like other writers of his age, responded with a mixture of excitement and anxiety to such novel ideas:

And new philosophy calls all in doubt:
The element of fire is quite put out;
The sun is lost, and the earth, and no man's wit

Can well direct him where to look for it. ("An Anatomy of the World")

Several decades later, however, Milton embraced the new science, proudly recalling a visit during his European tour to "the famous Galileo, grown old, a prisoner to the Inquisition for thinking in astronomy otherwise than the Franciscan and Dominican licensers thought." In Paradise Lost, he would make complex poetic use of the astronomical controversy, considering how, and how far, humans should pursue scientific knowledge. In the invocation to her epic poem Order and Disorder, Lucy Hutchinson asks her muse: "Let not my thoughts beyond their bound aspire." Yet the poem's celebration of the "mystic wonders" of the world is nonetheless infused with the materialist views found in Lucretius's De rerum natura (On the Nature of Things), which Hutchinson was the first to translate into English. Margaret Cavendish's materialist philosophy theorized a self-moving nature imbued with knowledge, and her poetry imagined and celebrated both possible worlds and animal and plant intelligences. Similarly influenced by materialist philosophies, Hester Pulter wrote poems in which she imagined the processes by which beings, "dispersed to atoms," "give a being to another world," and a flower reduced to ashes is brought back to life. The "new philosophy" neither wholly displaced the old, nor settled into common acceptance without robust and ongoing debate.

Patrons, Printers, and Acting Companies

The social institutions, customs, and practices that had supported and regulated writers in Tudor times changed only gradually before 1640. As it had under Elizabeth, the Church promoted writing of several kinds: devotional treatises; guides to meditation; controversial tracts; "cases of conscience," which work out difficult moral issues in complex situations; and, especially, sermons. Since everyone was required to attend church, everyone heard sermons at least once and often twice on Sunday, as well as on religious or national holidays. The essence of a sermon, Protestants agreed, was the careful exposition of scripture, and its purpose was to instruct and to move. Yet styles varied; while some preachers, like Donne, strove to enthrall their congregations with all the resources of artful rhetoric, others, especially Puritans, sought an undecorated style that would display God's word in its own splendor. Printing made it easy to circulate many copies of sermons, blurring the line between oral delivery and written text, and enhancing the role of printers and booksellers in disseminating God's word.

Many writers of the period depended in one way or another on literary patronage. Like their medieval forebears, Jacobean and Caroline (from Carolus, Latin for Charles) aristocrats were expected to reward dependents in return for services and homage. In the early seventeenth century, although commercial relationships were rapidly replacing feudal ones, patronage pervaded all walks of life: it governed relationships between landlords and tenants, masters and servants, kings and courtiers. Writers were assimilated into this system partly because their works reflected well on the patron, and partly because their all-around intelligence and writing skills made them useful members of elite households or political factions. Important patrons of the time included the royal family—especially Queen Anna, who sponsored court masques, and Prince Henry—the members of the intermarried Sidney and Herbert families, and Lucy Harington Russell, Countess of Bedford, Queen Anna's confidante.

Because the patronage relationship often took the form of an exchange of favors rather than a simple financial transaction, its terms were variable and thus difficult to recover from a historical distance. A poet might dedicate a poem or a work to a patron in the expectation of a simple cash payment, but a patron might provide a wide range of other benefits: a place to live; employment as a secretary, tutor, or household servant; or a gift of clothing. (Textiles were valuable commodities.) Donne, for instance, received financial support from Lucy Russell, Countess of Bedford; inexpensive lodging from the Drury family, for whom he wrote the Anniversaries; a suit of clerical attire from James Hay, when he took orders in the Church of England; and advancement in the church from King James. Ben Jonson lived for several years at the country estates of Lord Aubigny and of Robert Sidney, in whose honor he wrote "To Penshurst"; he received a regular salary from the king in return for writing court masques; and he served as chaperone to Sir Walter Raleigh's son on a Continental tour. Aemilia Lanyer claimed to have resided for some time in the household of Margaret Clifford, Countess of Cumberland, and her frequent invocations of the countess in her Salve Deus Rex Judaeorum invite an ongoing relationship. Andrew Marvell lived for two years with Thomas Fairfax, tutored Fairfax's daughter, and dedicated his great country house poem, Upon Appleton House, to him. All these quite different relationships and forms of remuneration fall under the rubric of patronage.

The patronage system required the poets involved to hone their skills in praising their patrons. Many of Jonson's epigrams, Donne's verse letters, and Lanyer's dedicatory poems evoke communities of virtuous poets and patrons joined by bonds of mutual respect and affection, or by shared religious, philosophical, or political concerns. Like the line between sycophantic flattery and truthful depiction, the line between patronage and friendship could be a thin one. Literary manuscripts circulated among circles of acquaintances and supporters, many of whom were, at least occasionally, writers as well as readers. Jonson esteemed Mary Wroth both as a fellow poet and as a member of the Sidney family to whom he owed so much. Donne became part of a coterie around Queen Anna's chief courtier, Lucy Russell, Countess of Bedford, who was also an important patron for Ben Jonson, Michael Drayton, and Samuel Daniel. The countess evidently wrote poems herself, although apparently only one attributed to her has survived.

Writers did not have to print a poem to present it to a patron or to circulate it among friends or allies. In early seventeenth-century England, the reading public for sophisticated literary works was small and concentrated in a few social settings: the royal court, the universities, the Inns of Court (or law schools), and great (and a few less-than-great) households, some of which were headed by women. In these circumstances, manuscript circulation was an effective way of reaching, and (at least in theory) restricting, one's audience. A great deal of writing thus remained in manuscript in early seventeenth-century England. The collected works of many important writers of the period—most notably John Donne, George Herbert, Andrew Marvell, and William Shakespeare—appeared in print only posthumously, in editions produced by friends or admirers. Other writers, like Robert Herrick, collected and printed their own works long after they were written and (probably) circulated in manuscript. Still others, including Katherine Philips, claimed that their work had been pirated, or published without their consent. In consequence, it is often difficult to accurately date the composition of a seventeenth-century poem. Some writings, like the entirety of Hester Pulten's oeuvre and the vast majority of Lucy Hutchinson's, were never printed. When authors did not participate in the printing of their own works, editorial questions multiply—when, for instance, the printed version of a poem is inconsistent with a surviving manuscript copy. For some poets, including Donne, there are hundreds of extant manuscripts.

Nonetheless, the printing of all kinds of literary works was becoming more common. Writers such as Francis Bacon, who hoped to reach large numbers of readers with whom they were not acquainted, usually arranged for the printing of their texts soon after they were composed. The sense that the printing of lyric poetry, in particular, was a bit vulgar began to fade when the already famous Ben Jonson collected his own works in a grand folio edition in 1616, the same year (not coincidentally) in which the king published his own collected Works.

Until 1640, the Stuart kings kept in place the strict controls over print publication originally instituted by Henry VIII in response to the ideological threat posed by the Reformation. Henry had given the members of London's Stationer's Company a monopoly on all printing; in return for their privilege, they were supposed to submit texts for prepublication censorship. In the latter part of the sixteenth century, presses associated with the universities at Oxford and Cambridge began operation as well, but they focused largely on scholarly and theological books. As a result, with a few exceptions, such as George Herbert's The Temple, which was published by Cambridge University Press, almost all printed literary texts were produced in London. Most of them were sold there as well, in the booksellers' stalls set up outside St. Paul's Cathedral.

The licensing system located both primary responsibility for a printed work and its ownership with the printer rather than with the author. Printers typically paid writers a one-time fee for the use of their work, but the payment was small, and the authors of popular texts earned no royalties from the copies sold. As a result, no one could make a living as a writer in the early seventeenth century by producing best sellers. The first English writer to formally arrange for royalties was John Milton, who received five pounds up front for Paradise Lost, and another five pounds (and two hundred copies) at the end of each of the first three impressions. Legal ownership of and control over printed works remained with the printers: authorial copyright would not become a reality until the early eighteenth century. During the early seventeenth century, some publishers began to specialize in literary texts. Humphrey Moseley, for example, published Donne, Richard Crashaw, Henry Vaughan, and Milton, among others. Many of these volumes included engravings of the authors on their title pages. A not-very-flattering portrait of a middle-aged Milton in his 1645 Poems drew a marked contrast with the cherubic engraving of the sixteen-year-old Abraham Cowley printed on the title page to his Blossoms (1633).

In monetary terms, a more promising outlet for writers was the commercial theater, which provided the first successful literary market in English history. Profitable and popular acting companies established successfully in London in Elizabeth's time continued to play a very important cultural role under James and Charles. Because the acting companies staged a large number of different plays and paid for them at a predictable, if not generous, rate, they enabled a few hardworking writers to support themselves as full-time professionals. One of them, Thomas Dekker, commented bemusedly on the novelty of being paid for the mere products of one's imagination: "The theater," he wrote, "is your poet's Royal Exchange upon which their muses—that are now turned to merchants—meeting, barter away that light commodity of words." (The Royal Exchange was the center of commerce for the City of London.) In James's reign, Shakespeare was at the height of his powers: Othello, King Lear, Macbeth, Antony and Cleopatra, The Winter's Tale, The Tempest, and other major plays were first staged during these years. So were Jonson's major comedies: Volpone, Epicoene, The Alchemist, and Bartholomew Fair. The most important new playwright was John Webster, whose dark tragedies The White Devil and The Duchess of Malfi combined gothic horror with stunningly beautiful poetry.

Just as printers were legally the owners of the texts they printed, so theater companies, not playwrights, were the owners of the texts they performed. Typically, companies guarded their scripts closely, permitting them to be printed only in times of financial distress, or when the works were so old that printing them seemed unlikely to reduce the paying audience. As a result, many Jacobean and Caroline plays are lost or available only in corrupt or posthumous versions. For contemporaries, though, a play was "published" not by being printed but by being performed. Aware of the dangerous potential of plays in arousing the sentiments of large crowds of onlookers, the Stuarts, like the Tudors before them, instituted tight controls over dramatic performances. Like printers, acting companies were obliged to submit works to the censor before public presentation.

Authors, printers, and acting companies who flouted the censorship laws were subject to imprisonment, fines, or even bodily mutilation.

Queen Elizabeth cut off the hand of a man who disagreed in print with her marriage plans; King Charles, the ears of a man who inveighed against court masques. Jonson and his collaborators found themselves in prison for ridiculing James's broad Scots accent in a comedy. The effects of censorship were therefore far-reaching across literary genres. Since overt criticism or satire of the great was so dangerous, political writing was apt to be oblique and allegorical. As the literary theorist George Puttenham put it, the genre of pastoral used "the veil of homely [rustic] persons" to "glance at greater matters, and such as perchance had not been safe to have been disclosed in any other sort." Writers often employed animal fables, tales of distant lands, or descriptions of long-past historical events to comment on contemporary issues.

While the commercial theaters were profitable businesses that made most of their money from paying audiences, several factors combined to bring writing for the theater closer to the court than it had been in Elizabeth's time. The Elizabethan theater companies had been officially associated with noblemen who guaranteed their legitimacy (in contrast to unsponsored traveling players, who were subject to punishment as vagrants). Early in his reign, James brought the major theater companies under royal auspices. Shakespeare's company, the most successful of the day, became the King's Men: it performed not only Shakespeare's plays, but also Volpone and The Duchess of Malfi. Queen Anna, Prince Henry, Prince Charles, and Princess Elizabeth sponsored other companies. Royal patronage, which brought with it tangible rewards and regular court performances, naturally encouraged the theater companies to pay more attention to courtly taste. Shakespeare's Macbeth put onstage Scots history and witches, two of James's own interests; in King Lear, the hero's disastrous division of his kingdom may reflect controversies over James's proposed union of Scotland and England. Both Othello and The Tempest were performed at court, and the latter alluded to contemporary colonial mishaps. In the first four decades of the seventeenth century, court-affiliated theater companies such as the King's Men increasingly cultivated audiences markedly more affluent than the audiences they had sought in the 1580s and 1590s, performing in intimate, expensive indoor theaters instead of, or as well as, in the cheap popular amphitheaters. The Duchess of Malfi, for instance, was probably written with the King's Men's indoor theater at Blackfriars in mind; several scenes depend for their effect on control over lighting that would have been impossible outdoors. Partly because the commercial theaters seemed increasingly to cater to the affluent and courtly elements of society, they attracted the ire of the king's opponents when civil war broke out in the 1640s. Even before closet drama took off in the 1640s, Elizabeth Cary, Lady Falkland, published The Tragedy of Mariam (1613), a remarkable, and politically resonant, closet drama about a queen subjected to her husband's domestic and political tyranny. While the term "closet" suggests private reading, closet dramas were often read aloud or performed in smaller settings. Wroth's unpublished play Loves Victory (ca. 1620), which is full of familial and topical allusions, was likely performed at Penshurst, or another country estate nearby.

Jacobean Writers and Genres

The era saw important changes in poetic fashion. Some major Elizabethan genres fell out of favor—long allegorical or mythological narratives, sonnet sequences (Wroth's 1621 Pamphilia to Amphilanthus excepted), and pastoral poems. Others came into ascendancy—particularly short, concentrated, often witty poems. Poets and prose writers alike often preferred the jagged rhythms of colloquial speech to the elaborate ornamentation and near-musical orchestration of sound sought by many Elizabethans. Many notable poets of these years, including Jonson, Donne, and Herbert, led this shift and also promoted a variety of "new" genres: love elegy and satire after the classical models of Ovid and Horace, epigram, verse epistle, meditative religious lyric, and country house poem. Aemilia Lanyer also made notable contributions, particularly to these last three of these genres. Her Salve Deus Rex Judaeorum (1611) contained verse letters to powerful court women, a long poem on Christ's passion that focused on the role of godly women, and the first country house poem, "The Description of Cookham."

Although Jonson, Donne, and Herbert differed enormously from one another, they all exercised a significant influence on the poets of the next generation. A native Londoner, Jonson first distinguished himself as an acute observer of urban manners in a series of early, controversial satiric plays. Although he wrote two of his most moving poems to his dead children, Jonson rarely focused on the family dynamics that so profoundly concerned his contemporary Shakespeare. When generational and dynastic matters do figure in his poetry, as they do at the end of "To Penshurst," they seem part of the agrarian, feudal order that Jonson may have romanticized but certainly knew was disappearing. Jonson interested himself in relationships that were negotiated by the participants themselves, often in bustling urban or courtly milieux in which blood kinship no longer decisively determined one's social place. Jonson's poems of praise celebrate and exemplify classical and humanist ideals of friendship: like-minded men and women elect to join in a community that fosters wisdom, generosity, civic responsibility, and mutual respect. In his plays and satiric poems, Jonson stages the violation of those values with such riotous comprehensiveness that the very survival of such ideals seems endangered; the plays swarm with voracious swindlers and their eager victims, social climbers both adroit and inept, and a dizzying assortment of morons and misfits. In many of Jonson's plays, rogues or wits collude to victimize others. These stormy, self-interested alliances, apparently so different from the virtuous friendships of the poems of praise, in fact resemble them in one respect: they are connections entered into by choice, not by law, inheritance, or custom.

Throughout his life, Jonson earned his living from his writing, composing plays for the public theater while also attracting patronage as a poet and a writer of court masques. He found particular success collaborating with the architect and set- and costume-designer Inigo Jones. Jonson's acute awareness of his audience was partly, then, a sheerly practical matter. Yet his yearning for recognition far exceeded any desire for material reward. A gifted poet, Jonson argued, was a society's proper judge and teacher, and he could be effective only if his audience understood and respected the poet's exalted role. Jonson set out unabashedly to create that audience and to monumentalize himself as a great English author. When he took the step—unusual for his time—of collecting his poems, plays, and masques in an elegant folio volume titled The Works of Ben Jonson, a contemporary epigram poked fun at his pretensions: "Pray tell me Ben," the epigram asks, "where doth the mystery lurk / What others call a play, you call a work?" Jonson's audacious attempt to dignify popular drama may have made him the butt of someone's joke, but it had far-reaching consequences for the canonization of seventeenth-century stage plays, including in the First Folio of Shakespeare's, which appeared in 1623.

Jonson's influence on the next generation of writers, and, through them, into the Restoration and the eighteenth century, was an effect both of his poetic mastery of his chosen modes and of his powerful personal example. Jonson mentored a group of younger poets known as the Tribe (or Sons) of Ben, meeting regularly with some of them in the Apollo Room of the Devil Tavern in London. Many of the royalist, or "Cavalier," poets—Robert Herrick, Thomas Carew, Richard Lovelace, Sir John Suckling, Edmund Waller, Henry Vaughan (in his secular verse)—proudly acknowledged their relationship to Jonson or gave some evidence of it in their verse. Most of them also absorbed Jonson's attitude toward print and in later decades supervised the publication of their own poems. Jonson himself testifies to his particular indebtedness to Mary Wroth; and while his relationship with Lanyer is unknown, there are myriad resonances between the first two country house poems, her "The Description of Cookham" and his "To Penshurst."

Donne, like Jonson, spent most of his life in or near London, often in the company of other writers and intellectuals—indeed, in the company of many of the same writers and intellectuals, since the two men were friends and shared some of the same patrons. Yet unlike Jonson's, most of Donne's poetry concerns itself not with a crowded social panorama but with a dyad—a relationship between the speaker and one single other being, whether a lover, a friend, or God—that in its intensity blots out the claims of lesser relationships. Love for Donne encompasses an astonishing range of emotional experiences: from the lusty impatience of "To His Mistress Going to Bed" to the cheerful promiscuity of "The Indifferent" and mysterious platonic telepathy of "Air and Angels"; from the vengeful wit of "The Apparition" to the postcoital tranquility of "The Good Morrow." While for Jonson the shared meal among friends often becomes an emblem of communion, for Donne sexual consummation has something of the same highly charged symbolic character, a moment in which the isolated individual can, however temporarily, escape the boundaries of selfhood in union with another. As he writes in "The Canonization,"

The phoenix riddle hath more wit
By us: we two being one, are it.
So, to one neutral thing both sexes fit.

In the religious poems, where Donne both yearns for an intimate, physical relationship with God and knows it is impossible, he does not abandon his characteristic bodily metaphors. Donne was fascinated by the doctrine of the Incarnation—God's taking material form in the person of Jesus Christ—and the doctrine of the bodily resurrection of the dead at the Last Day,

Christian teachings to which he returns again and again in his poems, sermons, and devotional writings. While sexual and religious love had long shared a common vocabulary, Donne delights in making that overlap new and shocking. He likens conjoined lovers to saints; demands to be raped by God; speculates after his wife's death that God killed her because he was jealous of Donne's divided loyalty; imagines Christ encouraging his bride, the church, to "open" herself to as many men as possible. Donne also celebrated friendship in his poetry, both with men (as in his verse letter to Henry Wotton) and with women—particularly with his patron, Lucy Harington Russell, Countess of Bedford, for whom he wrote five verse letters, and with whom he exchanged books, letters, and poems.

Throughout Donne's life, his faith, like his intellect, was anything but quiet. Born into a devoutly Roman Catholic family just as the persecution of Catholics was intensifying in Elizabethan England, Donne eventually became a member of the Church of England. If "Satire 3" is any indication, the conversion was accompanied by profound doubt and an existential crisis. Donne's restless mind can lead him in surprising and sometimes unorthodox directions. At the same time, overwhelmed with a sense of his own unworthiness, he courts God's punishment, demanding to be spat upon, flogged, burned, and broken down in the expectation that suffering at God's hand will restore him to grace and favor.

In both style and content, Donne's poems are addressed to a select few rather than to the public at large. His style is demanding, characterized by learned terms, audaciously far-fetched analogies, and an intellectually sophisticated play of ironies. Even Donne's sermons, which were attended by large crowds, share the knotty difficulty of the poems, as well as something of their quality of intimate address. Donne circulated his poems in manuscript and largely avoided print publication (most of his poems were printed after his death). Some critics have regarded Donne as the founder of a "Metaphysical" school of poetry. (The term was coined by Samuel Johnson, who argued that in Donne's poetry, "the most heterogeneous ideas are yoked by violence together.") We find echoes of Donne's style in many later poets: in Thomas Carew (who praised Donne as a "monarch of wit"), George Herbert, Richard Crashaw, Sir John Suckling, Abraham Cowley, Hester Pulter, Andrew Marvell, and Katherine Philips.

Herbert, the younger son of a wealthy, cultivated, and well-connected family, seemed destined in early adulthood for a brilliant career as a diplomat or government servant. Yet he turned his back on worldly greatness to be ordained a priest in the Church of England. Moreover, eschewing a highly visible career as an urban preacher, he spent the remaining years of his short life ministering to the tiny rural parish of Bemerton in Wiltshire. Herbert's poetry is shot through with the difficulty and joy of this renunciation. Herbert identifies literary ambition—pride in one's independent creativity—as a temptation that must be resisted, whether it takes the form of Jonson's openly competitive aspiration for literary preeminence, or Donne's brilliantly ironic self-displaying performance. Instead, Herbert seeks other models for poetic agency: the secretary taking dictation from a master, the musician playing in harmonious consort with others, the member of a church congregation who speaks with and for a community.

Herbert destroyed his secular verse in English, and he turned his volume of religious verse over to a friend only on his deathbed, asking him to print it if he thought it would be useful to "some dejected poor soul," but otherwise to burn it. The 177 lyrics contained in that volume, The Temple, display a complex religious sensibility and great artistic subtlety in an amazing variety of stanza forms. Herbert was the major influence on the next generation of religious lyric poets and was explicitly recognized as such by Henry Vaughan and Richard Crashaw. (Crashaw titled his own collection Steps to the Temple.)

Like Herbert, Lady Mary Wroth was part of a well-connected and influential family. Wroth grew up at Penshurst, and as the niece of Sir Philip Sidney and Mary Sidney Herbert, Countess of Pembroke, she seemed destined for literary fame. When she published her long prose romance, The Countess of Montgomery's Urania, together with a Petrarchan sonnet sequence titled Pamphilia to Amphilanthus in 1621, she put her own stamp on the two famous genres. The Urania overturns many of the conventions of romance by focusing on a number of interlinked royal families and imagining the literary—as well as romantic—careers of their queens. The sonnet sequence Pamphilia to Amphilanthus, which takes its name from the romance's main characters, not only reverses the gender of lover and beloved but offers a bracing analysis of female subjectivity and desire. When Wroth's romance was criticized for "traducing," or shaming, living people, she told the Duke of Buckingham that the "strange constructions" that were made of her book were "as far from my meaning as is possible for truth to be from conjecture." Yet her choice of (notorious) publishers and (a famous) engraver indicates the nature and the scale of her ambition.

The Jacobean period saw the emergence of what would become a major prose genre, the familiar essay. The works of the French inventor of the form, Michel de Montaigne, appeared in English translation in 1603, influencing Shakespeare as well as later writers such as Sir Thomas Browne and Margaret Cavendish. Yet the first essays written in English—the work of Francis Bacon, who was attorney general under Elizabeth and eventually lord chancellor under James—bear little resemblance to Montaigne's intimate, wide-ranging, conversational pieces. Bacon's essays present pithy, sententious, sometimes provocative claims in a tone of cool objectivity, tempering moral counsel with an awareness of the importance of prudence and expediency in practical affairs. In Novum Organum Bacon adapts his deliberately discontinuous mode of exposition to outline a new scientific method, holding out the tantalizing prospect of eventual mastery over the natural world, and boldly articulating the ways in which science might improve the human condition. In his fictional utopia, The New Atlantis, Bacon imagines a society that realizes his dream of carefully orchestrated collaborative research, so different from what he saw as the erratic, uncoordinated efforts of alchemists and amateurs in his own day. Bacon's philosophically revolutionary approach to the natural world profoundly affected scientifically minded people over the next several generations. His writings influenced the materialist philosophy of his erstwhile secretary, Thomas Hobbes; encouraged Oliver Cromwell to attempt a large-scale overhaul of the university curriculum during the 1650s; and inspired the formation of the Royal Society, an organization of experimental scientists, in 1660. In the 1650s and 1660s, Margaret Cavendish responded to Bacon (and to Hobbes and the Royal Society, which she was the first woman to visit) by questioning some of their methods and instruments, and making a powerful case for the role of speculation, contemplation, and imagination in the "work of discovery."

THE CAROLINE ERA, 1625–1640

When Charles I came to the throne in 1625, Lucy Hutchinson recalled, “The fools and bawds, mimics and catamites of the former court grew out of fashion.” The changed style of the court directly affected the arts and literature of the Caroline period (a name derived from Carolus, Latin for Charles). Charles and his French queen, Henrietta Maria, were art collectors on a large scale and patrons of such painters as Peter Paul Rubens and Anthony Van Dyck; the latter’s portrayal of Charles as a heroic figure of knightly romance, mounted on a splendid stallion, is included in the color insert to this volume. The conjunction of chivalric virtue and divine beauty or love, symbolized in the union of the royal couple, was the dominant theme of Caroline court masques, which were even more extravagantly hyperbolic than their Jacobean predecessors. Henrietta Maria encouraged an artistic and literary cult of platonic love, which some courtier-poets mocked in more licentiously physical terms, and others celebrated in poems and court entertainments. In The Blazing World, Margaret Cavendish does both, imagining the presence of several souls in one body as a “Platonic seraglio,” or harem.

The religious tensions between the Caroline Laudian church and the Puritan opposition produced something of a culture war. In 1633 Charles reissued the Book of Sports, originally published by his father in 1618, prescribing traditional holiday festivities and Sunday sports in every parish. Like his father, he saw these recreations as the rural, downscale equivalent of the court masque: harmless, healthy diversions for people who otherwise spent most of their waking hours hard at work. Puritans, however, regarded masques and rustic dances as occasions for sin, the maypole as a vestige of pagan phallus worship, and Sunday sports as a profanation of the Sabbath. In 1632 William Prynne staked out the most extreme Puritan position, publishing a thousand-page tirade, Histriomastix: The Player’s Scourge, against stage plays, court masques, maypoles, Laudian church rituals, stained glass windows, mixed dancing, and other outrages, all of which he associated with licentiousness, effeminacy, and the seduction of popish idolatry. As punishment for this cultural critique, Prynne was stripped of his academic degrees, ejected from the legal profession, set in the pillory, and sentenced to life imprisonment. He also had his books burned and his ears cut off. The severity of the punishment indicates the perceived danger of Prynne's book, and the inextricability of literary and cultural affairs from politics.

Milton's astonishingly virtuosic early poems also respond to the tensions of the 1630s. Milton repudiated both courtly aesthetics and Prynne's wholesale prohibitions, developing reformed versions of pastoral, masque, and hymn. In "On the Morning of Christ's Nativity," the birth of Christ coincides with a casting out of idols and the flight of false gods, stanzas that suggest contemporary Puritan resistance to Laudian policies. Milton's magnificent funeral elegy "Lycidas" firmly rejects the poetic career of the Cavalier poet who disregards high artistic ambition to "sport with Amaryllis in the shade / Or with the tangles of Neaera's hair." The poem also vehemently denounces the establishment clergy, ignorant and greedy "blind mouths" who rob their flocks of spiritual nourishment.

King Charles at Prayer. This frontispiece from Eikon Basilike (Latin for Portrait of the King) represents the praying king as a Christlike martyr surrounded by allegorical representations of virtue under trial. The left background shows a rock besieged by waves in a storm, surmounted with a Latin caption reading "Triumphing unmoved." The left foreground displays palm trees with weights hung to their branches, which was supposed to make them grow more vigorously: the Latin caption reads "Virtue grows under burdens." A shaft of light pierces the storm clouds to illuminate Charles's head, with the caption "More clear out of the shadows." Wearing his coronation robes, Charles is nonetheless shown turning away from this turmoil, having cast aside an earthly crown, labeled "Vanity," to grasp a crown of thorns, labeled "Grace." Set before him is a "treatise of Christ" and a Bible reading "In your words, my hope." Charles is receiving a vision from heaven of the immortal crown, "Blessed and Eternal," with which his supporters believed God would reward him. Published within days of the king's execution, Eikon Basilike was an immediate best seller. In 1649 alone, thirty-five editions were published in England and twenty-five elsewhere in Europe.

---

THE REVOLUTIONARY ERA, 1640–1660

Early in the morning on January 30, 1649, Charles Stuart, the dethroned king Charles I, set off across St. James Park for his execution, surrounded by a heavy guard. He wore two shirts because the weather was frigid, and he did not want the thousands who had gathered to watch him be beheaded to think he was shivering with fear. The black-draped scaffold had been erected just outside James I's elegant Banqueting House, inside of which so many court masques had celebrated the might of the Stuart monarchs and assured them of their people's love and gratitude. To those who could not attend, newsbooks provided eyewitness accounts of the dramatic events of the execution, as they had of Charles's trial the week before. Contemporary poets registered the enormity of the execution as well. The royalist Katherine Philips asked "what noble eye could see (and careless pass) / The dying lion kicked by every ass?" Marvell's famously ambivalent celebration of Oliver Cromwell in "An Horatian Ode" includes a remarkable description of the "tragic scaffold" around which "armed bands / Did clap their bloody hands" as Charles tried "the axe's edge."

The execution of Charles I was understood at the time, and is still seen by many historians today, as a watershed event in English history. How did it come to pass? Historians do not agree over what caused "the English revolution," or, as it is alternatively called, the English Civil Wars. Some argue that the conflict was largely religious, others that long-term changes in English society and the English economy led to rising social tensions and eventually to violent conflict. New capitalist modes of production in agriculture, industry, and trade were often incompatible with older feudal norms and agrarian modes of production. The gentry—an affluent, highly educated class below the nobility but above the artisans, mechanics, and yeomen—played an increasingly important part in national affairs, as did the rich merchants in London; but the traditional social hierarchies failed to grant them the economic, political, and religious freedoms they believed they deserved. The guild democracy movement also achieved successes in the period, particularly among transport workers like the Thames watermen who democratized their company in the early 1640s. Another group of historians, the “revisionists,” emphasize instead short-term and avoidable causes of the war—unlucky chances, personal idiosyncrasies, and poor decisions made by a small group of overly influential individuals.

Whatever caused the outbreak of hostilities, there is no doubt that the twenty-year period between 1640 and 1660 saw the emergence of concepts that would be central to bourgeois liberal thought for centuries to come: religious toleration, separation of church and state, freedom from press censorship, popular sovereignty, and heightened nationalism and imperialism. These concepts developed out of bitter disputes centering on three fundamental questions: What is the ultimate source of political power? What kind of church government is laid down in scripture, and therefore ought to be settled in England, and what should be the relation between the church and the state? What is England’s role vis-à-vis other nations and powers, particularly on the sea, in trade, and in the race for colonies? The theories that evolved in response to these questions contained the seeds of much that is familiar in modern thought, mixed with much that is forbiddingly alien. The participants in these disputes were not attempting to predict the shape of modern liberalism; instead, they were responding powerfully to the most important problems and competitions of their day. The need to find the right answers was particularly urgent for the Millenarians among them, who, interpreting the upheavals of the time through the lens of the apocalyptic book of Revelation, believed that their day was very near to being the last day of all. Others, like the Diggers, fought for communal land ownership and the abolishment of private property.

When the so-called Long Parliament convened in 1640, it did not plan to execute a monarch or even to start a war. It did, however, want to secure its rights in the face of Charles’s absolutist tendencies. Refusing merely to approve taxes and go home, as Charles would have wished, the Long Parliament insisted that it could remain in session until its members agreed to disband. Then it set about abolishing extralegal taxes and courts, reining in the bishops' powers, and arresting (and eventually trying and executing) two of the king's ministers—Thomas Wentworth, Earl of Strafford, and Archbishop William Laud. The collapse of effective royal government meant that the machinery of press censorship, which had been a Crown responsibility, no longer restrained the printing of explicit commentary on contemporary affairs of state. As Parliament debated, therefore, presses poured forth a flood of treatises arguing vociferously on all sides of the questions about church and state, creating a lively public forum for political discussion where none had existed before. The suspension of censorship permitted the development of weekly newsbooks, the forerunners of modern newspapers; they reported, and editorialized on, current domestic events from varying political and religious perspectives.

The Tower of London as seen from the River Thames in 1647. From an engraving by Wenceslaus Hollar.

---

As the rift widened between Parliament and the king in 1641, Charles sought to arrest five members of Parliament for treason, and Londoners rose in arms against him. The king fled to York, while the queen escaped to the Continent. Negotiations for compromise broke down over the issues that would derail them at every future stage: control of the army and the church. On July 12, 1642, Parliament voted to raise an army, and on August 22 the king stood before a force of two thousand soldiers on horse and foot at Nottingham, unfurled his royal standard, and summoned his liegemen to his aid. Civil war had begun. Regions of the country, cities, towns, social classes, and even families found themselves painfully divided. Both John Milton and Lucy Hutchinson, for example, had relatives fighting on the other side of the war, and the royalist Katherine Philips was married to a Parliamentarian. The king set up court and an alternative parliament in Oxford, to which many in the House of Lords and some in the House of Commons transferred their allegiance.

In the First Civil War (1642–46), Parliament and the Presbyterian clergy that supported it had limited aims. They hoped to secure the rights of the House of Commons to limit the king's power over the army and the church—but not to depose him—and to settle Presbyterianism as the national established church. As Puritan armies moved through the country, fighting at Edgehill, Marston Moor, Naseby, and elsewhere, they also frequently undertook a crusade to stamp out idolatry in English churches, smashing religious images and stained glass windows and lopping off the heads of statues, much as an earlier generation had done at the time of the English Reformation. Their ravages are still visible in English churches and cathedrals.

But the Puritans were not a homogeneous group, as the 1643 Toleration Controversy revealed. The Presbyterians wanted a national Presbyterian church, with dissenters punished and silenced as before. But Congregationalists, Independents, Baptists, and other separatists opposed a national church and pressed for some measure of toleration, for themselves at least. In 1641 the Independent Katherine Chidley wrote that she knew “of no true Divinity that teacheth men to be Lords over the Conscience,” and the religious radical Roger Williams, just returned from New England, argued that Christ mandated the complete separation of church and state and the civic toleration of those following all religions, including Roman Catholics, Jews, and Muslims. Yet to most people, the civil war itself seemed to confirm that people of different faiths could not coexist peacefully. Thus while sects continued to proliferate—Seekers, Finders, Antinomians, Fifth Monarchists, Quakers, Muggletonians, Ranters—even the most broad-minded of the age often attempted to draw a line between what was acceptable and what was not. Predictably, their lines failed to coincide. In Areopagitica (1644), John Milton argues vigorously against pre-publication press censorship and for toleration of most Protestants—but for him, Catholics were beyond the pale. Robert Herrick regarded Catholic rites—and even some pagan ones—indulgently, but could not stomach the zeal of the godly.

In 1648, after a period of negotiation and a brief Second Civil War, the king's army was definitively defeated. His supporters were captured or fled into exile, losing position and property. Yet Charles, imprisoned on the Isle of Wight, remained a threat. He was a natural rallying point for those disillusioned by parliamentary rule—many people disliked Parliament's legal but heavy taxes even more than they had disliked the king's illegal but lighter ones. Charles repeatedly attempted to escape, and was accused of trying to open the realm to a foreign invasion. Some powerful leaders of the victorious New Model Army took drastic action. They expelled from the House of Commons royalists and Presbyterians who still wanted to come to an accommodation with the king, and abolished the House of Lords. With consensus ensured by the purgation of dissenting viewpoints, the army brought the king to trial for high treason in the Great Hall of Westminster. There were dissenters, including from the Parliamentary side. Most famously, the commander in chief of the army, Thomas Fairfax, refused to participate in the king's trial. On the day of sentencing (January 27), when the president of the court declared that Parliament was trying the king in the name of "the commons and people of England," Anne Fairfax, Thomas Fairfax's wife, cried out from the gallery, "Not half, nor a quarter of the people." "Oliver Cromwell," she added, "is a rogue and a traitor."

After the king's execution, the Rump Parliament, the part of the House of Commons that had survived the purge, immediately established a new government "in the way of a republic, without king or House of Lords." The new state was extremely fragile. Royalists and Presbyterians fiercely resented their exclusion from power and pronounced the execution of the king a sacrilege. The Rump Parliament and army leaders were at odds with the army rank and file, who argued that voting rights ought not be restricted to men of property. The Levellers, led by John Lilburne, called for suffrage for all adult males. An associated but more radical group, called the Diggers or True Levellers, pushed for economic reforms to match the political ones. Their spokesman, Gerrard Winstanley, wrote eloquent manifestos developing a Christian communist program that included abolishing private property. The lords of manors, he argued, "hold title to the Commons by no stronger hold than the King's will, whose head is cut off." Meanwhile, Millenarians and Fifth Monarchists (who took their name from the "fifth monarchy" prophesied in the Bible) wanted political power vested in the regenerate "saints," in preparation for the thousand-year reign of Christ on earth foretold in the biblical book of Revelation. Quakers, having turned to the light that shines within, claimed to live in unity with the divine. They defied both state and church authority by refusing to take oaths, by preaching incendiary sermons in open marketplaces, and by arguing for the spiritual equality of men and women. Most alarming of all, and out of proportion to their scant numbers, were the Ranters, who believed (or were said to believe) that because God dwelt within them none of their acts could be sinful. Notorious for sexual license and for public nudity, they got their name from their deliberate blasphemy and penchant for rambling prophecy. The most active Ranter, Abiezer Coppe, was arrested in January 1650 on charges of blasphemy and treason, and his "mad and blasphemous" pamphlets were "burnt by the Hand of the Hangman, at the New Palace Yard, at Westminster; the Exchange, in Cheapside; and at the Market Place in Southwark." In addition to internal disarray, the new state faced serious external threats. After Charles I's execution, the Scots and the Irish—who had not been consulted about the trial—proclaimed his eldest son, Prince Charles, the new king. The prince, exiled on the Continent, was attempting to enlist the support of a major European power for an invasion.

The formidable Oliver Cromwell, now undisputed leader of the army, crushed external threats, including rebellions in Ireland and Scotland. The Irish war was especially bloody, as Cromwell's army massacred the Catholic natives in a frenzy of religious hatred. The civil war was funded in part by the "Adventurers Act," which was initially conceived as a way of raising funds to suppress the Irish rebellion of 1641. The act invited people to invest money in exchange for lands that would be confiscated from rebels in Ireland. (The English government set aside 2.5 million acres of the island's 20.9 million acres for this purpose.) Both king and Parliament supported the bill, but its true cost was realized during Cromwell's conquest of Ireland in 1649–53, when a large proportion of the native population was killed, and as many as 50,000 people were transported as indentured laborers to English colonies in North America and the Caribbean. The act also formed the basis for the 1652 Act for the Settling of Ireland, in which the land of nearly all Catholic landowners was confiscated and divided among English soldiers and adventurers. When trade rivalries erupted with the Dutch over control of shipping lanes in the North Sea and the English Channel, the new republic was again victorious. The 1651 Navigation Act constituted the beginning of a system of regulated imperial commerce. Yet the domestic situation remained unstable. Given popular disaffection and the unresolved disputes between Parliament and the army, the republic's leaders dared not call new elections. In 1653 power effectively devolved upon Cromwell, who was sworn in as Lord Protector for life under England's first written constitution. Many property owners considered Cromwell the only hope for stability, while others, including John Milton, saw him as a champion of religious liberty. Still others, including Lucy and John Hutchinson, saw his status as "Lord Protector" as a betrayal of the cause for which they had fought. In the words of Lucy Hutchinson, the "poison of ambition" had "ulcerated Cromwell's heart." Although persecution of Quakers and Ranters continued, Cromwell sometimes intervened to mitigate the lot of the Quakers. He also began a program to readmit Jews to England, partly in the interests of trade, but also to open the way for their conversion, supposedly a precursor of the Last Day as prophesied in the book of Revelation. In 1654 Cromwell's "Western Design" failed in its attempt to wrest Hispaniola from the Spanish, but it succeeded in conquering Jamaica. Over the next century, Jamaica would eclipse Barbados as the profit center of the British Empire: a sugar plantation colony based on the labor of enslaved Africans. By 1657, when Cromwell rechartered the East India company and commenced trade with China, more than twenty thousand enslaved Africans had been imported into English colonies.

Ranters. This woodcut from The Ranters Ranting (1650) depicts adherents to the sect in various acts of sexual license, mocking their claims to radical egalitarianism and communalism.

---

When Oliver Cromwell died in 1658, his son, Richard, was appointed in his place. Richard, however, had inherited none of his father's leadership qualities. In April 1660, General George Monck succeeded in calling elections for a new "full and free" Parliament, open to supporters of the monarchy as well as of the republic. The new Parliament immediately recalled the exiled prince, officially proclaiming him King Charles II on May 8, 1660. The period that followed is therefore called the Restoration: it saw the restoration of the monarchy and with it the royal court, the established Church of England, and the professional theater.

Over the next few years, the new regime executed some of the regicides that had participated in Charles I's trial and execution, and harshly repressed radical Protestants. (The Baptist John Bunyan wrote Pilgrim's Progress in prison.) Yet Charles II, who came to the throne at the invitation of Parliament, could not lay claim to absolute power as his father had done. After his accession, Parliament retained its legislative supremacy and complete power over taxation, and exercised some control over the king's choice of counselors. It assembled by its own authority, not by the king's mandate. During the Restoration years, the journalistic commentary and political debates that had first flourished in the 1640s remained forceful and open, and the first modern political parties developed out of what had been the royalist and republican factions in the civil war. In London and in other cities, the merchant classes, filled with Dissenters, retained their powerful economic leverage. Although the English revolution was apparently dismantled in 1660, its long-term effects profoundly changed English institutions and English society. Cromwell's expansion of the navy had also established England as a formidable colonial power, an advantage that Charles II exploited. Early in his reign, he granted a charter to the Company of Royal Adventurers of England, which, led by his younger brother James, Duke of York (later King James II), benefited from a monopoly on British trade with West Africa, including the trade in enslaved Africans. After Charles II's forces captured "New Netherland" during the Anglo-Dutch wars of the 1660s, the king gave the colony to this same brother, renaming it "New York" in his honor.

LITERATURE AND CULTURE, 1640–1660

The English Civil Wars were disastrous for all aspects of English life, including the theater. One of Parliament's first acts after hostilities began in 1642 was to abolish public plays and sports for "too commonly expressing lascivious mirth and levity." Some drama continued to be written and published—Margaret Cavendish wrote dozens of plays during the Interregnum—but performances were rare, and would-be theatrical entrepreneurs had to exploit loopholes in the prohibitions by describing their works as "operas" and by mounting semiprivate productions.

As the king's government collapsed, so too did the patronage relationships centered on the court. Many leading poets were staunch royalists, or Cavaliers, who suffered considerably in the war years. Robert Herrick lost his church employment; Richard Lovelace was imprisoned; Margaret Cavendish went into exile. With their usual networks of manuscript circulation disrupted, many royalist writers printed their verse. Volumes of poetry by Thomas Carew, John Denham, Richard Lovelace, and Robert Herrick appeared in the 1640s. Their poems, some dating from the 1620s or 1630s, celebrate the courtly ideal "of the good life: good food, plenty of wine, good verse, hospitality, and high-spirited loyalty, especially to the king." One characteristic Cavalier genre was the love lyric, often with a carpe diem theme. In Herrick's case especially, apparent ease and frivolity mask a frankly political subtext. While the Puritans excoriated May Day celebrations, harvest-home festivities, and other time-honored holidays and "sports" as unscriptural, idolatrous, or frankly pagan, for Herrick, these pastimes sustained a community. This idealized community strove neither for ascetic perfection nor for equality among social classes, but knew the value of pleasure in cementing social harmony and incorporating everyone—rich and poor, unlettered and learned—into one social body, much as the established church had traditionally tried to do.

As they faced defeat in the 1640s and 1650s, the Cavaliers wrote movingly of the relationship between love and honor, of fidelity under duress, of like-minded friends sustaining one another in a hostile environment. They presented themselves as amateurs, writing verse in the midst of a life devoted to more important matters: war, love, the king's service, the endurance of loss. Rejecting the radical Protestant emphasis on the "inner light," which they considered merely a pretext for presumptuousness and violence, Cavalier poets cultivated deliberately unidiosyncratic, even self-deprecating poetic personae. Thus the poems of Richard Lovelace express sentiments that he represents not as the unique insights of an isolated genius, but as principles easily grasped by all honorable men, and enjoyments reserved for their timeless privilege. When in "The Vine" Herrick relates a wet dream, he laughs not only at himself, but at those who mistake their own fantasies for divine inspiration.

During the 1650s, royalists wrote lyric poems in places far removed from the hostile centers of parliamentary power. In Wales, Henry Vaughan wrote religious verse expressing his intense longing for past eras of innocence and for the perfection of heaven or the millennium. Also in Wales, Katherine Philips wrote and circulated manuscript poems that celebrate female friends in terms usually reserved for male friendships and that question the ethics of the regicide and commonwealth. "Hath Charles so broke God's laws," she asks in one poem, that "he must not have / A quiet crown, nor yet a quiet grave?" The publication of her poems after the Restoration brought Philips considerable celebrity as "the Matchless Orinda." (Orinda was the classical name she gave to herself in her poetry.) Richard Crashaw, an exile in Paris and Rome, and a convert to Roman Catholicism, wrote lush religious poetry that attempted to reveal the spiritual by stimulating the senses. Margaret Cavendish, who also spent the Interregnum in exile, published a book of poems and a book of philosophy when she returned to England temporarily in 1653 and an astounding amount of work after the Restoration.

Several prose works by royalist sympathizers became classics in their respective genres. Thomas Hobbes, the most important English philosopher of the period, developed his materialist philosophy and psychology during his exile in Paris. His Leviathan (1651) presented his unflinching defense of absolute sovereignty based on a theory of social contract. The revolutionary era gave new impetus to all kinds of writing, including by women and non-elites. The circumstances of war placed women in novel, occasionally dangerous, situations, giving them unusual events to describe and prompting self-discovery, creativity, and innovation. The autobiographies of the royalists Lady Anne Halkett and Margaret Cavendish, published after the Restoration, report their experiences and their sometimes daring activities during the civil wars. Lucy Hutchinson's memoir of her husband, Colonel John Hutchinson, narrates much of the history of the times from a republican point of view, as do her epic poem on Genesis, Order and Disorder, and her elegies, which mourn both her husband and the cause for which he fought. Leveller women presented petitions and manifestos in support of their imprisoned husbands and of their cause. Women petitioned Parliament for many causes, including their own political rights, in astounding numbers. They also registered their demands in print. The widespread belief that the Holy Spirit was moving in unexpected ways encouraged a number of women prophets, including Anna Trapnel, Mary Cary, and Lady Eleanor Davies. Their published prophecies often carried strong political critiques of Charles or of Cromwell. Authorized by the Quaker belief in the spiritual equality of women and men, and by the conviction that all persons should testify to what the inner light communicates to them, Quaker women came into their own as preachers and, occasionally, as writers of tracts. Many of their memoirs, such as Dorothy Waugh's "Relation," were originally published to call attention to their sufferings, and to inspire other Quakers to similar feats of moral fortitude.

While most writers during this period were royalists, some of the best, including Andrew Marvell, John Milton, and Lucy Hutchinson, sided with the republic. Marvell wrote most of the poems for which he is still remembered in the early 1650s while at Nunappleton, tutoring the daughter of the retired parliamentary general Thomas Fairfax; in 1657 he joined his friend Milton in the office of Cromwell's Latin Secretariat. Marvell's love poems and pastorals seem to register the conflict of civil war: older convictions about ordered harmony give way to unresolved or unresolvable oppositions—some playful, some painful. In his country house poem Upon Appleton House, even agricultural practices associated with regular changes of the season, like the flooding of fallow fields, become emblems of unpredictability, reversal, and category confusion. In other poems Marvell eschews an authoritative poetic persona in favor of speakers who seem limited or even a bit unbalanced: a mower who argues for the values of pastoral with disconcerting belligerence, a nymph who seems to exemplify virginal innocence but also immature self-absorption and possibly unconscious sexual perversity. Marvell's finest political poem, "An Horatian Ode upon Cromwell's Return from Ireland," celebrates Cromwell's providential victories even while inviting sympathy for the executed king and warning about the potential dangers of Cromwell's meteoric rise to power.

A promising, prolific young poet in the 1630s, Milton committed himself to the English republic as soon as the conflict between the king and Parliament began to take shape. His loyalty to the revolution remained unwavering, despite his disillusion when it failed to realize his ideals: religious toleration for all Protestants, and the free circulation of ideas without prior censorship. First as a self-appointed adviser to the state, then as its official defender, Milton addressed the great issues at stake in the 1640s and the 1650s. In a series of treatises he argued for church disestablishment and for the removal of bishops; for a republican government based on natural law and popular sovereignty; for the right of the people to dismiss their rulers from office and even execute them; and, most controversial even to his usual allies, in favor of divorce on the grounds of incompatibility. Milton was a Puritan, but both his theological heterodoxies and his poetic vision mark him as a distinctly unusual one.

During his years as a political polemicist, Milton also wrote several sonnets, revising that small, love-centered genre to accommodate large private and public topics: a Catholic massacre of proto-Protestants in the foothills of Italy; the agonizing questions posed by his blindness; various threats to intellectual and religious liberty. In 1645 he published his collected English and Latin poems as a counterstatement to the royalist volumes of the 1640s. Yet he wrote his most ambitious poetry when the war was over. Milton probably wrote some part of Paradise Lost in the late 1650s and completed it after the Restoration, encompassing in it all he had thought, read, and experienced of tyranny, political controversy, evil, deception, love, and the need for companionship. His cosmic blank-verse poem about the fall of humanity assimilates and critiques the epic tradition as well as Milton's entire intellectual and literary heritage, classical and Christian. Yet unlike earlier epics, Paradise Lost centers not on martial heroes but on a domestic couple who must discover how to live a good life day by day, in Eden and later in the fallen world, amid intense emotional pressures and the seductions of evil.

Lucy Hutchinson is best known for her Memoirs of the Life of Colonel Hutchinson, an account of the English Civil Wars written during the period but not printed until 1806. Yet Hutchinson was also the first person to translate Lucretius's De rerum natura (On the Nature of Things) from Latin into English, and the author of a magisterial epic poem on Genesis entitled Order and Disorder. Hutchinson wrote Order and Disorder in the years surrounding the collapse of the republican cause. "Whatever mortals' vain endeavors be," she wrote in the opening canto, "They must be broken who with power contend." Yet her faith in God's providence includes the ultimate vindication of what she calls the "little church," and the epic is rife with political commentary; in Order and Disorder, God always "cuts the bloody tyrant down." It is possible that the poem's outspoken republicanism prevented it from being published in the 1660s, when it circulated in manuscript. Like Milton, Hutchinson proclaims both divine inspiration—"My ravished soul a pious ardour fires"—and poetic ambition in the opening lines of her poem. The "poetic fables" she seeks to overturn, however, seem to include Milton's own, as when she writes that she (unlike Milton) will not "dare t'invent" an account of the angels' "rebellion and their overthrow," hewing instead to what "that light [of scripture] doth show." Yet her account of the creation of the universe is infused with Lucretian materialism, and she offers a bracing analysis of women's punishment for the Fall that extends far beyond the few lines devoted to the topic in Genesis. Order and Disorder was first published in its entirety in 2001, cementing Hutchinson's reputation as one of the finest, and most politically committed, poets of the era. In the series of elegies she wrote after her husband's death, Hutchinson expresses not only her personal grief and thwarted desire, but her unvanquished commitment to what she called "the grand quarrel."

Seventeenth-century poetry, prose, and drama retain their hold on readers because so much of it is so very good, fusing intellectual power, emotional passion, and extraordinary linguistic and formal artfulness. Poetry in this period ranges over an astonishing variety of topics and modes: highly erotic celebrations of sexual desire; passionate declarations of faith and doubt; lavishly embroidered paeans to friends and benefactors; tough-minded assessments of social and political institutions; fanciful imaginations of life beyond what the naked eye (and human-made instrument) can see. English dramatists were at the height of their powers, situating characters of unprecedented complexity in plays sometimes remorselessly satiric, sometimes achingly moving. In these years English prose becomes a highly flexible instrument, suited to informal essays, scientific treatises, religious meditation, political polemic, biography and autobiography, journalistic reportage, and speculative fiction. Literary forms evolve for the exquisitely modulated representation of the self: dramatic monologues, memoirs, spiritual autobiographies, sermons in which the preacher takes himself for an example, and epic poets who assume the role of inspired prophet, envisioning a world created by God but shaped by human choice and imagination.

THE EARLY SEVENTEENTH CENTURY

TEXTS	CONTEXTS
1603 James I, Basilikon Doron reissued	1603 Death of Elizabeth I; accession of James I. Plague
1604 William Shakespeare, Othello
1605 Shakespeare, King Lear . Ben Jonson, The Masque of Blackness . Francis Bacon, The Advancement of Learning	1605 Gunpowder Plot, failed effort by Roman Catholic extremists to blow up Parliament
1606 Jonson, Volpone . Shakespeare, Macbeth
	1607 Founding of Jamestown colony in Virginia
1609 Shakespeare, Sonnets	1609 Galileo begins observing the heavens with a telescope

TEXTS	CONTEXTS
1611 “King James” Bible (Authorized Version). Shakespeare, The Tempest . John Donne, The First Anniversary . Aemilia Lanyer, Salve Deus Rex Judaeorum
1612 Donne, The Second Anniversary	1612 Death of Prince Henry
1613 Elizabeth Cary, The Tragedy of Mariam
1614 John Webster, The Duchess of Malfi
1616 Jonson, Works . James I, Works	1616 Death of Shakespeare
	1618 Beginning of the Thirty Years War
	1619 First African enslaved people in North America exchanged by Dutch frigate for food and supplies at Jamestown

TEXTS	CONTEXTS
1620 Bacon, Novum Organum	1620 Pilgrims land at Plymouth
1621 Mary Wroth, The Countess of Montgomery's Urania and Pamphilia to Amphilanthus . Robert Burton, The Anatomy of Melancholy	1621 Donne appointed dean of St. Paul's Cathedral
1623 Shakespeare, First Folio
1625 Bacon, Essays	1625 Death of James I; accession of Charles I; Charles I marries Henrietta Maria
	1629 Charles I dissolves Parliament
1633 Donne, Poems . George Herbert, The Temple	1633 Galileo forced by the Inquisition to recant the Copernican theory
1637 John Milton, "Lycidas"

TEXTS	CONTEXTS
1640 Thomas Carew, Poems	1640 Long Parliament called (1640–53). Archbishop Laud impeached
1640s–60s Hester Pulter writes Poems Breathed Forth by the Nobel Hadassas , which would not be published until 2014
1642 Thomas Browne, Religio Medici . Milton, The Reason of Church Government	1642 First Civil War begins (1642–46). Parliament closes the theaters
1643 Milton, The Doctrine and Discipline of Divorce	1643 Accession of Louis XIV of France
1644 Milton, Areopagitica
1645 Milton, Poems . Edmund Waller, Poems	1645 Archbishop Laud executed. Royalists defeated at Naseby
1648 Robert Herrick, Hesperides and Noble Numbers	1648 Second Civil War. “Pride’s Purge” of Parliament

TEXTS	CONTEXTS
1649 Milton, The Tenure of Kings and Magistrates and Eikonoklastes	1649 Trial and execution of Charles I. Republic declared. Milton becomes Latin Secretary (1649–59)
1650 Henry Vaughan, Silex Scintillans (Part II, 1655)
1650s Lucy Hutchinson translates Lucretius's De Rerum Natura from Latin to English—the first person to do so
1651 Thomas Hobbes, Leviathan . Andrew Marvell, Upon Appleton House (unpublished)
	1652 Anglo-Dutch War (1652–54)
	1653 Cromwell made Lord Protector
	1658 Death of Cromwell; his

TEXTS	CONTEXTS
	son Richard made Protector
1660 Milton, Ready and Easy Way to Establish a Free Commonwealth	1660 Restoration of Charles II to throne. Royal Society founded
	1662 Charles II marries Catherine of Braganza
	1665 The Great Plague
1666 Margaret Cavendish, The Blazing World	1666 The Great Fire
1667 Milton, Paradise Lost (in ten books). Katherine Philips, Collected Poems . John Dryden, Annus Mirabilis
1671 Milton, Paradise Regained and Samson Agonistes
1674 Milton, Paradise Lost (in twelve books)	1674 Death of Milton

TEXTS	CONTEXTS
1679 The first five cantos of Lucy Hutchinson's Order and Disorder published anonymously
1681 Marvell, Poems, published posthumously

JOHN DONNE

1572–1631

Lovers' eyeballs threaded on a string, a god who assaults the human heart with a battering ram, a teardrop that encompasses and drowns the world: John Donne's poems abound with startling images. With his strange and playful intelligence, expressed in puns, paradoxes, and the elaborately sustained metaphors known as "conceits," Donne has enthralled and sometimes enraged readers from his day to our own. The tired clichés of love poetry—cheeks like roses, hearts pierced by the arrows of love—emerge reinvigorated and radically transformed in Donne's poems, demanding from the reader an unprecedented level of mental alertness and engagement. Donne prided himself on his wit and displayed it not only in his conceits but in his grasp of learned discourses ranging from theology to alchemy, from cosmology to law. Yet for all their ostentatious intellectuality, Donne's poems never give the impression of being academic exercises. Rather, they are intense dramatic monologues in which the speaker's ideas and feelings evolve from one line to the next. Donne's prosody is equally dramatic. His jagged rhythms capture the effect of speech (and elicited from his classically minded contemporary Ben Jonson the gruff observation that "Donne, for not keeping of accent, deserved hanging").

Donne began life as an outsider, and in some respects remained one. He was born in London in 1572 into a devout Roman Catholic household. The family was prosperous, but, as the poet later remarked, none had suffered more heavily for its loyalty to the Catholic Church. As Donne wrote in a prose treatise, "I have been ever kept awake in a meditation of martyrdom." Donne was distantly related to the great Catholic humanist and martyr Sir Thomas More; two of Donne's uncles, Jesuit priests, were forced to flee the realm; and Donne's brother Henry, arrested for harboring a priest, died in prison. As a Catholic in Protestant England, growing up in decades when anti-Roman feeling reached new heights, Donne could not expect any kind of public career, nor could he receive a university degree. (He left Oxford without a degree and studied law for a time at the Inns of Court.) What Donne could reasonably expect instead was prejudice, official harassment, and crippling financial penalties. He chose not to live under such conditions. At some point in the 1590s, having returned to London after travels abroad, and having devoted some years to studying theology, Donne converted to the Church of England.

The poems that belong with certainty to this period of his life—the five satires and most of the elegies—reveal a man both fascinated by and keenly critical of English society. Four of the satires treat commonplace Elizabethan topics—obsequious courtiers, bad poets, unscrupulous lawyers, and a corrupt court—but are unique in their visceral revulsion and intellectual excitement. Donne uses striking images of pestilence, vomit, excrement, and pox to create a unique satiric world, vibrant and degenerate, in which his dramatic speakers have only to step outside the door to be inundated by all the fools and knaves in Christendom. By contrast, the third satire treats the quest for true religion—the question that preoccupied him above all others in these years—in terms that are serious, witty, and deeply felt. Donne argues that honest, doubtful searching is better than the facile acceptance of religious tradition, epitomizing his point brilliantly in the image of Truth on a craggy hill that is almost impossible to climb. Society's values are of no help whatsoever to the individual seeker—none will escape the final judgment by pleading that "A Harry, or a Martin taught [them] this." In his love elegies Donne seems intent on making up for his social powerlessness through witty representations of mastery in the bedroom and abroad. In "Elegy 19," for example, his seduction of a naked lover becomes in a famous conceit the equivalent of exploration in America. Donne was not alone in introducing classical Roman genres such as satire and elegy to English verse, but he was unmatched in his skill.

Donne in His Shroud. Shortly before his death in 1631, Donne posed in the shroud in which he would be buried. The resulting engraving, by Martin Droeshout, is the frontispiece of Death's Duel (1632).

---

If Donne's conversion to the Church of England promised him security, social acceptance, and the possibility of a public career, that promise was soon to be withdrawn. In 1596–97 he participated in the Earl of Essex's military expeditions against Catholic Spain in Cádiz and the Azores (the experience prompted two remarkable poems about life at sea, "The Storm" and "The Calm"), and upon his return he became secretary to Sir Thomas Egerton, Lord Keeper of the Great Seal. This appointment should have been the beginning of a successful public career. But Donne's secret marriage in 1601 to Egerton's seventeen-year-old niece Ann More enraged Donne's employer and the bride's wealthy father; Donne was briefly imprisoned and dismissed from service. The poet was reduced to a retired country life, beset by financial insecurity and a rapidly increasing family; Ann had borne twelve children (not counting miscarriages) by the time she died in 1617 at age thirty-three. At one point, Donne wrote despairingly that while the death of a child would mean one less mouth to feed, he could not afford the burial expenses. In this bleak period, he wrote but dared not publish Biathanatos ("Violent Death"), a defense of suicide.

As his family grew, Donne made every effort to reinstate himself in political favor. Among other pleas for office, Donne purportedly sought to become the secretary of the Virginia Company in 1609. To win the approval of James I, he penned Pseudo-Martyr (1610), defending the king's insistence that Catholics take the Oath of Allegiance to the English crown. This publication set an irrevocable public stamp on his renunciation of Catholicism, and Donne followed up with a satire on the Jesuits, Ignatius His Conclave (1611). In the same period he produced a steady stream of occasional poems for friends and patrons such as the Earl of Somerset (the king's favorite), the Countess of Bedford, and Magdalen Herbert, as well as for small coteries of courtly readers. Like most gentlemen of his era, Donne saw poetry as a polite accomplishment rather than as a trade or vocation. He thus circulated his poems in manuscript and, with few exceptions, left most of them uncollected and unpublished.

For some years, James I had urged an ecclesiastical career on Donne, denying him any other means of advancement. In 1615

Donne finally consented. He was ordained in the Church of England, and entered upon a distinguished career as court preacher, reader in divinity at Lincoln's Inn, and, eventually, dean of St. Paul's. Donne's metaphorical style, bold erudition, and dramatic wit established him as a great preacher in an age that appreciated learned sermons powerfully delivered. Preached to monarchs and courtiers, lawyers and London magistrates, city merchants and trading companies, some 160 of his sermons survive. As a distinguished Church of England clergyman, Donne had traveled an immense distance from the religion of his childhood and the adventurous life of his twenties. Yet in his sermons and late poems we find the same brilliant, idiosyncratic mind at work, refashioning his profane conceits to serve a new and higher purpose. In "Expostulation 19" he praises God as the greatest of literary stylists: "a figurative, a metaphorical God." In poems, meditations, and sermons, Donne became increasingly engaged in anxious contemplation of his own mortality. In "Hymn to God My God, in My Sickness," for example, he imagines himself spread out on his deathbed like a map showing the route to the next world. Only a few days before his death, he preached "Death's Duel," a terrifying analysis of all life as a decline toward death and dissolution which contemporaries termed his own funeral sermon. In his final illness, according to his contemporary biographer Izaak Walton, Donne had a portrait made of himself in his shroud and meditated on it daily. Meditations upon skulls as emblems of mortality were common in the period, but nothing is more characteristic of Donne than to find a way to meditate on his own skull. Walton also notes that after Donne's death, an unknown person wrote the following "epitaph with a coal on the wall over his grave":

Reader! I am to let thee know,
Donne's body only lies below,
For, could the grave his soul comprise.
Earth would be richer than the skies.

Given the shape of Donne's career, it is no surprise that his poems and prose display an astonishing variety of attitudes, viewpoints, and feelings on the great subjects of love and religion. Yet this variety cannot be fully explained in biographical terms. The poet's own attempt to distinguish between Jack Donne, the young rake, and Dr. Donne, the grave and religious dean of St. Paul's, is (perhaps intentionally) misleading. We do not know the time and circumstances for most of Donne's verses, but it is clear that many of his finest religious poems predate his ordination, and it is possible that he continued to add to the love poems known as his "songs and sonnets" after he entered the church. Theological language abounds in his love poetry, and daringly erotic images in his religious verse.

Donne's "songs and sonnets" have been the cornerstone of his reputation almost since their publication in 1633. The title Songs and Sonnets associates them with the popular miscellanies of love poems and sonnet sequences in the Petrarchan tradition, but they directly challenge the sonnet sequences of the 1590s. Donne's collection contains only one formal sonnet, the "songs" are not notably lyrical, and Donne draws on and transforms a whole range of literary traditions concerned with love. Like Petrarch, Donne can present himself as the despairing lover of an unattainable lady ("The Funeral"). Like Ovid, he can be lighthearted, witty, cynical, and frankly lustful ("The Flea," "The Indifferent"). Like the Neoplatonists, he espouses a theory of transcendent love, but he breaks from them with his insistence on the union of physical and spiritual love. What binds these poems together, and grants them enduring power, is their compelling and dramatic immediacy. The speaker is always in the throes of intense emotion, and that emotion is constantly shifting with the turns of the poet's thought. Donne seems supremely present in these poems, standing behind their various speakers. Where Petrarchan poets exhaustively catalogue their beloved's physical features (though in highly conventional terms), Donne's speakers tell us little or nothing about the beloved woman imagined as the audience for many poems. Donne's repeated insistence that the private world of lovers is superior to the wider public world, or that it somehow contains all of that world, is understandable in light of the many disappointments of his career. Yet he also threw himself headlong into secular life, and later into the very visible role of preacher.

Donne was long grouped with Herbert, Vaughan, Crashaw, Marvell, Thomas Traherne, and Abraham Cowley under the heading of "Metaphysical poets." The expression was first employed by critics like Samuel Johnson and William Hazlitt, who found the intricate conceits and self-conscious learning of these poets incompatible with poetic beauty and sincerity. Early in the twentieth century, T. S. Eliot sought to restore their reputation, attributing to them a unity of thought and feeling that had since their time been lost. There was, however, no formal "school" of Metaphysical poetry, and the characteristics ascribed to it by later critics pertain chiefly to Donne. Like Ben Jonson, John Donne had an immense influence on the succeeding generation, but he remains a singular figure.

FROM SONGS AND SONNETS<sup>1</sup>

Endnotes

- Note 1:
Donne's love poems were written over nearly two decades, beginning around 1595; they were not published in Donne's lifetime but circulated widely in manuscript. The title Songs and Sonnets was supplied in the second edition (1635), which grouped the poems by kind, but neither this arrangement nor the more haphazard organization of the first edition (1633) is Donne's own. In Donne's time the term "sonnet" often meant simply "love lyric," and in fact there is only one formal sonnet in this collection. For the poems we present we follow the 1635 edition, beginning with the extremely popular poem "The Flea."
Return to reference 1

The Flea<sup>2</sup>

Mark but this flea, and mark in this,
How little that which thou deniest me is;
Me it sucked first, and now sucks thee,
And in this flea our two bloods mingled be;
Thou know'st that this cannot be said
5 A sin, or shame, or loss of maidenhead,<sup>o</sup>
Yet this enjoys before it woo,
And pampered<sup>o</sup> swells with one blood made of two,<sup>3</sup>
And this, alas, is more than we would do.

Oh stay, three lives in one flea spare,
10 Where we almost, nay more than married are.
This flea is you and I, and this
Our marriage bed and marriage temple is;
Though parents grudge, and you, we are met,
And cloistered<sup>4</sup> in these living walls of jet.<sup>o</sup>
15 Though use<sup>o</sup> make you apt to kill me,<sup>5</sup>
Let not to that, self-murder added be,
And sacrilege, three sins in killing three.

Cruel and sudden, hast thou since
Purpled thy nail in blood of innocence?
20 Wherein could this flea guilty be,
Except in that drop which it sucked from thee?
Yet thou triumph'st, and say'st that thou
Find'st not thy self nor me the weaker now;
'Tis true; then learn how false fears be:
25 Just so much honor, when thou yield'st to me,
Will waste, as this flea's death took life from thee.

Endnotes

- Note 2: This insect afforded a popular erotic theme for poets all over Europe, deriving from a pseudo-Ovidian medieval poem in which a lover envies the flea for the liberties it takes with his mistress's body.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: The swelling suggests pregnancy.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: As in a convent or monastery.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: By denying me sexual gratification.Return to reference 5

Notes

- °: virginityReturn to reference °
- °: overfedReturn to reference °
- °: blackReturn to reference °
- °: habitReturn to reference °

The Good-Morrow<sup>o</sup><sub>u</sub>

I wonder, by my troth,<sup>o</sup> what thou and I Did, till we loved? Were we not weaned till then,
But sucked on country<sup>o</sup> pleasures, childishly?
Or snorted<sup>o</sup> we in the seven sleepers' den?<sup>1</sup>
5 'Twas so; but<sup>o</sup> this, all pleasures fancies be.
If ever any beauty I did see,
Which I desired, and got, 'twas but a dream of thee.

And now good morrow to our waking souls,
Which watch not one another out of fear;
For love all love of other sights controls,
10 And makes one little room an everywhere.
Let sea-discoverers to new worlds have gone,
Let maps to others, worlds on worlds have shown:
Let us possess one world;<sup>2</sup> each hath one, and is one.

15 My face in thine eye, thine in mine appears,
And true plain hearts do in the faces rest;
Where can we find two better hemispheres,
Without sharp North, without declining West?
Whatever dies was not mixed equally;<sup>3</sup>
20 If our two loves be one, or thou and I Love so alike that none do slacken, none can die.

1633

Endnotes

- Note 1: Cave in Ephesus where, according to legend, seven Christian youths hid from pagan persecutors and slept for 187

- years.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: “Our world” in many manuscripts.Return to reference 2
  - Note 3: Scholastic philosophy taught that when the elements were imperfectly mixed (“not mixed equally”), matter was mutable and mortal; conversely, when the elements were perfectly mixed, matter was immutable and hence immortal.Return to reference 3

Notes

- °: morning greetingReturn to reference °
- °: good faithReturn to reference °
- °: unsophisticatedReturn to reference °
- °: snoredReturn to reference °
- °: except forReturn to reference °

Song

Go and catch a falling star,
Get with child a mandrake root,<sup>1</sup>
Tell me where all past years are,
Or who cleft the Devil's foot,
Teach me to hear mermaids<sup>o</sup> singing,
5 Or to keep off envy's stinging,
And find
What wind
Serves to advance an honest mind.

If thou beest born to strange sights,
10 Things invisible to see,
Ride ten thousand days and nights,
Till age snow white hairs on thee,
Thou, when thou return'st, wilt tell me
All strange wonders that befell thee,
15 And swear
No where
Lives a woman true, and fair.

If thou find'st one, let me know,
Such a pilgrimage were sweet;
20 Yet do not, I would not go,
Though at next door we might meet;
Though she were true when you met her,
And last till you write your letter,
Yet she 25 Will be
False, ere I come, to two, or three.

Endnotes

- Note 1: The mandrake root, or mandragora, is forked like the lower part of the human body. It was thought to shriek when pulled from the ground and to kill all humans who heard it; it was also (paradoxically) thought to help women conceive.Return to reference 1

Notes

- °: sirensReturn to reference °

The Sun Rising

5            Busy old fool, unruly sun,
             Why dost thou thus
Through windows and through curtains call on us?
Must to thy motions lovers' seasons run?
             Saucy pedantic wretch, go chide
             Late schoolboys and sour prentices,
             Go tell court huntsmen that the king will ride,<sup>1</sup>
             Call country ants to harvest offices;<sup>2</sup>
Love, all alike, no season knows nor clime,
Nor hours, days, months, which are the rags of time.

10            Thy beams, so reverend and strong
             Why shouldst thou think?
I could eclipse and cloud them with a wink,
But that I would not lose her sight so long;
             If her eyes have not blinded thine,
15            Look, and tomorrow late, tell me,
             Whether both th' Indias of spice and mine<sup>3</sup>
             Be where thou leftst them, or lie here with me.
Ask for those kings whom thou saw'st yesterday,
And thou shalt hear, All here in one bed lay.

20            She is all states,<sup>o</sup> and all princes I,
             Nothing else is.
Princes do but play us; compared to this,
All honor's mimic, all wealth alchemy.
             Thou, sun, art half as happy as we,
25            In that the world's contracted thus;
             Thine age asks ease, and since thy duties be
             To warm the world, that's done in warming us.
Shine here to us, and thou art everywhere;

Endnotes

- Note 1: King James was fond of hunting. Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Autumn chores. "Country ants": farm drudges. Return to reference 2
- Note 3: The India of "spice" is the East Indies; that of "mine" (gold), the West Indies. Return to reference 3
- Note 4: According to the old Ptolemaic astronomy, the earth was the center of the sun's orbit, and the sun's motion was contained within its sphere. Return to reference 4

Notes

- °: nations Return to reference °

The Indifferent

I can love both fair and brown,<sup>1</sup>
Her whom abundance melts, and her whom want betrays,
Her who loves lonesome best, and her who masks
and plays,
Her whom the country formed, and whom the town,
Her who believes, and her who tries,<sup>o</sup>
5 Her who still<sup>o</sup> weeps with spongy eyes,
And her who is dry cork, and never cries;
I can love her, and her, and you, and you,
I can love any, so she be not true.

Will no other vice content you?
10 Will it not serve your turn to do as did your mothers?
Or have you all old vices spent, and now would find out others?
Or doth a fear that men are true torment you?
O we are not, be not you so;
Let me, and do you, twenty know.
15 Rob me, but bind me not, and let me go.
Must I, who came to travail thorough<sup>2</sup> you,
Grow your fixed subject, because you are true?

Venus heard me sigh this song,
And by love's sweetest part, variety, she swore,
20 She heard not this till now; and that it should be so
no more.
She went, examined, and returned ere long,
And said, Alas, some two or three Poor heretics in love there be,
Which think to 'stablish dangerous constancy.

But I have told them, Since you will be true,
You shall be true to them who are false to you.

Endnotes

- Note 1: Both blonde and brunette. Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Through. "Travail": grief. Return to reference 2

Notes

- °: tests Return to reference °
- °: always Return to reference °

The Canonization<sup>1</sup>

For God's sake hold your tongue, and let me love,
Or chide my palsy, or my gout,
My five gray hairs, or ruined fortune, flout,
With wealth your state, your mind with arts improve,
5 Take you a course, get you a place,<sup>2</sup>
Observe His Honor, or His Grace,<sup>3</sup>
Or the king's real, or his stampèd face<sup>4</sup>
Contemplate; what you will, approve,<sup>o</sup>
So you will let me love.

10 Alas, alas, who's injured by my love?
What merchant's ships have my sighs drowned?
Who says my tears have overflowed his ground?
When did my colds a forward<sup>o</sup> spring remove?<sup>5</sup>
When did the heats which my veins fill
15 Add one man to the plaguy bill?<sup>6</sup>
Soldiers find wars, and lawyers find out still Litigious men, which quarrels move,
Though she and I do love.

20 Call us what you will, we are made such by love;
Call her one, me another fly,
We're tapers too, and at our own cost die,<sup>7</sup>
And we in us find the eagle and the dove.
The phoenix riddle hath more wit
By us: we two being one, are it.<sup>8</sup>
25 So, to one neutral thing both sexes fit.
We die and rise the same, and prove Mysterious by this love.

We can die by it, if not live by love,
 And if unfit for tombs and hearse
 Our legend be, it will be fit for verse;
 30 And if no piece of chronicle<sup>o</sup> we prove,
 We'll build in sonnets pretty rooms;<sup>9</sup>
 As well a well-wrought urn becomes<sup>o</sup>
 The greatest ashes, as half-acre tombs,
 35 And by these hymns,<sup>1</sup> all shall approve<sup>o</sup>
 Us canonized for love:

 And thus invoke us: You whom reverend love
 Made one another's hermitage;
 You, to whom love was peace, that now is rage;
 40 Who did the whole world's soul contract,<sup>2</sup> and drove
 Into the glasses of your eyes
 (So made such mirrors, and such spies,<sup>o</sup>
 That they did all to you epitomize)
 Countries, towns, courts:<sup>3</sup> Beg from above 45 A pattern of your love!

1633

Endnotes

- Note 1: The poem plays off against the Roman Catholic process of determining that certain persons are saints, proper objects of veneration and prayer.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: An appointment, at court or elsewhere. "Take you a course": follow some career.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Pay court to some lord or bishop.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: On coins; "real" (royal) refers also to a particular Spanish coin.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Petrarchan lovers traditionally sigh, weep, and are frozen because of their mistresses' neglect.Return to reference 5

- Note 6: Deaths from the plague, which raged in summer, were recorded by parish in weekly lists.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Flies were emblems of transience and lustfulness; tapers (candles) attract flies to their death and also consume themselves. "Die" in the punning terminology of the period means to experience orgasm, and there was a superstition that intercourse shortened life.Return to reference 7
- Note 8:
The eagle signifies strength and vision; the dove, meekness and mercy. The phoenix was a mythic Arabian bird, only one of which existed at any one time. After living five hundred years, it was consumed by fire, then rose triumphantly from its ashes a new bird. Thus it was a symbol of immortality and sometimes associated with Christ. "Eagle" and "dove" are also alchemical terms for processes leading to the rise of "phoenix," a stage in the transmutation of metals to gold.
Return to reference 8
- Note 9: "Rooms" (punning on the Italian meaning of "stanza") will contain their exploits, as prose chronicle histories contain great deeds done in the world.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: The lover's own poems.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: An alternative meaning is "extract."Return to reference 2
- Note 3: "Countries, towns, courts" are objects of the verb "drove." The notion is that eyes both see and reflect the outside world, and so can contain all of it.Return to reference 3

Notes

- °: try, testReturn to reference °
- °: earlyReturn to reference °
- °: historyReturn to reference °
- °: befitsReturn to reference °
- °: confirmReturn to reference °
- °: spyglasses, telescopesReturn to reference °

Song

Sweetest love, I do not go,
For weariness of thee,
Nor in hope the world can show
A fitter love for me;
But since that I
5 Must die at last, 'tis best,
To use myself in jest
Thus by feigned deaths<sup>o</sup> to die.

Yesternight the sun went hence
And yet is here today,
10 He hath no desire nor sense,
Nor half so short a way:
Then fear not me,
But believe that I shall make Speedier journeys, since I take 15 More wings and spurs than he.

O how feeble is man's power,
That if good fortune fall,<sup>o</sup>
Cannot add another hour,
Nor a lost hour recall!
20 But come bad chance,
And we join to't our strength,
And we teach it art and length,
Itself o'er us to'advance.

When thou sigh'st, thou sigh'st not wind,
25 But sigh'st my soul away,
When thou weep'st, unkindly<sup>1</sup> kind,
My life's blood doth decay.

30           It cannot be
          That thou lov'st me, as thou say'st,
          If in thine my life thou waste,
          Thou art the best of me.

35           Let not thy divining<sup>o</sup> heart
          Forethink me any ill,
          Destiny may take thy part,
          And may thy fears fulfill;
          But think that we
          Are but turned aside to sleep;
          They who one another keep 40           Alive, ne'er parted be.

1633

Endnotes

- Note 1: This word also carries the meaning "unnaturally."Return to reference 1

Notes

- <sup>o</sup>: that is, absencesReturn to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: happenReturn to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: propheticReturn to reference <sup>o</sup>

Air and Angels

Twice or thrice had I loved thee,
Before I knew thy face or name;
So in a voice, so in a shapeless flame,
Angels affect us oft, and worshipped be;
5        Still<sup>o</sup> when, to where thou wert, I came,
Some lovely glorious nothing<sup>1</sup> I did see.
      But since my soul, whose child love is,
Takes limbs of flesh, and else could nothing do,<sup>2</sup>
      More subtle<sup>o</sup> than the parent is Love must not be, but take a body too;
10        And therefore what thou wert, and who,
      I bid love ask, and now
That it assume thy body I allow,
And fix itself in thy lip, eye, and brow.
Whilst thus to ballast love I thought,
15        And so more steadily to have gone,
With wares which would sink<sup>o</sup> admiration,
I saw I had love's pinnace<sup>o</sup> overfraught;<sup>o</sup>
      Every thy hair for love to work upon
Is much too much, some fitter must be sought;
20        For, nor in nothing, nor in things
Extreme and scatt'ring<sup>o</sup> bright, can love inhere.
      Then as an angel, face and wings
Of air, not pure as it, yet pure doth wear,<sup>3</sup>
      So thy love may be my love's sphere;<sup>4</sup>
25        Just such disparity
As is 'twixt air and angels' purity,
'Twixt women's love and men's will ever be.

Endnotes

- Note 1: Spiritual beauty, the true object of love in Neoplatonic philosophy.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: My soul could not function unless it were in a body.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: It was commonly believed that angels, when they appeared to humans, assumed a body of air that, though pure, was less so than the angel's spiritual essence.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Each sphere in the cosmos was thought to be governed by an angel (an intelligence).Return to reference 4

Notes

- °: alwaysReturn to reference °
- °: rarefiedReturn to reference °
- °: overwhelmReturn to reference °
- °: small boat Return to reference °
- °: overloadedReturn to reference °
- °: dazzlingReturn to reference °

Break of Day<sup>1</sup>

'Tis true, 'tis day; what though it be?
O wilt thou therefore rise from me?
Why should we rise because 'tis light?
Did we lie down because 'twas night?
5 Love, which in spite of darkness brought us hither,
Should in despite of light keep us together.

Light hath no tongue, but is all eye;
If it could speak as well as spy,
This were the worst that it could say,
10 That being well, I fain<sup>o</sup> would stay,
And that I loved my heart and honor so
That I would not from him, that had them, go.

Must business thee from hence remove?
O, that's the worst disease of love.
15 The poor, the foul, the false, love can Admit, but not the busied man.
He which hath business, and makes love, doth do
Such wrong, as when a married man doth woo.

1622, 1633

Endnotes

- Note 1: An aubade, or song of the lovers' parting at dawn, this poem is unusual for Donne in having a female speaker. The poem was given a musical setting and published in 1622, in William Corkine's Second Book of Ayers.Return to reference 1

Notes

- °: gladly Return to reference °

A Valediction:<sup>1</sup> Of Weeping

Let me pour forth
My tears before thy face whilst I stay here,
For thy face coins them, and thy stamp<sup>o</sup> they bear,
And by this mintage they are something worth,
For thus they be
5 Pregnant of thee;
Fruits of much grief they are, emblems<sup>o</sup> of more—
When a tear falls, that thou falls which it bore,
So thou and I are nothing then, when on a diverse<sup>o</sup> shore.

On a round ball
10 A workman that hath copies by can lay
An Europe, Afric, and an Asia,
And quickly make that, which was nothing, all;<sup>2</sup>
So doth each tear
Which thee doth wear,<sup>3</sup>
15 A globe, yea world, by that impression grow,
Till thy tears mixed with mine do overflow
This world; by waters sent from thee, my heaven
dissolvèd so.

O more than moon,
20 Draw not up seas to drown me in thy sphere;<sup>4</sup>
Weep me not dead in thine arms, but forbear
To teach the sea what it may do too soon.
Let not the wind
Example find
To do me more harm than it purposeth;
25 Since thou and I sigh one another's breath,

Whoe'er sighs most is cruelest, and hastes the other's death.

1633

Endnotes

- Note 1: A farewell poem, one of four so titled in the Songs and Sonnets. Another is "A Valediction: Forbidding Mourning," p. 897.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: That is, on a blank globe one can place maps of the continents and so convert "nothing" into the whole world ("all").Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Which bears your image.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: A star or planet with more power of attraction than the moon might not only affect tides but draw the very seas unto itself.Return to reference 4

Notes

- °: imageReturn to reference °
- °: symbolsReturn to reference °
- °: differentReturn to reference °

A Nocturnal upon Saint Lucy's Day, Being the Shortest Day<sup>1</sup>

'Tis the year's midnight and it is the day's,
Lucy's, who scarce seven hours herself unmask;
The sun is spent, and now his flasks<sup>2</sup>
Send forth light squibs,<sup>o</sup> no constant rays.
The world's whole sap is sunk;
5 The general balm th' hydroptic<sup>3</sup> earth hath drunk,
Whither, as to the bed's feet, life is shrunk,
Dead and interred; yet all these seem to laugh,
Compared with me, who am their epitaph.

Study me, then, you who shall lovers be 10 At the next world, that is, at the next spring;
For I am every dead thing
In whom love wrought new alchemy.
For his art did express<sup>o</sup>
15 A quintessence<sup>4</sup> even from nothingness,
From dull privations and lean emptiness.
He ruined me, and I am re-begot
Of absence, darkness, death: things which are not.

All others from all things draw all that's good,
Life, soul, form, spirit, whence they being have;
20 I, by love's limbeck,<sup>5</sup> am the grave
Of all that's nothing. Oft a flood
Have we two wept, and so
Drowned the whole world, us two; oft did we grow
To be two chaoses when we did show
25 Care to aught<sup>o</sup> else; and often absences
Withdrew our souls, and made us carcasses.

But I am by her death (which word wrongs her)
 Of the first nothing the elixir grown;<sup>6</sup>
 Were I a man, that I were one 30 I needs must know; I should prefer,
 If I were any beast,
 Some ends, some means; yea plants, yea stones detest
 And love.<sup>7</sup> All, all some properties invest.
 If I an ordinary nothing were,
 35 As shadow, a light and body must be here.

 But I am none; nor will my sun renew.
 You lovers, for whose sake the lesser sun
 At this time to the Goat<sup>8</sup> is run
 To fetch new lust and give it you,
 40 Enjoy your summer all.
 Since she enjoys her long night's festival,
 Let me prepare towards her, and let me call
 This hour her vigil and her eve, since this 45 Both the year's and the day's deep midnight is.

1633

Endnotes

- Note 1:
 The nocturne, or night office of the Roman Catholic Church, is a service held in the primitive church at midnight. St. Lucy's Day fell on December 13 according to the old calendar still in use in England at the time, and its vigil (the previous day and night) was the winter solstice, the shortest day of the year. At this time of the year, the sun rises after 8 A.M. in the latitude of London and sets well before 4 P.M.

Return to reference 1

- Note 2: The stars are “flasks,” thought to store up light from the sun.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Dropsical, thus insatiably thirsty. “General balm”: the supposedly life-preserving essence of all things.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: The reputed fifth essence, a celestial element beyond the mundane four elements (earth, water, air, fire), thought to be latent in all things and to be a universal cure. Alchemists sought to extract it.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Alembic; a vessel used in distilling.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: That is, the quintessence of that absolute nothingness that existed before the creation.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Beasts have intentions; plants and even stones (like lodestones) have attractions and antipathies.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: The sign of Capricorn, which the sun enters at the winter solstice; the goat is an emblem of sexual vigor.Return to reference 8

Notes

- °: small fireworksReturn to reference °
- °: extractReturn to reference °
- °: anythingReturn to reference °

The Bait<sup>1</sup>

Come live with me and be my love,
And we will some new pleasures prove,<sup>o</sup>
Of golden sands and crystal brooks,
With silken lines and silver hooks.

5 There will the river whispering run,
Warmed by thine eyes more than the sun.
And there the enamored fish will stay,
Begging themselves they may betray.

10 When thou wilt swim in that live bath,
Each fish, which every channel hath,
Will amorously to thee swim,
Gladder to catch thee, than thou him.

15 If thou, to be so seen, beest loath,
By sun or moon, thou darkenest both;
And if myself have leave to see,
I need not their light, having thee.

20 Let others freeze with angling reeds,
And cut their legs with shells and weeds,
Or treacherously poor fish beset
With strangling snare or windowy net.

Let coarse bold hands from slimy nest
The bedded fish in banks outwrest,
Or curious traitors, sleeve-silk flies,<sup>2</sup>
Bewitch poor fishes' wandering eyes.

25 For thee, thou need'st no such deceit,

For thou thyself art thine own bait;
That fish that is not caught thereby,
Alas, is wiser far than I.

1633

Endnotes

- Note 1: This poem is Donne's response to Marlowe's "Passionate Shepherd to His Love," p. 495. Another of the many responses was Raleigh's "The Nymph's Reply to the Shepherd," p. 496. Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Flies (for fishing) made of unraveled silk. "Curious": exquisitely made. Return to reference 2

Notes

- °: try Return to reference °

The Apparition

When by thy scorn, O murderess, I am dead,
And that thou thinkst thee free
From all solicitation from me,
Then shall my ghost come to thy bed,
5 And thee, feigned vestal,<sup>1</sup> in worse arms shall see;
Then thy sick taper will begin to wink,<sup>o</sup>
And he whose thou art then, being tired before,
Will, if thou stir, or pinch to wake him, think
Thou call'st for more,
10 And in false sleep will from thee shrink,
And then, poor aspen wretch,<sup>2</sup> neglected thou
Bathed in a cold quicksilver sweat<sup>3</sup> wilt lie
A verier<sup>o</sup> ghost than I;
What I will say, I will not tell thee now,
Lest that preserve thee; and since my love is spent,
15 I had rather thou shouldst painfully repent,
Than by my threatenings rest still innocent.

1633

Endnotes

- Note 1: Virgin consecrated to the Roman goddess Vesta.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Aspen leaves flutter in the slightest breeze.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Sweating in terror; quicksilver (mercury) was a stock prescription for venereal disease, and sweating was part of the cure.Return to reference 3

Notes

- °: flickerReturn to reference °
- °: truerReturn to reference °

A Valediction: Forbidding Mourning<sup>1</sup>

As virtuous men pass mildly away,
And whisper to their souls to go,
Whilst some of their sad friends do say
The breath goes now, and some say, No;

5 So let us melt, and make no noise,
No tear-floods, nor sigh-tempests move;
'Twere profanation<sup>o</sup> of our joys
To tell the laity our love.

Moving of th' earth brings harms and fears,
Men reckon what it did and meant;
10 But trepidation of the spheres,
Though greater far, is innocent.<sup>2</sup>

Dull sublunary<sup>3</sup> lovers' love
(Whose soul is sense) cannot admit Absence, because it doth remove 15 Those things which elemented<sup>o</sup> it.

But we, by a love so much refined
That ourselves know not what it is,
Inter-assurèd of the mind,
Care less, eyes, lips, and hands to miss.
20

Our two souls therefore, which are one,
Though I must go, endure not yet
A breach, but an expansion,
Like gold to airy thinness beat.

25 If they be two, they are two so

As stiff twin compasses<sup>4</sup> are two;
Thy soul, the fixed foot, makes no show
To move, but doth, if th' other do.

And though it in the center sit,
Yet when the other far doth roam,
30 It leans and hearkens after it,
And grows erect, as that comes home.

Such wilt thou be to me, who must,
Like th' other foot, obliquely run;
35 Thy firmness makes my circle just,
And makes me end where I begun.

1633

The Compass. A manuscript poem inspired by the compass image in Donne's "A Valediction: Forbidding Mourning" is prefaced by a drawing of a seventeenth-century compass meant to celebrate the poem's central metaphor.

---

Endnotes

- Note 1: For "valediction" see p. 893, n. 1. Izaak Walton speculated that this poem was addressed to Donne's wife on the occasion of his trip to the Continent in 1611, but there is no proof of that.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Earthquakes cause damage and were thought to be portentous. "Trepidation" (in the Ptolemaic cosmology) is an oscillation of the ninth or crystalline sphere imparted to all the inner spheres. Though a much more violent motion than an earthquake, it is neither destructive nor sinister.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Beneath the moon, therefore earthly, sensual, and subject to change.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: The two legs of a geometer's or draftsman's compass.Return to reference 4

Notes

- °: desecrationReturn to reference °
- °: composedReturn to reference °

The Ecstasy<sup>1</sup>

Where, like a pillow on a bed,
A pregnant bank swelled up to rest
The violet's reclining head,
Sat we two, one another's best.

5 Our hands were firmly cemented
With a fast balm<sup>o</sup> which thence did spring,
Our eye-beams<sup>2</sup> twisted, and did thread
Our eyes upon one double string;

10 So to intergraft our hands, as yet
Was all our means to make us one,
And pictures in our eyes<sup>3</sup> to get<sup>o</sup>
Was all our propagation.

15 As 'twixt two equal armies Fate
Suspends uncertain victory,
Our souls (which to advance their state
Were gone out) hung 'twixt her and me;

20 And whilst our souls negotiate there,
We like sepulchral statues lay;
All day the same our postures were,
And we said nothing all the day.

If any, so by love refined
That he soul's language understood,
And by good love were grown all mind,
Within convenient distance stood,

25 He (though he knew not which soul spake,

Because both meant, both spake the same)
Might thence a new concoction<sup>4</sup> take,
And part far purer than he came.

30 This ecstasy doth unperplex,
We said, and tell us what we love;
We see by this it was not sex;
We see we saw not what did move;<sup>o</sup>

But as all several<sup>o</sup> souls contain Mixture of things, they know not what,
35 Love these mixed souls doth mix again,
And makes both one, each this and that.

A single violet transplant,
The strength, the color, and the size
(All which before was poor and scant)
40 Redoubles still,<sup>o</sup> and multiplies.

When love with one another so
Interinanimates two souls,
That abler soul, which thence doth flow,
Defects of loneliness controls.

45 We then, who are this new soul, know
Of what we are composed and made,
For th' atomies<sup>o</sup> of which we grow
Are souls, whom no change can invade.

But O alas, so long, so far
50 Our bodies why do we forbear?
They are ours, though they are not we; we are
The intelligences, they the sphere.<sup>5</sup>

We owe them thanks because they thus
Did us to us at first convey,

55      Yielded their forces, sense, to us,
          Nor are dross to us, but allay.<sup>6</sup>

         On man heaven's influence works not so
          But that it first imprints the air:<sup>7</sup>
          So soul into the soul may flow,
 60      Though it to body first repair.<sup>8</sup>

         As our blood labors to beget
          Spirits<sup>8</sup> as like souls as it can,
          Because such fingers need<sup>9</sup> to knit
          That subtle knot which makes us man,

65      So must pure lovers' souls descend
          T' affections, and to faculties
          Which sense may reach and apprehend;
          Else a great prince in prison lies.

         To our bodies turn we then, that so
          Weak men on love revealed may look;
 70      Love's mysteries<sup>9</sup> in souls do grow,
          But yet the body is his book.

         And if some lover, such as we,
          Have heard this dialogue of one,<sup>1</sup>
          Let him still mark<sup>9</sup> us; he shall see 75      Small change when we are to bodies gone.

1633

Endnotes

- Note 1: From ekstasis (Greek), a movement of the soul outside of the body.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Invisible shafts of light, thought of as going out of the eyes and thereby enabling one to see things.Return to reference

2

- Note 3: Reflections of each in the other's eyes, often called "making babies."Return to reference 3
- Note 4: In the alchemical sense of sublimation or purification.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: In Ptolemaic astronomy, each planet, set in a transparent "sphere" that revolved and so carried it around the earth, was inhabited by a controlling angelic "intelligence."Return to reference 5
- Note 6: "Dross" is an impurity that weakens metal; "allay" (alloy) strengthens it.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Astrological influences were thought to work on people through the medium of the surrounding air.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Subtle substances thought to be produced by the blood to serve as intermediaries between body and soul.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: The implied comparison is with God's mysteries, which are revealed and may be read in the book of nature and the book of scripture.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: "Dialogue of one" because "both meant, both spake the same" (line 26).Return to reference 1

Notes

- °: perspirationReturn to reference °
- °: begetReturn to reference °
- °: motivate usReturn to reference °
- °: separateReturn to reference °
- °: continuallyReturn to reference °
- °: componentsReturn to reference °
- °: goReturn to reference °
- °: are neededReturn to reference °
- °: observeReturn to reference °

The Funeral

Whoever comes to shroud me, do not harm
Nor question much
That subtle wreath of hair which crowns my arm;
The mystery, the sign you must not touch,
For 'tis my outward soul,
5 Viceroy to that, which then to heaven being gone,
Will leave this to control,
And keep these limbs, her<sup>1</sup> provinces, from dissolution.

For if the sinewy thread<sup>2</sup> my brain lets fall
Through every part
10 Can tie those parts and make me one of all,
These hairs which upward grew, and strength and art
Have from a better brain,
Can better do it; except<sup>o</sup> she meant that I
By this should know my pain, 15 As prisoners then are manacled, when they're condemned to die.

Whate'er she meant by it, bury it with me,
For since I am
Love's martyr, it might breed idolatry,
If into others' hands these relics<sup>3</sup> came:
20 As 'twas humility
To afford to it all that a soul can do,
So 'tis some bravery,<sup>o</sup>
That since you would save<sup>4</sup> none of me, I bury some of you.

Endnotes

- Note 1: The soul's, but also the mistress's (compare "she," line 14).Return to reference 1
- Note 2: The nervous system.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Body parts or other objects belonging to a saint, venerated by Roman Catholics.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: All the early printed texts read "have" (which carries sexual connotations), while many manuscripts read "save."Return to reference 4

Notes

- °: unlessReturn to reference °
- °: defianceReturn to reference °

The Relic

When my grave is broke up again
Some second guest to entertain
(For graves have learned that woman-head<sup>o</sup>
To be to more than one a bed),<sup>1</sup>
And he that digs it spies
5 A bracelet of bright hair about the bone,
Will he not let us alone,
And think that there a loving couple lies,
Who thought that this device might be some way
To make their souls, at the last busy day,<sup>2</sup>
10 Meet at this grave, and make a little stay?

If this fall<sup>o</sup> in a time, or land,
Where mis-devotion<sup>3</sup> doth command,
Then he that digs us up will bring
Us to the bishop and the king,
15 To make us relics; then Thou shalt be a Mary Magdalen, and I
A something else thereby;
All women shall adore us, and some men;
And since at such times, miracles are sought,
20 I would have that age by this paper taught
What miracles we harmless lovers wrought.

First, we loved well and faithfully,
Yet knew not what we loved, nor why,
Difference of sex no more we knew,
25 Than our guardian angels do;
Coming and going, we
Perchance might kiss, but not between those meals;<sup>4</sup>
Our hands ne'er touched the seals<sup>o</sup>

Which nature, injured by late law, sets free:<sup>5</sup>
 These miracles we did: but now, alas,
 All measure and all language I should pass,
 Should I tell what a miracle she was.

Endnotes

- Note 1: Graves were often used to inter successive corpses, the bones of previous occupants being deposited in charnel houses.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Judgment Day, when the bodies of the deceased are reunited with their souls (and the beloved comes to her lover's grave to reclaim her hair).Return to reference 2
- Note 3: False devotion, superstition—that is, Roman Catholicism.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: The kisses of salutation and parting.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Human law forbids the free love permitted by nature. "Late": recent (comparatively speaking).Return to reference 5

Notes

- °: female traitReturn to reference °
- °: happenReturn to reference °
- °: sexual organsReturn to reference °

A Lecture upon the Shadow

Stand still, and I will read to thee
A lecture, Love, in love's philosophy.
These three hours that we have spent
Walking here, two shadows went Along with us, which we ourselves produced;
5 But, now the sun is just above our head,
We do those shadows tread
And to brave<sup>o</sup> clearness all things are reduced.
So, whilst our infant loves did grow,
Disguises did and shadows flow
10 From us and our care;<sup>o</sup> but now, 'tis not so.

That love hath not attained the high'st degree
Which is still diligent lest others see.

Except<sup>o</sup> our loves at this noon stay,
We shall new shadows make the other way.
15 As the first were made to blind
Others, these which come behind
Will work upon ourselves, and blind our eyes.
If our loves faint and westwardly decline,
To me thou falsely thine
20 And I to thee mine actions shall disguise.
The morning shadows wear away,
But these grow longer all the day,
But, oh, love's day is short if love decay.

Love is a growing or full constant light,
25 And his first minute after noon is night.

Notes

- °: splendidReturn to reference °
- °: cautionReturn to reference °
- °: unlessReturn to reference °

Elegy<sup>1</sup> 16. On His Mistress

By our first strange and fatal<sup>o</sup> interview,
By all desires which thereof did ensue,
By our long starving hopes, by that remorse<sup>o</sup>
Which my words' masculine persuasive force
Begot in thee, and by the memory
5 Of hurts which spies and rivals threatened me,
I calmly beg; but by thy father's wrath,
By all pains which want and divorcement hath,
I conjure thee; and all the oaths which I
And thou have sworn to seal joint constancy
10 Here I unswear and overswear them thus:
Thou shalt not love by ways so dangerous.
Temper, oh fair love, love's impetuous rage;
Be my true mistress still, not my feigned page.<sup>2</sup>
I'll go, and, by thy kind leave, leave behind 15 Thee, only worthy to nurse in my mind
Thirst to come back. Oh, if thou die before,
My soul from other lands to thee shall soar.
Thy (else almighty) beauty cannot move
Rage from the seas, nor thy love teach them love,
20 Nor tame wild Boreas' harshness.<sup>3</sup> Thou hast read
How roughly he in pieces shiverèd
Fair Orithea, whom he swore he loved.
Fall ill or good, 'tis madness to have proved<sup>o</sup>
Dangers unurged; feed on this flattery,
25 That absent lovers one in th' other be.
Dissemble nothing, not a boy, nor change
Thy body's habit,<sup>o</sup> nor mind's; be not strange
To thyself only; all will spy in thy face
A blushing womanly discovering grace.
30

Richly clothed apes are called apes, and as soon
 Eclipsed as bright we call the moon the moon.
 Men of France, changeable chameleons,
 Spitals<sup>o</sup> of diseases, shops of fashions,
 Love's fuelers<sup>4</sup> and the rightest company
 35 Of players which upon the world's stage be,
 Will quickly know thee, and know thee; and alas!<sup>5</sup>
 Th' indifferent<sup>o</sup> Italian, as we pass
 His warm land, well content to think thee page,
 Will hunt thee with such lust and hideous rage
 40 As Lot's fair guests were vexed.<sup>6</sup> But none of these Nor spongy, hydroptic<sup>7</sup> Dutch shall thee displease
 If thou stay here. O stay here, for, for thee,
 England is only a worthy gallery
 To walk in expectation, till from thence 45 Our greatest king call thee to his presence.<sup>8</sup>
 When I am gone, dream me some happiness,
 Nor let thy looks our long-hid love confess;
 Nor praise nor dispraise me, bless nor curse
 Openly love's force, nor in bed fright thy nurse
 50 With midnight's startings, crying out "Oh, oh!
 Nurse, oh my love is slain, I saw him go
 O'er the white Alps alone; I saw him, I,
 Assailed, fight, taken, stabbed, bleed, fall, and die."
 Augur me better chance, except dread Jove
 55 Think it enough for me t' have had thy love.

1635

Endnotes

- Note 1: In Latin poetry, an elegy is a discursive or reflective poem written in "elegiacs" (unrhymed couplets of alternating dactylic hexameters and pentameters). This meter was used for funeral laments and especially for love poetry. The most famous classical elegist was the Roman poet Ovid; his Amores, a

- collection of witty and sensual love poems, deeply influenced Donne's erotic poetry.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: The speaker's mistress wanted to accompany him abroad, disguised as a page boy. Such escapades occasionally took place in real life; in 1605, Elizabeth Southwell, disguised as a page, went abroad with Sir Robert Dudley.Return to reference 2
  - Note 3: God of the north wind; in Metamorphoses 6 Ovid describes the wild force with which Boreas abducted Orithea.Return to reference 3
  - Note 4: Providers of aphrodisiacs.Return to reference 4
  - Note 5: May pun on "a lass." "Know": in the sexual sense.Return to reference 5
  - Note 6: The inhabitants of Sodom tried to rape two angels who visited Lot in the guise of men to warn of the city's impending destruction (Genesis 19:1–11).Return to reference 6
  - Note 7: Dropsical, thus insatiably thirsty.Return to reference 7
  - Note 8: Throne rooms commonly had antechambers (galleries) where visitors waited until the monarch was ready to see them.Return to reference 8

Notes

- °: fatefulReturn to reference °
- °: pityReturn to reference °
- °: sought outReturn to reference °
- °: clothingReturn to reference °
- °: hospitalsReturn to reference °
- °: bisexualReturn to reference °

Elegy 19. To His Mistress Going to Bed

Come, Madam, come, all rest my powers defy,
Until I labor, I in labor lie.<sup>1</sup>
The foe oft-times having the foe in sight,
Is tired with standing though he never fight.
Off with that girdle,<sup>o</sup> like heaven's zone<sup>o</sup> glistening,
5 But a far fairer world encompassing.
Unpin that spangled breastplate<sup>2</sup> which you wear
That th' eyes of busy fools may be stopped there.
Unlace yourself, for that harmonious chime
Tells me from you that now it is bed-time.
10 Off with that happy busk,<sup>o</sup> which I envy,
That still<sup>o</sup> can be and still can stand so nigh.
Your gown going off, such beauteous state reveals
As when from flowery meads th' hill's shadow steals.
Off with that wiry coronet and show
15 The hairy diadem which on you doth grow;
Now off with those shoes, and then safely tread
In this love's hallowed temple, this soft bed.
In such white robes, heaven's angels used to be Received by men; thou, angel, bring'st with thee
20 A heaven like Mahomet's paradise;<sup>3</sup> and though
Ill spirits walk in white, we easily know
By this these angels from an evil sprite,
Those set our hairs, but these our flesh upright.
License my roving hands, and let them go
25 Before, behind, between, above, below.
O my America! my new-found-land,
My kingdom, safeliest when with one man manned,
My mine of precious stones, my empery,<sup>o</sup>
30 How blest am I in this discovering thee!

To enter in these bonds is to be free;
 There where my hand is set, my seal shall be.<sup>4</sup>
 Full nakedness! All joys are due to thee.
 As souls unbodied, bodies unclothed must be,
 To taste whole joys. Gems which you women use 35 Are like Atalanta's balls,<sup>5</sup> cast in men's views,
 That when a fool's eye lighteth on a gem,
 His earthly soul may covet theirs, not them.
 Like pictures, or like books' gay coverings, made
 For laymen, are all women thus arrayed;
 40 Themselves are mystic books, which only we (Whom their imputed grace will dignify)
 Must see revealed.<sup>6</sup> Then since that I may know,
 As liberally as to a midwife show
 Thyself: cast all, yea, this white linen hence,
 45 Here is no penance, much less innocence.<sup>7</sup>
 To teach thee, I am naked first; why then
 What need'st thou have more covering than a man?
 1669

Endnotes

- Note 1: "Labor" in the dual sense of "get to work (sexually)" and "distress."Return to reference 1
- Note 2: The stomacher, an ornamental, often jeweled, covering for the chest, worn under the lacing of the bodice.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: A place of sensual pleasure, thought to be populated by seductive houris for the delectation of the faithful.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: The jokes mingle law with sex: where he has signed a document (placed his hand) he will now place his seal; and in the bonds of her arms he will find freedom.Return to reference 4

- Note 5: Atalanta, running a race against her suitor Hippomenes, was beaten when he dropped golden apples ("balls") for her to pick up. Donne reverses the story.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: By granting favors to their lovers, women impute to them grace that they don't deserve, as God, in Calvinist doctrine, imputes grace to undeserving sinners. Laymen can only look at the covers of mystic books (clothed women), but "we" elect can read them (see women naked).Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Some manuscripts read: "There is no penance due to innocence." White garments would be appropriate either for the innocent virgin or for the sinner doing formal penance.Return to reference 7

Notes

- °: belt Return to reference °
- °: zodiac Return to reference °
- °: bodice Return to reference °
- °: always Return to reference °
- °: empire Return to reference °

Satire 3 In satire the author holds a subject up to ridicule. Like his elegies, Donne's five verse satires were written in his twenties and are in the forefront of an effort in the 1590s (by Donne, Ben Jonson, Joseph Hall, and John Marston) to naturalize those classical forms in England. While elements of satire figure in many different kinds of literature, the great models for formal verse satire were the Roman poets Horace and Juvenal, the former for an urbanely witty style, the latter for an indignant or angry manner. While Donne's other satires call on these models, his third satire more nearly resembles those of a third Roman satirist, Persius, known for an abstruse style and moralizing manner. This work is a strenuous discussion of an acute theological problem, for the age and for Donne himself: How may one discover the true Christian church among so many claimants to that role? At the time Donne wrote "Satire 3," he was in the process of leaving the Roman Catholic Church of his heritage for the Church of England.

Satire 3

Kind pity chokes my spleen;<sup>1</sup> brave<sup>o</sup> scorn forbids
Those tears to issue which swell my eyelids;
I must not laugh, nor weep<sup>o</sup> sins, and be wise:
Can railing then cure these worn maladies?
Is not our mistress, fair Religion,
5 As worthy of all our souls' devotion
As virtue was to the first blinded age?<sup>2</sup>
Are not heaven's joys as valiant to assuage
Lusts, as earth's honor was to them?<sup>o</sup> Alas,
As we do them in means, shall they surpass
10 Us in the end, and shall thy father's spirit
Meet blind philosophers in heaven, whose merit
Of strict life may be imputed faith,<sup>3</sup> and hear Thee, whom he taught so easy ways and near
To follow, damned? O, if thou dar'st, fear this;
15 This fear great courage and high valor is.
Dar'st thou aid mutinous Dutch,<sup>4</sup> and dar'st thou lay
Thee in ships, wooden sepulchers, a prey
To leaders' rage, to storms, to shot, to dearth?<sup>o</sup>
Dar'st thou dive seas and dungeons<sup>o</sup> of the earth?
20 Hast thou courageous fire to thaw the ice
Of frozen north discoveries?<sup>5</sup> And thrice
Colder than salamanders, like divine
Children in the oven,<sup>6</sup> fires of Spain and the line, Whose countries limbecks to our bodies be,
25 Canst thou for gain bear?<sup>7</sup> And must every he
Which cries not "Goddess!" to thy mistress, draw,<sup>o</sup>
Or eat thy poisonous words? Courage of straw!
O desperate coward, wilt thou seem bold, and
To thy foes and His<sup>o</sup> (who made thee to stand Sentinel in his world's garrison) thus yield,

30 And for forbidden wars leave th' appointed field?<sup>8</sup>
Know thy foes: The foul Devil (whom thou Strivest to please) for hate, not love, would allow Thee fain<sup>o</sup> his whole realm to be quit;<sup>o</sup> and as 35 The world's all parts wither away and pass,<sup>9</sup>
So the world's self, thy other loved foe, is
In her decrepit wane, and thou, loving this,
Dost love a withered and worn strumpet; last,
Flesh (itself's death) and joys which flesh can taste
40 Thou lovest; and thy fair goodly soul, which doth
Give this flesh power to taste joy, thou dost loathe.
Seek true religion. O, where? Mirreus,<sup>1</sup>
Thinking her unhoused here, and fled from us,
Seeks her at Rome; there, because he doth know
45 That she was there a thousand years ago.
He loves her rags so, as we here obey
The statecloth<sup>2</sup> where the prince sat yesterday.
Crantz to such brave loves will not be enthralled,
But loves her only, who at Geneva is called 50 Religion—plain, simple, sullen, young, Contemtuious, yet unhandsome; as among Lecherous humors,<sup>o</sup> there is one that judges
No wenches wholesome but coarse country drudges.
Graius stays still at home here, and because 55 Some preachers, vile ambitious bawds, and laws
Still new, like fashions, bid him think that she Which dwells with us is only perfect, he Embraceth her whom his godfathers will Tender to him, being tender, as wards still 60 Take such wives as their guardians offer, or Pay values.<sup>3</sup> Careless Phrygius doth abhor
All, because all cannot be good, as one
Knowing some women whores, dares marry none.
Graccus loves all as one, and thinks that so

65 As women do in divers countries go
In divers habits,<sup>o</sup> yet are still one kind,
So doth, so is religion; and this blindness too much light breeds;<sup>4</sup> but unmoved thou
Of force<sup>o</sup> must one, and forced but one allow;
70 And the right; ask thy father which is she,
Let him ask his; though truth and falsehood be Near twins, yet truth a little elder is;
Be busy to seek her, believe me this,
He's not of none, nor worst, that seeks the best.<sup>5</sup>
75 To adore, or scorn an image, or protest,
May all be bad; doubt wisely; in strange way
To stand inquiring right, is not to stray;
To sleep, or run wrong, is. On a huge hill, Cragged and steep, Truth stands, and he that will 80 Reach her, about must, and about must go,
And what the hill's suddenness resists, win so;
Yet strive so, that before age, death's twilight,
Thy soul rest, for none can work in that night.<sup>6</sup>
To will<sup>o</sup> implies delay, therefore now do.
85 Hard deeds, the body's pains; hard knowledge too
The mind's endeavors reach,<sup>o</sup> and mysteries
Are like the sun, dazzling, yet plain to all eyes.
Keep the truth which thou hast found; men do not stand
In so ill case here, that God hath with his hand
90 Signed kings' blank charters to kill whom they hate,
Nor are they vicars, but hangmen to fate.<sup>7</sup>
Fool and wretch, wilt thou let thy soul be tied
To man's laws, by which she shall not be tried
At the last day? O, will it then boot<sup>o</sup> thee
95 To say a Philip, or a Gregory,
A Harry, or a Martin taught thee this?<sup>8</sup>
Is not this excuse for mere<sup>o</sup> contraries
Equally strong? Cannot both sides say so?

100 That thou mayest rightly obey power, her bounds
     know;
 Those passed, her nature and name is changed; to
     be
 Then humble to her is idolatry.
 As streams are, power is; those blest flowers that dwell
 At the rough stream's calm head, thrive and prove
     well,
 105 But having left their roots, and themselves given
 To the stream's tyrannous rage, alas, are driven Through mills, and rocks, and woods, and at last,
     almost
 Consumed in going, in the sea are lost:
 So perish souls, which more choose men's unjust
 Power from God claimed, than God himself to trust.
 110

1633

Endnotes

- Note 1: The seat of bile, hence scorn and ridicule.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: The age of paganism, blind to Christianity but capable of natural morality ("virtue").Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Donne's formulation wittily turns on its head the key concept of Protestant theology—that salvation is to be achieved only by imputing Christ's merits to Christians through faith—by suggesting that virtuous pagans might be saved by imputing faith to them on the basis of their moral life.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: English volunteers took frequent part with the Dutch in their wars against Spain. Donne himself had sailed in two raiding expeditions against the Spanish.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Many explorers tried to find a northwest passage to the Pacific.Return to reference 5

- Note 6: In the biblical story (Daniel 3), Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego were rescued from a fiery furnace. The salamander (a lizardlike creature) was thought to be so cold-blooded that it could live in fire.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: The object of “bear” is “fires of Spain and the line”—inquisitorial and equatorial heats, which roast people as chemists heat materials in “limbecks” (alembics, or vessels for distilling).Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Of moral struggle.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: The common belief that the world was growing old and becoming decrepit.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: The satiric types in this passage represent different creeds: “Mirreus” is a Roman Catholic; “Crantz,” an austere Calvinist Presbyterian of Geneva; “Graius,” a Church of England Erastian who believes in any religion sponsored by the state; “Phrygius,” a skeptic; and “Graccus,” a complete relativist.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: The royal canopy, a symbol of kingly power.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: If minors in care of a guardian (in wardship) rejected the wives offered (“tendered”) to them they had to pay fines (“values”).Return to reference 3
- Note 4: That is, Graccus considers the differences between religions merely incidental, like women’s clothes, but his apparently tolerant, “enlightened” attitude is itself a form of blindness.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: The person who seeks the best church is neither an unbeliever nor the worst sort of believer.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: An echo of John 9:4, “the night cometh, when no man can work.”Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Kings are not God’s vicars on earth, with license (“blank charters”) to persecute or kill whomever they wish on grounds of religion.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: “Philip” is Philip II of Spain, “Gregory” is Pope Gregory XIII or XIV, “Harry” is England’s Henry VIII, and “Martin” is Martin Luther.Return to reference 8

Notes

- °: defiantReturn to reference °
- °: lamentReturn to reference °
- °: pagansReturn to reference °
- °: famineReturn to reference °
- °: mines, cavesReturn to reference °
- °: fight a duelReturn to reference °
- °: God'sReturn to reference °
- °: gladly Return to reference °
- °: to satisfy youReturn to reference °
- °: temperamentsReturn to reference °
- °: styles of clothingReturn to reference °
- °: necessityReturn to reference °
- °: intend a future actReturn to reference °
- °: achieveReturn to reference °
- °: profitReturn to reference °
- °: completeReturn to reference °

To Sir Henry Wotton<sup>1</sup>

Sir, more than kisses, letters mingle souls;
For, thus friends absent speak. This ease controls<sup>o</sup>
The tediousness of my life: but for these
I could ideate nothing, which could please,
But I should wither in one day, and pass
5 To a bottle<sup>o</sup> of hay, that am a lock of grass.
Life is a voyage, and in our life's ways
Countries, courts, towns are rocks, or remoras;<sup>o</sup>
They break or stop all ships, yet our state's such,
That though than pitch they stain worse, we must 10 touch.
If in the furnace of the even line,<sup>o</sup>
Or under th' adverse<sup>o</sup> icy poles thou pine,
Thou know'st two temperate regions, girded in,
Dwell there: But Oh! what refuge canst thou win
Parched in the court, and in the country frozen?
15 Shall cities, built of both extremes, be chosen?
Can dung or garlic be a perfume? Or can
A scorpion or torpedo<sup>o</sup> cure a man?
Cities are worst of all three; of all three (O knotty riddle) each is worst equally.
20 Cities are sepulchres; they who dwell there
Are carcasses, as if no such they were:
And courts are theaters, where some men play
Princes, some slaves, all to one end, of one clay.
The country is a desert, where no good,
25 Gained (as habits, not born,) is understood.
There men become beasts, and prone to more evils;
In cities, blocks,<sup>o</sup> and in a lewd court, devils.
As in the first Chaos confusedly

30 Each element's qualities were in the other three;<sup>2</sup>
So pride, lust, covetize, being several
To these three places, yet all are in all,
And mingled thus, their issue is incestuous:
Falsehood is denizen'd.° Virtue is barbarous.
35 Let no man say there, "Virtue's flinty wall Shall lock vice in me; I'll do none, but know all."
Men are sponges, which to pour out, receive,
Who know false play, rather than lose, deceive.
For in best understandings, sin began,
40 Angels sinned first, then devils, and then man.
Only perchance beasts sin not; wretched we Are beasts in all, but white integrity.°
I think if men, which in these places live
Durst look for themselves, and themselves retrieve,
They would like strangers greet themselves, seeing
45 then
Utopian youth, grown old Italian.°
Be then thine own home, and in thyself dwell;
Inn° anywhere; continuance maketh hell.
And seeing the snail, which everywhere doth roam,
Carrying his own house still, still is at home,
50 Follow (for he is easy paced) this snail,
Be thine own palace, or the world's thy jail.<sup>3</sup>
And in the world's sea, do not like cork sleep
Upon the water's face; nor in the deep Sink like a lead without a line: but as 55 Fishes glide, leaving no print where they pass,
Nor making sound, so closely thy course go,
Let men dispute, whether thou breathe, or no.
Only in this one thing be no Galenist:<sup>4</sup> to make Courts' hot ambitions wholesome, do not take 60 A dram of country's dullness; do not add
Correctives, but as chemics,° purge the bad.
But, Sir, I advise not you, I rather do

65 Say o'er those lessons, which I learned of you,
Whom, free from German schisms, and lightness
Of France, and fair Italy's faithlessness,<sup>5</sup>
Having from these sucked all they had of worth,
And brought home that faith, which you carried
forth,
I thoroughly love. But if myself, I have won 70 To know my rules,<sup>6</sup> I have, and you have Donne

1597 or 1598

Endnotes

- Note 1: Wotton and Donne were at Oxford together and remained friends. Wotton was secretary to the Earl of Essex and, like Donne, went on the Cadiz and Azores expeditions in 1596–97. The poem arises out of a literary exchange among members of the Essex circle over the nature of a good life. (Some manuscripts give what appears to be Wotton's reply to Donne's poem, headed "To Mr. J. D. from Mr. H. W.")Return to reference 1
- Note 2: The separation of confused materials into four distinct elements (air, earth, fire, water) was a critical stage as order was created out of chaos.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: "Goal" in 1633 (a boundary or limit; finishing point in a race or journey); "gaile" in 1635–69 (a wind of considerable strength or a storm). Later editors changed the word to "jail."Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Galen (129–ca. 216 C.E.) was a Greek physician whose teachings were dominant until the mid-17th century; Galenists worked to cure by contraries, correcting an excess of some bodily humor by making up the deficiency in its opposite humor so as to restore a balance.Return to reference 4

- Note 5: Wotton had traveled on the Continent between 1589 and 1594.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Principles, precepts (set out in the poem).Return to reference 6

Notes

- °: limitsReturn to reference °
- °: bundleReturn to reference °
- °: impedimentsReturn to reference °
- °: equatorReturn to reference °
- °: oppositeReturn to reference °
- °: electric rayReturn to reference °
- °: blockheadsReturn to reference °
- °: resides; is naturalizedReturn to reference °
- °: innocenceReturn to reference °
- °: crafty, corruptReturn to reference °
- °: lodge for a short whileReturn to reference °
- °: alchemists, chemistsReturn to reference °

From Holy Sonnets<sup>1</sup>

Endnotes

- Note 1:
Donne wrote a variety of religious poems (called “Divine Poems”), including a group of nineteen “holy sonnets” that reflect his interest in Jesuit and Protestant meditative procedures. He probably began writing them about 1609, a decade or so after leaving the Catholic Church. Our selections follow the traditional numbering established in Sir Herbert Grierson’s influential edition, since for most of these sonnets we cannot tell when they were written or in what order they were intended to appear.

Return to reference 1

1

Thou hast made me, and shall thy work decay?
Repair me now, for now mine end doth haste;
I run to death, and death meets me as fast,
And all my pleasures are like yesterday.
I dare not move my dim eyes any way,
5 Despair behind, and death before doth cast
Such terror, and my feeble flesh doth waste
By sin in it, which it towards hell doth weigh.°
Only thou art above, and when towards thee
By thy leave I can look, I rise again;
10 But our old subtle foe so tempteth me
That not one hour myself I can sustain.
Thy grace may wing° me to prevent° his art,
And thou like adamant° draw mine iron heart.

1635

Notes

- °: incline, weigh downReturn to reference °
- °: give wings to Return to reference °
- °: forestallReturn to reference °
- °: magnetic lodestoneReturn to reference °

5

I am a little world<sup>2</sup> made cunningly
Of elements, and an angelic sprite;<sup>o</sup>
But black sin hath betrayed to endless night
My world's both parts, and O, both parts must die.
5 You which beyond that heaven which was most high
Have found new spheres, and of new lands can write,<sup>3</sup>
Pour new seas in mine eyes, that so I might Drown my world with my weeping earnestly,
Or wash it if it must be drowned no more.<sup>4</sup>
10 But O, it must be burnt! Alas, the fire
Of lust and envy have burnt it heretofore,
And made it fouler; let their flames retire,
And burn me, O Lord, with a fiery zeal
Of thee and thy house, which doth in eating heal.<sup>5</sup> 1635

Endnotes

- Note 2: The traditional idea of the human being as microcosm (a "little world"), containing in miniature all the features of the macrocosm, or great world.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: "You" are astronomers, especially Galileo, and explorers.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: God promised Noah (Genesis 9:11) never to flood the earth again.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: See Psalm 69:9: "For the zeal of thine house hath eaten me up." These lines refer to three kinds of flame—those of the Last Judgment, those of lust and envy, and those of zeal, which alone save.Return to reference 5

Notes

- °: spirit, soul Return to reference °

At the round earth's imagined corners,<sup>6</sup> blow
 Your trumpets, angels; and arise, arise
 From death, you numberless infinities
 Of souls, and to your scattered bodies go:
 5 All whom the flood did, and fire shall, o'erthrow,<sup>7</sup>
 All whom war, dearth,<sup>o</sup> age, agues,<sup>o</sup> tyrannies, Despair, law, chance hath slain, and you whose eyes
 Shall behold God, and never taste death's woe.<sup>8</sup>
 But let them sleep, Lord, and me mourn a space;
 10 For, if above all these, my sins abound,
 'Tis late to ask abundance of thy grace
 When we are there. Here on this lowly ground,
 Teach me how to repent; for that's as good
 As if thou hadst sealed my pardon with thy blood.

1633

Endnotes

- Note 6: Compare Revelation 7:1: "I saw four angels standing on the four corners of the earth."Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Noah's Flood, and the universal conflagration at the end of the world (Revelation 6:11).Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Those who will be alive at the Second Coming (compare Luke 9:27).Return to reference 8

Notes

- °: famine Return to reference °
- °: fevers Return to reference °

If poisonous minerals, and if that tree<sup>9</sup>
 Whose fruit threw death on else-immortal us,
 If lecherous goats, if serpents envious<sup>1</sup>
 Cannot be damned, alas! why should I be?
 Why should intent or reason, born in me,
 5     Make sins, else equal, in me more heinous?
 And, mercy being easy and glorious
 To God, in his stern wrath why threatens he?
 But who am I that dare dispute with thee
 O God? Oh, of thine only worthy blood
 10     And my tears, make a heavenly Lethean<sup>2</sup> flood,
 And drown in it my sin's black memory.
 That thou remember them some claim as debt;
 I think it mercy if thou wilt forget.<sup>3</sup>

1633

Endnotes

- Note 9: The Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil, whose fruit was forbidden to Adam and Eve in Eden.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Traits commonly associated with these creatures.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: In classical mythology, the waters of the river Lethe in the underworld caused total forgetfulness.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Compare Jeremiah 31:34: "I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sins no more."Return to reference 3

10

Death, be not proud, though some have callèd thee
Mighty and dreadful, for thou art not so;
For those whom thou think'st thou dost overthrow
Die not, poor Death, nor yet canst thou kill me.
5 From rest and sleep, which but thy pictures be,
Much pleasure; then from thee much more must
flow,
And soonest our best men with thee do go,
Rest of their bones, and soul's delivery.<sup>4</sup>
Thou art slave to fate, chance, kings, and desperate
men,
10 And dost with poison, war, and sickness dwell,
And poppy<sup>o</sup> or charms can make us sleep as well
And better than thy stroke; why swell'st<sup>o</sup> thou then?
One short sleep past, we wake eternally
And death shall be no more; Death, thou shalt die.<sup>5</sup> 1633

Endnotes

- Note 4: That is, to find rest for their bones and freedom ("delivery") for their souls.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Compare 1 Corinthians 15:26: "The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death."Return to reference 5

Notes

- °: opiumReturn to reference °
- °: puff with prideReturn to reference °

11

Spit in my face ye Jews, and pierce my side,
Buffet, and scoff,<sup>o</sup> scourge, and crucify me,
For I have sinned, and sinned, and only he,
Who could do no iniquity, hath died:
But by my death cannot be satisfied<sup>o</sup>
5 My sins, which pass the Jews' impiety:
They killed once an inglorious<sup>o</sup> man, but I
Crucify him daily,<sup>6</sup> being now glorified.
Oh let me then, his strange love still admire:<sup>o</sup>
Kings pardon, but he bore our punishment.<sup>7</sup>
10 And Jacob came clothed in vile harsh attire
But to supplant, and with gainful intent:<sup>8</sup>
God clothed himself in vile man's flesh, that so
He might be weak enough to suffer woe.

1633

Endnotes

- Note 6: Compare Hebrews 6:6: "they [sinners] crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh."Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Kings may pardon crimes, but the King of Kings, Christ, bore the punishment due to our sins.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Jacob disguised himself in goatskins to gain from his blind father the blessing belonging to the firstborn son, his brother Esau (Genesis 27:1–36).Return to reference 8

Notes

- °: scoff atReturn to reference °
- °: atoned forReturn to reference °
- °: obscureReturn to reference °

- °: wonder at Return to reference °

What if this present were the world's last night?
 Mark in my heart, O soul, where thou dost dwell,
 The picture of Christ crucified, and tell
 Whether that countenance can thee affright.
 Tears in his eyes quench the amazing light,
 5 Blood fills his frowns, which from his pierced head fell;
 And can that tongue adjudge thee unto hell
 Which prayed forgiveness for his foes' fierce spite?
 No, no; but as in my idolatry
 I said to all my profane<sup>o</sup> mistresses, 10 Beauty of pity, foulness only is
 A sign of rigor:<sup>9</sup> so I say to thee,
 To wicked spirits are horrid shapes assigned,
 This beauteous form assures a piteous mind.

1633

Endnotes

- Note 9: In Neoplatonic theory, beautiful features are the sign of a compassionate mind, while ugliness signifies the contrary. Return to reference 9

Notes

- <sup>o</sup>: secular Return to reference <sup>o</sup>

Batter my heart, three-personed God;<sup>1</sup> for you
 As yet but knock, breathe, shine, and seek to mend;
 That I may rise and stand, o'erthrow me, and bend
 Your force to break, blow, burn, and make me new.
 I, like an usurped town, to another due,
 5 Labor to admit you, but O, to no end;
 Reason, your viceroy<sup>2</sup> in me, me should defend,
 But is captived, and proves weak or untrue.
 Yet dearly I love you, and would be loved fain,<sup>o</sup>
 But am betrothed<sup>3</sup> unto your enemy.
 10 Divorce me, untie or break that knot again;
 Take me to you, imprison me, for I,
 Except<sup>o</sup> you enthrall<sup>4</sup> me, never shall be free,
 Nor ever chaste, except you ravish<sup>5</sup> me.

1633

Endnotes

- Note 1: That is, God existing as the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit. Return to reference 1
- Note 2: The governor in your stead. Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Humanity's relationship with God has been described in terms of marriage and adultery from the time of the Hebrew prophets. Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Enslave, also enchant. Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Rape, also overwhelm with wonder. Return to reference 5

Notes

- °: gladly Return to reference °

- °: unless Return to reference °

Since she whom I loved hath paid her last debt<sup>6</sup>
 To Nature, and to hers, and my good is dead,
 And her soul early into heaven ravishèd,
 Wholly on heavenly things my mind is set.
 Here the admiring her my mind did whet
 5 To seek thee, God; so streams do show the head;°
 But though I have found thee, and thou my thirst hast fed,
 A holy thirsty dropsy° melts me yet.
 But why should I beg more love, whenas thou
 Dost woo my soul, for hers offering all thine:
 10 And dost not only fear lest I allow
 My love to saints and angels, things divine,
 But in thy tender jealousy dost doubt°
 Lest the world, flesh, yea, devil put thee out.

1899

Endnotes

- Note 6: Donne's wife died in 1617 at the age of thirty-three, having just given birth to her twelfth child. This very personal sonnet and the following two survive in a single manuscript discovered only in 1892.Return to reference 6

Notes

- °: sourceReturn to reference °
- °: immoderate thirstReturn to reference °
- °: fearReturn to reference °

Show me, dear Christ, thy spouse<sup>7</sup> so bright and clear.
 What! is it she which on the other shore
 Goes richly painted? or which, robbed and tore,
 Laments and mourns in Germany and here?<sup>8</sup>
 Sleeps she a thousand, then peeps up one year?
 5 Is she self-truth, and errs? now new, now outwore?
 Doth she, and did she, and shall she evermore
 On one, on seven, or on no hill appear?<sup>9</sup>
 Dwells she with us, or like adventuring knights
 First travel we to seek, and then make love?
 10 Betray, kind husband, thy spouse to our sights,
 And let mine amorous soul court thy mild dove,
 Who is most true and pleasing to thee then
 When she is embraced and open to most men.<sup>1</sup>

1899

Endnotes

- Note 7: The church is commonly called the bride of Christ. See Revelation 19:7–8: “The marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready. / And to her was granted that she should be arrayed in fine linen, clean and white.” Return to reference 7
- Note 8: That is, the painted woman (the Church of Rome) or the ravished virgin (the Lutheran and Calvinist churches in Germany and England). Return to reference 8
- Note 9: The church on one hill is probably Solomon’s temple on Mount Moriah; that on seven hills is the Church of Rome; that on no hill is the Presbyterian church of Geneva. Return to reference 9

- Note 1: The final lines wittily rework, with startling sexual associations, Song of Solomon 5:2: "Open to me, my sister, my love, my dove, my undefiled." That biblical book was often interpreted as the song of love between Christ and the church.Return to reference 1

Oh, to vex me, contraries meet in one:
 Inconstancy unnaturally hath begot
 A constant habit; that when I would not
 I change in vows, and in devotion.
 As humorous<sup>o</sup> is my contrition
 5 As my profane love, and as soon forgot:
 As riddlingly distempered, cold and hot,<sup>2</sup>
 As praying, as mute, as infinite, as none.
 I durst not view heaven yesterday; and today
 10 In prayers and flattering speeches I court God:
 Tomorrow I quake with true fear of his rod.
 So my devout fits come and go away
 Like a fantastic ague:<sup>3</sup> save<sup>o</sup> that here
 Those are my best days, when I shake with fear.

1899

Endnotes

- Note 2: Arising from the unbalanced humors, inexplicably changeable. Return to reference 2
- Note 3: A fever, attended with paroxysms of hot and cold and trembling fits. "Fantastic": capricious, extravagant. Return to reference 3

Notes

- °: subject to whim Return to reference °
- °: except Return to reference °

Good Friday, 1613. Riding Westward

Let man's soul be a sphere, and then, in this,
The intelligence that moves, devotion is,<sup>1</sup>
And as the other spheres, by being grown
Subject to foreign motions, lose their own,
And being by others hurried every day,
5 Scarce in a year their natural form<sup>2</sup> obey;
Pleasure or business, so, our souls admit
For<sup>o</sup> their first mover, and are whirled by it.
Hence is 't, that I am carried towards the West
This day, when my soul's form bends towards the 10 East.

There I should see a Sun<sup>3</sup> by rising, set,
And by that setting endless day beget:
But that Christ on this cross did rise and fall,
Sin had eternally benighted all.
Yet dare I almost be glad I do not see 15 That spectacle, of too much weight for me.
Who sees God's face, that is self-life, must die;<sup>4</sup>
What a death were it then to see God die?
It made his own lieutenant,<sup>o</sup> Nature, shrink;
It made his footstool crack, and the sun wink.<sup>5</sup>
20 Could I behold those hands which span the poles,
And tune<sup>6</sup> all spheres at once, pierced with those holes?
Could I behold that endless height which is Zenith to us, and t'our antipodes,<sup>7</sup> Humbled below us? Or that blood which is 25 The seat<sup>o</sup> of all our souls, if not of his,
Make dirt of dust, or that flesh which was worn
By God for his apparel, ragg'd and torn?

If on these things I durst not look, durst I
 Upon his miserable mother cast mine eye,
 30 Who was God's partner here, and furnished thus
 Half of that sacrifice which ransomed us?
 Though these things, as I ride, be from<sup>o</sup> mine eye,
 They are present yet unto my memory,
 35 For that looks towards them; and thou look'st towards me,
 O Savior, as thou hang'st upon the tree.
 I turn my back to thee but to receive
 Corrections,<sup>8</sup> till thy mercies bid thee leave.<sup>o</sup>
 O think me worth thine anger; punish me;
 Burn off my rusts and my deformity;
 40 Restore thine image so much, by thy grace,
 That thou may'st know me, and I'll turn my face.

1633

Endnotes

- Note 1: As angelic intelligences guide the celestial spheres, so devotion is or should be the guiding principle of the soul.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Their true moving principle or intelligence. The orbit of the celestial spheres was thought to be governed by an unmoving outermost sphere, the primum mobile, or first mover (line 8), but sometimes outside influences ("foreign motions," line 4) deflected the spheres from their correct orbits.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: The "sun" / "Son" pun was an ancient one. Christ the Son of God "set" when he rose on the Cross, and that setting (death) gave rise to the Christian era and the promise of immortality.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: God told Moses, "Thou canst not see my face, for there shall no man see me, and live" (Exodus 33:20).Return to reference 4

- Note 5: An earthquake and eclipse supposedly accompanied the Crucifixion (Matthew 27:45, 51). Compare Isaiah 66:1: "Thus saith the Lord, The heaven is my throne, and the earth is my footstool."Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Some manuscripts read "turn."Return to reference 6
- Note 7: God is at once the highest point for us and for our "antipodes," those who live on the opposite side of the earth.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: The phrase suggests a flogging.Return to reference 8

Notes

- °: instead ofReturn to reference °
- °: deputyReturn to reference °
- °: dwelling placeReturn to reference °
- °: away fromReturn to reference °
- °: ceaseReturn to reference °

Hymn to God My God, in My Sickness<sup>1</sup>

Since I am coming to that holy room
Where, with thy choir of saints for evermore,
I shall be made thy music; as I come
I tune the instrument here at the door,
5 And what I must do then, think now before.<sup>2</sup>

Whilst my physicians by their love are grown Cosmographers, and I their map, who lie
Flat on this bed, that by them may be shown
That this is my southwest discovery<sup>3</sup>
10 Per fretum febris,<sup>4</sup> by these straits to die,

I joy, that in these straits, I see my West;
For, though their currents yield return to none,
What shall my West hurt me? As West and East
In all flat maps (and I am one) are one,<sup>5</sup>
15 So death doth touch the resurrection.

Is the Pacific Sea my home? Or are
The Eastern riches?<sup>6</sup> Is Jerusalem?
Anyan,<sup>6</sup> and Magellan, and Gibraltar,
All straits, and none but straits, are ways to them,
20 Whether where Japhet dwelt, or Cham, or Shem.<sup>7</sup>

We think that Paradise and Calvary,
Christ's cross and Adam's tree, stood in one place;
Look, Lord and find both Adams<sup>8</sup> met in me;
As the first Adam's sweat surrounds my face,
25 May the last Adam's blood my soul embrace.

So, in his purple wrapped,<sup>9</sup> receive me, Lord;
 By these his thorns<sup>o</sup> give me his other crown;
 And, as to others' souls I preached thy word,
 Be this my text, my sermon to mine own:
 Therefore that he may raise the Lord throws
 down.

Endnotes

- Note 1: Though Izaak Walton, Donne's friend and biographer, assigns this poem to the last days of his life, it was probably written during another illness, in December 1623.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: This is less a hymn (songs of praise) than a meditation preparing (tuning the instrument) for such (Latin) hymn.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: South is the region of heat, west the region of sunset and death.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Through the straits of fever, with a pun on straits as sufferings, rigors, and a geographical reference to the Strait of Magellan.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: If a flat map is pasted on a round globe, west and east meet.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Anian, a strait on the west coast of America, shown on early maps as separating America from Asia.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: The three sons of Noah by whom the world was repopulated after the Flood (Genesis 10). The descendants of Japhet were thought to inhabit Europe; those of Cham (Ham), Africa; and those of Shem, Asia.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Adam and Christ. Legend had it that Christ's cross was erected on the spot, or at least in the region, where the tree forbidden to Adam in Eden had stood.Return to reference 8

- Note 9: In his blood, also in his kingly robes.Return to reference 9

Notes

- °: Cathay, ChinaReturn to reference °
- °: crown of thornsReturn to reference °

A Hymn to God the Father<sup>1</sup>

Wilt thou forgive that sin where I begun,
Which is my sin, though it were done before?<sup>2</sup>
Wilt thou forgive that sin through which I run,
And do run still, though still I do deplore?
5        When thou hast done,<sup>3</sup> thou hast not done,
          For I have more.

Wilt thou forgive that sin by which I have won
Others to sin? and made my sin their door?
Wilt thou forgive that sin which I did shun
A year or two, but wallowed in a score?
10        When thou hast done, thou hast not done,
          For I have more.

I have a sin of fear, that when I have spun
My last thread, I shall perish on the shore;
Swear by thy self, that at my death thy Son
15        Shall shine as he shines now and heretofore;
          And, having done that, thou hast done,
          I fear<sup>4</sup> no more.

1633

Endnotes

- Note 1: This hymn was used as a congregational hymn. Walton tells us that Donne wrote it during his illness of 1623, had it set to music, and was delighted to hear it performed (as it frequently was) by the choir of St. Paul's Cathedral. Return to reference 1

- Note 2: That is, he inherits the original sin of Adam and Eve.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: In the refrains, Donne puns on his own name and may pun on his wife's maiden name, Ann More.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Some manuscripts read "have."Return to reference 4

From Devotions upon Emergent Occasions*<sup>1</sup>

Endnotes

- Note 1:
Donne's Devotions were composed in the aftermath of his serious illness in the winter of 1623, though Donne characteristically writes as if the events of the illness were happening as he describes them. The Devotions recount in twenty-three sections the stages ("emergent occasions") of the illness and recovery: the term associates the exercise with a popular kind of Protestant meditation on the occasions that daily life presents to us. Each section contains a "meditation upon our human condition," an "expostulation and debatement with God," and a prayer to God. The book was published almost immediately, offering its meditation on an intensely personal experience as exemplary for others.
Return to reference 1

Meditation 4

Medicusque vocatur.

The physician is sent for.<sup>2</sup>

It is too little to call man a little world; except God, man is a diminutive to nothing.<sup>3</sup> Man consists of more pieces, more parts, than the world; than the world doth, nay, than the world is. And if those pieces were extended and stretched out in man as they are in the world, man would be the giant and the world the dwarf; the world but the map, and the man the world. If all the veins in our bodies were extended to rivers, and all the sinews to veins of mines, and all the muscles that lie upon one another to hills, and all the bones to quarries of stones, and all the other pieces to the proportion of those which correspond to them in the world, the air would be too little for this orb of man to move in, the firmament would be but enough for this star. For as the whole world hath nothing to which something in man doth not answer,<sup>4</sup> so hath man many pieces of which the whole world hath no representation. Enlarge this meditation upon this great world, man, so far as to consider the immensity of the creatures this world produces. Our creatures are our thoughts, creatures that are born giants, that reach from east to west, from earth to heaven, that do not only bestride all the sea and land, but span the sun and firmament at once: my thoughts reach all, comprehend all.

Inexplicable mystery! I their creator am in a close prison, in a sick bed, anywhere, and any one of my creatures, my thoughts, is with the sun, and beyond the sun, overtakes the sun, and overgoes the sun in one pace, one step, everywhere. And then as the other world produces serpents and vipers, malignant and venomous creatures, and worms and caterpillars, that endeavor to devour that world which produces them, and monsters compiled and complicated<sup>5</sup> of divers parents and kinds, so this world, our selves, produces all these in us, in producing diseases and sicknesses of all those sorts; venomous and infectious diseases, feeding and consuming diseases, and manifold and entangled diseases made up of many several ones. And can the other world name so many venomous, so many consuming, so many monstrous creatures, as we can diseases of all these kinds? O miserable abundance, O beggarly riches! How much do we lack of having remedies for every disease, when as yet we have not names for them?

But we have a Hercules against these giants, these monsters: that is the physician. He musters up all the forces of the other world to succor this, all nature to relieve man. We have the physician but we are not the physician. Here we shrink in our proportion, sink in our dignity in respect of very mean creatures who are physicians to themselves. The hart that is pursued and wounded, they say, knows an herb which, being eaten, throws off the arrow: a strange kind of vomit.<sup>6</sup> The dog that pursues it, though he be subject to sickness, even proverbially knows his grass that recovers him. And it may be true that the druggier is as near to man as to other creatures; it may be that obvious and present simples,<sup>7</sup> easy to be had, would cure him; but the apothecary is not so near him, nor the physician so near him, as they two are to other creatures.<sup>8</sup> Man hath not that innate instinct to apply these natural medicines to his present danger, as those inferior creatures have. He is not his own apothecary, his own physician, as they are. Call back therefore thy meditation again, and bring it down.<sup>9</sup> What's become of man's great extent and proportion, when himself shrinks himself and consumes himself to a handful of dust? What's become of his soaring thoughts, his compassing thoughts, when himself brings himself to the ignorance, to the thoughtlessness, of the grave? His diseases are his own, but the physician is not; he hath them at home, but he must send for the physician.

Endnotes

- Note 2: Donne's Latin epigraphs are followed by his English translations, often quite free.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: This meditation is based on the notion that each human being is a microcosm, a little world, analogous in every respect to the macrocosm, or great world. But in playing with this notion, Donne paradoxically reverses it.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Correspond.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Mixed.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Deer supposedly expelled arrows wounding them by eating the herb dittany.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Medicinal plants.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: One who administers drugs might do this for man as well as for other creatures, but one who sells drugs ("the apothecary") and the physician do not know how to prescribe for man as well as for other creatures.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: That is, apply it to the present situation.Return to reference 9

Meditation 17

Nunc lento sonitu dicunt, morieris.

Now this bell tolling softly for another, says to me,
Thou must die.

Perchance he for whom this bell<sup>1</sup> tolls may be so ill as that he knows not it tolls for him; and perchance I may think myself so much better than I am, as that they who are about me and see my state may have caused it to toll for me, and I know not that. The church is catholic, universal, so are all her actions; all that she does belongs to all. When she baptizes a child, that action concerns me; for that child is thereby connected to that head which is my head too, and ingrafted into that body<sup>2</sup> whereof I am a member. And when she buries a man, that action concerns me: all mankind is of one author and is one volume; when one man dies, one chapter is not torn out of the book, but translated<sup>3</sup> into a better language; and every chapter must be so translated. God employs several translators; some pieces are translated by age, some by sickness, some by war, some by justice; but God's hand is in every translation, and his hand shall bind up all our scattered leaves again for that library where every book shall lie open to one another. As therefore the bell that rings to a sermon calls not upon the preacher only, but upon the congregation to come, so this bell calls us all; but how much more me, who am brought so near the door by this sickness. There was a contention as far as a suit<sup>4</sup> (in which piety and dignity, religion and estimation,<sup>5</sup> were mingled) which of the religious orders should ring to prayers first in the morning; and it was determined that they should ring first that rose earliest. If we understand aright the dignity of this bell that tolls for our evening prayer, we would be glad to make it ours by rising early, in that application, that it might be ours as well as his whose indeed it is. The bell doth toll for him that thinks it doth; and though it intermit again, yet from that minute that that occasion wrought upon him, he is united to God. Who casts not up his eye to the sun when it rises? But who takes off his eye from a comet when that breaks out? Who bends not his ear to any bell which upon any occasion rings? But who can remove it from that bell which is passing a piece of himself out of this world? No man is an island, entire of itself; every man is a piece of the continent, a part of the main.<sup>6</sup> If a clod be washed away by the sea, Europe is the less, as well as if a promontory were, as well as if a manor of thy friend's or of thine own were. Any man's death diminishes me, because I am involved in mankind; and therefore never send to know for whom the bell tolls; it tolls for thee.<sup>7</sup> Neither can we call this a begging of misery or a borrowing of misery, as though we were not miserable enough of ourselves but must fetch in more from the next house, in taking upon us the misery of our neighbors. Truly it were an excusable covetousness if we did; for affliction is a treasure, and scarce any man hath enough of it. No man hath affliction enough that is not matured and ripened by it, and made fit for God by that affliction. If a man carry treasure in bullion, or in a wedge of gold, and have none coined into current moneys, his treasure will not defray<sup>8</sup> him as he travels. Tribulation is treasure in the nature of it, but it is not current money in the use of it, except we get nearer and nearer our home, heaven, by it. Another man may be sick too, and sick to death, and this affliction may lie in his bowels as gold in a mine and be of no use to him; but this bell that tells me of his affliction digs out and applies that gold to me, if by this consideration of another's danger I take mine own into contemplation and so secure myself by making my recourse to my God, who is our only security.

Endnotes

- Note 1: The "passing bell" for the dying.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: The church.Return to reference 2

- Note 3: Punning on the literal sense, “carried across.”Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Controversy that went as far as a lawsuit.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Self-esteem.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Mainland.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: This phrase gave Ernest Hemingway the title for his novel For Whom the Bell Tolls.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Meet his expenses.Return to reference 8

From Expostulation 19

[THE LANGUAGE OF GOD]

My God, my God, thou art a direct God, may I not say a literal God, a God that wouldst be understood literally and according to the plain sense of all that thou sayest. But thou art also (Lord, I intend it to thy glory, and let no profane misinterpreter abuse it to thy diminution), thou art a figurative, a metaphorical God too: a God in whose words there is such a height of figures, such voyages, such peregrinations to fetch remote and precious metaphors, such extensions, such spreadings, such curtains of allegories, such third heavens of hyperboles, so harmonious elocutions, so retired and so reserved expressions, so commanding persuasions, so persuading commandments, such sinews even in thy milk and such things in thy words, as all profane<sup>9</sup> authors seem of the seed of the serpent that creeps; thou art the dove that flies. Oh, what words but thine can express the inexpressible texture and composition of thy word; in which, to one man, that argument that binds his faith to believe that to be the word of God is the reverent simplicity of the word, and to another, the majesty of the word; and in which two men, equally pious, may meet, and one wonder that all should not understand it, and the other as much that any man should. So, Lord, thou givest us the same earth to labor on and to lie in; a house and a grave of the same earth; so, Lord, thou givest us the same word for our satisfaction and for our inquisition,<sup>1</sup> for our instruction and for our admiration too. For there are places that thy servants Jerome and Augustine would scarce believe (when they grew warm by mutual letters) of one another that they understood them, and yet both Jerome and Augustine call upon persons whom they knew to be far weaker than they thought one another (old women and young maids) to read thy Scriptures, without confining them to these or those places.<sup>2</sup>

Neither art thou thus a figurative, a metaphorical God, in thy word only, but in thy works too. The style of thy works, the phrase of thine actions, is metaphorical. The institution of thy whole worship in the old law was a continual allegory; types and figures<sup>3</sup> overspread all, and figures flowed into figures, and poured themselves out into further figures. Circumcision carried a figure of baptism,<sup>4</sup> and baptism carries a figure of that purity which we shall have in perfection in the New Jerusalem. Neither didst thou speak and work in this language only in the time of the prophets; but since thou spokest in thy son it is so too. How often, how much more often, doth thy son call himself a way and a light and a gate and a vine and bread than the son of God or of man? How much oftener doth he exhibit a metaphorical Christ than a real, a literal? This hath occasioned thine ancient servants, whose delight it was to write after thy copy,<sup>5</sup> to proceed the same way in their expositions of the Scriptures, and in their composing both of public liturgies and of private prayers to thee, to make their accesses to thee in such a kind of language as thou wast pleased to speak to them, in a figurative, in a metaphorical language; in which manner I am bold to call the comfort which I receive now in this sickness, in the indication of the concoction<sup>6</sup> and maturity thereof, in certain clouds<sup>7</sup> and residences<sup>8</sup> which the physicians observe, a discovering of land from sea after a long and tempestuous voyage. * * *

1623 Endnotes

1624

- Note 9: Secular.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Investigation.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Saints Jerome and Augustine did in fact differ over the proper way of interpreting the Bible, yet they both encouraged its use by the unlearned.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Anticipations or prefigurations, especially persons and events in the Hebrew Bible that were read as prefiguring Christ, or some aspect of the New Testament or of Christian practice.

For a beautiful poem exemplifying this process, see Herbert, "The Bunch of Grapes" (p. 1192).Return to reference 3

- Note 4: Both circumcision and baptism are rites of admission to a religious community.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Text.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Ripening.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Cloudy urine.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Residues.Return to reference 8

From Death's Duel*<sup>1</sup>

[Donne's last sermon, on Psalm 68:20: "And unto God the Lord belong the issues<sup>2</sup> of Death"—that is, from death.]

* * *

First, then, we consider this exitus mortis, to be liberatio à morte, that with God, the Lord are the issues of death, and therefore in all our deaths, and the deadly calamities of this life, we may justly hope of a good issue from him; and all our periods and transitions in this life, are so many passages from death to death. Our very birth and entrance into this life is exitus à morte, an issue from death, for in our mother's womb we are dead so, as that we do not know we live, not so much as we do in our sleep, neither is there any grave so close, or so putrid a prison, as the womb would be unto us, if we stayed in it beyond our time, or died there before our time. In the grave the worms do not kill us, we breed and feed, and then kill the worms which we ourselves produced. In the womb the dead child kills the mother that conceived it, and is a murderer, nay a parricide, even after it is dead. And if we be not dead so in the womb, so as that being dead, we kill her that gave us our first life, our life of vegetation,<sup>3</sup> yet we are dead so, as David's idols are dead. In the womb we have eyes and see not, ears and hear not.<sup>4</sup> There in the womb we are fitted for works of darkness, all the while deprived of light: And there in the womb we are taught cruelty, by being fed with blood, and may be damned, though we be never born.

* * *

* * * But then this exitus à morte is but introitus in mortem, this issue, this deliverance from that death, the death of the womb, is an entrance, a delivering over to another death, the manifold deaths of this world. We have a winding-sheet<sup>5</sup> in our mother's womb, which grows with us from our conception, and we come into the world wound up in that winding-sheet, for we come to seek a grave. * * * Now this which is so singularly peculiar to him [Christ], that his flesh should not see corruption, at his second coming, his coming to Judgment, shall extend to all then alive, their flesh shall not see corruption. * * * But for us that die now and sleep in the state of the dead, we must all pass this posthume death, this death after death, nay this death after burial, this dissolution after dissolution, this death of corruption and putrefaction, of vermiculation and incineration, of dissolution and dispersion in and from the grave. When those bodies that have been the children of royal parents, and the parents of royal children, must say with Job, to corruption, thou art my father, and to the worm, thou art my mother and my sister.<sup>6</sup> Miserable riddle, when the same worm must be my mother, and my sister, and myself. Miserable incest, when I must be married to my mother and my sister, beget, and bear that worm which is all that miserable penury; when my mouth shall be filled with dust, and the worm shall feed, and feed sweetly upon me,<sup>7</sup> when the ambitious man shall have no satisfaction, if the poorest alive tread upon him, nor the poorest receive any contentment in being made equal to princes, for they shall be equal but in dust. One dies at his full strength, being wholly at ease and in quiet, and another dies in the bitterness of his soul, and never eats with pleasure, but they lie down alike in the dust, and the worm covers them.<sup>8</sup> The worm covers them in Job, and in Isaiah, it covers them and is spread under them, the worm is spread under thee, and the worm covers thee.<sup>9</sup> There's the mats and the carpets that lie under, and there's the state and the canopy,<sup>1</sup> that hangs over the greatest of the sons of men. Even those bodies that were the temple of the Holy Ghost, come to this dilapidation, to ruin, to rubbish, to dust: even the Israel of the Lord, and Jacob himself hath no other specification, no other denomination, but that vermis Jacob, thou worm of Jacob.<sup>2</sup> Truly the consideration of this posthume death, this death after burial, that after God (with whom are the issues of death) hath delivered me from the death of the womb, by bringing me into the world, and from the manifold deaths of the world, by laying me in the grave, I must die again in an incineration of this flesh, and in a dispersion of that dust.

* * *

There we leave you in that blessed dependency, to hang upon him that hangs upon the Cross, there bathe in his tears, there suck at his wounds, and lie down in peace in his grave, till he vouchsafe you a resurrection, and an ascension into that Kingdom, which he hath purchased for you, with the inestimable price of his incorruptible blood. Amen.

1632

Endnotes

- Note 1:
The printed version of this sermon (1632) has the subtitle “A Consolation to the Soul, against the dying life, and living death of the body.” Donne’s friend and executor Henry King (later bishop of Chichester) supplied the further information that the sermon was delivered at Whitehall, before King Charles, that it was delivered only a few days before Donne’s death, and that it was fitly styled “the author’s own funeral sermon.” Donne was a powerful and popular preacher, and this sermon was especially moving according to the testimony of many auditors, including Izaak Walton. Besides the personal drama of the preacher himself visibly ill and perhaps dying, the audience must have responded to the almost unbearably graphic analysis of the forms of death and decay—a theme that often preoccupied Donne. As in his poems, the language is personal, rich in learning and curious lore, dazzling in verbal ingenuity and metaphor. As in the Devotions, the sentences are long, sinuous, and elaborate. Typically, he uses a number of Latin phrases, but almost always translates or paraphrases them immediately.

Return to reference 1

- Note 2: Passages out. Return to reference 2
- Note 3: That is, of growth. Return to reference 3
- Note 4: A paraphrase of Psalm 115:5–6. Return to reference 4
- Note 5: The placenta. Return to reference 5
- Note 6: A paraphrase of Job 17:14. Return to reference 6
- Note 7: An echo of Job 24:20. Return to reference 7
- Note 8: An echo of Job 21:23–26. Return to reference 8
- Note 9: An echo of Isaiah 14:11. Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Cloth of state, a canopy erected over a king's throne. Return to reference 1
- Note 2: That epithet is used in Isaiah 41:14. Return to reference 2

AEMILIA LANYER

1569–1645

Aemilia Lanyer published one of the earliest collections of poetry by an English woman. She was a member of an Italian family of court musicians who came to England in the reign of Henry VIII; they may have been Christianized Jews or, alternatively, Protestants forced to flee Catholic persecution in their native land. Some information about Lanyer's life survived in the notebooks of the astrologer and fortune-teller Simon Forman, whom Lanyer consulted in 1597. Lanyer claims to have been educated in the aristocratic household of the Countess of Kent, and in her late teens and early twenties she was the mistress of Queen Elizabeth's lord chamberlain, Henry Carey, Lord Hunsdon, who was forty-five years her senior. The wealthy Hunsdon was a notable patron of the arts—Shakespeare's company performed under his auspices in the 1590s—and he maintained Lanyer (then Bassano) in luxury. Yet when she became pregnant by Hunsdon at age twenty-three, she was married off to Alfonso Lanyer, one of another family of gentleman musicians attached to the courts of Elizabeth I and James I. Lanyer's poetry suggests that she resided for some time in the household of the influential courtier and literary patron Margaret Clifford, Countess of Cumberland, and Margaret's daughter Anne Clifford, later Countess of Dorset. Lanyer reports receiving their encouragement in learning, piety, and poetry, and, in turn, she highlights their status as exemplary women and faithful servants of the only true king, Jesus Christ.

Margaret Clifford. The motto of this Laurence Hilliard miniature of Clifford, "Constant in the midst / of Inconstancy," resonates with Lanyer's representation of her in Salve Deus Rex Judaeorum.

---

Lanyer's single volume of poems, Salve Deus Rex Judaeorum (1611; Latin for "Hail, God, King of the Jews"), begins with a series of dedicatory poems to powerful courtiers and would-be patrons whom she praises as a community of good women. The title poem, a meditation on Christ's Passion, is framed and punctuated by its dedication to the Countess of Cumberland, and contrasts the good women in the Passion story with the evil and weak men who failed to support Christ in his time of need. The poem also includes a defense of Eve, which participates in the contemporary querelle des femmes, or debate on women. Why, she asks, are women "By more faulty men so much defamed?" Lanyer's Christ, moreover, would rather speak to "poor women" than kings. The final poem in Lanyer's volume, "The Description of Cookham," celebrates in elegiac mode the Crown estate occasionally occupied by the Countess of Cumberland, portraying it as an Edenic paradise of women, now lost. The poem may or may not have been written before Ben Jonson's "To Penshurst"—commonly thought to have inaugurated the "country house" genre in English literature—but Lanyer's poem was published first.

FROM* SALVE DEUS REX JUDAEORUM

From To the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty<sup>1</sup>

Renowned empress, and Great Britain's queen,
Most gracious mother of succeeding kings;
Vouchsafe<sup>o</sup> to view that which is seldom seen,
A woman's writing of divinest things:
5       Read it fair queen, though it defective be,
      Your excellence can grace both it and me.

* * *

Look in this mirror of a worthy mind,<sup>2</sup>
Where some of your fair virtues will appear;
Though all it is impossible to find,
40       Unless my glass<sup>o</sup> were crystal, or more clear:
      Which is dim steel,<sup>3</sup> yet full of spotless truth,
      And for one look from your fair eyes it su'th.<sup>o</sup>

Here may your sacred majesty behold
That mighty monarch<sup>o</sup> both of heaven and earth,
He that all nations of the world controlled,
45       Yet took our flesh in base and meanest berth:<sup>o</sup>
      Whose days were spent in poverty and sorrow,
      And yet all kings their wealth of him do borrow.

For he is crown and crowner of all kings,
The hopeful haven of the meaner sort,
50       It's he that all our joyful tidings brings
      Of happy reign within his royal court:
      It's he that in extremity can give
      Comfort to them that have no time to live.

55 And since my wealth within his region stands,
And that his cross my chiefest comfort is,
Yea in his kingdom only rests my lands,
Of honor there I hope I shall not miss:
Though I on earth do live unfortunate,
60 Yet there I may attain a better state.

In the meantime, accept, most gracious queen
This holy work virtue presents to you
In poor apparel, shaming to be seen,
Or once t'appear in your judicial view:
65 But that fair virtue, though in mean attire,
All princes of the world do most desire.

* * *

*The Lady
Elizabeth's
Grace*

And she<sup>4</sup> that is the pattern of all beauty,
The very model of your majesty,
Whose rarest parts enforceth love and duty,
The perfect pattern of all piety:
95 O let my book by her fair eyes be blessed,
In whose pure thoughts all innocence rests.

Then shall I think my glass a glorious sky,
When two such glitt'ring suns at once appear;
The one replete with sovereign majesty,
Both shining brighter than the clearest clear:
100 And both reflecting comfort to my spirits,
To find their grace so much above my merits

Whose untuned voice the doleful notes doth sing
Of sad affliction in an humble strain;
Much like unto a bird that wants a wing,
105 And cannot fly, but warbles forth her pain:
Or he that barred from the sun's bright light,
Wanting day's comfort, doth commend the night.

* * *

140 My weak distempered brain and feeble spirits,
Which all unlearned have adventured this
To write of Christ and of his sacred merits,
Desiring that this book her<sup>o</sup> hands may kiss:
And though I be unworthy of that grace,
Yet let her blessed thoughts this book embrace.

145 And pardon me (fair queen) though I presume,
To do that which so many better can;
Not that I learning to myself assume,
Or that I would compare with any man:
But as they are scholars, and by art do write,
150 So nature yields my soul a sad<sup>o</sup> delight.

And since all arts at first from nature came,
That goodly creature, mother of perfection,
Whom Jove's<sup>5</sup> almighty hand at first did frame,
Taking both her and hers<sup>6</sup> in his protection:
155 Why should not she now grace my barren muse,
And in a woman all defects excuse.

So peerless princess humbly I desire,
That your great wisdom would vouchsafe t'omit<sup>o</sup>
All faults; and pardon if my spirits retire,
160 Leaving<sup>o</sup> to aim at what they cannot hit:
To write your worth, which no pen can express,
Were but t'eclipse your fame, and make it less.<sup>7</sup>

1611

Endnotes

- Note 1:
Queen Anna of Denmark, the wife of James I. Anna was a patron of writers, including Ben Jonson and Samuel Daniel, and the mother of Prince Henry, Princess Elizabeth, and the future Charles I. This is the first of a series of poems addressed to court ladies whom Lanyer sought to attract as patrons; such poems often preface literary works by male courtier poets as well. These poems are followed by a prose address to her primary dedicatee, Margaret Clifford, Countess of Cumberland, and then by a prose epistle, "To the Virtuous Reader," which engages many of the tropes of the querelle des femmes and legends of good women traditions.

Return to reference 1

- Note 2: Lanyer presents her poem both as a mirror, or reflection, of Queen Anna, and as a form of political advice in the "mirror for magistrates" tradition.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Renaissance mirrors were made of both steel, which needed frequent polishing, and crystal.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Elizabeth Stuart, the second child and first daughter of Queen Anna and James I.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: God as creator of nature.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Nature and those (especially women) under nature's protection.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: As her poetry of praise cannot possibly do justice to the queen, she abandons an attempt that would obscure rather than promote the queen's fame.Return to reference 7

Notes

- °: be willingReturn to reference °
- °: mirrorReturn to reference °
- °: courts, pursuesReturn to reference °
- °: ChristReturn to reference °
- °: humblest birthReturn to reference °
- °: Queen Anna'sReturn to reference °
- °: solemn, seriousReturn to reference °
- °: overlookReturn to reference °
- °: decliningReturn to reference °

From To the Lady Anne, Countess of Dorset<sup>1</sup>

To you I dedicate this work of grace,
This frame of glory which I have erected,
For your fair mind I hold the fittest place
Where virtue should be settled and protected;
If highest thoughts true honor do embrace,
5 And holy wisdom is of them respected,
Then in this mirror let your fair eyes look,
To view your virtues in this blessed book.

Blest by our savior's merits, not my skill,
Which I acknowledge to be very small;
10 Yet if the least part of his blessed will
I have performed, I count I have done all:
One spark of grace sufficient is to fill
Our lamps with oil, ready when he doth call
To enter with the bridegroom<sup>2</sup> to the feast, 15 Where he that is the greatest may be least.

Greatness is no sure frame to build upon,
No worldly treasure can assure that place;
God makes both even, the cottage with the throne,<sup>3</sup>
20 All worldly honors there are counted base,
Those he holds dear, and reckneth as his own,
Whose virtuous deeds by his especial grace
Have gained his love, his kingdom, and his crown,
Whom in the book of life he hath set down.

Titles of honor which the world bestows,
25 To none but to the virtuous belong;

As beauteous bowers<sup>o</sup> where true worth should
repose,
And where his dwellings should be built most strong:
But when they are bestowed upon her foes,
30 Poor virtue's friends endure the greatest wrong:
For they must suffer all indignity,
Until in heaven they better graced be.

What difference was there when the world began,
Was it not virtue that distinguished all?
35 All sprang but from one woman and one man,
Then how doth gentry come to rise and fall?<sup>4</sup>
Or who is he that very rightly can Distinguish of his birth, or tell at all,
In what mean<sup>o</sup> state his ancestors have been,
40 Before someone of worth did honor win?

* * *

To you, as to God's steward I do write,
In whom the seeds of virtue have been sown,
By your most worthy mother, in whose right,
60 All her fair parts you challenge as your own;
If you, sweet lady, will appear as bright
As ever creature did that time hath known,
Then wear this diadem<sup>o</sup> I present to thee
Which I have framed for her eternity.

* * *

1611

Endnotes

- Note 1:
Anne Clifford (1590–1676) was the sole surviving child of George Clifford, Duke of Cumberland (d. 1605), and Margaret

Clifford, Countess of Cumberland. Following her father's death, Anne and her mother spent years pursuing Anne's right to inherit her father's properties in Yorkshire and Westmoreland. In 1609, she married Richard Sackville, Earl of Dorset (d. 1624), and in 1630, after Sackville's death, Philip Herbert, Earl of Pembroke and Montgomery (d. 1650). She finally acquired the rights to the Clifford properties in 1643 and actively managed them from 1649 until her death in 1676. She was an ardent family chronicler and diary keeper.

Return to reference 1

- Note 2: A reference to Jesus's parable comparing readiness for the kingdom of heaven to the behavior of ten virgins who went forth to meet the bridegroom, five carrying lamps with oil in them and five without (Matthew 25:1–13).Return to reference 2
- Note 3: All social classes are equal in the sight of God.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Perhaps an allusion to the well-known rhyme "When Adam delved and Eve span, / Who was then the gentleman?"Return to reference 4

Notes

- °: idealized pleasant spacesReturn to reference °
- °: lowReturn to reference °
- °: crownReturn to reference °

From Salve Deus Rex Judaeorum*<sup>1</sup>

* * *

155 The meditation of this monarch's<sup>o</sup> love,
Draws thee<sup>o</sup> from caring what this world can yield;
Of joys and griefs both equal thou dost prove,
They have no force, to force thee from the field:
Thy constant faith like to the turtle dove<sup>2</sup>
Continues combat, and will never yield
To base affliction, or proud pomp's desire,
That sets the weakest minds so much on fire.

160
Thou from the court to the country art retired,
Leaving the world, before the world leaves thee:
That great enchantress of weak minds admired,
Whose all-bewitching charms so pleasing be
To worldly wantons; and too much desired
165 Of those that care not for eternity:
But yield themselves as preys to lust and sin,
Losing their hopes of heav'n hell pains to win.

170 But thou, the wonder of our wanton age
Leav'st all delights to serve a heav'nly king:
Who is more wise? or who can be more sage,
Than she that doth affection subject bring;
Not forcing for the world, or Satan's rage,
But shrouding under the Almighty's wing;
175 Spending her years, months, days, minutes, hours,
In doing service to the heav'nly powers.

Thou fair example, live without compare,
With honors triumphs seated in thy breast;

180

Pale envy never can thy name impair,
When in thy heart thou harbor'st such a guest,
Malice must live forever in despair;
There's no revenge where virtue still doth rest:
All hearts must needs do homage unto thee,
In whom all eyes such rare perfection see.

An invective against outward beauty unaccompanied with virtue

That outward beauty which the world commends,
Is not the subject I will write upon,
Whose date expired, that tyrant time soon ends,
Those gaudy colors soon are spent and gone:
But those fair virtues which on thee attends
Are always fresh, they never are but one:
They make thy beauty fairer to behold,
Than was that queen's o for whom proud Troy was sold.

195

As for those matchless colors red and white,
Or perfect features in a fading face,
Or due proportion pleasing to the sight;
All these do draw but dangers and disgrace:
A mind enriched with virtue shines more bright,
Adds everlasting beauty, gives true grace,
Frames an immortal goddess on the earth,
Who though she dies, yet fame gives her new 200 berth. o

200

205

That pride of nature which adorns the fair,
Like blazing comets to allure all eyes,
Is but the thread that weaves their web of care,
Who glories most, where most their danger lies;
For greatest perils do attend the fair,
When men do seek, attempt, plot and devise,
How they may overthrow the chastest Dame,
Whose beauty is the white o whereat they aim.

* * *

*To the Lady of Cumberland
the Introduction to the Passion of Christ.*

¶ This grace, great lady, doth possess thy soul,
And makes thee pleasing in thy maker's sight;
This grace doth all imperfect thoughts control,<sup>o</sup>
Directing thee to serve thy God aright;
Still reckoning him the husband of thy soul,<sup>3</sup>
Which is most precious in his glorious sight:
Because the world's delights she doth deny
255 For him, who for her sake vouchsafed to die.

And dying made her dowager<sup>4</sup> of all;
Nay more, co-heir of that eternal bliss
That angels lost, and we by Adam's fall;
260 Mere cast-aways, raised by a Judas kiss,<sup>5</sup>
Christ's bloody sweat, the vinegar and gall,
The spear, sponge, nails, his buffeting with fists,
His bitter passion, agony, and death,
Did gain us heaven when he did lose his breath.

A preamble of the Author before the Passion

These high deserts<sup>o</sup> invite my lowly muse
To write of him, and pardon crave of thee,
For time so spent, I need make no excuse,
Knowing it doth with thy fair mind agree
So well, as thou no labor wilt refuse
That to thy holy love may pleasing be:
270 His death and passion I desire to write,
And thee to read, the blessed soul's delight.

But my dear Muse, now whither wouldst thou fly,
Above the pitch of thy appointed strain?
275 With Icarus,<sup>6</sup> thou seekest now to try,
Not waxen wings, but thy poor barren brain,
Which far too weak, these siely<sup>o</sup> lines descry;<sup>o</sup>
Yet cannot this thy forward mind restrain,
But thy poor infant verse must soar aloft,

280 Not fearing threat'ning dangers, happening oft.

Think when the eye of wisdom shall discover
Thy weakling muse to fly, that scarce could creep,
And in the air above the clouds to hover,
When better 'twere mewed up,<sup>o</sup> and fast asleep;
They'll think with Phaeton,<sup>z</sup> thou canst ne'er recover,
285 But helpless with that poor young lad to weep:
The little world of thy weak wit on fire,
Where thou wilt perish in thine own desire.

But yet the weaker thou dost seem to be
In sex, or sense, the more his<sup>o</sup> glory shines, 290 That doth infuse such powerful grace in thee,
To show thy love in these few humble lines;
The widow's mite<sup>8</sup> with this may well agree,
Her little all more worth than golden mines,
Being more dearer to our loving Lord,
295 Than all the wealth that kingdoms could afford.

Therefore I humbly for his grace will pray,
That he will give me power and strength to write,
That what I have begun, so end I may,
As his great glory may appear more bright;
300 Yea in these lines I may no further stray
Than his most holy spirit shall give me light:
That blindest weakness be not over bold,
The manner of his Passion to unfold.

* * *

745 Now Pontius Pilate<sup>9</sup> is to judge the cause<sup>o</sup>
Of faultless Jesus, who before him stands;
Who neither hath offended prince, nor laws,
Although he now be brought in woeful bands:
O noble governor, make thou yet a pause,
Do not in innocent blood imbrue<sup>o</sup> thy hands;

750 But hear the words of thy most worthy wife,
Who sends to thee, to beg her Savior's life.<sup>1</sup>

Let barb'rous cruelty far depart from thee,
And in true justice take affliction's part;
Open thine eyes, that thou the truth may'st see,
755 Do not the thing that goes against thy heart;
Condemn not him that must thy savior be;
But view his holy life, his good desert:
Let not us women glory in men's fall,<sup>2</sup>
Who had power given to overrule us all.

760 Eve's Apology ¶ Till now your<sup>o</sup> indiscretion sets us free,
And makes our former fault much less appear;
Our mother Eve, who tasted of the tree,
Giving to Adam what she held most dear,
Was simply good, and had no power to see;<sup>4</sup>
765 The after-coming harm did not appear:
The subtle serpent that our sex betrayed,
Before our fall so sure a plot had laid.

That undiscerning ignorance perceived
No guile, or craft that was by him intended;
770 For, had she known of what we were bereaved,<sup>5</sup>
To his request she had not condescended.<sup>o</sup>
But she (poor soul) by cunning was deceived,
No hurt therein her harmless heart intended:
For she alleged<sup>o</sup> God's word, which he<sup>o</sup> denies 775 That they should die, but even as gods, be wise.

But surely Adam cannot be excused,
Her fault though great, yet he was most to blame;
What weakness offered, strength might have refused,
780 Being lord of all, the greater was his shame:
Although the serpent's craft had her abused,

God's holy word ought all his actions frame:
For he was lord and king of all the earth,
Before poor Eve had either life or breath.<sup>6</sup>

785 Who being framed<sup>o</sup> by God's eternal hand,
The perfectest man that ever breathed on earth,
And from God's mouth received that strait<sup>o</sup> command,<sup>7</sup>
The breach whereof he knew was present death:
Yea having power to rule both sea and land,
790 Yet with one apple won to lose that breath,<sup>8</sup>
Which God hath breathed in his beauteous face,
Bringing us all in danger and disgrace.

And then to lay the fault on patience's back,
That we (poor women) must endure it all;
795 We know right well he did discretion<sup>o</sup> lack,
Being not persuaded thereunto at all;
If Eve did err, it was for knowledge sake,
The fruit being fair persuaded him to fall:
No subtle serpent's falsehood did betray him,
800 If he would eat it, who had power to stay<sup>o</sup> him?

Not Eve, whose fault was only too much love,
Which made her give this present to her dear,
That which she tasted, he likewise might prove,<sup>o</sup>
Whereby his knowledge might become more clear;
He never sought her weakness to reprove
805 With those sharp words which he of God did hear:
Yet men will boast of knowledge which he took
From Eve's fair hand, as from a learned book.

810 If any evil did in her remain,
Being made of him, he was the ground of all;
If one of many worlds could lay a stain
Upon our sex, and work so great a fall

To wretched man by Satan's<sup>9</sup> subtle train;<sup>o</sup>
What will so foul a fault amongst you all?
Her weakness did the serpent's word obey,
815 But you<sup>o</sup> in malice God's dear son betray.

Whom, if unjustly you condemn to die,
Her sin was small, to what you do commit;
All mortal sins<sup>1</sup> that do for vengeance cry,
Are not to be compared unto it:
820 If many worlds would altogether try
By all their sins the wrath of God to get,
This sin of yours surmounts them all as far
As doth the sun, another little star.

Then let us have our liberty again,
825 And challenge<sup>o</sup> to your selves no sovereignty;
You came not in the world without our pain,
Make that a bar against your cruelty;
Your fault being greater, why should you disdain
Our being your equals, free from tyranny?
830 If one weak woman simply did offend,
This sin of yours hath no excuse, nor end.

To which (poor souls) we never gave consent,
Witness thy wife (O Pilate) speaks for all;
Who did but dream, and yet a message sent,
835 That thou should'st have nothing to do at all
With that just man,<sup>o</sup> which, if thy heart relent,
Why wilt thou be a reprobate<sup>o</sup> with Saul?<sup>2</sup>
To seek the death of him that is so good,
840 For thy soul's health to shed his dearest blood.<sup>3</sup>

* * *

The tears of the daughters of Jerusalem.

Thrice happy women<sup>4</sup> that obtained such grace
From him whose worth the world could not contain;

Immediately to turn about his face,
As not rememb'ring his great grief and pain,
To comfort you, whose tears poured forth apace
On Flora's<sup>o</sup> banks, like showers of April rain:
975 Your cries enforced mercy, grace, and love
From him, whom greatest princes could not move

To speak one word, nor once to lift his eyes
Unto proud Pilate, no nor Herod, king,
By all the questions that they could devise,
980 Could make him answer to no manner of thing;
Yet these poor women by their piteous cries
Did move their lord, their lover, and their king,
To take compassion, turn about, and speak
To them whose hearts were ready now to break.

Most blessed Daughters of Jerusalem,
985 Who found such favor in your Savior's sight,
To turn his face when you did pity him;
Your tearful eyes beheld his eyes more bright;
Your faith and love unto such grace did climb,
To have reflection from this heav'nly light:
990 Your eagles' eye did gaze against this sun,
Your hearts did think, he dead, the world were
done.

When spiteful men with torments did oppress
Th'afflicted body of this innocent dove,
985 Poor women seeing how much they did transgress,
By tears, by sighs, by cries, intreat, nay prove,
What may be done among the thickest press,
They labor still these tyrants' hearts to move:<sup>5</sup>
In pity and compassion to forbear
1000 Their whipping, spurning, tearing of his hair.<sup>6</sup>

* * *

1305

This is that bridegroom that appears so fair,<sup>7</sup>
So sweet, so lovely in his spouse's sight,
That unto snow we may his face compare,
His cheeks like scarlet, and his eyes so bright
As purest doves that in the rivers are Washed with milk, to give the more delight;
1310 His head is likened to the finest gold,
His curled locks so beauteous to behold;

1315

Black as a raven in her blackest hue;
His lips like scarlet threads, yet much more sweet
Than is the sweetest honey-dropping dew,
Or honeycombs, where all the bees do meet;
Yea, he is constant, and his words are true,
His cheeks are beds of spices, flowers sweet;
His lips like lilies, dropping down pure myrrh,
Whose love, before all worlds we do prefer.<sup>8</sup>

1320

To my Lady of Cumberland.

Ah! give me leave (good lady) now to leave
This task of beauty which I took in hand,
I cannot wade so deep, I may deceive
My self, before I can attain the land;
Therefore (good Madam) in your heart I leave
1325 His perfect picture, where it still shall stand,
Deeply engraved in that holy shrine,
Environed with love and thoughts divine.

1330

There may you see him as a God in glory,
And as a man in miserable case;
There may you read his true and perfect story,
His bleeding body there you may embrace,
And kiss his dying cheeks with tears of sorrow,
With joyful grief, you may intreat for grace;

1335

And all your prayers, and your alms-deeds<sup>9</sup>
May bring to stop his cruel wounds that bleeds.

Oft times hath he made trial of your love,
And in your faith hath took no small delight,
By crosses and afflictions he doth prove,<sup>o</sup>
Yet still your heart remaineth firm and right;
1340 Your love so strong as nothing can remove,
Your thoughts being placed on him both day and
night,
Your constant soul doth lodge between her breasts,
This sweet of sweets, in which all glory rests.

* * *

Wise Deborah<sup>9</sup> that judged Israel,
Nor valiant Judith<sup>1</sup> cannot equal thee,
Unto the first, God did his will reveal,
And gave her power to set his people free;
Yea Judith had the power likewise to quell
1485 Proud Holofernes, that the just might see
What small defence vain pride and greatness hath Against the weapons of God's word and faith.

But thou far greater war do'st still maintain
Against that many-headed monster sin,
1490 Whose mortal sting hath many thousand slain,
And every day fresh combats do begin;
Yet cannot all his venom lay one stain
Upon thy soul, thou do'st the conquest win,
Though all the world he daily doth devour,
1495 Yet over thee he never could get power.

For that one worthy deed by Deb'rah done,
Thou hast performed many in thy time;
For that one conquest that faire Judith won,
By which she did the steps of honor climb,
1500 Thou hast the conquest of all conquests won,

When to thy conscience Hell can lay no crime:
For that one head that Judith bare away,
Thou takest from sin a hundred heads a day.

1505     Though virtuous Hester<sup>2</sup> fasted three days' space,
And spent her time in prayers all that while,
That by God's power she might obtain such grace,
That she and hers might not become a spoil
To wicked Haman, in whose crabbed face
1510     Was seen the map of malice, envy, guile;
Her glorious garments though she put apart,
So to present a pure and single heart.

* * *

1825     Lo Madam,<sup>o</sup> here you take a view of those,<sup>o</sup>
Whose worthy steps you do desire to tread,
Decked in those colors which our Savior chose;
The purest colors both of white and red,
Colors of     Their freshest beauties would I fain disclose,
Confessors &     By which our Savior most was honored:
Martyrs     But my weak Muse desireth now to rest,
Folding up all their beauties in your breast.

1835     Whose excellence hath raised my spirits to write,
Of what my thoughts could hardly apprehend;
Your rarest virtues did my soul delight,
Great lady of my heart: I must commend
You that appear so fair in all men's sight:
On your deserts my muses do attend;
You are the Arctic star that guides my hand,
1840     All what I am, I rest at your command.

1611

Endnotes

- Note 1: Lanyer's title poem has four parts: The Passion; Eve's Apology in Defense of Women; The Tears of the Daughters of Jerusalem; and The Salutation and Sorrow of the Virgin Mary. It also includes multiple addresses to the Countess of Cumberland, whom Lanyer imagines as a model of constancy. (See Hilliard's miniature on p. 924.)Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Symbol of steadfast love.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Christ is figured as a bridegroom in the gospel of John (John 3:29); the brides of Christ were the faithful. (See also the parable of the virgins in Matthew 25:1–13.)Return to reference 3
- Note 4:
A widow who receives title or property from her husband's estate. Lanyer presents the countess's soul first as Christ's bride and then as his dowager, enjoying and dispensing his wealth. Lanyer may also allude to Margaret Clifford's own status following the 1605 death of her (estranged) husband: she and her daughter embarked on a years-long battle for Anne's right to inherit the Clifford estates. (George Clifford left his property to his brother.)
Return to reference 4
- Note 5: The kiss with which Judas identified Jesus to those seeking to arrest him also led (through his death) to the salvation of humankind (Matthew 26:47–56). More generally, a Judas kiss is an apparent act of friendship that actually harms the recipient.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: In Greek myth, son of the inventor Daedalus; he fell into the sea because he flew too close to the sun, melting the wax wings his father had made for him.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: In Greek myth, son of the sun god, Helios; after borrowing his father's sun-chariot, he drove both too close to and too far from the earth, alternately burning and freezing it. To save the world, Zeus struck him down.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: A coin of small value. In a parable, Jesus praises the widow for giving all she has ("the widow's mite") while the

- wealthy give less (Mark 12:41–44; Luke 21:1–4). Lanyer also puns on the widow's "might."Return to reference 8
- Note 9: The Roman governor of Judea (26–36 C.E.) who authorized the crucifixion of Jesus. The intervening stanzas recount Christ's story up until his trial, focusing largely on the wickedness of kings, priests, and elders, and on the weaknesses of the disciples, "Though they protest they never will forsake him," Lanyer writes, "They do like men, when dangers overtake them."Return to reference 9
  - Note 1:
 "While Pilate was sitting on the judge's seat, his wife sent him this message: 'Don't have anything to do with that innocent man, for I have suffered a great deal today in a dream because of him' " (Matthew 27:19). Lanyer writes her own, much-elaborated version of this letter in the following stanzas, in which there is no clear differentiation between the voice of Pilate's wife's and that of Lanyer herself.
Return to reference 1
  - Note 2: The fall of Adam and the prospective fall of Pilate.Return to reference 2
  - Note 3: Apology here means defense. Lanyer's defense of Eve, and of women more generally, is presented by Pilate's wife. (It does not appear in the Bible.)Return to reference 3
  - Note 4:
 In Genesis, Eve eats the forbidden fruit of the Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil first, and then Adam eats it (Genesis 3:1–13). There was much debate in the querelle des femmes about whose crime was worse: that of Eve, who was seduced by the serpent, or of Adam, who hearkened to the voice of his wife. See Paradise Lost 9.733–1189, 10.1–208, and Order and Disorder, 5.120–267, for other versions of the story.
Return to reference 4
  - Note 5: Deprived (here, of eternal life). See Genesis 3:16–19.Return to reference 5
  - Note 6: In contrast to Genesis 1:27 in which God created man in his own image, "male and female created he them," in

- Genesis 2, God creates Adam first (7), then fashions Eve from a rib taken from Adam's side (21–23). Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Not to eat of the Tree of knowledge of Good and Evil (Genesis 2:17). Return to reference 7
  - Note 8: The breath of life, which would have been eternal. Return to reference 8
  - Note 9: Tradition, not Genesis, identifies the serpent with Satan. Return to reference 9
  - Note 1: Sins punishable by damnation. Return to reference 1
  - Note 2: First king of Israel; he tried to kill his successor and God's anointed prophet-king, David (1 Samuel 20:30–24:17). Return to reference 2
  - Note 3: Lanyer's account of Christ's Passion ends with Pilate's decision (as his wife puts it) that he could not be Caesar's "friend / Unless he sent sweet Jesus to his end." Yet, she also notes, Christ's crown of thorns is superior to "the diadem / Of any king that ever lived before." Return to reference 3
  - Note 4: "The daughters of Jerusalem" are the women who wept as they followed Jesus to his crucifixion (Luke 23:27–31). "Daughters of Jerusalem" also appear in the Song of Songs (or "Canticles") 5:16, where they are called upon to witness and support the courtship of the bride (in Christian typology, the church) and bridegroom (Christ). Return to reference 4
  - Note 5: Women followed and ministered to Christ (Matthew 27:55–56), were critical of and mourned his execution (27:61), and were among his most fervent followers (28:1–12), but their role in Lanyer's poem is more activist than it is in the Gospels. Return to reference 5
  - Note 6: The omitted stanzas include "The Salutation and the Sorrow of the Virgin Mary." Return to reference 6
  - Note 7: The following stanzas are part of "A brief description of his [the bridegroom/Christ's] beauty upon the Canticles" (Lanyer's marginal note). Return to reference 7
  - Note 8: Some of the metaphors Lanyer uses here, such as the scarlet ribbon lips dropping honey, are based on those used by the bridegroom to describe the bride in the Songs of Songs

- (4:3, 11). Others, such as cheeks of spices and lips like lilies (5:13), are based on those the bride uses to describe the bridegroom to the daughters of Jerusalem.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: A judge and prophet who played a crucial role in the Israelites' victory over the Canaanites (Judges 4 and 5).Return to reference 9
  - Note 1: Heroine of the apocryphal book of Judith; she beheaded the enemy general, Holofernes.Return to reference 1
  - Note 2: Queen Esther, who interceded with King Ahasuerus when his minister Haman sought to destroy her people, the Jews; Haman was hanged, and the Jews' enemies destroyed (Esther 5–9; for her fasting, see 4:16). A defense of women published a few years after Lanyer's was entitled Esther Hath Hanged Haman (1617).Return to reference 2

Notes

- °: Christ'sReturn to reference °
- °: Countess of CumberlandReturn to reference °
- °: HelenReturn to reference °
- °: birth, beginning; statusReturn to reference °
- °: mark, targetReturn to reference °
- °: contain, restrictReturn to reference °
- °: deservings, meritsReturn to reference °
- °: silly, simple Return to reference °
- °: proclaimReturn to reference °
- °: confined, enclosedReturn to reference °
- °: Christ'sReturn to reference °
- °: caseReturn to reference °
- °: stainReturn to reference °
- °: Pilate's, men'sReturn to reference °
- °: consentedReturn to reference °
- °: asserted Return to reference °
- °: the serpentReturn to reference °
- °: determineReturn to reference °

- °: fashionedReturn to reference °
- °: strictReturn to reference °
- °: judgmentReturn to reference °
- °: preventReturn to reference °
- °: experience, testReturn to reference °
- °: treachery, deceitReturn to reference °
- °: PilateReturn to reference °
- °: attributeReturn to reference °
- °: ChristReturn to reference °
- °: damnedReturn to reference °
- °: Roman goddess of springReturn to reference °
- °: acts of charityReturn to reference °
- °: testReturn to reference °
- °: Countess of Cumberland Return to reference °
- °: martyrsReturn to reference °

The Description of Cookham<sup>1</sup>

Farewell, sweet Cookham, where I first obtained Grace<sup>2</sup> from that grace where perfect grace remained;
And where the muses gave their full consent,
I should have power the virtuous to content;
Where princely palace willed me to indite,<sup>o</sup>
5 The sacred story of the soul's delight.<sup>3</sup>
Farewell, sweet place, where virtue then did rest,
And all delights did harbor in her breast;
Never shall my sad eyes again behold
Those pleasures which my thoughts did then unfold.
10 Yet you, great lady, mistress of that place,
From whose desires did spring this work of grace;
Vouchsafe<sup>o</sup> to think upon those pleasures past,
As fleeting worldly joys that could not last,
Or, as dim shadows of celestial pleasures,
15 Which are desired above all earthly treasures.
Oh how, methought, against<sup>o</sup> you thither came,
Each part did seem some new delight to frame!
The house received all ornaments to grace it,
And would endure no foulness to deface it.
20 And walks put on their summer liveries,<sup>4</sup>
And all things else did hold like similes:<sup>5</sup>
The trees with leaves, with fruits, with flowers clad,
Embraced each other, seeming to be glad,
Turning themselves to beauteous canopies,
25 To shade the bright sun from your brighter eyes;
The crystal streams with silver spangles graced,
While by the glorious sun they were embraced;
The little birds in chirping notes did sing,

30 To entertain both you and that sweet spring.
And Philomela<sup>6</sup> with her sundry lays,
Both you and that delightful place did praise.
Oh how me thought each plant, each flower, each tree
Set forth their beauties then to welcome thee!
The very hills right humbly did descend,
35 When you to tread on them did intend.
And as you set your feet, they still did rise,
Glad that they could receive so rich a prize.
The gentle winds did take delight to be Among those woods that were so graced by thee,
40 And in sad murmur uttered pleasing sound,
That pleasure in that place might more abound.
The swelling banks delivered all their pride
When such a phoenix<sup>7</sup> once they had espied.
Each arbor, bank, each seat, each stately tree,
45 Thought themselves honored in supporting thee.
The pretty birds would oft come to attend thee,
Yet fly away for fear they should offend thee;
The little creatures in the burrow by
Would come abroad to sport them in your eye,
50 Yet fearful of the bow in your fair hand,
Would run away when you did make a stand.
Now let me come unto that stately tree,
Wherein such goodly prospects you did see;
That oak that did in height his fellows pass,
55 As much as lofty trees, low growing grass,
Much like a comely cedar straight and tall,
Whose beauteous stature far exceeded all.
How often did you visit this fair tree,
Which seeming joyful in receiving thee,
60 Would like a palm tree spread his arms abroad,
Desirous that you there should make abode;
Whose fair green leaves much like a comely veil,

Defended Phoebus<sup>o</sup> when he would assail;
Whose pleasing boughs did yield a cool fresh air,
65 Joying<sup>o</sup> his happiness when you were there.
Where being seated, you might plainly see
Hills, vales, and woods, as if on bended knee
They had appeared, your honor to salute,
Or to prefer some strange unlooked-for suit;<sup>8</sup>
70 All interlaced with brooks and crystal springs,
A prospect fit to please the eyes of kings.
And thirteen shires appeared all in your sight,
Europe could not afford much more delight.
What was there then but gave you all content,
75 While you the time in meditation spent
Of their Creator's power, which there you saw,
In all his creatures held a perfect law;
And in their beauties did you plain descry<sup>o</sup>
His beauty, wisdom, grace, love, majesty.
80 In these sweet woods how often did you walk,
With Christ and his apostles there to talk;
Placing his holy writ in some fair tree
To meditate what you therein did see.
With Moses you did mount his holy hill
85 To know his pleasure, and perform his will.<sup>9</sup>
With lowly David you did often sing
His holy hymns to heaven's eternal King.<sup>1</sup>
And in sweet music did your soul delight
To sound his praises, morning, noon, and night.
90 With blessed Joseph you did often feed
Your pined<sup>o</sup> brethren, when they stood in need.<sup>2</sup>
And that sweet lady sprung from Clifford's race,
Of noble Bedford's blood, fair stem of grace,<sup>3</sup>
To honorable Dorset now espoused,<sup>4</sup>
95 In whose fair breast true virtue then was housed,
Oh what delight did my weak spirits find
In those pure parts<sup>o</sup> of her well framed mind.

And yet it grieves me that I cannot be Near unto her, whose virtues did agree
100 With those fair ornaments of outward beauty,
Which did enforce from all both love and duty.
Unconstant Fortune, thou art most to blame,
Who casts us down into so low a frame
Where our great friends we cannot daily see,
105 So great a difference is there in degree.<sup>5</sup>
Many are placéd in those orbs of state,
Parters<sup>6</sup> in honor, so ordained by Fate,
Nearer in show, yet farther off in love,
In which, the lowest always are above.<sup>7</sup>
110 But whither am I carried in conceit,<sup>o</sup>
My wit too weak to conster<sup>o</sup> of the great.
Why not? Although we are but born of earth,
We may behold the heavens, despising death;
And loving heaven that is so far above,
115 May in the end vouchsafe us entire love.<sup>8</sup>
Therefore sweet memory do thou retain
Those pleasures past, which will not turn again:
Remember beauteous Dorset's<sup>9</sup> former sports,
So far from being touched by ill reports,
120 Wherein myself did always bear a part,
While reverend love presented my true heart.
Those recreations let me bear in mind,
Which her sweet youth and noble thoughts did find,
Whereof deprived, I evermore must grieve,
125 Hating blind Fortune, careless to relieve.
And you sweet Cookham, whom these ladies leave,
I now must tell the grief you did conceive
At their departure, when they went away,
How everything retained a sad dismay.
130 Nay long before, when once an inkling came,
Methought each thing did unto sorrow frame:
The trees that were so glorious in our view,

Forsook both flowers and fruit, when once they knew
Of your depart, their very leaves did wither,
135 Changing their colors as they grew together.
But when they saw this had no power to stay you,
They often wept, though, speechless, could not pray
you,
Letting their tears in your fair bosoms fall,
As if they said, Why will ye leave us all?
140 This being vain, they cast their leaves away
Hoping that pity would have made you stay:
Their frozen tops, like age's hoary hairs,
Shows their disasters, languishing in fears.
A swarthy riveled rind<sup>o</sup> all over spread,
145 Their dying bodies half alive, half dead.
But your occasions called you so away<sup>1</sup>
That nothing there had power to make you stay.
Yet did I see a noble grateful mind
Requiting each according to their kind,
150 Forgetting not to turn and take your leave
Of these sad creatures, powerless to receive
Your favor, when with grief you did depart,
Placing their former pleasures in your heart,
Giving great charge to noble memory
155 There to preserve their love continually.
But specially the love of that fair tree,
That first and last you did vouchsafe to see,
In which it pleased you oft to take the air
With noble Dorset, then a virgin fair,
160 Where many a learned book was read and scanned,
To this fair tree, taking me by the hand,
You did repeat the pleasures which had passed,
Seeming to grieve they could no longer last.
And with a chaste, yet loving kiss took leave,
165 Of which sweet kiss I did it soon bereave,<sup>o</sup>
Scorning a senseless creature should possess

So rare a favor, so great happiness.
No other kiss it could receive from me,
For fear to give back what it took of thee,
170 So I ungrateful creature did deceive it
Of that which you in love vouchsafed to leave it.
And though it oft had given me much content,
Yet this great wrong I never could repent;
But of the happiest made it most forlorn,
175 To show that nothing's free from Fortune's scorn,
While all the rest with this most beauteous tree
Made their sad comfort sorrow's harmony.
The flowers that on the banks and walks did grow,
Crept in the ground, the grass did weep for woe.
180 The winds and waters seemed to chide together
Because you went away they knew not whither;
And those sweet brooks that ran so fair and clear,
With grief and trouble wrinkled did appear.
Those pretty birds that wonted<sup>o</sup> were to sing,
185 Now neither sing, nor chirp, nor use their wing,
But with their tender feet on some bare spray,
Warble forth sorrow, and their own dismay.
Fair Philomela leaves her mournful ditty,
Drowned in deep sleep, yet can procure no pity.
190 Each arbor, bank, each seat, each stately tree
Looks bare and desolate now for want of thee,
Turning green tresses into frosty gray,
While in cold grief they wither all away.
The sun grew weak, his beams no comfort gave, 195 While all green things did make the earth their grave.
Each briar, each bramble, when you went away
Caught fast your clothes, thinking to make you stay;
Delightful Echo wonted to reply
To our last words, did now for sorrow die;
200 The house cast off each garment that might grace it,
Putting on dust and cobwebs to deface it.

All desolation then there did appear,
When you were going whom they held so dear.
This last farewell to Cookham here I give,
205 When I am dead thy name in this may live,
Wherein I have performed her noble hest<sup>o</sup>
Whose virtues lodge in my unworthy breast,
And ever shall, so long as life remains,
210 Tying my life to her by those rich chains.<sup>o</sup> 1611

Endnotes

- Note 1:
The poem was written in honor of Margaret Clifford, Countess of Cumberland, and celebrates a royal estate leased to her brother, at which the countess occasionally resided. The poem should be compared with Jonson's "To Penshurst" (p. 1053). Lanyer's poem is based on a familiar classical topic, the "farewell to a place," which had its most famous development in Virgil's Eclogue 1. Lanyer makes extensive use of the common pastoral motif of nature's active sympathy with and response to human emotion, which later came to be called the "pathetic fallacy."
Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Here, both God's grace and the favor of Her Grace, the Countess of Cumberland. Lanyer attributes both her religious conversion and her vocation as poet to a period of residence in the countess's household. We do not know how long or under what circumstances Lanyer resided at Cookham.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Apparently a reference to the countess as her patron, commissioning her poem on Christ's Passion.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Distinctive garments worn by persons in the service of great families, to indicate whose servants they were.Return to reference 4

- Note 5: Behaved in similar fashion.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: In myth, Philomela was raped by her brother-in-law Tereus, who also tore out her tongue; the gods transformed her into a bird (in Ovid's version, a nightingale) who tells her tale in song. The bird's song is joyous at first, then mournful (line 189) as Lanyer associates Philomela's woes with those of Cookham at the women's departure.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Mythical bird that lived alone of its kind for five hundred years, then was consumed in flame and reborn from its own ashes; metaphorically, a person of rare excellence. "All their pride": fish (compare "To Penshurst," p. 1054, lines 31–36).Return to reference 7
- Note 8: To urge some unexpected petition, as to a monarch.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: You sought out and followed God's law, like Moses, who received the Ten Commandments on Mount Sinai.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: You often sang David's psalms.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Like Joseph, who fed the starving Israelites in Egypt, you fed the hungry.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Main line of the family tree. Anne Clifford, only surviving child of the seaman-adventurer George Clifford, third Earl of Cumberland, and the countess, a Russell (of "Bedford's blood").Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Anne Clifford was married to Richard Sackville, third Earl of Dorset, on February 25, 1609; the reference helps date Lanyer's poem.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: These lines and lines 117–25 probably exaggerate Lanyer's former familiarity with Anne Clifford.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Separators; that is, the various honorific ranks ("orbs of state") act to separate person from person.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: An egalitarian sentiment playing on the Christian notion that in spiritual things—love and charity—the poor and lowly surpass the great ones.Return to reference 7

- Note 8: That is, we (lowly) may also love God and enjoy God's love, and hence are equal to anyone.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: As was common, Anne Clifford is here referred to by her husband's title.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: After her husband's death in 1605, Margaret Clifford chiefly resided in her dower properties in the north; Anne Clifford was married in 1609. The two women began their pursuit of Anne's rights to the Clifford properties immediately after George Clifford's death. Anne finally obtained her rights in 1643.Return to reference 1

Notes

- °: writeReturn to reference °
- °: be willingReturn to reference °
- °: in preparation forReturn to reference °
- °: resisted the sunReturn to reference °
- °: enjoyingReturn to reference °
- °: perceiveReturn to reference °
- °: gauntReturn to reference °
- °: qualitiesReturn to reference °
- °: thought, fancyReturn to reference °
- °: construeReturn to reference °
- °: barkReturn to reference °
- °: soon take from itReturn to reference °
- °: accustomedReturn to reference °
- °: commissionReturn to reference °
- °: her virtuesReturn to reference °

BEN JONSON

1572–1637

In 1616 Ben Jonson published his Works, to the derision of those astounded to see mere plays and poems collected under the same title the king gave to his political treatises. Many of Jonson's contemporaries shied away from publication, either because, like Donne, they wrote for small coterie audiences or because, like Shakespeare, they wrote for theater companies that preferred not to let go of the scripts. Jonson knew and admired both Donne and Shakespeare and more than any Jacobean belonged to both of their very different worlds, but in publishing his Works he laid claim to higher literary status. He had risen from humble beginnings to become England's unofficial poet laureate, with a pension from the king and honorary degrees from both Oxford and Cambridge. If he was not the first professional author in England, he was the first to invest that role with dignity and respectability. His published Works, over which he labored with painstaking care, testify to an extraordinary feat of self-transformation.

Jonson's early life was tough and turbulent. The son of a London clergyman who died before he was born, he was educated at Westminster School under the antiquarian scholar William Camden. There he developed his love of classical learning; but lacking the resources to continue his education, Jonson was forced to turn to his stepfather's trade of bricklaying, a life he "could not endure." He escaped by joining the English forces in Flanders, where, he later boasted, he killed a man in single combat before the eyes of two armies. Back in London, his attempt to make a living as an actor and a playwright almost ended in disaster. He was imprisoned in 1597 for collaborating with Thomas Nashe on the scandalous play The Isle of Dogs (now lost), and shortly after his release he killed one of his fellow actors in a duel. Jonson escaped the gallows by pleading benefit of clergy (a medieval privilege exempting felons from the death penalty if they could read Latin). His learning had saved his life, but he emerged from captivity branded on the thumb, and with another mark against him as well. Under the influence of a priest imprisoned with him, Jonson had converted to Catholicism. He was now more than ever a marginal figure, distrusted by the society that he satirized brilliantly in his early plays.

THE WORKES
OF Benjamin Jonson

— neque, me pot miretur turba
labore:
Contentus paucis lectoribus.

Imprinted at London, by
Will<sup>m</sup> Stansby

Anno D. 1616.

Guilielmus Stansby fecit

Jonson's 1616 Works. This title page makes a strong claim for the importance of Jonson's literary achievement and for the significance of English drama in general. The columned portico suggests Jonson's connection to the classical tradition, and the figures within it represent his mastery of various genres; they represent, clockwise from the top, Tragicomedy, Pastoral, Comedy, Tragedy, and Satire. Underneath Tragedy is a cart of the sort medieval traveling players would have used; underneath Comedy is an ancient Greek amphitheater. Centered just beneath Tragicomedy is a depiction of the English public theaters for which Jonson wrote many of his plays.

---

Jonson's fortunes improved with the accession of James I, though not immediately. In 1603 he was called before the Privy Council to answer charges of "popery and treason" found in his play Sejanus. Little more than a year later he was in jail again for co-writing the play Eastward Ho, which openly mocked the Scots accent of the new king and his courtiers. Nonetheless, in January 1605 Jonson received a commission from Queen Anna to organize the court's Twelfth Night entertainment, or masque, in the old Banqueting House at Whitehall. The Masque of Blackness, which Jonson produced in collaboration with the architect and scene designer Inigo Jones, featured Queen Anna and eleven of her ladies emerging from a scallop shell, "all painted like Blackamoors, face and neck bare" and "strangely attired." Jonson would go on to produce twenty-four masques for the court, most of them with Inigo Jones. In the same years that he was writing the masques, he produced his greatest works for the public theater, including the comedies Volpone (1606), Epicene (1609), The Alchemist (1610), and Bartholomew Fair (1614). Jonson preserved the detached, satiric perspective of an outsider, but he was rising in society and making accommodations where necessary. Around 1610, he returned to the Church of England.

Although he rose to a position of respectability, Jonson retained a quarrelsome spirit all his life. Much of his best work emerged out of fierce tensions with collaborators and contemporaries. Still, in spite of his antagonistic nature, Jonson had a great capacity for friendship. His friends included Shakespeare, Donne, and Francis Bacon. In later years he gathered around himself a group of admiring younger men known as the "Sons of Ben," among them Robert Herrick, Thomas Carew, and Sir John Suckling. Jonson also moved easily among the great of the land. His patrons included Lady Mary Wroth, whose sonnets he praised for making him a better poet, and other members of the Sidney and Herbert families. In "To Penshurst," a celebration of Robert Sidney's country estate, Jonson offers an ideal image of a social order in which a virtuous landowner offers hospitality to guests of all stations, from poets to kings.

"To Penshurst," together with Aemilia Lanyer's "Description of Cookham," inaugurated the genre of the "country house poem" in England. Jonson tried his hand at a wide range of poetic genres, including epitaph and epigram, love and funeral elegy, verse satire and verse letter, song and ode. More often than not he looked back to classical precedents. The classical values Jonson most admired are enumerated in "Inviting a Friend to Supper," which, in contrast to the excess that marked the banquets and entertainments of imperial Rome and Stuart England, describes a dinner party characterized by moderation and refinement, while still hinting at Jonson's own notoriety. The man who produced this image of temperate civility was a man of immense appetites, which found expression in his art as well as in his life. His best works seethe with imaginative energy and a lust for abundance. Even after a stroke in 1629 left him partially paralyzed and confined to his home, Jonson continued to write; he was at work on a new play when he died in 1637.

Volpone

or
The Fox

THE PERSONS OF THE PLAY<sup>1</sup>

VOLPONE, a magnifico°

MOSCA, his parasite°

NANO, a dwarf

ANDROGYNO, a hermaphrodite

CASTRONE, an eunuch

VOLTORE, an advocate°

CORBACCIO, an old gentleman

BONARIO, a young gentleman [CORBACCIO's son]

CORVINO, a merchant

CELIA, the merchant's wife

Servitore, a servant [to CORVINO]

[Sir] POLITIC Would-be, a knight

Fine Madame [LADY] WOULD-BE, the knight's wife

[Two] WOMEN [servants to LADY WOULD-BE]

PEREGRINE, a gentleman traveler

AVOCATORI,<sup>o</sup> four magistrates

Notario [NOTARY], the register<sup>o</sup>

COMMENDATORI,<sup>o</sup> officers

[Other court officials, litter-bearers]

Mercatori, three MERCHANTS

Grege [members of a CROWD]

SCENE. Venice

Endnotes

- Note 1:
Many of the characters have allegorically apt names. "Volpone" is defined in John Florio's 1598 Italian-English dictionary as "an old fox . . . a sneaking, lurking, wily deceiver." "Mosca" means "fly." "Nano" means "dwarf." "Vulture" means "vulture." "Corbaccio" means "raven." "Bonario" is derived from bono, meaning "good." "Corvino" means "crow." "Celia" means "heaven." "Politic" means "worldly-wise" or "temporizing." "Peregrine" means "traveler" or "small hawk." In many performances the symbolism of the animal names is reinforced by costuming.
Return to reference 1

Notes

- °: Venetian noblemanReturn to reference °
- °: hanger-onReturn to reference °

- °: lawyerReturn to reference °
- °: public prosecutorsReturn to reference °
- °: court recorderReturn to reference °
- °: court deputiesReturn to reference °

The Argument<sup>1</sup>

V olpone, childless, rich, feigns sick, despairs,<sup>o</sup>
O ffers his state<sup>o</sup> to hopes of several heirs,
L ies languishing; his parasite receives
P resents of all, assures, deludes, then weaves
O ther cross-plots, which ope themselves,<sup>o</sup> are told.<sup>o</sup>
N ew tricks for safety are sought; they thrive—
when, bold,
E ach tempts th'other again, and all are sold.<sup>o</sup>

Endnotes

- Note 1: Plot summary. Jonson imitates the acrostic “arguments” of the Latin playwright Plautus.Return to reference 1

Notes

- °: is despaired ofReturn to reference °
- °: estateReturn to reference °
- °: unfold Return to reference °
- °: exposedReturn to reference °
- °: betrayedReturn to reference °

Prologue

Now, luck yet send us, and a little wit
Will serve to make our play hit
According to the palates of the season.<sup>o</sup>
Here is rhyme not empty of reason.
This we were bid to credit<sup>o</sup> from our poet,
5 Whose true scope,<sup>o</sup> if you would know it,
In all his poems still hath been this measure,
To mix profit with your pleasure;<sup>1</sup>
And not as some—whose throats their envy failing<sup>o</sup>
—
10 Cry hoarsely, “all he writes is railing,”<sup>o</sup>
And when his plays come forth think they can flout
them
With saying he was a year about them.<sup>2</sup>
To these there needs no lie<sup>o</sup> but this his creature,<sup>o</sup>
Which was, two months since, no feature;<sup>o</sup>
And, though he dares give them<sup>o</sup> five lives to mend 15 it,
’Tis known five weeks fully penned it
From his own hand, without a coadjutor,<sup>o</sup>
Novice, journeyman,<sup>o</sup> or tutor.
Yet thus much I can give you, as a token
Of his play’s worth: no eggs are broken,
20 Nor quaking custards with fierce teeth affrighted,<sup>3</sup>
Wherewith your rout<sup>o</sup> are so delighted;
Nor hailes he in a gull,<sup>o</sup> old ends<sup>o</sup> reciting,
To stop gaps in his loose writing,
With such a deal of monstrous and forced action
25 As might make Bethlehem a faction.<sup>4</sup>
Nor made he his play for jests stol’n from each table,
<sup>o</sup>
But makes jests to fit his fable,

And so presents quick<sup>o</sup> comedy, refined
As best critics have designed.
30 The laws of time, place, persons he observeth;<sup>5</sup>
From no needful rule he swerveth.
All gall and copperas<sup>6</sup> from his ink he draineth;
Only a little salt<sup>7</sup> remaineth 35 Wherewith he'll rub your cheeks, till, red with laughter,
They shall look fresh a week after.

Endnotes

- Note 1: Rule, as laid down by Horace, that the poet ought to both please his audience and teach it something useful.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Thomas Dekker ridiculed the slow pace at which Jonson produced new work in Satiromastix, or The Untrussing of the Humorous Poet (1602), and John Marston did the same in The Dutch Courtesan (1605).Return to reference 2
- Note 3: The satirist John Marston, in a line Jonson had previously ridiculed, boasted: "let custards [cowards] quake, my rage must freely run." Huge custards were a staple feature of city feasts.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: As might win approval from lunatics (who inhabited Bethlehem hospital in London).Return to reference 4
- Note 5: He observes the unities of time and place and the consistency of character.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Ferrous sulfate, like gall a corrosive substance used in ink.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: A traditional metaphor for satiric wit.Return to reference 7

Notes

- °: fashionable tasteReturn to reference °
- °: asked to believeReturn to reference °
- °: aimReturn to reference °
- °: not fully expressingReturn to reference °
- °: personal insultReturn to reference °
- °: denial Return to reference °
- °: creationReturn to reference °
- °: nonexistentReturn to reference °
- °: his detractorsReturn to reference °
- °: collaboratorReturn to reference °
- °: apprenticeReturn to reference °
- °: mobReturn to reference °
- °: fool Return to reference °
- °: sawsReturn to reference °
- °: plagiarized jokesReturn to reference °
- °: livelyReturn to reference °

Act 1

SCENE 1. VOLPONE'S house.

[Enter] VOLPONE [and] MOSCA.<sup>1</sup>

VOLPONE Good morning to the day, and, next, my gold!

Open the shrine that I may see my saint.

[MOSCA reveals the treasure.]<sup>2</sup>

Hail the world's soul,<sup>o</sup> and mine! More glad than is
The teeming earth to see the longed-for sun

5 Peep through the horns of the celestial Ram<sup>3</sup>

Am I to view thy splendor darkening his,<sup>o</sup>

That, lying here amongst my other hoards,
Show'st like a flame by night, or like the day

Struck out of chaos, when all darkness fled

10 Unto the center.<sup>o</sup> O thou son of Sol<sup>4</sup>—

But brighter than thy father—let me kiss

With adoration thee and every relic

Of sacred treasure in this blessed room.

Well did wise poets by thy glorious name

15 Title that age which they would have the best,<sup>5</sup>

Thou being the best of things, and far transcending

All style of joy in children, parents, friends,

Or any other waking dream on earth.

Thy looks when they to Venus did ascribe,

20 They should have giv'n her twenty thousand

Cupids,<sup>6</sup>

Such are thy beauties and our loves.<sup>o</sup> Dear saint,

Riches, the dumb god, that giv'st all men tongues,

That canst do naught and yet mak'st men do all things,

The price of souls; even hell, with thee to boot,<sup>o</sup>

25 Is made worth heaven! Thou art virtue, fame,

Honor, and all things else. Who<sup>o</sup> can get thee,

He shall be noble, valiant, honest, wise—

MOSCA And what he will, sir. Riches are in fortune
 A greater good than wisdom is in nature.

30 VOLPONE True, my belovèd Mosca. Yet I glory
 More in the cunning purchase<sup>o</sup> of my wealth
 Than in the glad possession, since I gain
 No common way. I use no trade, no venture;<sup>o</sup>
 I wound no earth with plowshares; fat no beasts
 To feed the shambles;<sup>o</sup> have no mills for iron, 35 Oil, corn, or men, to grind 'em into powder;
 I blow no subtle<sup>z</sup> glass; expose no ships
 To threat'nings of the furrow-faced sea;
 I turn<sup>o</sup> no moneys in the public bank,
 Nor usure<sup>o</sup> private—

40 MOSCA No, sir, nor devour
 Soft prodigals. You shall ha' some will swallow
 A melting<sup>o</sup> heir as glibly as your Dutch
 Will pills<sup>o</sup> of butter, and ne'er purge for't;<sup>8</sup>
 Tear forth the fathers of poor families
 Out of their beds and coffin them alive
 45 In some kind, clasping<sup>o</sup> prison, where their bones
 May be forthcoming<sup>o</sup> when the flesh is rotten.
 But your sweet nature doth abhor these courses;
 You loathe the widow's or the orphan's tears
 Should wash your pavements, or their piteous cries
 50 Ring in your roofs and beat the air for vengeance.

VOLPONE Right, Mosca, I do loathe it.

MOSCA And besides,
 sir,
 You are not like the thresher that doth stand
 With a huge flail, watching a heap of corn,
 And, hungry, dares not taste the smallest grain,
 55 But feeds on mallows<sup>o</sup> and such bitter herbs;
 Nor like the merchant who hath filled his vaults
 With Romagna and rich Candian wines,
 Yet drinks the lees of Lombard's vinegar.<sup>9</sup>

60 You will not lie in straw whilst moths and worms
Feed on your sumptuous hangings<sup>o</sup> and soft beds.
You know the use of riches, and dare give now
From that bright heap to me, your poor observer,<sup>o</sup>
Or to your dwarf, or your hermaphrodite,
Your eunuch, or what other household<sup>o</sup> trifle
65 Your pleasure allows maint'nance<sup>o</sup>—

VOLPONE [giving money] Hold thee,

Mosca,
Take of my hand; thou strik'st on truth in all,
And they are envious term<sup>o</sup> thee parasite.
Call forth my dwarf, my eunuch, and my fool,
And let 'em make me sport. [Exit

MOSCA.]

70 What should I do
But cocker up my genius,<sup>o</sup> and live free
To all delights my fortune calls me to?
I have no wife, no parent, child, ally
To give my substance to, but whom I make<sup>o</sup>
Must be my heir, and this makes men observe<sup>o</sup> me.
75 This draws new clients<sup>o</sup> daily to my house,
Women and men of every sex and age,
That bring me presents, send me plate,<sup>o</sup> coin,
jewels,
With hope that when I die—which they expect
Each greedy minute—it shall then return
80 Tenfold upon them; whilst some, covetous
Above the rest, seek to engross<sup>o</sup> me whole,
And counterwork,<sup>o</sup> the one unto the other,
Contend in gifts as they would seem in love;
All which I suffer, playing with their hopes,
85 And am content to coin 'em into profit,
And look upon their kindness and take more,
And look on that, still bearing them in hand,<sup>o</sup>
Letting the cherry knock against their lips,

And draw it by their mouths and back again.<sup>1</sup>—
How now!

Endnotes

- Note 1: Alternatively, the play may begin with Volpone rising from his onstage bed.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: The treasure is probably hidden behind a curtain in the alcove at the back of the stage.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Aries, the constellation ascendant in early spring.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Alchemists believed gold to have issued from the sun ("Sol"). Volpone blasphemously applies this metaphor to God's creation of the world in Genesis.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: The mythical Golden Age (when, ironically, gold was not yet in use) was influentially described by Ovid in The Metamorphoses.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: In Latin poetry, Venus was commonly described as aurea, meaning "golden." The throng of cupids Volpone imagines around her suggests gold's irresistible, and for him highly sexual, appeal.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: (1) Delicate; (2) artful. (Venice was and is renowned for its art glass.)Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Never use a remedy for gastric distress. (The Dutch were notoriously fond of butter.)Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Romagna and rich Candian wines are expensive wines from Greece and Crete. The lees of Lombard's vinegar are the dregs of cheap Italian wine.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: In the game of chop-cherry, one player dangles a cherry in front of another, who tries to bite it.Return to reference 1

Notes

- °: animating principleReturn to reference °
- °: outshining the sun'sReturn to reference °

- °: center of the earthReturn to reference °
- °: our love of theeReturn to reference °
- °: in the bargainReturn to reference °
- °: whoeverReturn to reference °
- °: acquisitionReturn to reference °
- °: risky commerceReturn to reference °
- °: slaughterhouseReturn to reference °
- °: exchangeReturn to reference °
- °: lend money at interestReturn to reference °
- °: financially dwindlingReturn to reference °
- °: morselsReturn to reference °
- °: manacledReturn to reference °
- °: protruding; carted awayReturn to reference °
- °: unpalatable weedsReturn to reference °
- °: bed curtainsReturn to reference °
- °: followerReturn to reference °
- °: menialReturn to reference °
- °: you're pleased to supportReturn to reference °
- °: who termReturn to reference °
- °: indulge my appetiteReturn to reference °
- °: he whom I designateReturn to reference °
- °: flatterReturn to reference °
- °: petitionersReturn to reference °
- °: gold or silver plateReturn to reference °
- °: swallow; monopolizeReturn to reference °
- °: compete; undermineReturn to reference °
- °: leading them onReturn to reference °

SCENE 2. The scene continues.

[Enter] MOSCA, NANO, ANDROGYNO, [and] CASTRONE.

NANO Now, room for fresh gamesters,<sup>o</sup> who do will you to know

They do bring you neither play nor university show,<sup>1</sup>
And therefore do entreat you that whatsoever they rehearse

May not fare a whit the worse for the false pace of the verse.<sup>2</sup>

5 If you wonder at this, you will wonder more ere we pass,

For know here [indicating ANDROGYNO] is enclosed the soul of Pythagoras,<sup>3</sup>

That juggler<sup>o</sup> divine, as hereafter shall follow;
Which soul (fast and loose, sir) came first from Apollo,

And was breathed into Aethalides,<sup>4</sup> Mercurius his<sup>o</sup> son,

10 Where it had the gift to remember all that ever was
done.

From thence it fled forth and made quick transmigration

To goldilocked Euphorbus,<sup>5</sup> who was killed in good fashion

At the siege of old Troy, by the cuckold of Sparta.<sup>6</sup>

Hermotimus<sup>7</sup> was next—I find it in my charta<sup>o</sup>—

15 To whom it did pass, where no sooner it was missing
But with one Pyrrhus of Delos<sup>o</sup> it learned to go a-fishing;

And thence did it enter the Sophist of Greece.<sup>o</sup>

From Pythagore she went into a beautiful piece<sup>o</sup>

Hight<sup>o</sup> Aspasia the meretrix;<sup>8</sup> and the next toss of
her

20 Was again of a whore; she became a philosopher,
Crates the Cynic,<sup>9</sup> as itself doth relate it.
Since,<sup>o</sup> kings, knights, and beggars, knaves, lords,
and fools gat<sup>o</sup> it,
Besides ox and ass, camel, mule, goat, and brock,<sup>o</sup>
In all which it hath spoke as in the cobbler's cock.<sup>1</sup>
But I come not here to discourse of that matter, 25 Or his one, two, or three, or his great oath, "By quater,"<sup>2</sup>
His musics, his trigon, his golden thigh,
Or his telling how elements<sup>o</sup> shift; but I
Would ask how of late thou hast suffered translation,
<sup>o</sup>
And shifted thy coat in these days of reformation?<sup>o</sup> 30 ANDROGYNO Like one of the reformed, a fool,<sup>3</sup> as you
see,
Counting all old doctrine heresy.
NANO But not on thine own forbid meats hast thou ventured?
ANDROGYNO On fish, when first a Carthusian I entered.<sup>4</sup> 35 NANO Why, then thy dogmatical silence<sup>o</sup> hath left
thee?
ANDROGYNO Of that an obstreperous lawyer bereft
me.
NANO Oh, wonderful change! When Sir Lawyer
forsook thee,
For Pythagore's sake, what body then took thee?
ANDROGYNO A good dull mule.
NANO And how, by that means,
40 Thou wert brought to allow of the eating of beans?
ANDROGYNO Yes.
NANO But from the mule into whom didst thou pass?

ANDROGYNO Into a very strange beast, by some writers called an ass;
 By others a precise, pure, illuminate brother<sup>5</sup>
 Of those devour flesh and sometimes one another,<sup>o</sup>
 45 And will drop you forth a libel<sup>o</sup> or a sanctified lie
 Betwixt every spoonful of a Nativity pie.<sup>6</sup> NANO Now quit thee, for heaven, of that profane nation,<sup>o</sup>
 And gently report thy next transmigration.
 ANDROGYNO To the same that I am.<sup>o</sup>
 NANO A creature of 50 delight?
 And—what is more than a fool—an hermaphrodite?
 Now pray thee, sweet soul, in all thy variation<sup>o</sup>
 Which body wouldst thou choose to take up thy station?
 ANDROGYNO Troth, this I am in, even here would I tarry.
 NANO 'Cause here the delight of each sex thou canst
 55 vary?
 ANDROGYNO Alas, those pleasures be stale and forsaken.
 No, 'tis your fool wherewith I am so taken,
 The only one creature that I can call blessèd,
 For all other forms I have proved<sup>o</sup> most distressèd.
 NANO Spoke true, as thou wert in Pythagoras still.
 60 This learnèd opinion we celebrate will,
 Fellow eunuch, as behooves us, with all our wit and
 art,
 To dignify that<sup>o</sup> whereof ourselves are so great and special a part.
 VOLPONE [applauding] Now, very, very pretty!
 Mosca, this
 Was thy invention?
 MOSCA If it please my patron,
 65

Not else.

VOLPONE It doth, good Mosca.

MOSCA Then it was, sir.

SONG

NANO and CASTRONE [sing]

70 Fools, they are the only nation<sup>o</sup>
Worth men's envy or admiration,
Free from care or sorrow-taking,
Selves<sup>o</sup> and others merry making;
All they speak or do is sterling.
Your fool, he is your great man's dearling,
And your lady's sport and pleasure;
Tongue and bauble<sup>o</sup> are his treasure.
75 E'en his face begetteth laughter,
And he speaks truth free from slaughter.<sup>o</sup>
He's the grace of every feast,
And sometimes the chiefest guest,
Hath his trencher<sup>o</sup> and his stool,
When wit waits upon the fool.
80 Oh, who would not be
He, he, he? One knocks
without.

VOLPONE Who's that? Away!

[Exeunt NANO and CASTRONE.]

Look, Mosca.

MOSCA

Fool,

begone!

[Exit ANDROGYNO.]

'Tis Signor Voltore, the advocate;

I know him by his knock.

85 VOLPONE Fetch me my gown,

My furs, and nightcaps; say my couch is changing,<sup>z</sup>

And let him entertain himself awhile

Without i'th'gallery. [Exit MOSCA.]

Now, now, my clients
Begin their visitation! Vulture, kite,
90 Raven, and gorcrow,° all my birds of prey
That think me turning carcass, now they come.
I am not for 'em° yet.

[Enter MOSCA.]

How now? The news?

MOSCA A piece of plate,° sir.

VOLPONE Of what bigness?

MOSCA Huge,
Massy, and antique, with your name inscribed
And arms° engraven.

VOLPONE Good! And not a fox
95 Stretched on the earth, with fine delusive sleights°
Mocking a gaping crow?⁸ Ha, Mosca?

MOSCA [laughing] Sharp, sir.

VOLPONE Give me my furs. Why dost thou laugh so,
man?

MOSCA I cannot choose, sir, when I apprehend
100 What thoughts he has, without,° now, as he walks:
That this might be the last gift he should° give;
That this would fetch you;° if you died today
And gave him all, what he should be tomorrow;
What large return would come of all his ventures;
How he should worshipped be and revered;
105 Ride with his furs and footcloths,⁹ waited on
By herds of fools and clients; have clear way
Made for his mule, as lettered° as himself;
Be called the great and learned advocate;
And then concludes there's naught impossible.

110 VOLPONE Yes, to be learned, Mosca.

MOSCA Oh, no, rich
Implies it.° Hood an ass with reverend purple,¹
So you can hide his two ambitious° ears,

And he shall pass for a cathedral doctor.<sup>o</sup>
 115 VOLPONE My caps, my caps, good Mosca. Fetch him
 in.
 MOSCA Stay, sir, your ointment for your eyes.
 [MOSCA helps VOLPONE with his disguise.] VOLPONE That's
 true.
 Dispatch, dispatch! I long to have possession
 Of my new present.
 MOSCA That, and thousands more
 I hope to see you lord of.
 VOLPONE Thanks, kind Mosca.
 120 MOSCA And that, when I am lost in blended dust,
 And hundred such as I am in succession—
 VOLPONE Nay, that were too much, Mosca.
 MOSCA —you shall live
 Still, to delude these harpies.<sup>2</sup>
 VOLPONE Loving Mosca!
 'Tis well. My pillow now, and let him enter.
 [Exit MOSCA. VOLPONE lies down.]
 125 Now, my feigned cough, my phthisic,<sup>o</sup> and my gout,
 My apoplexy, palsy, and catarrhs,<sup>o</sup>
 Help with your forcèd functions this my posture,<sup>o</sup>
 Wherein this three year I have milked their hopes.
 He comes, I hear him. [Coughing] Uh, uh, uh, uh!
 Oh—

Endnotes

- Note 1: University students performed classical plays or their imitations to hone their abilities in Latin oratory. Return to reference 1
- Note 2: The four-stress meter of the skit Nano, Androgyno, and Castrone here perform was common in medieval drama but old-fashioned by Jonson's time.Return to reference 2

- Note 3:
Ancient Greek philosopher, mathematician, and music theorist who believed in the transmigration of souls and in the mystical properties of geometrical relationships (especially triangles [triangles = trigon]). His followers observed strict dietary restrictions and took five-year vows of silence. His thigh was rumored to be made of gold. Jonson adapts much of the career of Pythagoras's soul from The Dialogue of the Cobbler and the Cock, by the Greek satirist Lucian.
Return to reference 3
- Note 4: The herald of the Greek Argonauts and son of the god Mercury, who inherited his father's divine gift of memory. Thus, unlike other souls, which forget their previous lives, Aethalides' soul can recall its transmigrations.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Trojan youth who injured Achilles' beloved friend, Patroclus, in the Iliad.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Menelaus, the Spartan king whose wife, Helen, was stolen by the Trojan prince Paris.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Greek philosopher of about 500 B.C.E.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Whore. Aspasia was the mistress of the Athenian statesman Pericles.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Student of Diogenes, founder of the Cynic philosophy.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: The speaker in Lucian's dialogue (see p. 949, n. 3 above).Return to reference 1
- Note 2: A quater is an equilateral triangle the sides of which are evenly divisible by four.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: The "reformed" are Protestants in general, but more specifically the Puritan wing of the Church of England. Jonson was a Catholic when he wrote Volpone.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Pythagoreans abstained from fish, but Carthusians, an order of Catholic monks, ate fish on fast days.Return to reference 4

- Note 5: Puritan who claimed immediate, visionary knowledge of religious truth. Puritans did not observe the traditional fasting days (hence “devour flesh” in the following line).Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Puritans substituted the term “Nativity” for “Christmas,” to avoid reference to the Mass.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: My bedsheets are being changed.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: In one of Aesop’s Fables, the fox tricks the crow into dropping its cheese.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Ornamental cloths for the back of a horse.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Doctors of Divinity wore purple academic hoods.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Mythological ravenous monsters with women’s heads and the bodies and claws of birds.Return to reference 2

Notes

- °: entertainersReturn to reference °
- °: tricksterReturn to reference °
- °: Mercury’sReturn to reference °
- °: recordReturn to reference °
- °: another philosopherReturn to reference °
- °: PythagorasReturn to reference °
- °: slutReturn to reference °
- °: namedReturn to reference °
- °: since thenReturn to reference °
- °: receivedReturn to reference °
- °: badgerReturn to reference °
- °: earth, air, fire, waterReturn to reference °
- °: metamorphosisReturn to reference °
- °: religious changeReturn to reference °
- °: vow of silenceReturn to reference °
- °: prey on each otherReturn to reference °
- °: polemicReturn to reference °

- °: sectReturn to reference °
- °: what I am nowReturn to reference °
- °: of all your shapesReturn to reference °
- °: found to beReturn to reference °
- °: follyReturn to reference °
- °: groupReturn to reference °
- °: themselvesReturn to reference °
- °: fool's staff; penisReturn to reference °
- °: with impunityReturn to reference °
- °: platterReturn to reference °
- °: carriage crowReturn to reference °
- °: ready to dieReturn to reference °
- °: gold platterReturn to reference °
- °: coat of armsReturn to reference °
- °: deceptive tricksReturn to reference °
- °: outsideReturn to reference °
- °: would have toReturn to reference °
- °: bring you aroundReturn to reference °
- °: educatedReturn to reference °
- °: wealth implies learningReturn to reference °
- °: aspiring; upraisedReturn to reference °
- °: Doctor of DivinityReturn to reference °
- °: consumption; asthmaReturn to reference °
- °: mucus dischargesReturn to reference °
- °: impostureReturn to reference °

SCENE 3. *The scene continues.

[Enter] VOLTORE [with a platter, ushered by]

MOSCA.

MOSCA [to VOLTORE] You still are what you were, sir.

Only you,

Of all the rest, are he commands<sup>o</sup> his love;

And you do wisely to preserve it thus

With early visitation and kind notes<sup>o</sup>

5 Of your good meaning to<sup>o</sup> him, which, I know, Cannot but come most grateful. [Loudly, to VOLPONE]

Patron, sir!

Here's Signor Voltore is come—

VOLPONE [weakly] What say you?

MOSCA Sir, Signor Voltore is come this morning

To visit you.

VOLPONE I thank him.

MOSCA And hath brought

10 A piece of antique plate bought of Saint Mark,<sup>1</sup>
With which he here presents you.

VOLPONE He is welcome.

Pray him to come more often.

MOSCA Yes.

VOLTORE [straining to hear] What says he?

MOSCA He thanks you, and desires you see him often.

VOLPONE Mosca.

MOSCA My patron?

VOLPONE [groping] Bring him near. Where is he?

I long to feel his hand.

15 MOSCA [guiding VOLPONE's hands toward the platter]

The plate is here, sir.

VOLTORE How fare you, sir?

VOLPONE I thank you, Signor
 Voltore.
 Where is the plate? Mine eyes are bad.
 VOLTORE [relinquishing the platter] I'm sorry
 To see you still thus weak.
 MOSCA [aside] That he is not weaker.
 VOLPONE You are too munificent.
 VOLTORE No, sir, would to
 heaven
 I could as well give health to you as that plate.
 20 VOLPONE You give, sir, what you can. I thank you.
 Your love
 Hath taste in<sup>o</sup> this, and shall not be unanswered.
 I pray you see me often.
 VOLTORE Yes, I shall, sir.
 VOLPONE Be not far from me.
 MOSCA [aside to VOLTORE] Do you observe that,
 sir?
 25 VOLPONE Hearken unto me still. It will concern you.
 MOSCA [aside to VOLTORE] You are a happy man, sir.
 Know your good.
 VOLPONE I cannot now last long—
 MOSCA [aside to VOLTORE] You are his heir,
 sir.
 VOLTORE [aside to MOSCA] Am I?
 VOLPONE I feel me going, uh,
 uh, uh, uh!
 I am sailing to my port, uh, uh, uh, uh!
 And I am glad I am so near my haven.
 30 [He pretends to lapse into unconsciousness.]
 MOSCA Alas, kind gentleman! Well, we must all go—
 VOLTORE But Mosca—
 MOSCA Age will conquer.
 VOLTORE Pray thee,
 hear me.
 Am I inscribed his heir for certain?

MOSCA Are you?
 I do beseech you, sir, you will vouchsafe
 To write me i' your family.<sup>2</sup> All my hopes 35 Depend upon Your Worship. I am lost
 Except<sup>o</sup> the rising sun do shine on me.
 VOLTRE It shall both shine and warm thee, Mosca.
 MOSCA
 Sir,
 I am a man that have not done your love
 All the worst offices:<sup>o</sup> here I wear your keys, 40 See all your coffers and your caskets locked,
 Keep the poor inventory of your jewels,
 Your plate, and moneys, am your steward, sir,
 Husband your goods here.
 VOLTRE But am I sole heir?
 MOSCA Without a partner, sir, confirmed this 45 morning;
 The wax<sup>o</sup> is warm yet, and the ink scarce dry
 Upon the parchment.
 VOLTRE Happy, happy me!
 By what good chance, sweet Mosca?
 MOSCA Your desert,
 sir;
 I know no second cause.
 VOLTRE Thy modesty
 Is loath to know it.<sup>o</sup> Well, we shall requite it.
 50 MOSCA He ever liked your course, sir; that first took
 him.
 I oft have heard him say how he admired
 Men of your large<sup>3</sup> profession, that could speak
 To every cause, and things mere contraries,<sup>o</sup>
 Till they were hoarse again, yet all be law;
 55 That with most quick agility could turn
 And re-turn, make knots and undo them,
 Give forkèd<sup>o</sup> counsel, take provoking gold

On either hand, and put it up:<sup>4</sup> these men,
 He knew, would thrive with their humility.<sup>o</sup>
 60 And for his part, he thought he should be blessed
 To have his heir of such a suffering<sup>o</sup> spirit,
 So wise, so grave, of so perplexed<sup>o</sup> a tongue,
 And loud withal,<sup>o</sup> that would not wag nor scarce
 Lie still without a fee, when every word 65 Your Worship but lets fall is a cecchine!<sup>o</sup> Another knocks.
 Who's that? One knocks; I would not have you seen,
 sir.
 And yet—pretend you came and went in haste;
 I'll fashion an excuse. And, gentle sir,
 When you do come to swim in golden lard,
 70 Up to the arms in honey, that your chin
 Is born up stiff with fatness of the flood,
 Think on your vassal; but<sup>o</sup> remember me.
 I ha' not been your worst of clients.
 VOLTORE Mosca—
 75 MOSCA When will you have your inventory brought,
 sir?
 Or see a copy of the will? [More knocking.] Anon!<sup>o</sup>—
 I'll bring 'em to you, sir. Away, begone,
 Put business i' your face.<sup>5</sup> [Exit VOLTORE.]
 VOLPONE Excellent, Mosca!
 Come hither, let me kiss thee.
 MOSCA Keep you still, sir.
 Here is Corbaccio.
 VOLPONE Set the plate away.
 80 The vulture's gone, and the old raven's come.

Endnotes

- Note 1: Goldsmiths kept shop in the square of St. Mark's Basilica. Return to reference 1

- Note 2: Employ me in your household (after Volpone's death). Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Expansive, liberal (with the suggestion of "unscrupulous"). Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Take a bribe from each party to a suit and pocket it. Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Look as if you were here on business. Return to reference 5

Notes

- °: the one who possesses Return to reference °
- °: tokens Return to reference °
- °: intentions toward Return to reference °
- °: is suggested by Return to reference °
- °: unless Return to reference °
- °: services Return to reference °
- °: of the seal Return to reference °
- °: admit your role Return to reference °
- °: utterly contradictory Return to reference °
- °: ambiguous Return to reference °
- °: obsequiousness Return to reference °
- °: long-suffering Return to reference °
- °: bewildering Return to reference °
- °: besides Return to reference °
- °: gold coin Return to reference °
- °: only Return to reference °
- °: Just a minute! Return to reference °

SCENE 4. *The scene continues.

MOSCA [to VOLPONE] Betake you to your silence and your sleep;

[He puts up the plate.]

Stand there and multiply.°—Now shall we see
A wretch who is indeed more impotent
Than this° can feign to be, yet hopes to hop
Over his grave.

[Enter] CORBACCIO.

Signor Corbaccio!

5 You're very welcome, sir.

CORBACCIO How does your patron?

MOSCA Troth, as he did, sir: no amends.

CORBACCIO What?

Mends he?

MOSCA No, sir, he is rather worse.

CORBACCIO That's well. Where
is he?

MOSCA Upon his couch, sir, newly fall'n asleep.

CORBACCIO Does he sleep well?

10 MOSCA No wink, sir, all this
night,

Nor yesterday, but slumbers.°

CORBACCIO Good! He should take
Some counsel of physicians. I have brought him
An opiate here, from mine own doctor—

MOSCA He will not hear of drugs.

15 CORBACCIO Why, I myself
Stood by while't was made, saw all th'ingredients,
And know it cannot but most gently work.
My life for his, 'tis but to make him sleep.

VOLPONE [aside] Ay, his last sleep, if he would take it.

MOSCA

Sir,

He has no faith in physic.<sup>o</sup>

CORBACCIO 'Say you? 'Say you?

20 MOSCA He has no faith in physic. He does think
Most of your doctors<sup>1</sup> are the greater danger
And worse disease t'escape. I often have Heard him protest that your physician
Should never be his heir.

CORBACCIO Not I his heir?

MOSCA Not your physician, sir.

25 CORBACCIO Oh, no, no, no,
I do not mean it.

MOSCA No, sir, nor their fees
He cannot brook.<sup>o</sup> He says they flay<sup>o</sup> a man
Before they kill him.

CORBACCIO Right, I do conceive<sup>o</sup> you.

30 MOSCA And then, they do it by experiment,<sup>2</sup>
For which the law not only doth absolve 'em,
But gives them great reward; and he is loath
To hire his death so.

CORBACCIO It is true, they kill
With as much license as a judge.

MOSCA Nay, more:
For he<sup>o</sup> but kills, sir, where the law condemns,
And these<sup>o</sup> can kill him,<sup>o</sup> too.

35 CORBACCIO Ay, or me
Or any man. How does his apoplex?<sup>o</sup>
Is that strong on him still?

MOSCA Most violent.<sup>3</sup>
His speech is broken and his eyes are set,<sup>o</sup>
His face drawn longer than 'twas wont—

CORBACCIO How?

How?
Stronger than he was wont?

40 MOSCA No, sir: his face
 Drawn longer than 'twas wont.
 CORBACCIO Oh, good.
 MOSCA His mouth
 Is ever gaping, and his eyelids hang.
 CORBACCIO Good.
 MOSCA A freezing numbness stiffens all his joints,
 And makes the color of his flesh like lead.
 CORBACCIO 'Tis
 good.
 MOSCA His pulse beats slow and dull.
 CORBACCIO Good symptoms
 45 still.
 MOSCA And from his brain—CORBACCIO Ha? How? Not from his brain?
 MOSCA Yes, sir, and from his brain—
 CORBACCIO I conceive you,
 good.
 MOSCA —Flows a cold sweat with a continual rheum<sup>o</sup>
 Forth the resolvèd<sup>o</sup> corners of his eyes.
 CORBACCIO Is't possible? Yet I am better, ha!
 50 How does he with the swimming of his head?
 MOSCA Oh, sir, 'tis past the scotomy;<sup>4</sup> he now
 Hath lost his feeling, and hath left to snort;<sup>o</sup>
 You hardly can perceive him that he breathes.
 CORBACCIO Excellent, excellent. Sure I shall outlast
 55 him!
 This makes me young again a score of years.
 MOSCA I was a-coming for you, sir.
 CORBACCIO Has he made his
 will?
 What has he giv'n me?
 MOSCA No, sir.

CORBACCIO Nothing? Ha?

MOSCA He has not made his will, sir.

CORBACCIO Oh, oh, oh.

60 What then did Voltore, the lawyer, here?

MOSCA He smelt a carcass, sir, when he but heard
My master was about his testament<sup>o</sup>—
As I did urge him to it, for your good—

CORBACCIO He came unto him, did he? I thought so.

65 MOSCA Yes, and presented him this piece of plate.

CORBACCIO To be his heir?

MOSCA I do not know, sir.

CORBACCIO True,
I know it too.

MOSCA [aside] By your own scale,<sup>o</sup> sir.

CORBACCIO [showing a bag of gold] Well,
I shall prevent<sup>o</sup> him yet. See, Mosca, look,
Here I have brought a bag of bright cecchines,
Will quite weigh down his plate.

70 MOSCA Yea, marry, sir!

This is true physic, this your sacred medicine;
No talk of opiates to<sup>o</sup> this great elixir.<sup>5</sup>

CORBACCIO 'Tis aurum palpabile, if not potabile.<sup>6</sup>

MOSCA It shall be ministered to him in his bowl?

CORBACCIO Ay, do, do, do.

75 MOSCA Most blessed cordial!<sup>o</sup>

This will recover him.

CORBACCIO Yes, do, do, do.

MOSCA I think it were not best, sir.

CORBACCIO What?

MOSCA To recover
him.

CORBACCIO Oh, no, no, no; by no means.

MOSCA Why, sir, this
Will work some strange effect, if he but feel it.

CORBACCIO 'Tis true, therefore forbear, I'll take my venture.◦
 Give me 't again. [He snatches for the bag.]
 MOSCA [keeping it out of his reach] At no hand.◦
 Pardon me,
 You shall not do yourself that wrong, sir. I
 Will so advise you, you shall have it all.
 CORBACCIO How?
 MOSCA All, sir, 'tis your right, your own; no
 man
 Can claim a part. 'Tis yours without a rival,
 85 Decreed by destiny.
 CORBACCIO How? How, good Mosca?
 MOSCA I'll tell you, sir. This fit he shall recover—
 CORBACCIO I do conceive you.
 MOSCA —and, on first
 advantage◦
 Of his gained sense, will I re-importune him
 Unto the making of his testament, 90 And show him this.
 CORBACCIO Good, good.
 MOSCA 'Tis better yet,
 If you will hear, sir.
 CORBACCIO Yes, with all my heart.
 MOSCA Now, would I counsel you, make home with speed;
 There frame a will, whereto you shall inscribe
 My master your sole heir.
 CORBACCIO And disinherit
 95 My son?
 MOSCA Oh, sir, the better, for that color◦
 Shall make it much more taking.◦
 CORBACCIO Oh, but color?◦
 MOSCA This will, sir, you shall send it unto me.
 Now, when I come to enforce◦—as I will do—
 Your cares, your watchings, and your many prayers,

100 Your more than many gifts, your this day's present,
 And last produce your will, where—without thought
 Or least regard unto your proper issue,<sup>o</sup>
 A son so brave<sup>o</sup> and highly meriting—
 105 The stream of your diverted love hath thrown you
 Upon my master, and made him your heir,
 He cannot be so stupid or stone dead
 But out of conscience and mere gratitude—
 CORBACCIO He must pronounce me his?
 MOSCA 'Tis true.
 CORBACCIO This plot
 Did I think on before.
 MOSCA I do believe it.
 110 CORBACCIO Do you not believe it?
 MOSCA Yes, sir.
 CORBACCIO Mine own
 project.
 MOSCA Which when he hath done, sir—
 CORBACCIO Published
 me his heir?
 MOSCA And you so certain to survive him—
 CORBACCIO Ay.
 MOSCA Being so lusty a man—
 CORBACCIO 'Tis true.
 MOSCA Yes, sir—
 115 CORBACCIO I thought on that too. See how he<sup>o</sup> should be
 The very organ to express my thoughts!
 MOSCA You have not only done yourself a good—
 CORBACCIO But multiplied it on my son?
 MOSCA 'Tis right, sir.
 CORBACCIO Still my invention.
 MOSCA 'Las, sir, heaven
 knows,
 It hath been all my study, all my care,

120 (I e'en grow gray withal) how to work things—
 CORBACCIO I do conceive, sweet Mosca.
 MOSCA You are he
 For whom I labor here.
 CORBACCIO Ay, do, do, do.
 I'll straight about it. [CORBACCIO starts to leave.]
 MOSCA Rook go with you,<sup>7</sup> raven!
 CORBACCIO I know thee honest.
 MOSCA You do lie, sir—
 CORBACCIO And 125 —
 MOSCA Your knowledge is no better than your ears,
 sir.
 CORBACCIO I do not doubt to be a father to thee.
 MOSCA Nor I to gull my brother of his blessing.<sup>8</sup>
 CORBACCIO I may ha' my youth restored to me, why
 not?
 MOSCA Your Worship is a precious ass—
 CORBACCIO What say'st
 130 thou?
 MOSCA I do desire Your Worship to make haste, sir.
 CORBACCIO 'Tis done, 'tis done, I go.
 [Exit.]
 VOLPONE [leaping from the bed] Oh, I shall burst!
 Let out my sides,<sup>9</sup> let out my sides—
 MOSCA Contain
 Your flux of laughter, sir. You know this hope
 Is such a bait it covers any hook.
 135 VOLPONE Oh, but thy working and thy placing it!
 I cannot hold;<sup>9</sup> good rascal, let me kiss thee.
 I never knew thee in so rare a humor.<sup>9</sup>
 MOSCA Alas, sir, I but do as I am taught:
 Follow your grave instructions, give 'em words, 140

Pour oil into their ears,<sup>o</sup> and send them hence.
VOLPONE 'Tis true, 'tis true. What a rare punishment
Is avarice to itself!<sup>9</sup>

MOSCA Ay, with our help, sir.

VOLPONE So many cares, so many maladies,
145 So many fears attending on old age,
Yea, death so often called on,<sup>o</sup> as no wish
Can be more frequent with 'em, their limbs faint,
Their senses dull, their seeing, hearing, going,<sup>o</sup>
All dead before them; yea, their very teeth,
150 Their instruments of eating, failing them—
Yet this is reckoned life! Nay, here was one
Is now gone home that wishes to live longer!
Feels not his gout nor palsy, feigns himself
Younger by scores of years, flatters his age
155 With confident belying it,<sup>1</sup> hopes he may
With charms, like Aeson,<sup>2</sup> have his youth restored,
And with these thoughts so battens,<sup>o</sup> as if fate
Would be as easily cheated on as he,
And all turns air!<sup>o</sup> Another knocks.
Who's that there, now? A third?

MOSCA Close,<sup>o</sup> to your couch again. I hear his 160 voice.
It is Corvino, our spruce<sup>o</sup> merchant.

VOLPONE [lying down again] Dead.<sup>o</sup>

MOSCA Another bout, sir, with your eyes.
[He applies ointment.]
Who's there?

Endnotes

- Note 1: Not Corbaccio's doctors, but doctors generally. (Also in line 23.)Return to reference 1
- Note 2: By testing possible remedies on their patients.Return to reference 2

- Note 3: In the following lines, Mosca attributes to Volpone a wide variety of symptoms that were, even occurring singly, considered sure signs of impending death.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Dizziness, accompanied by partial blindness.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: In alchemy, a liquid thought to be capable of prolonging life indefinitely or changing base metal into gold.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: It is gold that can be felt, if not drunk (Latin). Dissolved gold was used as a medicine.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: May you be swindled ("rooked"). Playing on "rook" meaning "crow," "raven." This speech and Mosca's following lines, through line 130, could be considered asides since Corbaccio cannot hear them; but they need not be delivered sotto voce.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: If Corbaccio were Mosca's father, then Bonario would be his brother. A reference to Genesis 25, in which Jacob tricks his elder brother, Esau, into resigning his birthright, and Genesis 27, in which Jacob tricks their dying father, Isaac, into giving him the paternal blessing and property.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Quoting the Stoic philosopher Seneca's Moral Epistles, no. 115.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Deceives himself, and attempts to deceive others, about his age by vigorously refusing to admit the truth.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Father of the Greek hero Jason; his youth was restored by Medea, his sorceress daughter-in-law.Return to reference 2

Notes

- °: beget more bootyReturn to reference °
- °: VolponeReturn to reference °
- °: dozes fitfullyReturn to reference °
- °: medicineReturn to reference °
- °: tolerate Return to reference °

- °: skinReturn to reference °
- °: understandReturn to reference °
- °: the judgeReturn to reference °
- °: the doctors Return to reference °
- °: the judgeReturn to reference °
- °: apoplexy, strokeReturn to reference °
- °: fixedReturn to reference °
- °: mucus dischargeReturn to reference °
- °: watery; limpReturn to reference °
- °: stopped snoringReturn to reference °
- °: making his willReturn to reference °
- °: scale of valuesReturn to reference °
- °: forestallReturn to reference °
- °: compared toReturn to reference °
- °: heart medicineReturn to reference °
- °: investmentReturn to reference °
- °: By no meansReturn to reference °
- °: opportunityReturn to reference °
- °: appearance, fictionReturn to reference °
- °: plausible; attractiveReturn to reference °
- °: it's only a ruse?Return to reference °
- °: urgeReturn to reference °
- °: own offspringReturn to reference °
- °: splendidReturn to reference °
- °: MoscaReturn to reference °
- °: loosen my clothesReturn to reference °
- °: contain my delightReturn to reference °
- °: so excellently wittyReturn to reference °
- °: flatter themReturn to reference °
- °: invokedReturn to reference °
- °: ability to walkReturn to reference °
- °: gluts himselfReturn to reference °
- °: is illusoryReturn to reference °
- °: hide yourselfReturn to reference °
- °: dapperReturn to reference °
- °: I'll play deadReturn to reference °

SCENE 5. *The scene continues.

[Enter] CORVINO.

Signor Corvino! Come<sup>o</sup> most wished for! Oh,
How happy were you if you knew it now!

CORVINO Why? What? Wherein?

MOSCA The tardy hour is come, sir.

CORVINO He is not dead?

MOSCA Not dead, sir, but as good;
He knows no man.

CORVINO How shall I do, then?

MOSCA Why, sir?

5 CORVINO I have brought him here a pearl.

MOSCA Perhaps
he has

So much remembrance left as to know you, sir;
He still calls on you; nothing but your name
Is in his mouth. Is your pearl orient,<sup>1</sup> sir?

10 CORVINO Venice was never owner of the like.

VOLPONE [weakly] Signor Corvino—

MOSCA Hark.

VOLPONE —Signor
Corvino—

MOSCA He calls you. Step and give it him.—He's here, sir,

And he has brought you a rich pearl.

CORVINO [to VOLPONE] How do you,
sir?

[To MOSCA] Tell him it doubles the twelfth carat.<sup>2</sup>

[He gives VOLPONE the pearl.]

MOSCA [to CORVINO] Sir,

15 He cannot understand. His hearing's gone;
And yet it comforts him to see you—

CORVINO Say
I have a diamond for him too.

MOSCA Best show't, sir.
Put it into his hand; 'tis only there
He apprehends; he has his feeling yet.
[CORVINO gives VOLPONE the diamond.]
See how he grasps it!

20 CORVINO 'Las, good gentleman!
How pitiful the sight is!

MOSCA Tut, forget, sir.
The weeping of an heir should still<sup>o</sup> be laughter
Under a visor.<sup>o</sup>

CORVINO Why, am I his heir?

MOSCA Sir, I am sworn; I may not show the will 25 Till he be dead. But here has been Corbaccio,
Here has been Voltore, here were others too,
I cannot number 'em they were so many,
All gaping here for legacies; but I,
Taking the vantage<sup>o</sup> of his naming you—30 "Signor Corvino! Signor Corvino!"—took Paper and pen and ink, and there I asked him Whom he would have his heir? "Corvino." Who Should be executor? "Corvino." And
To any question he was silent to,
35 I still interpreted the nods he made Through weakness for consent, and sent home
th'others,
Nothing bequeathed them but to cry and curse.

CORVINO Oh, my dear Mosca! [They embrace.] Does he not perceive us?

MOSCA No more than a blind harper.<sup>3</sup> He knows no
man,
40 No face of friend, nor name of any servant,
Who 'twas that fed him last or gave him drink;
Not those he hath begotten or brought up

Can he remember.

CORVINO

Has he children?

MOSCA

Bastards,<sup>4</sup>

45 Some dozen or more, that he begot on beggars, Gypsies and Jews and blackmoors,<sup>o</sup> when he was drunk.

Knew you not that, sir? 'Tis the common fable.<sup>o</sup>

The dwarf, the fool, the eunuch are all his;

He's the true father of his family

In all save<sup>o</sup> me, but he has given 'em nothing.

50 CORVINO That's well, that's well. Art sure he does not hear us?

MOSCA Sure, sir? Why, look you, credit your own sense.<sup>o</sup>

[Shouting at VOLPONE] The pox<sup>o</sup> approach and add to your diseases

If it would send you hence the sooner, sir.

For your incontinence, it hath deserved it

55 Thoroughly<sup>o</sup> and thoroughly, and the plague to boot.

[To CORVINO] You may come near, sir. [shouting at VOLPONE again]

Would you would once close

Those filthy eyes of yours, that flow with slime

Like two frog-pits,<sup>o</sup> and those same hanging cheeks,

Covered with hide instead of skin—nay, help, sir—

60 That look like frozen dishclouts<sup>o</sup> set on end!

CORVINO [shouting at VOLPONE] Or like an old smoked wall on which the rain

Ran down in streaks!

MOSCA

Excellent, sir! Speak out;

You may be louder yet; a culverin<sup>o</sup>

Dischargèd in his ear would hardly bore it.

65 CORVINO [shouting] His nose is like a common sewer, still<sup>o</sup> running.

MOSCA 'Tis good! And what his mouth?

CORVINO [shouting] A very draught!°

MOSCA Oh, stop it up—

CORVINO By no means.

MOSCA Pray you let me.

Faith, I could stifle him rarely with a pillow
As well as any woman that should keep° him.

CORVINO Do as you will, but I'll be gone.

70 MOSCA Be so;
It is your presence makes him last so long.

CORVINO I pray you, use no violence.

MOSCA No, sir? Why?
Why should you be thus scrupulous? Pray you, sir.

CORVINO Nay, at your discretion.

MOSCA Well, good sir,
begone.

75 CORVINO I will not trouble him now to take my pearl?

MOSCA Pooh! Nor your diamond. What a needless care

Is this afflicts you? Is not all here yours?
Am not I here, whom you have made your creature?
That owe my being to you?

80 CORVINO Grateful Mosca!
Thou art my friend, my fellow, my companion,
My partner, and shalt share in all my fortunes.

MOSCA Excepting one.

CORVINO What's that?

MOSCA Your gallant° wife, sir.

[Exit CORVINO.]

Now is he gone. We had no other means
To shoot him hence but this.

VOLPONE My divine Mosca!
Thou hast today outgone thyself. Another knocks.
Who's there?
85 I will be troubled with no more. Prepare
Me music, dances, banquets, all delights.
The Turk<sup>5</sup> is not more sensual in his pleasures
Than will Volpone. [Exit
MOSCA.]
Let me see, a pearl?
A diamond? Plate? Cecchines? Good morning's 90 purchase.<sub>o</sub>
Why, this is better than rob churches, yet,
Or fat by eating, once a month, a man.<sub>o</sub>
[Enter MOSCA.]
Who is't?
MOSCA The beauteous Lady Would-be, sir, Wife to the English knight, Sir Politic Would-be—
This is the style, sir, is directed me<sup>6</sup>—
95 Hath sent to know how you have slept tonight,<sub>o</sub>
And if you would be visited.
VOLPONE Not now.
Some three hours hence—
MOSCA I told the squire<sub>o</sub> so
much.
VOLPONE When I am high with mirth and wine:
then, then.
'Fore heaven, I wonder at the desperate<sub>o</sub> valor
100 Of the bold English, that they dare let loose
Their wives to all encounters!<sup>7</sup>
MOSCA Sir, this knight
Had not his name for nothing. He is politic,<sub>o</sub>
And knows, howe'er his wife affect strange<sub>o</sub> airs,
She hath not yet the face<sup>8</sup> to be dishonest.<sub>o</sub>
105 But had she Signor Corvino's wife's face—
VOLPONE Has she so rare a face?

MOSCA Oh, sir, the wonder,
 The blazing star<sup>9</sup> of Italy! A wench
 O'the first year!<sup>o</sup> A beauty ripe as harvest!
 Whose skin is whiter than a swan, all over,
 110 Than silver, snow, or lilies! A soft lip,
 Would<sup>o</sup> tempt you to eternity of kissing!
 And flesh that melteth in the touch to blood!<sup>1</sup>
 Bright as your gold, and lovely as your gold!
 VOLPONE Why had not I known this before?
 MOSCA Alas, sir,
 115 Myself but yesterday discovered it.
 VOLPONE How might I see her?
 MOSCA Oh, not possible.
 She's kept as warily as is your gold:
 Never does come abroad,<sup>o</sup> never takes air
 But at a window. All her looks are sweet 120 As the first<sup>o</sup> grapes or cherries, and are watched
 As near<sup>o</sup> as they are.
 VOLPONE I must see her—
 MOSCA Sir,
 There is a guard of ten spies thick upon her—
 All his whole household—each of which is set
 Upon his fellow, and have all their charge
 125 When he goes out; when he comes in, examined.<sup>2</sup>
 VOLPONE I will go see her, though but at her window.
 MOSCA In some disguise, then.
 VOLPONE That is true. I must Maintain mine own shape still the same.<sup>3</sup> We'll think.
 [Exeunt.]

Endnotes

- Note 1: Especially brilliant. (The most beautiful pearls came from the Indian Ocean.)Return to reference 1

- Note 2: In the seventeenth century, a carat was between 1/144 and 1/150 of an ounce. A twenty-four-carat pearl was therefore very large, weighing roughly 1/6 of an ounce.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Harp players were often blind.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: By law, ordinarily barred from the line of inheritance.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Stereotyped as given to decadent luxuries.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: This is the mode of address I've been told to use.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Married Englishwomen were reputed to enjoy more personal freedom than their southern European counterparts; Venetian wives in particular were much restricted, though Celia's situation is obviously extreme (see below, p. 964, lines 118–26).Return to reference 7
- Note 8: (1) Beauty; (2) shamelessness.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Comet. (Rare and beautiful.)Return to reference 9
- Note 1: (1) Blushes; (2) sexual responsiveness. (Mosca is evidently conjecturing here.)Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Each member of the household spies on all the others; each gets his instructions when Corvino departs and is interrogated when he returns.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: I must, in my own person, continue to pretend to be near death.Return to reference 3

Notes

- °: you comeReturn to reference °
- °: alwaysReturn to reference °
- °: maskReturn to reference °
- °: opportunityReturn to reference °
- °: black AfricansReturn to reference °
- °: rumorReturn to reference °
- °: exceptReturn to reference °

- °: believe your sensesReturn to reference °
- °: syphilisReturn to reference °
- °: thoroughlyReturn to reference °
- °: mud puddlesReturn to reference °
- °: dishragsReturn to reference °
- °: firearmReturn to reference °
- °: continuallyReturn to reference °
- °: cesspoolReturn to reference °
- °: take care ofReturn to reference °
- °: splendidReturn to reference °
- °: haulReturn to reference °
- °: by taking monthly interestReturn to reference °
- °: last nightReturn to reference °
- °: messengerReturn to reference °
- °: recklessReturn to reference °
- °: cannyReturn to reference °
- °: foreign; bizarreReturn to reference °
- °: unchasteReturn to reference °
- °: unflawed and in her primeReturn to reference °
- °: that wouldReturn to reference °
- °: outsideReturn to reference °
- °: of the seasonReturn to reference °
- °: closelyReturn to reference °

Act 2

SCENE 1. *Saint Mark's Square.

[Enter] POLITIC WOULD-BE [and] PEREGRINE.

POLITIC Sir, to a wise man all the world's his soil.<sup>1</sup>

It is not Italy, nor France, nor Europe

That must bound me if my fates call me forth.

Yet I protest it is no salt<sup>o</sup> desire

5 Of seeing countries, shifting a religion,<sup>2</sup>

Nor any disaffection to the state

Where I was bred—and unto which I owe

My dearest plots<sup>o</sup>—hath brought me out;<sup>o</sup> much less

That idle, antique, stale, gray-headed project

10 Of knowing men's minds and manners with Ulysses;<sup>3</sup>

But a peculiar humor<sup>o</sup> of my wife's

Laid for this height<sup>o</sup> of Venice, to observe,

To quote,<sup>o</sup> to learn the language, and so forth.—

I hope you travel, sir, with license?<sup>4</sup>

PEREGRINE Yes.

15 POLITIC I dare the safelier converse. How long, sir,

Since you left England?

PEREGRINE Seven weeks.

POLITIC So lately!

You ha' not been with my Lord Ambassador?

PEREGRINE Not yet, sir.

POLITIC Pray you, what news, sir, vents

our climate?<sup>5</sup>

I heard last night a most strange thing reported

By some of my lord's<sup>o</sup> followers, and I long

20 To hear how't will be seconded.<sup>o</sup>

PEREGRINE What was't, sir?

POLITIC Marry, sir, of a raven that should build<sup>o</sup>

In a ship royal of the King's.

PEREGRINE [aside] This fellow,

Does he gull<sup>o</sup> me, trow?<sup>o</sup> Or is gulled?—Your name,
sir?

POLITIC My name is Politic Would-be.

PEREGRINE [aside] Oh, that 25 speaks<sup>o</sup> him.—
A knight, sir?

POLITIC A poor knight, sir.<sup>6</sup>

PEREGRINE Your lady
Lies<sup>o</sup> here in Venice for intelligence<sup>o</sup>
Of tires<sup>o</sup> and fashions and behavior
Among the courtesans?<sup>7</sup> The fine Lady Would-be?

POLITIC Yes, sir, the spider and the bee ofttimes
30 Suck from one flower.

PEREGRINE Good Sir Politic,
I cry you mercy!<sup>o</sup> I have heard much of you.
'Tis true, sir, of your raven.

POLITIC On your knowledge?

PEREGRINE Yes, and your lion's whelping in the Tower.<sup>8</sup>

POLITIC Another whelp!

PEREGRINE Another, sir.

POLITIC Now, heaven!
35 What prodigies<sup>o</sup> be these? The fires at Berwick!
And the new star!<sup>9</sup> These things concurring,<sup>o</sup>
strange!
And full of omen! Saw you those meteors?

PEREGRINE I did, sir.

POLITIC Fearful! Pray you sir, confirm
me:

40 Were there three porpoises seen above the bridge,<sup>1</sup>
As they give out?<sup>o</sup>

PEREGRINE Six, and a sturgeon, sir.

POLITIC I am astonished!

PEREGRINE Nay, sir, be not so.
I'll tell you a greater prodigy than these—

PEREGRINE Indeed, sir?
 POLITIC While he lived, in action,<sup>o</sup>
 He has received weekly intelligence,
 Upon my knowledge, out of the Low Countries,
 For all parts of the world, in cabbages,<sup>o</sup>
 70 And those dispensed again to ambassadors
 In oranges, muskmelons, apricots,
 Lemons, pome-citrons,<sup>o</sup> and suchlike—sometimes
 In Colchester oysters, and your Selsey cockles.<sup>8</sup>
 PEREGRINE You make me wonder!
 POLITIC Sir, upon my 75 knowledge.
 Nay, I have observed him at your public ordinary<sup>o</sup>
 Take his advertisement<sup>o</sup> from a traveler—
 A concealed statesman—in a trencher<sup>o</sup> of meat,
 And instantly before the meal was done
 Convey an answer in a toothpick.<sup>9</sup>
 PEREGRINE Strange!
 80 How could this be, sir?
 POLITIC Why, the meat was cut
 So like his character,<sup>o</sup> and so laid as he Must easily read the cipher.
 PEREGRINE I have heard
 He could not read, sir.
 POLITIC So 'twas given out,
 In polity,<sup>o</sup> by those that did employ him.
 85 But he could read, and had your languages,<sup>o</sup>
 And to't<sup>o</sup> as sound a noddle<sup>o</sup>—
 PEREGRINE I have heard, sir,
 That your baboons were spies, and that they were
 A kind of subtle nation near to China.
 POLITIC Ay, ay, your Mamuluchi.<sup>1</sup> Faith, they had 90 Their hand in a French plot or two, but they Were so extremely given to women as They made discovery of<sup>o</sup> all. Yet I Had my advices<sup>o</sup> here, on Wednesday last,

 From one of their own coat;<sup>o</sup> they were returned, 95 Made their relations,<sup>o</sup> as the fashion is,
 And now stand fair<sup>o</sup> for fresh employment.
 PEREGRINE [aside] Heart,
 This Sir Pol will be<sup>o</sup> ignorant of nothing.
 [To POLITIC] It seems, sir, you know all?
 POLITIC Not all, sir.
 But
 100 I have some general notions; I do love
 To note and to observe. Though I live out,<sup>o</sup>
 Free from the active torrent, yet I'd mark
 The currents and the passages of things
 For mine own private use, and know the ebbs
 And flows of state.
 PEREGRINE Believe it, sir, I hold
 105 Myself in no small tie unto my fortunes<sup>o</sup>
 For casting me thus luckily upon you,
 Whose knowledge—if your bounty equal it—
 May do me great assistance in instruction
 For my behavior and my bearing, which 110 Is yet so rude and raw—
 POLITIC Why, came you forth
 Empty of rules for travel?
 PEREGRINE Faith, I had
 Some common ones from out that vulgar grammar,<sup>2</sup>
 Which he that cried<sup>o</sup> Italian to me taught me.
 POLITIC Why, this it is that spoils all our brave
 115 bloods,<sup>o</sup>
 Trusting our hopeful<sup>o</sup> gentry unto pedants, Fellows of outside and mere bark.<sup>3</sup> You seem
 To be a gentleman of ingenuous race<sup>o</sup>—
 I not profess it,<sup>o</sup> but my fate hath been
 To be where I have been consulted with 120 In this high kind,<sup>o</sup> touching some great men's sons,

Persons of blood<sup>o</sup> and honor—

PEREGRINE

Who be these, sir?

Endnotes

- Note 1: Proverbial, like most of Sir Pol's "original" advice. "Soil": native land.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Throughout the 16th and 17th centuries, members of religious minorities throughout Europe sought refuge in lands more hospitable to their faiths.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: The hero of the Odyssey, an archetype of the wise traveler.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: A passport. (English people could not travel abroad without permission.)Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Comes from our part of the world?Return to reference 5
- Note 6: In the first decade of the 17th century, King James I raised badly needed money by selling knighthoods to many whose birth, attainments, or wealth would not have previously merited a title.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Venice was famous for its elegant prostitutes.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: A lioness kept at the Tower of London gave birth in 1604 and 1605.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: The fires at Berwick were aurora borealis visible above Berwick, Northumberland, in 1605, said to resemble battling armies. The new star, a supernova, was described by the astronomer Johannes Kepler in 1604.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: A porpoise was found upstream of London Bridge in the Thames River the January before Volpone was first performed.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: A town on the Thames, a bit to the east of London.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: The English merchant adventurers' ships, which were harboring at Stade, in the mouth of the Elbe River.Return to reference 3

- Note 4: The Archduke Albert of Austria and his wife, Isabella, the Infanta of Spain, ruled the Netherlands in the name of Spain.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Ambrosio de Spinola was general of the Spanish army in the Netherlands.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: "Mas' " means "master," a term of address for boys and fools. Stone, King James's outspoken court jester, was a well-known urban character. He was whipped the year before Volpone's first performance for slandering the Lord Admiral. Politic is evidently unaware of the play on words in "Stone dead."Return to reference 6
- Note 7: The person who said this was not commonly recognized as a spy; he used foolery as his cover.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Expensive delicacies, unlikely tavern fare.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Presumably by inserting a tiny note into a toothpick hollowed out for espionage use.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Mamluks, a class of warriors originally from Asia Minor, who ruled Egypt from 1250 to 1517.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Modern language textbook, which sometimes included travelers' tips.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Superficial accomplishments.Return to reference 3

Notes

- °: inordinateReturn to reference °
- °: projects Return to reference °
- °: abroadReturn to reference °
- °: whimReturn to reference °
- °: latitudeReturn to reference °
- °: jot things downReturn to reference °
- °: the ambassador'sReturn to reference °
- °: confirmedReturn to reference °
- °: reportedly builtReturn to reference °
- °: trick Return to reference °

- °: do you suppose?Return to reference °
- °: characterizesReturn to reference °
- °: stays Return to reference °
- °: newsReturn to reference °
- °: apparelReturn to reference °
- °: beg your pardonReturn to reference °
- °: strange occurrencesReturn to reference °
- °: happening togetherReturn to reference °
- °: people reportReturn to reference °
- °: far upstreamReturn to reference °
- °: honorReturn to reference °
- °: not thatReturn to reference °
- °: consideredReturn to reference °
- °: subversive activitiesReturn to reference °
- °: a Dutch importReturn to reference °
- °: grapefruitlike fruitsReturn to reference °
- °: tavernReturn to reference °
- °: informationReturn to reference °
- °: wooden plateReturn to reference °
- °: code lettersReturn to reference °
- °: craftilyReturn to reference °
- °: knew foreign languagesReturn to reference °
- °: in addition Return to reference °
- °: headReturn to reference °
- °: revealedReturn to reference °
- °: informationReturn to reference °
- °: kindReturn to reference °
- °: reportsReturn to reference °
- °: readyReturn to reference °
- °: admit to beingReturn to reference °
- °: abroadReturn to reference °
- °: much obliged to my luckReturn to reference °
- °: taught orallyReturn to reference °
- °: fine young menReturn to reference °
- °: promisingReturn to reference °
- °: honorable familyReturn to reference °

- °: don't declare it openlyReturn to reference °
- °: important matterReturn to reference °
- °: noble birthReturn to reference °

SCENE 2. *The scene continues.

[Enter] MOSCA [and] NANO [disguised as a mountebank's assistants].

MOSCA Under that window, there't must be. The same.

[MOSCA and NANO set up a platform.]

POLITIC Fellows to mount a bank!° Did your instructor

In the dear tongues<sup>1</sup> never discourse to you
Of the Italian mountebanks?

PEREGRINE Yes, sir.

POLITIC Why,
Here shall you see one.

5 PEREGRINE They are quacksalvers,
Fellows that live by venting° oils and drugs.

POLITIC Was that the character he gave you of
them?

PEREGRINE As I remember.

POLITIC Pity his ignorance.
They are the only knowing men of Europe!
Great general scholars, excellent physicians,
10 Most admired statesmen, professed favorites
And cabinet counselors° to the greatest princes!
The only languaged° men of all the world!

PEREGRINE And I have heard they are most lewd°
impostors,
15 Made all of terms° and shreds, no less beliers
Of great men's favors than their own vile med'cines,
Which they will utter° upon monstrous oaths,
Selling that drug for twopence ere they part
Which they have valued at twelve crowns° before.

POLITIC Sir, calumnies are answered best with silence.
Yourself shall judge. [to MOSCA and NANO] Who is it mounts, my friends?

MOSCA Scotto of Mantua,<sup>2</sup> sir.

POLITIC Is't he? [to PEREGRINE]
Nay, then,
I'll proudly promise, sir, you shall behold
Another man than has been fancied<sup>o</sup> to you.
I wonder yet that he should mount his bank
25 Here in this nook, that has been wont t'appear
In face of<sup>o</sup> the piazza! Here he comes.
[Enter] VOLPONE [disguised as a mountebank, followed by] a crowd.
VOLPONE [to NANO] Mount, zany.<sup>o</sup>
[VOLPONE and NANO climb onto the platform.]
CROWD Follow, follow, follow, follow, follow!
POLITIC See how the people follow him! He's a man
30 May write ten thousand crowns in bank here. Note,
Mark but his gesture. I do use<sup>o</sup> to observe
The state<sup>o</sup> he keeps, in getting up.
PEREGRINE 'Tis worth it, sir.
VOLPONE Most noble gentlemen and my worthy patrons, it
35 may seem strange that I, your Scotto Mantuano, who was ever wont to fix my bank in face of the public piazza near the shelter of the portico to the procuratia,<sup>3</sup> should
now,
after eight months' absence from this illustrious city
of Venice, humbly retire myself into an obscure nook of
the 40 piazza.

POLITIC [to PEREGRINE] Did not I now object the same?°

PEREGRINE Peace,
sir.

VOLPONE Let me tell you: I am not, as your Lombard proverb
saith, cold on my feet,° or content to part with my commodities
at a cheaper rate than I accustomed; look not for
it. Nor that the calumnious reports of that impudent 45 detractor
and shame to our profession (Alessandro Buttone,° I mean) who gave out in public I was condemned a
'sforzato° to the galleys for poisoning the Cardinal Bembo's—cook,⁴ hath at all attached,° much less dejected
50 me. No, no, worthy gentlemen. To tell you true, I cannot endure to see the rabble of these ground ciarlitani,⁵
that spread their cloaks on the pavement as if they meant to do feats of activity° and then come in lamely with their moldy tales out of Boccaccio, like stale Tabarine,⁶ the fabulist: some of them discoursing their travels and 55 of their tedious captivity in the Turks' galleys, when
indeed,
were the truth known, they were the Christians'
galleys,
where very temperately they ate bread and drunk water as a wholesome penance, enjoined them by their confessors,

make of this precious liquor so fast as it is fetched
 away
 80 from my lodging by gentlemen of your city, strangers of the
terra firma,<sup>8</sup> worshipful merchants, ay, and senators too,
 who ever since my arrival have detained me to their uses by their splendidous liberalities. And worthily. For what avails your rich man to have his magazines<sup>o</sup> stuffed with moscadelli,<sup>o</sup> 85 or of<sup>o</sup> the purest grape, when his physicians prescribe him (on pain of death) to drink nothing but water cocted<sup>o</sup> with anise seeds? Oh, health, health! The blessing of the rich! The riches of the poor! Who can buy thee at too dear a rate, since there is no enjoying this world without thee? Be not then so sparing of your purses, 90 honorable gentlemen, as to abridge the natural course of life—
 PEREGRINE You see his end?
 POLITIC Ay, is't not good?
 VOLPONE For when a humid flux<sup>o</sup> or catarrh, by the mutability
 of air, falls from your head into an arm or shoulder or any other part, take you a ducat or your cecchine
 95 of gold and apply to the place affected; see what good effect it can work. No, no, 'tis this blessed unguento,<sup>o</sup> this rare

extraction, that hath only power to disperse all malignant humors that proceed either of hot, cold, moist, or windy
causes<sup>9</sup>—

PEREGRINE I would he had put in “dry,” too.

100 POLITIC Pray you, observe.

VOLPONE To fortify the most indigest and crude<sup>o</sup> stomach,
ay, were it of one that, through extreme weakness,
vomited
blood, applying only a warm napkin to the place after the unction and fricace;<sup>o</sup> for the vertigine<sup>o</sup> in the head
105 putting but a drop into your nostrils, likewise behind
the ears, a most sovereign<sup>o</sup> and approved remedy; the mal
caduco, cramps, convulsions, paralyses, epilepsies, tremor
cordia, retired nerves, ill vapors of the spleen, stopplings of the liver, the stone, the strangury, hernia ventosa,
iliaca
110 passio; stops a dysenteria immediately; easeth the torsion
of the small guts; and cures melancholia hypochondriaca,<sup>1</sup> being taken and applied according to my printed receipt.<sup>o</sup> (Pointing to his bill and his glass<sup>o</sup>). For this is the physician,

this the medicine; this counsels, this cures; this gives
 the direction, this works the effect; and in sum, both 115 together
 may be termed an abstract of the theoric and practic in the Aesculapian<sup>2</sup> art. 'Twill cost you eight crowns. And,
 Zan
 Fritatta,<sup>3</sup> pray thee sing a verse extempore in honor of it.
 POLITIC How do you like him, sir?
 PEREGRINE Most strangely, I!
 POLITIC Is not his language rare?<sup>o</sup>
 PEREGRINE But<sup>o</sup> alchemy
 120 I never heard the like, or Broughton's books.<sup>4</sup>

SONG

NANO [sings] Had old Hippocrates or Galen,<sup>5</sup>
 That to their books put med'cines all in,
 But known this secret, they had never
 (Of which they will be guilty ever)
 125 Been murderers of so much paper,<sup>o</sup>
 Or wasted many a hurtless taper;<sup>o</sup>
 No Indian drug had e'er been famed,
 Tobacco, sassafras<sup>6</sup> not named,
 130 Ne<sup>o</sup> yet of guacum<sup>7</sup> one small stick, sir, Nor Raymond Lully's great elixir.
 Ne had been known the Danish
 Gonswart
 Or Paracelsus with his long sword.<sup>8</sup> PEREGRINE All this yet will not do; eight crowns is high.
 135 VOLPONE [to NANO] No more.—Gentlemen, if I had
 but time to discourse to you the miraculous effects of this my oil, surnamed oglio del Scoto, with the countless catalogue of those I have cured of th'aforesaid and many more diseases,

the patents and privileges of all the princes and commonwealths of Christendom, or but the 140 depositions of those that appeared on my part before the signory
of the
Sanità,<sup>9</sup> and most learned College of Physicians,
where I was authorized, upon notice taken of the admirable virtues
of my medicaments and mine own excellency in matter
145 of rare and unknown secrets, not only to disperse
them
publicly in this famous city but in all the territories
that happily joy under the government of the most pious
and magnificent states of Italy. But may some other gallant fellow say, "Oh, there be divers that make profession<sup>o</sup> to have as good and as experimented receipts as yours."
150 Indeed,
very many have assayed like apes in imitation of that which is really and essentially in me, to make of<sup>o</sup> this oil;
bestowed great cost in furnaces, stills, alembics,<sup>1</sup> continual fires, and preparation of the ingredients (as indeed there goes to it

155 six hundred several simples,◊ besides some quantity
of human fat for the conglutination,◊ which we buy of
the anatomists); but, when these practitioners come to the last decoction,◊ blow, blow, puff, puff, and all flies in fumo.◊
Ha, ha, ha! Poor wretches! I rather pity their folly
and 160 indiscretion◊ than their loss of time and money; for those may be recovered by industry, but to be a fool born is a disease incurable. For myself, I always from my youth have endeavored to get the rarest secrets and book◊ them, either in exchange or for money; I spared nor◊ cost nor labor 165 where anything was worthy to be learned. And,
gentlemen,
honorable gentlemen, I will undertake, by virtue of chemical art, out of the honorable hat that covers your head
to extract the four elements—that is to say, the fire, air,
water,
and earth—and return you your felt◊ without burn or stain.
170 For, whilst others have been at the balloo◊ I have been at my book, and am now past the craggy paths of study and

come to the flow'ry plains of honor and reputation.
 POLITIC I do assure you, sir, that is his aim.
 VOLPONE But to our price.
 PEREGRINE And that withal,° Sir Pol.
 175 VOLPONE You all know, honorable gentlemen, I never valued this ampulla, or vial, at less than eight crowns, but
     for this time I am content to be deprived of it for six; six crowns
 is the price, and less, in courtesy, I know you cannot offer me. Take it or leave it howsoever, both it and I am at your service. I ask you not as the value of the thing, for 180 then I should demand° of you a thousand crowns; so the Cardinals
 Montalto, Fernese, the great Duke of Tuscany, my gossip,° with divers other princes, have given me.
     But I
 despise money. Only to show my affection to you,
     honorable gentlemen, and your illustrious state here, I have 185 neglected the messages of these princes, mine own offices,° framed° my journey hither only to present you with
     the fruits of my travels. [to NANO and MOSCA] Tune your voices
 once more to the touch of your instruments, and give the honorable assembly some delightful recreation.
 190 PEREGRINE What monstrous and most painful circumstance°
 Is here, to get some three or four gazets!°

Some threepence, i'th'whole, for that 'twill come to.

SONG

[During the song, CELIA appears at her window, above.]

NANO [sings]<sub>o</sub> You that would last long, list to my
song,

195                    Make no more coil,<sub>o</sub> but buy of this oil.
                      Would you be ever fair and young?
                      Stout of teeth and strong of tongue?
                      Tart<sub>o</sub> of palate? Quick of ear?
                      Sharp of sight? Of nostril clear?
200                    Moist of hand<sub>2</sub> and light of foot?
                      Or (I will come nearer to't)<sub>o</sub>
                      Would you live free from all diseases,
                      Do the act your mistress pleases,
                      Yet fright all aches<sub>o</sub> from your bones?
205                    Here's a med'cine for the nones.<sub>o</sub>

VOLPONE    Well, I am in a humor at this time to make a present of the small quantity my coffer contains: to the rich
                  in courtesy, and to the poor for God's sake.<sub>o</sub> Wherefore, now mark; I asked you six crowns, and six crowns at other 210                    times you have paid me. You shall not give me six crowns,
                      nor five, nor four, nor three, nor two, nor one, nor half a ducat, no, nor a moccenigo.<sub>o</sub> Six—pence it will cost you, or six hundred pound—expect no lower price, for by the banner of my front,<sub>o</sub> I will not bate a bagatine,<sub>3</sub> that I will

215 have only a pledge of your loves, to carry something from amongst you to show I am not contemned<sub>o</sub> by you.
Therefore
now, toss your handkerchiefs cheerfully, cheerfully, and be advertised<sub>o</sub> that the first heroic spirit that deigns to grace me with a handkerchief, I will give it a little remembrance of something beside, shall please<sub>o</sub> it better than if I 220 had presented it with a double pistolet.<sup>4</sup>
PEREGRINE Will you be that heroic spark,<sub>o</sub> Sir Pol?
CELIA at the window throws down her
handkerchief
[with a coin tied inside it].
Oh, see! The window has prevented you.<sub>o</sub> VOLPONE Lady, I kiss your bounty, and, for this timely grace
you have done your poor Scoto of Mantua, I will 225 return
you, over and above my oil, a secret of that high and inestimable nature shall<sub>o</sub> make you forever enamored on that minute wherein your eye first descended on so mean,<sub>o</sub> yet not altogether to be despised, an object. Here is a powder concealed in this paper of which, if I should speak to 230 the worth, nine thousand volumes were but as one page, that page as a line, that line as a word—so short is this pilgrimage
of man, which some call life, to<sub>o</sub> the expressing of it.

Would I reflect on the price, why, the whole world were but 235 as an empire, that empire as a province, that province as a bank, that bank as a private purse, to the purchase of it. I will only tell you it is the powder that made Venus a goddess, given her by Apollo,<sup>5</sup> that kept her perpetually young,
cleared her wrinkles, firmed her gums, filled<sub>o</sub> her skin, colored 240 her hair; from her derived to Helen, and at the sack of Troy unfortunately lost; till now in this our age it
was as happily<sub>o</sub> recovered by a studious antiquary out of some ruins of Asia, who sent a moiety<sub>o</sub> of it to the court of France (but much sophisticated)<sub>o</sub> wherewith the ladies
245 there now color their hair. The rest, at this present, remains with me, extracted to a quintessence,<sub>o</sub> so that wherever it but touches, in youth it perpetually preserves, in age restores the complexion; seats your teeth, did<sub>o</sub> they dance like virginal jacks,<sup>6</sup> firm as a wall; makes them white
as 250 ivory that were black as—

Endnotes

- Note 1: Italian was called the “cara lingua,” a phrase Sir Pol translates.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: An Italian juggler and magician who visited England and performed before Elizabeth I in the 1570s.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Arcade on the north side of the Piazza di San Marco.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Pietro Bembo (1470–1547) was a famous humanist, featured as a speaker in Castiglione’s Courtier (1528). “Cook” is a teasing substitution for “whore.”Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Charlatans too poor to afford a “bank,” or platform.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Boccaccio’s Decameron is a storehouse of tales. Tabarine was a member of an Italian comic troupe that played in France and perhaps in England.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: White metal used as an emetic (to cause vomiting) and a poison.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Mainland territory of Venice.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Renaissance medicine was based on the theory of the humors, four bodily fluids whose balance within the body determined both physical and mental health. Their qualities, in various combinations, were hot, cold, moist, and dry; hence Peregrine’s comment in the next line.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Volpone’s list of diseases includes “mal caduco,” epilepsy; “tremor cordia,” palpitations; “retired nerves,” withered sinews; “ill vapors of the spleen,” short temper; “stone,” kidney stones; “strangury,” painful urination; “hernia ventosa,” a hernia containing air; “iliaca passio,” intestinal cramps; “dysenteria,” diarrhea; “torsion of the small guts,” spasmodic bowel pain; and “melancholia hypochondriaca,” depression.
Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Medical. Aesculapius was the classical god of medicine.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Italian dialect for “Jack Omelet,” the name of the zany (see line 28), here referring to Nano.Return to reference 3

- Note 4: Hugh Broughton was a Puritan rabbinical scholar who wrote impenetrable treatises on scriptural matters.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Greek physicians (ca. 460–377 B.C.E. and 129–ca. 199 C.E., respectively) who developed the theory of humors.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: New World plants, used medicinally.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: The bark of a tropical tree, used medicinally.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Raymond Lully was a medieval astrologer rumored to have discovered the elixir of life. “Danish Gonswart” has not been positively identified. Paracelsus was an early 16th-century alchemist who developed an alternative to Galenic medicine; he carried his medicines in his sword pommel.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Venetian medical licensing board.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Vessels for purifying liquids.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Associated with youth and sexual vigor.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: I won’t reduce the price by even a tiny coin.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Spanish gold coin worth about one English pound.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: In his capacity as the god of health.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: The virginal is a type of harpsichord; its “jacks” are quills that pluck strings when the keys are played, but the term was also sometimes used for the keys.Return to reference 6

Notes

- °: platformReturn to reference °
- °: sellingReturn to reference °
- °: close advisersReturn to reference °
- °: most eloquentReturn to reference °

- °: ignorantReturn to reference °
- °: jargonReturn to reference °
- °: advertise for saleReturn to reference °
- °: silver or gold coinsReturn to reference °
- °: presented in imaginationReturn to reference °
- °: facingReturn to reference °
- °: clown; performerReturn to reference °
- °: make it my practiceReturn to reference °
- °: statelinessReturn to reference °
- °: ask the same questionReturn to reference °
- °: in desperate straits Return to reference °
- °: a rival mountebank Return to reference °
- °: prisoner Return to reference °
- °: stuck to Return to reference °
- °: acrobaticsReturn to reference °
- °: fourpenceworth Return to reference °
- °: paper envelopes Return to reference °
- °: as if a game Return to reference °
- °: obstructions Return to reference °
- °: lack Return to reference °
- °: halfpennyworthReturn to reference °
- °: say no more about them Return to reference °
- °: mobReturn to reference °
- °: storehouses Return to reference °
- °: wine Return to reference °
- °: wine of Return to reference °
- °: boiledReturn to reference °
- °: runny discharge Return to reference °
- °: ointmentReturn to reference °
- °: upset Return to reference °
- °: massage Return to reference °
- °: dizziness Return to reference °
- °: potent Return to reference °
- °: direction Return to reference °
- °: paper and flagonReturn to reference °
- °: unrivalledReturn to reference °

- °: except for Return to reference °
- °: written so much Return to reference °
- °: candle (working at night) Return to reference °
- °: nor Return to reference °
- °: that claim Return to reference °
- °: some of Return to reference °
- °: different ingredients Return to reference °
- °: to glue it together Return to reference °
- °: boiling down Return to reference °
- °: up in smoke Return to reference °
- °: lack of discernment Return to reference °
- °: record Return to reference °
- °: neither Return to reference °
- °: felt hat Return to reference °
- °: Venetian ball game Return to reference °
- °: as well Return to reference °
- °: ask Return to reference °
- °: buddy Return to reference °
- °: duties Return to reference °
- °: devised Return to reference °
- °: beating around the bush Return to reference °
- °: small Venetian coins Return to reference °
- °: accompanied by Mosca Return to reference °
- °: fuss Return to reference °
- °: keen Return to reference °
- °: get to the point Return to reference °
- °: venereal disease Return to reference °
- °: occasion Return to reference °
- °: charity Return to reference °
- °: worth ninepence Return to reference °
- °: displayed on my "bank" Return to reference °
- °: scorned Return to reference °
- °: notified Return to reference °
- °: which will please Return to reference °
- °: gallant Return to reference °
- °: beaten you to it Return to reference °

- °: which will Return to reference °
- °: lowly Return to reference °
- °: compared to Return to reference °
- °: filled out Return to reference °
- °: fortunately Return to reference °
- °: part Return to reference °
- °: adulterated Return to reference °
- °: refined concentrate Return to reference °
- °: even if Return to reference °

SCENE 3. The scene continues.

[Enter] CORVINO. He beats away the mountebank, etc.

CORVINO     Spite o'the devil, and my shame! Come down here,
Come down! No house but mine to make your scene?<sup>o</sup>

Signor Flaminio, will you down, sir? Down!

What, is my wife your Franciscina, sir?<sup>1</sup>

5     No windows on the whole piazza here
To make your properties<sup>o</sup> but mine? But mine?
Heart! Ere tomorrow I shall be new christened
And called the pantalone di bisognios<sup>2</sup>
About the town. [Exeunt VOLPONE, NANO, and MOSCA, followed by CORVINO and the crowd.]

PEREGRINE             What should this mean, Sir Pol?

10     POLITIC     Some trick of state, believe it. I will home.

PEREGRINE     It may be some design on you.

POLITIC                                     I know
not.

I'll stand upon my guard.

PEREGRINE                             It is your best,<sup>o</sup> sir.

POLITIC     This three weeks, all my advices, all my letters,

They have been intercepted,

PEREGRINE                             Indeed, sir?

Best have a care.

POLITIC                             Nay, so I will. [Exit.]

15     PEREGRINE                             This knight,
I may not lose him,<sup>o</sup> for my mirth, till night. [Exit.]

Endnotes

- Note 1: Corvino imagines the scene in terms of a stock episode from the Italian commedia dell'arte, in which the young lover, conventionally named Flaminio after the famous actor Flaminio Scala, seduces Franciscina, the easygoing serving wench.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: The pantalone is another stock figure in the commedia dell'arte, a decrepit old man suspicious of his desirable young wife. Di bisogniosi is his jocular surname, meaning "descended from poor people."Return to reference 2

Notes

- °: stage setReturn to reference °
- °: stage propsReturn to reference °
- °: best course of actionReturn to reference °
- °: I won't leave himReturn to reference °

SCENE 4. VOLPONE'S house.

[Enter] VOLPONE [and] MOSCA.

VOLPONE Oh, I am wounded!

MOSCA Where, sir?

VOLPONE Not
without;°

Those blows were nothing; I could bear them ever,
But angry Cupid, bolting° from her° eyes,
Hath shot himself into me like a flame,
Where now he flings about his burning heat,
5 As in a furnace an ambitious° fire
Whose vent is stopped. The fight is all within me.
I cannot live except thou help me, Mosca;
My liver<sup>1</sup> melts, and I, without the hope
Of some soft air from her refreshing breath,
10 Am but a heap of cinders.

MOSCA 'Las, good sir!

Would you had never seen her.

VOLPONE Nay, would thou
Hadst never told me of her.

MOSCA Sir, 'tis true;

I do confess I was unfortunate,
And you unhappy; but I'm bound in conscience
15 No less than duty to effect my best
To your release of torment, and I will, sir.

VOLPONE Dear Mosca, shall I hope?

MOSCA Sir, more than
dear,

I will not bid you to despair of aught
Within a human compass.°

VOLPONE Oh, there spoke
20 My better angel. Mosca, take my keys.
Gold, plate, and jewels, all's at thy devotion;°

Employ them how thou wilt; nay, coin me too,<sup>2</sup>
 So<sub>o</sub> thou in this but crown my longings. Mosca?
 MOSCA Use but your patience.
 VOLPONE So I have.<sup>3</sup>
 MOSCA I doubt not
 25 To bring success to your desires.
 VOLPONE Nay, then,
 I not repent me of my late disguise.
 MOSCA If you can horn him,<sup>4</sup> sir, you need not.
 VOLPONE True;
 Besides, I never meant him for my heir.
 30 Is not the color o' my beard and eyebrows<sup>5</sup>
 To make me known?
 MOSCA No jot.
 VOLPONE I did it well.
 MOSCA So well, would I could follow you in mine
 With half the happiness!<sub>o</sub> And yet I would Escape your epilogue.<sub>o</sub>
 VOLPONE But were they gulled<sub>o</sub>
 With a belief that I was Scoto?
 MOSCA Sir,
 35 Scoto himself could hardly have distinguished!
 I have not time to flatter you now. We'll part,
 And, as I prosper, so applaud my art. [Exeunt.]

Endnotes

- Note 1: Supposed to be the seat of lust. Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Use my coins as well. (But also with the implication "make coins out of me," that is, "turn my body into money.") Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Punning on the original meaning of "patience," "enduring blows." Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Cuckold him. (The husbands of adulterous wives were traditionally supposed to sprout horns.) Return to reference 4

- Note 5: Red, because he is a fox. Return to reference 5

Notes

- °: externally Return to reference °
- °: shooting darts Return to reference °
- °: Celia's Return to reference °
- °: rising Return to reference °
- °: that's humanly possible Return to reference °
- °: disposal Return to reference °
- °: provided that Return to reference °
- °: success Return to reference °
- °: the beating Return to reference °
- °: fooled Return to reference °

SCENE 5. CORVINO'S house.

[Enter] CORVINO [and] CELIA.

CORVINO    Death of mine honor, with the city's fool?
A juggling, tooth-drawing,<sup>1</sup> prating<sup>o</sup> mountebank?
And at a public window? Where, whilst he
With his strained action<sup>o</sup> and his dole of faces<sup>2</sup>
To his drug lecture draws your itching ears,
5    A crew of old, unmarried, noted lechers
Stood leering up like satyrs;<sup>o</sup> and you smile
Most graciously! And fan your favors forth
To give your hot spectators satisfaction!
What, was your mountebank their call? Their 10    whistle?<sup>3</sup>
Or were you enamored on his copper rings?
His saffron jewel with the toadstone<sup>o</sup> in't?
Or his embroidered suit with the cope-stitch,<sup>o</sup>
Made of a hearse-cloth? Or his old tilt-feather?<sup>4</sup>
Or his starched beard? Well! You shall have him, yes.
15    He shall come home and minister unto you
The fricace for the mother.<sup>5</sup> Or, let me see,
I think you'd rather mount?<sup>6</sup> Would you not mount?
Why, if you'll mount, you may; yes truly, you may—
And so you may be seen down to th'foot.
20    Get you a cittern, Lady Vanity,<sup>7</sup>
And be a dealer with the virtuous man;
Make one.<sup>8</sup> I'll but protest<sup>o</sup> myself a cuckold
And save your dowry.<sup>9</sup> I am a Dutchman, I!
For if you thought me an Italian,
25    You would be damned ere you did this, you whore.<sup>1</sup>
Thou'dst tremble to imagine that the murder
Of father, mother, brother, all thy race,
Should follow as the subject of my justice!

CELIA Good sir, have patience!
 CORVINO [drawing a weapon] What couldst thou 30 propose
 Less to thyself<sup>o</sup> than, in this heat of wrath
 And stung with my dishonor, I should strike
 This steel unto thee, with as many stabs
 As thou wert gazed upon with goatish<sup>o</sup> eyes?
 CELIA Alas, sir, be appeased! I could not think 35 My being at the window should more now
 Move your impatience than at other times.
 CORVINO No? Not to seek and entertain a parley<sup>o</sup>
 With a known knave? Before a multitude?
 You were an actor with your handkerchief!
 40 Which he most sweetly kissed in the receipt,
 And might, no doubt, return it with a letter,
 And 'point the place where you might meet—your sister's,
 Your mother's, or your aunt's might serve the turn.<sup>o</sup>
 CELIA Why, dear sir, when do I make these 45 excuses?
 Or ever stir abroad but to the church?
 And that, so seldom—
 CORVINO Well, it shall be less;
 And thy restraint before was liberty
 To what I now decree: and therefore, mark me.
 [Pointing to the window] First, I will have this bawdy
 50 light dammed up,
 And, till't be done, some two or three yards off
 I'll chalk a line, o'er which if thou but chance
 To set thy desp'rate foot, more hell, more horror,
 More wild, remorseless rage shall seize on thee
 Than on a conjurer that had heedless left
 55 His circle's safety ere his devil was laid.<sup>2</sup>
 Then here's a lock which I will hang upon thee.
 [He shows a chastity belt.]

And now I think on't, I will keep thee backwards;<sup>3</sup> Thy lodging shall be backwards, thy walks backwards,
 Thy prospect<sup>o</sup>—all be backwards; and no pleasure 60 That thou shalt know but backwards. Nay, since you force
 My honest nature, know it is your own
 Being too open makes me use you thus,
 Since you will not contain your subtle<sup>o</sup> nostrils
 In a sweet<sup>o</sup> room, but they must snuff the air 65 Of rank and sweaty passengers<sup>o</sup>— Knock within.
 One knocks.
 Away, and be not seen, pain of thy life!
 Not look toward the window. If thou dost—
 [CELIA begins to exit.]
 Nay stay, hear this—let me not prosper, whore,
 But I will make thee an anatomy,<sup>4</sup>
 70 Dissect thee mine own self, and read a lecture
 Upon thee to the city, and in public.
 Away! [Exit CELIA.]
 Who's there?
 [Enter] Servitore [a SERVANT].
 SERVANT 'Tis Signor Mosca, sir.

Endnotes

- Note 1: Mountebanks, like barbers, performed dental work.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Small repertory of facial expressions.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Used to lure trained falcons.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: The feather from a tilting (jousting) helmet. A hearse-cloth is a heavy cloth for draping over a coffin.Return to reference 4

- Note 5: Womb massage; with obvious sexual innuendo. "The mother" was a term for the uterus, but also for a variety of ailments, from cramps to depression, that were supposed to originate there.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: (1) Climb up on the mountebank's stage yourself; (2) take the top sexual position.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Allegorical character of a morality play representing pride and worldly pleasure. A cittern is a guitarlike instrument that conventionally was played by whores.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Join up with him. (With sexual innuendo.)Return to reference 8
- Note 9: The husbands of proven adultresses could divorce them and keep their dowry.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: The Dutch were proverbially phlegmatic, in contrast to Italians, who were stereotypically impetuous and vengeful.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Conjurers protected themselves from the devils who served them by staying inside a magical circle.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: In the back part of the house, lacking a view out onto the piazza; but with the suggestion of anal intercourse, supposedly favored by Italians.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Use you for anatomical research. (In the early modern period, physicians obtained the bodies of executed criminals upon which to perform dissections, often before large crowds.)Return to reference 4

Notes

- °: chatteringReturn to reference °
- °: overactingReturn to reference °
- °: lustful goat-menReturn to reference °
- °: agate-like stoneReturn to reference °
- °: gaudy needleworkReturn to reference °
- °: proclaimReturn to reference °

- °: as your punishmentReturn to reference °
- °: lustfulReturn to reference °
- °: have a conversationReturn to reference °
- °: occasion; sexual actReturn to reference °
- °: view (see n. 3)Return to reference °
- °: delicate; craftyReturn to reference °
- °: sweet-smellingReturn to reference °
- °: passersbyReturn to reference °

SCENE 6. *The scene continues.

CORVINO     Let him come in.                    [Exit SERVANT.]
His master's dead! There's

yet
Some good to help the bad.

[Enter] MOSCA.

My Mosca, welcome!

I guess your news.

MOSCA I fear you cannot, sir.

CORVINO     Is't not his death?

MOSCA                      Rather the contrary.

CORVINO Not his recovery?

MOSCA Yes, sir.

5 CORVINO I am cursed,
I am bewitched! My crosses<sup>o</sup> meet to vex me!
How? How? How? How?

MOSCA                      Why, sir, with Scoto's oil.

Corbaccio and Voltore brought of it

Whilst I was busy in an inner room—

10 CORVINO Death! That damned mountebank! But for the law,

Now, I could kill the rascal. 'T cannot be

His oil should have that virtue. Ha' not I

Known him a common rogue, come fiddling in

To th'osteria<sup>o</sup> with a tumbling whore,

15 And, when he has done all his forced tricks, been glad

Of a poor spoonful of dead wine with flies in't?

It cannot be. All his ingredients

Are a sheep's gall, a roasted bitch's marrow,

Some few sod<sup>o</sup> earwigs, pounded caterpillars,

A little capon's grease, and fasting spittle:<sup>1</sup>

20 I know 'em to a dram. o

MOSCA I know not, sir,
But some on't there they poured into his ears,
Some in his nostrils, and recovered him,
Applying but the fricace.<sup>o</sup>

CORVINO Pox o'that fricace!

25 MOSCA And since, to seem the more officious<sup>o</sup>
And flatt'ring of his health, there they have had—
At extreme fees—the College of Physicians
Consulting on him how they might restore him;
Where one would have a cataplasm<sup>2</sup> of spices,
Another a flayed ape clapped to his breast,
30 A third would ha' it a dog, a fourth an oil
With wildcats' skins. At last, they all resolved
That to preserve him was no other means
But some young woman must be straight sought
out,
35 Lusty and full of juice, to sleep by him;
And to this service—most unhappily
And most unwillingly—am I now employed,
Which here I thought to preacquaint you with,
For your advice, since it concerns you most,
Because I would not do that thing might cross 40 Your ends,<sup>3</sup> on whom I have my whole dependence,
sir.

Yet if I do it not, they may delate<sup>4</sup>
My slackness to my patron, work me out
Of his opinion;<sup>o</sup> and there all your hopes,
Ventures, or whatsoever, are all frustrate.
45 I do but tell you, sir. Besides, they are all Now striving who shall first present him. Therefore,
I could entreat you briefly, conclude somewhat;<sup>o</sup>
Prevent 'em if you can.

CORVINO Death to my hopes!
50 This is my villainous fortune! Best to hire
Some common courtesan.

MOSCA Ay, I thought on that,
 sir.
 But they are all so subtle, <sup>o</sup> full of art, <sup>o</sup>
 And age again <sup>o</sup> doting and flexible,
 So as—I cannot tell—we may perchance
 Light on a quean <sup>o</sup> may cheat us all.
 CORVINO 'Tis true.
 55 MOSCA No, no; it must be one that has no tricks, sir,
 Some simple thing, a creature made unto <sup>o</sup> it;
 Some wench you may command. Ha' you no kinswoman?
 Godso <sup>o</sup>—think, think, think, think, think, think, think,
 sir.
 One o'the doctors offered there his daughter.
 60 CORVINO How!
 MOSCA Yes, Signor Lupo, <sup>o</sup> the physician.
 CORVINO His
 daughter?
 MOSCA And a virgin, sir. Why, alas,
 He knows the state of's body, what it is,
 That naught can warm his blood, sir, but a fever,
 Nor any incantation raise his spirit. <sup>o</sup>
 65 A long forgetfulness hath seized that part. <sup>o</sup>
 Besides, sir, who shall know it? Some one or two—CORVINO I pray thee give me leave. <sup>o</sup> [He walks
apart.] If any man
 But I had had this luck—The thing in 'tself,
 I know, is nothing.—Wherefore should not I
 70 As well command my blood and my affections
 As this dull doctor? In the point of honor
 The cases are all one, of wife and daughter.
 MOSCA [aside] I hear him coming. <sup>o</sup>
 CORVINO [aside] She shall do't.
 'Tis done.
 'Slight, <sup>o</sup> if this doctor, who is not engaged, 75

Unless 't be for his counsel (which is nothing),<sup>5</sup>
Offer his daughter, what should I, that am
So deeply in? I will prevent him. Wretch!
Covetous wretch!—Mosca, I have determined.

MOSCA How, sir?

80 CORVINO We'll make all sure. The party you wot<sup>o</sup> of
Shall be mine own wife, Mosca.

MOSCA Sir, the thing
(But that I would not seem to counsel you)
I should have motioned<sup>o</sup> to you at the first.
And, make your count,<sup>o</sup> you have cut all their throats.

85 Why, 'tis directly taking a possession!<sup>6</sup>
And in his next fit we may let him go.
'Tis but to pull the pillow from his head
And he is throttled; 't had been done before,
But for your scrupulous doubts.

CORVINO Ay, a plague on't!
90 My conscience fools my wit.<sup>o</sup> Well, I'll be brief,
And so be thou, lest they should be before us.
Go home, prepare him, tell him with what zeal
And willingness I do it; swear it was
On the first hearing (as thou mayst do, truly)
Mine own free motion.<sup>o</sup>

MOSCA Sir, I warrant you,
95 I'll so possess<sup>o</sup> him with it that the rest
Of his starved clients shall be banished all,
And only you received. But come not, sir,
Until I send, for I have something else
To ripen for your good; you must not know't.

100 CORVINO But do not you forget to send, now.

MOSCA Fear
not.

[Exit.]

Endnotes

- Note 1: Saliva of a fasting person. (Scoto cannot afford anything to eat.)Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Poultice. (The substances described in the following lines were believed to work by absorbing the patient's infection, which bodes ill for the young woman prescribed for Volpone in lines 34–35.)Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Do anything that might frustrate your purposes.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Report. (A legal term for making an accusation.)Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Who is not financially involved, except for whatever slight fee he could expect for his advice.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: A legal term for the heir's formal assumption of inherited property.Return to reference 6

Notes

- °: misfortunesReturn to reference °
- °: tavern (Italian)Return to reference °
- °: boiledReturn to reference °
- °: tiny amountReturn to reference °
- °: massageReturn to reference °
- °: zealousReturn to reference °
- °: favorReturn to reference °
- °: decide somethingReturn to reference °
- °: cunning Return to reference °
- °: deceitReturn to reference °
- °: old people moreoverReturn to reference °
- °: whore (who)Return to reference °
- °: suited to; forced intoReturn to reference °
- °: an oathReturn to reference °
- °: Wolf (Italian)Return to reference °
- °: vigor; semenReturn to reference °

- °: his penisReturn to reference °
- °: give me a minuteReturn to reference °
- °: coming aroundReturn to reference °
- °: by God's light (an oath)Return to reference °
- °: knowReturn to reference °
- °: proposedReturn to reference °
- °: rest assuredReturn to reference °
- °: common senseReturn to reference °
- °: initiativeReturn to reference °
- °: impressReturn to reference °

SCENE 7. The scene continues.

CORVINO Where are you, wife? My Celia? Wife?

[Enter] CELIA [weeping.]

What,

blubbering?

Come, dry those tears. I think thou thought'st me in earnest?

Ha! By this light, I talked so but to try<sup>o</sup> thee.

Methinks the lightness<sup>o</sup> of the occasion

5 Should ha' confirmed thee.<sup>1</sup> Come, I am not jealous.

CELIA No?

CORVINO Faith, I am not, I, nor never<sup>2</sup> was;

It is a poor, unprofitable humor.

Do not I know if women have a will

They'll do 'gainst all the watches<sup>o</sup> o'the world?

10 And that the fiercest spies are tamed with gold?

Tut, I am confident in thee, thou shalt see't;

And see, I'll give thee cause too, to believe it.

Come, kiss me. Go and make thee ready straight

In all thy best attire, thy choicest jewels;

15 Put 'em all on, and, with 'em thy best looks.

We are invited to a solemn feast

At old Volpone's, where it shall appear

How far I am free from jealousy or fear. [Exeunt.]

Endnotes

- Note 1: Convinced you that I was not serious.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Double negatives are grammatical in Jacobean English.Return to reference 2

Notes

- °: testReturn to reference °
- °: trivialityReturn to reference °
- °: despite the vigilanceReturn to reference °

Act 3

SCENE 1. *The piazza.

[Enter] MOSCA.

MOSCA I fear I shall begin to grow in love
With my dear self and my most prosp'rous parts,<sup>o</sup>
They do so spring and burgeon.<sup>o</sup> I can feel
A whimsy<sup>o</sup> i'my blood. I know not how, Success hath made me wanton. I could skip
5 Out of my skin now like a subtle snake,
I am so limber. Oh, your parasite
Is a most precious thing, dropped from above,<sup>o</sup>
Not bred 'mongst clods and clodpolls here on earth.
I muse the mystery was not made a science,
10 It is so liberally professed!<sup>1</sup> Almost
All the wise world is little else in nature
But parasites or subparasites. And yet
I mean not those that have your bare town-art,<sup>2</sup>
To know who's fit to feed 'em; have no house,
15 No family, no care, and therefore mold
Tales for men's ears,<sup>o</sup> to bait<sup>o</sup> that sense; or get Kitchen-invention, and some stale receipts<sup>o</sup>
To please the belly and the groin;<sup>o</sup> nor those,
With their court-dog tricks, that can fawn and fleer,<sup>o</sup>
20 Make their revenue out of legs and faces,
Echo my lord, and lick away a moth;<sup>3</sup>
But your fine, elegant rascal, that can rise
And stoop almost together, like an arrow,
Shoot through the air as nimbly as a star,<sup>o</sup>
25 Turn short as doth a swallow, and be here
And there and here and yonder all at once,
Present to any humor, all occasion,<sup>4</sup>
And change a visor<sup>o</sup> swifter than a thought!
This is the creature had the art born with him,
30 Toils not to learn it, but doth practice it

Out of most excellent nature, and such sparks
Are the true parasites, others but their zanies.°

Endnotes

- Note 1: I wonder why the craft was not made a subject for academic study, it is so frequently practiced! (Punning on the “liberal professions.”)Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Crude skills of ingratiation, sufficient only for getting free meals in taverns.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Make a living from bows and sycophantic looks, repeat anything a nobleman says, and fawn over him, fussing over every detail of his appearance.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Ready to respond to any mood or opportunity.Return to reference 4

Notes

- °: talentsReturn to reference °
- °: swell; thriveReturn to reference °
- °: giddinessReturn to reference °
- °: sent from heavenReturn to reference °
- °: tell juicy rumors Return to reference °
- °: enticeReturn to reference °
- °: recipesReturn to reference °
- °: as aphrodisiacsReturn to reference °
- °: smile insincerelyReturn to reference °
- °: meteorReturn to reference °
- °: mask; expressionReturn to reference °
- °: clownish imitatorsReturn to reference °

SCENE 2. *The scene continues.

[Enter] BONARIO.

[Aside] Who's this? Bonario? Old Corbaccio's son?
The person I was bound<sup>o</sup> to seek.—Fair sir,
You are happ'ly met.

BONARIO That cannot be by thee.

MOSCA Why, sir?

BONARIO Nay, pray thee know thy way and leave me.

5 I would be loath to interchange discourse
With such a mate<sup>o</sup> as thou art.

MOSCA Courteous sir,
Scorn not my poverty.

BONARIO Not I, by heaven,
But thou shalt give me leave to hate thy baseness.

MOSCA Baseness?

BONARIO Ay. Answer me, is not thy sloth
10 Sufficient argument? Thy flattery?
Thy means of feeding?

MOSCA Heaven, be good to me!
These imputations are too common, sir,
And eas'ly stuck on virtue when she's poor.
You are unequal<sup>o</sup> to me, and howe'er
Your sentence<sup>o</sup> may be righteous, yet you are not,
15 That, ere you know me, thus proceed in censure.
Saint Mark bear witness 'gainst you, 'tis inhuman.

[He weeps.]

BONARIO [aside] What? Does he weep? The sign is soft and good.

I do repent me that I was so harsh.

MOSCA 'Tis true that, swayed by strong necessity,
20 I am enforced to eat my careful bread
With too much obsequy;<sup>o</sup> 'tis true, beside,

That I am fain<sup>o</sup> to spin mine own poor raiment
 Out of my mere observance,<sup>o</sup> being not born
 To a free fortune. But that I have done
 25 Base offices in rending friends asunder,
 Dividing families, betraying counsels,
 Whispering false lies, or mining<sup>o</sup> men with praises,
 Trained<sup>o</sup> their credulity with perjuries,
 Corrupted chastity, or am in love
 30 With mine own tender ease, but would not rather Prove<sup>o</sup> the most rugged and laborious course
 That might redeem my present estimation,<sup>1</sup>
 Let me here perish in all hope of goodness.
 BONARIO [aside] This cannot be a personated
 35 passion!—
 I was to blame, so to mistake thy nature;
 Pray thee forgive me, and speak out thy business.
 MOSCA Sir, it concerns you; and though I may seem
 At first to make a main<sup>o</sup> offense in manners
 And in my gratitude unto my master,
 40 Yet for the pure love which I bear all right
 And hatred of the wrong, I must reveal it.
 This very hour your father is in purpose
 To disinherit you—
 BONARIO How!
 MOSCA And thrust you forth
 As a mere stranger to his blood. 'Tis true, sir.
 45 The work no way engageth<sup>o</sup> me but as I claim an interest in the general state
 Of goodness and true virtue, which I hear
 T'abound in you, and for which mere respect,<sup>o</sup>
 Without a second aim, sir, I have done it.
 50 BONARIO This tale hath lost thee much of the late<sup>o</sup> trust
 Thou hadst with me. It is impossible.
 I know not how to lend it any thought<sup>o</sup>

My father should be so unnatural.

55 MOSCA It is a confidence that well becomes Your piety;<sup>o</sup> and formed, no doubt, it is
From your own simple innocence, which makes
Your wrong more monstrous and abhorred. But, sir,
I now will tell you more. This very minute
60 It is or will be doing; and if you
Shall be but pleased to go with me, I'll bring you,
I dare not say where you shall see, but where
Your ear shall be a witness of the deed:
Hear yourself written bastard, and professed
The common issue of the earth.<sup>2</sup>

65 BONARIO I'm mazed!

MOSCA Sir, if I do it not, draw your just sword
And score your vengeance on my front<sup>o</sup> and face;
Mark me your villain. You have too much wrong,
And I do suffer for you, sir. My heart
Weeps blood in anguish—

70 BONARIO Lead. I follow thee.
[Exeunt.]

Endnotes

- Note 1: That might improve your current appraisal of me.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: A bastard was called filius terrae, "son of the earth."Return to reference 2

Notes

- <sup>o</sup>: on my wayReturn to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: fellow (contemptuous)Return to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: superior; unfairReturn to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: verdictReturn to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: obsequiousnessReturn to reference <sup>o</sup>

- °: obligedReturn to reference °
- °: deferential serviceReturn to reference °
- °: underminingReturn to reference °
- °: lured onReturn to reference °
- °: undergoReturn to reference °
- °: greatReturn to reference °
- °: concernsReturn to reference °
- °: for which reason aloneReturn to reference °
- °: recentReturn to reference °
- °: believe thatReturn to reference °
- °: filial loyaltyReturn to reference °
- °: browReturn to reference °

SCENE 3. VOLPONE'S house.

[Enter] VOLPONE, NANO, ANDROGYNO, [and] CASTRONE.

VOLPONE Mosca stays long, methinks. Bring forth your sports

And help to make the wretched time more sweet.

NANO Dwarf, fool, and eunuch, well met here we
be.

5 A question it were now, whether<sup>o</sup> of us three,
Being all the known delicates<sup>o</sup> of a rich man,
In pleasing him, claim the precedency can?

CASTRONE I claim for myself.

ANDROGYNO And so doth the fool.

NANO 'Tis foolish indeed; let me set you both to school.

10 First, for your dwarf: he's little and witty,
And everything, as it is little, is pretty;
Else why do men say to a creature of my shape,
So soon as they see him, "It's a pretty little ape"?
And why a pretty ape? But for pleasing imitation
Of greater men's action in a ridiculous fashion.
Beside, this feat<sup>o</sup> body of mine doth not crave 15 Half the meat, drink, and cloth one of your bulks will have.

Admit your fool's face be the mother of laughter,
Yet for his brain, it must always come after;<sup>o</sup>
And though that do feed him,<sup>o</sup> it's a pitiful case,<sup>1</sup>
His body is beholding<sup>o</sup> to such a bad face.

20 One knocks.

VOLPONE Who's there? My couch. [He lies down.]

Away, look, Nano, see!

Give me my caps, first—go, inquire.

[Exeunt NANO, ANDROGYNO, and CASTRONE.]

Now, Cupid

Send<sup>o</sup> it be Mosca, and with fair return!<sup>o</sup>
 [Enter NANO.]
 NANO It is the beauteous Madam—
 VOLPONE Would-be—is it?
 NANO The same
 25 VOLPONE Now, torment on me! Squire her in,
 For she will enter or dwell here forever.
 Nay, quickly, that my fit were past! [Exit
 NANO.]
 I fear
 A second hell, too, that my loathing this
 Will quite expel my appetite to the other.<sup>o</sup>
 30 Would she were taking, now, her tedious leave.
 Lord, how it threatens me what I am to suffer!

Endnotes

- Note 1: With a pun on “container.”Return to reference 1

Notes

- <sup>o</sup>: whichReturn to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: playthingsReturn to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: neat, trimReturn to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: be lesserReturn to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: earns his keepReturn to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: beholdenReturn to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: grant Return to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: good resultsReturn to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: CeliaReturn to reference <sup>o</sup>

SCENE 4. *The scene continues.

[Enter] LADY [WOULD-BE and] NANO.

LADY WOULD-BE [to NANO] I thank you, good sir. Pray you signify

Unto your patron I am here.<sup>1</sup> [regarding herself in a mirror] This band<sup>o</sup>

Shows not my neck enough. I trouble you, sir.

Let me request you, bid one of my women

Come hither to me. [Exit

NANO.]

5 In good faith, I am dressed
Most favorably today!<sup>o</sup> It is no matter;
'Tis well enough.

[Enter NANO and FIRST] WOMAN.

Look, see, these petulant things!<sup>o</sup>

How they have done this!

VOLPONE [aside] I do feel the fever

Ent'ring in at mine ears. Oh, for a charm

To fright it hence!

10 LADY WOULD-BE [to FIRST WOMAN] Come nearer. Is this curl

In his<sup>o</sup> right place? Or this? Why is this higher Than all the rest? You ha' not washed your eyes yet?
Or do they not stand even<sup>o</sup> i'your head?

Where's your fellow? Call her. [Exit FIRST

WOMAN.]

NANO [aside] Now Saint Mark

15 Deliver us! Anon she'll beat her women
Because her nose is red.

[Enter FIRST and SECOND WOMEN.]

LADY WOULD-BE I pray you, view

This tire,<sup>o</sup> forsooth. Are all things apt or no?

SECOND WOMAN One hair a little here sticks out, forsooth.

LADY WOULD-BE Does 't so, forsooth? [to FIRST WOMAN]

And

where was your dear sight

When it did so, forsooth? What now? Bird-eyed?°

20 [to SECOND WOMAN] And you, too? Pray you both approach and mend it.

[They tend to

her.]

Now, by that light,° I muse you're not ashamed!

I, that have preached these things so oft unto you,

Read you the principles, argued all the grounds,

Disputed every fitness, every grace,

25 Called you to counsel of so frequent dressings—

NANO [aside] More carefully than of your fame° or honor.

LADY WOULD-BE Made you acquainted what an ample dowry

The knowledge of these things would be unto you,

Able alone to get you noble husbands

30 At your return,° and you thus to neglect it?

Besides, you seeing what a curious° nation

Th'Italians are, what will they say of me?

"The English lady cannot dress herself."

Here's a fine imputation to our country!

35 Well, go your ways, and stay i'the next room.

This fucus° was too coarse, too; it's no matter.

[to NANO] Good sir, you'll give 'em entertainment?°

[Exeunt NANO and WOMEN.]

VOLPONE [aside] The storm comes toward me.

LADY WOULD-BE [approaching the bed] How does my Volp?

40 VOLPONE Troubled with noise. I cannot sleep; I dreamt

That a strange Fury entered now my house,

And with the dreadful tempest of her breath
Did cleave my roof asunder.

LADY WOULD-BE Believe me, and I
Had the most fearful dream, could I remember't—

45 VOLPONE [aside] Out on<sub>o</sub> my fate! I ha' giv'n her the occasion

How to torment me: she will tell me hers.

LADY WOULD-BE Methought the golden mediocrity,<sub>o</sub>
Polite and delicate—

VOLPONE Oh, if you do love me,
No more! I sweat and suffer at the mention
Of any dream. Feel how I tremble yet.

50 LADY WOULD-BE Alas, good soul! The passion of the heart.<sub>o</sub>

Seed pearl were good now, boiled with syrup of apples,

Tincture of gold and coral, citron pills,
Your elecampane<sub>o</sub> root, myrobalans<sup>2</sup>—

55 VOLPONE [aside] Ay me, I have ta'en a grasshopper by the wing!

LADY WOULD-BE Burnt silk and amber; you have muscadel

Good i'the house—

VOLPONE You will not drink and part?

LADY WOULD-BE No, fear not that. I doubt we shall not get

Some English saffron—half a dram would serve—

60 Your sixteen cloves, a little musk, dried mints,
Bugloss,<sub>o</sub> and barley-meal—

VOLPONE [aside] She's in again.

Before I feigned diseases; now I have one.

LADY WOULD-BE And these applied with a right scarlet cloth—

VOLPONE [aside] Another flood of words! A very torrent!

LADY WOULD-BE Shall I, sir, make you a poultice?
 VOLPONE No,
 65 no, no.
 I'm very well; you need prescribe no more.
 LADY WOULD-BE I have a little studied physic, but
 now
 I'm all for music, save i'the forenoons
 An hour or two for painting. I would have
 A lady indeed t' have all letters and arts,
 70 Be able to discourse, to write, to paint,
 But principal, as Plato holds,<sup>o</sup> your music
 (And so does wise Pythagoras, I take it)
 Is your true rapture, when there is concent<sup>o</sup>
 In face, in voice, and clothes, and is indeed
 75 Our sex's chiefest ornament.
 VOLPONE The poet<sup>o</sup>
 As old in time as Plato, and as knowing,
 Says that your highest female grace is silence.
 LADY WOULD-BE Which o' your poets? Petrarch? Or Tasso? Or Dante?
 Guarini? Ariosto? Aretine?
 80 Cieco di Hadria?<sup>3</sup> I have read them all.
 VOLPONE [aside] Is everything a cause to my destruction?
 LADY WOULD-BE [searching her garments] I think I ha'
 two or three of 'em about me.
 VOLPONE [aside] The sun, the sea will sooner both stand still
 Than her eternal tongue! Nothing can scape it.
 85 LADY WOULD-BE Here's Pastor Fido<sup>4</sup>— VOLPONE [aside] Profess obstinate silence,
 That's now my safest.
 LADY WOULD-BE All our English writers,
 I mean such as are happy in th'Italian,

Will deign to steal out of this author mainly,
 Almost as much as from Montaigné<sup>o</sup>
 90 He has so modern and facile<sup>o</sup> a vein,
 Fitting the time, and catching the court ear.
 Your Petrarch is more passionate, yet he,
 In days of sonneting, trusted 'em with much.<sup>5</sup>
 Dante is hard, and few can understand him.
 95 But for a desperate<sup>o</sup> wit, there's Aretine!
 Only his pictures are a little obscene<sup>6</sup>—
 You mark me not?
 VOLPONE                      Alas, my mind's perturbed.
 LADY WOULD-BE      Why, in such cases we must cure ourselves,
 Make use of our philosophy—
 VOLPONE      Ay me!
 100 LADY WOULD-BE      And, as we find our passions do rebel,
 Encounter 'em with reason, or divert 'em
 By giving scope unto some other humor
 Of lesser danger—as in politic bodies<sup>o</sup>
 105 There's nothing more doth overwhelm the judgment
 And clouds the understanding than too much
 Settling and fixing and (as 'twere) subsiding<sup>o</sup>
 Upon one object. For the incorporating
 Of these same outward things into that part
 Which we call mental leaves some certain feces<sup>o</sup> 110 That stop the organs and, as Plato says,
 Assassinate our knowledge.
 VOLPONE [aside]                      Now, the spirit
 Of patience help me!
 LADY WOULD-BE                      Come, in faith, I must Visit you more o'days and make you well.
 Laugh and be lusty.<sup>o</sup>
 115 VOLPONE [aside]                      My good angel save me!

LADY WOULD-BE      There was but one sole man in all
the world
With whom I e'er could sympathize, and he Would lie youo often three, four hours together
To hear me speak, and be sometime so rapt
As he would answer me quite from the purpose,
120 Like you—and you are like him, just. I'll discourse—
An'to be but only, sir, to bring you asleep—
How we did spend our time and loves together
For some six years.
VOLPONE      Oh, oh, oh, oh, oh, oh!
LADY WOULD-BE      For we were *coaetani*o and brought 125 up—
VOLPONE [aside]      Some power, some fate, some fortune rescue me!

Endnotes

- Note 1: Much of Lady Would-be's dialogue in the following scene is adapted from Libanius of Antioch's On Talkative Women.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Dried tropical fruits.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Lady Would-be juxtaposes major Italian writers with the minor di Hadria and the obscene Aretino (see p. 988, n. 6).Return to reference 3
- Note 4: A pastoral by Giovanni Guarini, translated into English in 1602.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: When sonnet writing was popular, gave poets plenty to imitate.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: The libertine poems of Aretine (Pietro Aretino 1492–1556) were published with pornographic illustrations by Giulio Romano.Return to reference 6

Notes

- °: ruffReturn to reference °
- °: sarcasticReturn to reference °
- °: her women; her curlsReturn to reference °
- °: itsReturn to reference °
- °: levelReturn to reference °
- °: headdressReturn to reference °
- °: startled (?); asquint (?)Return to reference °
- °: by heavenReturn to reference °
- °: reputationReturn to reference °
- °: to EnglandReturn to reference °
- °: fastidiousReturn to reference °
- °: makeupReturn to reference °
- °: look after themReturn to reference °
- °: curses onReturn to reference °
- °: golden meanReturn to reference °
- °: heartburnReturn to reference °
- °: perennial herbReturn to reference °
- °: an herbReturn to reference °
- °: in The RepublicReturn to reference °
- °: harmonyReturn to reference °
- °: Sophocles, in AjaxReturn to reference °
- °: French essayistReturn to reference °
- °: gracefulReturn to reference °
- °: outrageousReturn to reference °
- °: political councilsReturn to reference °
- °: alchemical jargonReturn to reference °
- °: dregsReturn to reference °
- °: merryReturn to reference °
- °: lieReturn to reference °
- °: if itReturn to reference °
- °: the same ageReturn to reference °

SCENE 5. *The scene continues.

[Enter] MOSCA.

MOSCA God save you, madam.

LADY WOULD-BE

Good sir.

VOLPONE [aside to MOSCA]

Mosca?

Welcome,

Welcome to my redemption.

MOSCA [to VOLPONE]

Why, sir?

VOLPONE [aside to MOSCA]

Oh,

Rid me of this my torture quickly, there,

My madam with the everlasting voice!

The bells in time of pestilence ne'er made

5

Like noise, or were in that perpetual motion;<sup>1</sup>

The cockpit<sup>o</sup> comes not near it. All my house

But now steamed like a bath with her thick breath.

A lawyer could not have been heard, nor scarce

Another woman, such a hail of words

10

She has let fall. For hell's sake, rid her hence.

MOSCA [aside to VOLPONE] Has she presented?<sup>o</sup>

VOLPONE [aside to MOSCA]

Oh, I do not care.

I'll take her absence upon any price,

With any loss.

MOSCA Madam—

LADY WOULD-BE

I ha' brought your patron

A toy,<sup>o</sup> a cap here, of mine own work—

MOSCA [taking it from her]

'Tis well.

15

I had forgot to tell you, I saw your knight

Where you'd little think it—

LADY WOULD-BE

Where?

MOSCA

Marry,

Where yet, if you make haste, you may apprehend

him,

Rowing upon the water in a gondole
 With the most cunning courtesan of Venice.
 20 LADY WOULD-BE Is't true?
 MOSCA Pursue 'em, and believe your eyes.
 Leave me to make your gift. [Exit LADY WOULD-BE.]
 I knew 'twould take.<sup>o</sup>
 For lightly,<sup>o</sup> they that use themselves most license
 Are still<sup>o</sup> most jealous.
 VOLPONE Mosca, hearty thanks
 For thy quick fiction and delivery of me.
 25 Now, to my hopes, what say'st thou?
 [Enter LADY WOULD-BE.]
 LADY WOULD-BE But do you hear, sir?
 VOLPONE [aside] Again! I fear a paroxysm.<sup>o</sup>
 LADY WOULD-BE Which way
 Rowed they together?
 MOSCA Toward the Rialto.<sup>o</sup>
 LADY WOULD-BE I pray you, lend me your dwarf.
 MOSCA I pray
 you, take him.
 [Exit LADY WOULD-BE.]
 Your hopes, sir, are like happy blossoms: fair,
 30 And promise timely fruit if you will stay
 But the maturing. Keep you at your couch.
 Corbaccio will arrive straight with the will;
 When he is gone I'll tell you more. [Exit.]
 VOLPONE My blood,
 My spirits are returned. I am alive;
 35 And like your wanton<sup>o</sup> gamester at primero,<sup>2</sup>
 Whose thought had whispered to him, not go<sup>o</sup> less,
 Methinks I lie, and draw—for an encounter.<sup>3</sup>
 [He gets into bed and closes the bed curtains.]

Endnotes

- Note 1: Church bells marked the deaths of parishioners; in times of plague they therefore rang almost constantly.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: A card game.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: (1) Winning play in primero; (2) sexual act.Return to reference 3

Notes

- °: cockfighting arenaReturn to reference °
- °: given a giftReturn to reference °
- °: trifle; embroidered pieceReturn to reference °
- °: do the trickReturn to reference °
- °: commonlyReturn to reference °
- °: alwaysReturn to reference °
- °: relapseReturn to reference °
- °: commercial districtReturn to reference °
- °: reckless; lustfulReturn to reference °
- °: don't gambleReturn to reference °

SCENE 6. *The scene continues.

[Enter] MOSCA [and] BONARIO. [MOSCA shows
BONARIO to a hiding place.]

MOSCA Sir, here concealed you may hear all. But pray you

Have patience, sir. [One knocks.] The same's your father knocks.

I am compelled to leave you.

BONARIO Do so. Yet

Cannot my thought imagine this a truth.

[He conceals himself.]

SCENE 7. *The scene continues.

[Enter] CORVINO [and] CELIA. MOSCA [crosses the stage to intercept them].

MOSCA Death on me! You are come too soon. What meant you?

Did not I say I would send?

CORVINO Yes, but I feared
You might forget it, and then they prevent us.

MOSCA [aside] Prevent? Did e'er man haste so for his horns?<sup>o</sup>

5 A courtier would not ply it so for a place.<sup>1</sup>
[to CORVINO] Well, now there's no helping it, stay
here;

I'll presently return. [He crosses the stage to BONARIO.]

CORVINO Where are you, Celia?
You know not wherefore I have brought you hither?

CELIA Not well, except you told me.

CORVINO Now I will.
Hark hither. [CORVINO and CELIA talk apart.]

10 MOSCA [to BONARIO] Sir, your father hath sent word
It will be half an hour ere he come;
And therefore, if you please to walk the while
Into that gallery, at the upper end
There are some books to entertain the time;

15 And I'll take care no man shall come unto you, sir.
BONARIO Yes, I will stay there. [aside] I do doubt this fellow.

[He retires.]

MOSCA There, he is far enough; he can hear nothing.

And for<sup>o</sup> his father, I can keep him off.

[MOSCA joins VOLPONE and opens his bed curtains.]

CORVINO [to CELIA] Nay, now, there is no starting back, and therefore

20 Resolve upon it; I have so decreed.
It must be done. Nor would I move't<sup>o</sup> afore,
Because I would avoid all shifts<sup>o</sup> and tricks
That might deny me.

CELIA Sir, let me beseech you,
Affect<sup>o</sup> not these strange trials. If you doubt
My chastity, why, lock me up forever;
25 Make me the heir of darkness. Let me live
Where I may please<sup>o</sup> your fears, if not your trust.

CORVINO Believe it, I have no such humor, I.
All that I speak, I mean; yet I am not mad,
Not horn-mad,<sup>o</sup> see you? Go to, show yourself
30 Obedient, and a wife.

CELIA O heaven!

CORVINO I say it,
Do so.

CELIA Was this the train?<sup>o</sup>

CORVINO I have told you reasons:
What the physicians have set down; how much
It may concern me; what my engagements are;
My means, and the necessity of those means 35 For my recovery. Wherefore, if you be Loyal and mine, be won, respect my venture.<sup>o</sup>

CELIA Before your honor?

CORVINO Honor? Tut, a breath.
There's no such thing in nature; a mere term
Invented to awe fools. What is my gold 40 The worse for touching? Clothes for being looked on?

Why, this's no more. An old, decrepit wretch,
That has no sense,<sup>o</sup> no sinew; takes his meat
With others' fingers; only knows to gape

45 When you do scald his gums; a voice, a shadow.
And what can this man hurt you?

CELIA Lord! What spirit
Is this hath entered him?

CORVINO And for your fame,<sup>o</sup>
That's such a jig;<sup>o</sup> as if I would go tell it, Cry<sup>o</sup> it on the piazza! Who shall know it
But he that cannot speak it,<sup>o</sup> and this fellow<sup>o</sup>
50 Whose lips are i'my pocket, save yourself?
If you'll proclaim't, you may. I know no other
Should come to know it.

CELIA Are heaven and saints then
nothing?

Will they be blind or stupid?

CORVINO How?<sup>o</sup>

CELIA Good sir,
Be jealous still, emulate them, and think 55 What hate they burn with toward every sin.

CORVINO I grant you, if I thought it were a sin
I would not urge you. Should I offer this
To some young Frenchman, or hot Tuscan blood
That had read Aretine, conned<sup>o</sup> all his prints, 60 Knew every quirk within lust's labyrinth,
And were professed critic<sup>o</sup> in lechery,
And I would look upon him and applaud him,
This were a sin. But here 'tis contrary,
A pious work, mere charity, for physic,
65 And honest polity<sup>o</sup> to assure mine own.

CELIA O heaven! Canst thou suffer such a change?

VOLPONE [aside to MOSCA] Thou art mine honor, Mosca,
and my pride,

My joy, my tickling, my delight! Go, bring 'em.

MOSCA [to CORVINO] Please you draw near, sir.

CORVINO [dragging CELIA toward VOLPONE] 70 You will not be rebellious? By that Come on, what—light—

MOSCA [to VOLPONE] Sir, Signor Corvino here is come to see you.

VOLPONE Oh!

MOSCA And, hearing of the consultation had So lately for your health, is come to offer, Or rather, sir, to prostitute—

75 CORVINO Thanks, sweet Mosca.

MOSCA Freely, unasked or unentreated—

CORVINO Well.

MOSCA As the true, fervent instance of his love, His own most fair and proper wife, the beauty Only of price<sup>o</sup> in Venice—

CORVINO 'Tis well urged.

80 MOSCA To be your comfortress and to preserve you.

VOLPONE Alas, I am past already! Pray you, thank him

For his good care and promptness. But for<sup>o</sup> that, 'Tis a vain labor e'en to fight 'gainst heaven, Applying fire to a stone (uh! uh! uh! uh!), Making a dead leaf grow again. I take 85 His wishes gently, though; and you may tell him What I have done for him. Marry, my state is hopeless!

Will him to pray for me, and t' use his fortune With reverence when he comes to't.

MOSCA [to CORVINO] Do you hear, sir?

Go to him with your wife.

90 CORVINO [to CELIA] Heart of my father!<sup>o</sup> Wilt thou persist thus? Come, I pray thee, come. Thou see'st 'tis nothing. [He threatens to strike her.] Celia! By this hand,

I shall grow violent. Come, do't, I say.

CELIA Sir, kill me, rather. I will take down poison, Eat burning coals, do anything—

CORVINO Be damned!

95 Heart! I will drag thee hence, home, by the hair,
 Cry thee a strumpet through the streets, rip up
 Thy mouth unto thine ears, and slit thy nose
 Like a raw rochet!°—Do not tempt me. Come,
 100 Yield! I am loath—Death!° I will buy some slave
 Whom I will kill,<sup>2</sup> and bind thee to him alive,
 And at my window hang you forth, devising
 Some monstrous crime, which I in capital letters
 Will eat into thy flesh with aqua fortis°
 And burning cor'sives° on this stubborn breast.
 105 Now, by the blood thou hast incensed, I'll do't.
 CELIA Sir, what you please, you may; I am your martyr.
 CORVINO Be not thus obstinate. I ha' not deserved
 it.
 Think who it is entreats you. Pray thee, sweet!
 Good faith, thou shalt have jewels, gowns, attires,
 110 What° thou wilt think and ask. Do but go kiss him.
 Or touch him but. For my sake. At my suit.
 This once. No? Not? I shall remember this.
 Will you disgrace me thus? Do you thirst my undoing?
 MOSCA Nay, gentle lady, be advised.
 CORVINO No, no.
 115 She has watched her time.<sup>3</sup> God's precious,<sup>4</sup> this is scurvy;
 'Tis very scurvy, and you are—
 MOSCA Nay, good, sir.
 CORVINO An arrant locust,° by heaven, a locust.
 Whore,
 Crocodile,<sup>5</sup> that hast thy tears prepared,
 Expecting° how thou'lt bid 'em flow!
 120 MOSCA Nay, pray
 you, sir,
 She will consider.

In varying figures I would have contended
With the blue Proteus or the hornèd flood.<sup>6</sup>
Now art thou welcome.

CELIA

Sir!

VOLPONE

Nay, fly me not,

155 Nor let thy false imagination
That I was bedrid make thee think I am so.
Thou shalt not find it. I am now as fresh,
As hot, as high, and in as jovial plight<sup>o</sup>
As when—in that so celebrated scene,
At recitation of our comedy
160 For entertainment of the great Valois<sup>7</sup>—
I acted young Antinoüs,<sup>8</sup> and attracted
The eyes and ears of all the ladies present,
T'admire each graceful gesture, note, and footing.<sup>o</sup>

SONG

165 [He sings.] Come, my Celia, let us prove,<sup>9</sup>
While we can, the sports of love.
Time will not be ours forever;
He at length our good will sever.
Spend not then his gifts in vain.
170 Suns that set may rise again,
But if once we lose this light
'Tis with us perpetual night.
Why should we defer our joys?
Fame and rumor are but toys.<sup>o</sup>
175 Cannot we delude the eyes
Of a few poor household spies?
Or his<sup>o</sup> easier ears beguile,
Thus removèd by our wile?
'Tis no sin love's fruits to steal,
But the sweet thefts to reveal.
180 To be taken,<sup>o</sup> to be seen,

210 If thou hast wisdom, hear me, Celia.
 Thy baths shall be the juice of July flowers,<sup>o</sup>
 Spirit<sup>o</sup> of roses, and of violets,
 The milk of unicorns, and panthers' breath<sup>6</sup>
 Gathered in bags, and mixed with Cretan wines.
 215 Our drink shall be preparèd gold and amber,
 Which we will take until my roof whirl round
 With the vertigo; and my dwarf shall dance,
 My eunuch sing, my fool make up the antic,<sup>7</sup>
 Whilst we, in changèd shapes, act Ovid's tales:
 220 Thou like Europa now and I like Jove,
 Then I like Mars and thou like Erycine,<sup>8</sup>
 So of the rest, till we have quite run through
 And wearied all the fables of the gods.
 Then will I have thee in more modern forms,
 225 Attirèd like some sprightly dame of France,
 Brave Tuscan lady, or proud Spanish beauty;
 Sometimes unto the Persian Sophy's<sup>o</sup> wife,
 Or the Grand Signor's<sup>o</sup> mistress; and for change,
 To one of our most artful courtesans,
 230 Or some quick<sup>o</sup> Negro, or cold Russian.
 And I will meet thee in as many shapes,
 Where we may so transfuse<sup>o</sup> our wand'ring souls
 Out at our lips, and score up sums of pleasures,
 [He sings.] That the curious shall not know
 235 How to tell<sup>o</sup> them as they flow;
 And the envious, when they find
 What their number is, be pined.<sup>o</sup>
 CELIA If you have ears that will be pierced, or eyes
 That can be opened, a heart may be touched,
 240 Or any part that yet sounds man<sup>9</sup> about you;
 If you have touch of holy saints or heaven,
 Do me the grace to let me scape. If not,
 Be bountiful and kill me. You do know
 I am a creature hither ill betrayed

245 By one whose shame I would forget it were.
 If you will deign me neither of these graces,
 Yet feed your wrath, sir, rather than your lust—
 It is a vice comes nearer manliness—
 And punish that unhappy crime of nature
 250 Which you miscall my beauty. Flay my face
 Or poison it with ointments for seducing
 Your blood to this rebellion.◊ Rub these hands
 With what may cause an eating leprosy
 E'en to my bones and marrow—anything
 255 That may disfavor me,◊ save in my honor—
 And I will kneel to you, pray for you, pay down
 A thousand hourly vows, sir, for your health,
 Report and think you virtuous—
 VOLPONE Think me cold,
 Frozen, and impotent, and so report me?
 260 That I had Nestor's<sup>1</sup> hernia, thou wouldst think.
 I do degenerate, and abuse my nation<sup>2</sup>
 To play with opportunity thus long.
 I should have done the act and then have parleyed.
 Yield, or I'll force thee.
 CELIA O just God!
 VOLPONE [seizing CELIA] In vain—265 He [BONARIO] leaps out from where MOSCA had placed him.
 BONARIO Forbear, foul ravisher, libidinous swine!
 Free the forced lady or thou diest, impostor.
 But that I am loath to snatch thy punishment
 Out of the hand of justice, thou shouldst yet
 Be made the timely sacrifice of vengeance
 270 Before this altar and this dross,◊ thy idol.—
 Lady, let's quit the place. It is the den
 Of villainy. Fear naught; you have a guard;
 And he◊ ere long shall meet his just reward.
 [Exeunt BONARIO and CELIA.]

275       VOLPONE    Fall on me, roof, and bury me in ruin!
              Become my grave, that wert my shelter! Oh!
              I am unmasked, unspirited, undone,
              Betrayed to beggary, to infamy—

Endnotes

- Note 1: Work so hard for a position at court.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: In the following lines, Corvino elaborates luridly upon the fate that the notorious rapist Tarquin promised the chaste Roman matron Lucretia if she did not capitulate; unlike Celia, Lucretia yielded to threats.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Waited for her chance (to ruin me).Return to reference 3
- Note 4: God's precious blood. (An oath.)Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Which was supposed to weep while preying upon its victims.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Proteus is a shape-changing sea god with whom Menelaus wrestles in the Odyssey. The "hornèd flood" is the river god Achelous, defeated by Hercules despite changing into an ox.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Henry of Valois, Duke of Anjou, and later King Henry III of France (1574–89), was sumptuously entertained at Venice in 1574. His sexual taste for men was widely remarked.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: The beautiful homosexual favorite of the Roman emperor Hadrian.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Try out. (The song is an adaptation of the Roman poet Catullus's fifth ode.)Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Cleopatra dissolved and drank a pearl during a banquet with her lover, Marc Antony. "Brave": magnificent.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Ruby, thought to emit light.Return to reference 2

- Note 3: Patron saint of Venice, whose statue stood in the basilica.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Third wife of the Roman emperor Caligula.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Mythical bird, of which it was supposed that only one existed at a time; it died in flames and was reborn from its own ashes.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Panthers were believed to use their sweet-smelling breath to lure prey.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Grotesque dance or pageant.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Ovid's Metamorphoses retells the pagan myths of transformation. Jove, king of the gods, became a bull to seduce the lovely Europa. The adulterous couple Mars, god of war, and Erycine (Venus), goddess of sexual love, were caught in a net by Vulcan, her husband.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: That has a hint of manliness.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Nestor was the oldest of the Greek leaders in the Trojan War.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: I fall away from my ancestors' virtues and abuse the Italian reputation for virility.Return to reference 2

Notes

- °: cuckold's hornsReturn to reference °
- °: as forReturn to reference °
- °: suggest itReturn to reference °
- °: evasionsReturn to reference °
- °: undertakeReturn to reference °
- °: satisfyReturn to reference °
- °: crazy with jealousyReturn to reference °
- °: schemeReturn to reference °
- °: support my endeavorReturn to reference °
- °: sensory perceptionReturn to reference °
- °: reputationReturn to reference °
- °: jokeReturn to reference °

- °: advertiseReturn to reference °
- °: Volpone Return to reference °
- °: MoscaReturn to reference °
- °: what's this?Return to reference °
- °: learned by heartReturn to reference °
- °: connoisseurReturn to reference °
- °: prudenceReturn to reference °
- °: beyond comparisonReturn to reference °
- °: as forReturn to reference °
- °: an oathReturn to reference °
- °: a fish, the red gurnardReturn to reference °
- °: God's death! (an oath)Return to reference °
- °: nitric acidReturn to reference °
- °: corrosivesReturn to reference °
- °: whateverReturn to reference °
- °: destroyerReturn to reference °
- °: anticipatingReturn to reference °
- °: absolveReturn to reference °
- °: compliantReturn to reference °
- °: God's and the angelsReturn to reference °
- °: sex and wedlockReturn to reference °
- °: lowest of concernsReturn to reference °
- °: buyerReturn to reference °
- °: not only just nowReturn to reference °
- °: schemingReturn to reference °
- °: robust conditionReturn to reference °
- °: dance stepReturn to reference °
- °: triflesReturn to reference °
- °: Corvino'sReturn to reference °
- °: caughtReturn to reference °
- °: poisonous mistReturn to reference °
- °: merely in hopeReturn to reference °
- °: brilliantReturn to reference °
- °: it became extinctReturn to reference °
- °: valuableReturn to reference °
- °: clove pinksReturn to reference °

- °: extractReturn to reference °
- °: Shah of Persia'sReturn to reference °
- °: Sultan of Turkey'sReturn to reference °
- °: energeticReturn to reference °
- °: pour into each otherReturn to reference °
- °: countReturn to reference °
- °: tormentedReturn to reference °
- °: sexual mutinyReturn to reference °
- °: make me uglyReturn to reference °
- °: the treasureReturn to reference °
- °: VolponeReturn to reference °

SCENE 8. *The scene continues.

[Enter] MOSCA [bloody].<sup>1</sup>

MOSCA Where shall I run, most wretched shame of
men,
To beat out my unlucky brains?

VOLPONE Here, here.
What! Dost thou bleed?

MOSCA Oh, that his well-driv'n
sword

Had been so courteous to have cleft me down
Unto the navel, ere I lived to see
5 My life, my hopes, my spirits, my patron, all
Thus desperately engagè<sup>o</sup> by my error!

VOLPONE Woe on thy fortune!

MOSCA And my follies, sir.

VOLPONE Th'hast made me miserable.

MOSCA And myself,
sir.

10 Who would have thought he would have hearkened<sup>o</sup>
so?

VOLPONE What shall we do?

MOSCA I know not. If my heart
Could expiate the mischance, I'd pluck it out.
Will you be pleased to hang me, or cut my throat?
And I'll requite you, sir. Let's die like Romans, Since we have lived like Grecians.<sup>2</sup> They knock without.

15 VOLPONE Hark, who's
there?

I hear some footing: officers, the Saffi,<sup>o</sup>
Come to apprehend us! I do feel the brand
Hissing already at my forehead; now
Mine ears are boring.<sup>3</sup>

20 MOSCA To your couch, sir; you Make that place good, however.<sup>4</sup> [VOLPONE gets into bed.]
 Guilty men Suspect<sup>o</sup> what they deserve still.<sup>o</sup> [He opens the door.]
 Signor Corbaccio!

Endnotes

- Note 1: Bonario apparently remembered Mosca's invitation, in 3.2.66–68, to punish him if he turns out to be lying: "draw your just sword / And score your vengeance on my front and face; / Mark me your villain." Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Romans often committed suicide in adversity; Greeks were thought to be pleasure-loving. Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Branding was a common criminal punishment; ear-boring is described as an Italian torture in Thomas Nashe's Unfortunate Traveler (1594). Return to reference 3
- Note 4: (1) Defend that place, whatever happens; (2) maintain your invalid's role at all costs, since that role suits you. Return to reference 4

Notes

- °: placed at risk Return to reference °
- °: eavesdropped Return to reference °
- °: arresting officers Return to reference °
- °: dread Return to reference °
- °: always Return to reference °

SCENE 9. *The scene continues.

[Enter] CORBACCIO [and converses with] MOSCA;
VOLTORE [enters unnoticed by them].

CORBACCIO Why, how now, Mosca!

MOSCA Oh, undone, amazed, sir.

Your son—I know not by what accident—
Acquainted with your purpose to my patron
Touching<sup>o</sup> your will and making him your heir,
Entered our house with violence, his sword drawn,
5 Sought for you, called you wretch, unnatural,
Vowed he would kill you.

CORBACCIO Me?

MOSCA Yes, and my patron.

CORBACCIO This act shall disinherit him indeed.
Here is the will.

MOSCA [taking it from him] 'Tis well, sir.

CORBACCIO Right and well.

Be you as careful now for me.

10 MOSCA My life, sir,
Is not more tendered;<sup>o</sup> I am only yours.

CORBACCIO How does he? Will he die shortly, think'st
thou?

MOSCA I fear
He'll outlast May.

CORBACCIO Today?

MOSCA No, last out May, sir.

CORBACCIO Couldst thou not gi' him a dram?<sup>o</sup>

MOSCA Oh, by no means, sir.

CORBACCIO Nay, I'll not bid you.

VOLTORE [aside]
see.

This is a knave, I

[VOLTORE comes forward to speak privately with
MOSCA.]

MOSCA [aside] How, Signor Voltore! Did he hear
me?

VOLTORE
Parasite!

MOSCA Who's that? Oh, sir, most timely welcome—

VOLTORE
Scarce<sup>o</sup>

To the discovery of your tricks, I fear.

You are his only? And mine also? Are you not?

MOSCA Who, I, sir? [They speak out of CORBACCIO
's hearing.]

20 VOLTORE You, sir. What device<sup>o</sup> is this About a will?

MOSCA A plot for you, sir.

VOLTORE Come,
Put not your foists<sup>o</sup> upon me. I shall scent 'em.

MOSCA Did you not hear it?

VOLTORE Yes, I hear Corbaccio
Hath made your patron there his heir.

25 MOSCA 'Tis true,
By my device, drawn to it by my plot,
With hope—

VOLTORE Your patron should reciprocate?
And you have promised?

30 MOSCA For your good I did, sir.
Nay, more, I told his son, brought, hid him here
Where he might hear his father pass the deed,
Being persuaded to it by this thought, sir,
That the unnaturalness, first, of the act,
And then, his father's oft disclaiming in<sup>o</sup> him
(Which I did mean t' help on) would sure enrage him
To do some violence upon his parent,

35 On which the law should take sufficient hold,
 And you be stated<sup>o</sup> in a double hope.
 Truth be my comfort and my conscience,
 My only aim was to dig you a fortune
 Out of these two old rotten sepulchres—
 VOLTORE I cry thee mercy, Mosca.
 MOSCA Worth your
 40 patience
 And your great merit, sir. And see the change!
 VOLTORE Why? What success?<sup>o</sup> MOSCA Most hapless!<sup>o</sup> You must help, sir.
 Whilst we expected th'old raven, in comes Corvino's wife, sent hither by her husband—
 VOLTORE What, with a present?
 MOSCA No, sir, on visitation
 45 —
 I'll tell you how, anon—and, staying long,
 The youth, he grows impatient, rushes forth,
 Seizeth the lady, wounds me, makes her swear—
 Or he would murder her, that was his vow—
 T'affirm my patron to have done her rape,
 50 Which how unlike<sup>o</sup> it is, you see! And hence,
 With that pretext, he's gone t'accuse his father,
 Defame my patron, defeat you—
 VOLTORE Where's her
 husband?
 Let him be sent for straight.
 MOSCA Sir, I'll go fetch him.
 VOLTORE Bring him to the Scrutineo.<sup>o</sup>
 MOSCA Sir, I will.
 55 VOLTORE This must be stopped.
 MOSCA Oh, you do nobly,
 sir.
 Alas, 'twas labored all, sir, for your good;
 Nor was there want of counsel<sup>o</sup> in the plot.

But fortune can at any time o'erthrow
 The projects of a hundred learned clerks, o sir.
 60 CORBACCIO [striving to hear] What's that?
 VOLTRE [to CORBACCIO] Will't please you, sir, to go along?
 [Exeunt CORBACCIO and VOLTRE.]
 MOSCA Patron, go in and pray for our success.
 VOLPONE [rising] Need makes devotion. Heaven your labor bless!

Notes

- °: concerning Return to reference °
- °: cherished Return to reference °
- °: dose (of poison) Return to reference °
- °: only just in time Return to reference °
- °: ruse Return to reference °
- °: tricks; stench Return to reference °
- °: disowning Return to reference °
- °: installed Return to reference °
- °: outcome Return to reference °
- °: unfortunate Return to reference °
- °: unlikely Return to reference °
- °: Venetian law court Return to reference °
- °: lack of wisdom Return to reference °
- °: scholars Return to reference °

Act 4

SCENE 1. *The piazza.

[Enter] POLITIC [and] PEREGRINE.

POLITIC I told you, sir, it<sup>o</sup> was a plot. You see What observation is! You mentioned me
For<sup>o</sup> some instructions; I will tell you, sir,
Since we are met here, in this height<sup>o</sup> of Venice,
Some few particulars I have set down
5 Only for this meridian, fit to be known
Of your crude<sup>o</sup> traveler, and they are these.
I will not touch, sir, at your phrase or clothes,
For they are old.<sup>1</sup>

PEREGRINE Sir, I have better.

POLITIC Pardon,
I meant as they are themes.<sup>o</sup>

PEREGRINE Oh; sir, proceed.
10 I'll slander<sup>o</sup> you no more of wit, good sir.

POLITIC First, for your garb,<sup>2</sup> it must be grave and serious,
Very reserved and locked;<sup>o</sup> not<sup>o</sup> tell a secret
On any terms, not to your father; scarce
A fable<sup>3</sup> but with caution. Make sure choice 15 Both of your company and discourse. Beware
You never speak a truth—

PEREGRINE How!

POLITIC Not to strangers,<sup>o</sup>
For those be they you must converse with most;
Others<sup>o</sup> I would not know, sir, but at distance,
So as I still might be a saver<sup>4</sup> in 'em.
20 You shall have tricks else passed upon you hourly.
And then, for your religion, profess none,
But wonder at the diversity of all,
And, for your part, protest, were there no other
But simply the laws o'th'land, you could content you.

25 Nick Machiavel and Monsieur Bodin both
Were of this mind.<sup>5</sup> Then must you learn the use
And handling of your silver fork<sup>o</sup> at meals,
The metal<sup>o</sup> of your glass—these are main matters
30 With your Italian—and to know the hour
When you must eat your melons and your figs.
PEREGRINE Is that a point of state,<sup>o</sup> too?
POLITIC Here it is.
For your Venetian, if he see a man
Preposterous in the least, he has<sup>o</sup> him straight;
He has, he strips<sup>o</sup> him. I'll acquaint you, sir.
35 I now have lived here—'tis some fourteen months;
Within the first week of my landing here,
All took me for a citizen of Venice,
I knew the forms so well—
PEREGRINE [aside] And nothing else.
POLITIC I had read Contarine,<sup>6</sup> took me a house,
40 Dealt with my Jews<sup>7</sup> to furnish it with movables<sup>o</sup>—
Well, if I could but find one man, one man
To mine own heart, whom I durst trust, I would—PEREGRINE What? What, sir?
POLITIC Make him rich, make him
a fortune.
He should not think<sup>o</sup> again. I would command it.
45 PEREGRINE As how?
POLITIC With certain projects<sup>o</sup> that I have—
Which I may not discover.<sup>o</sup>
PEREGRINE [aside] If I had
But one<sup>o</sup> to wager with, I would lay odds, now,
He tells me instantly.
POLITIC One is—and that
I care not greatly who knows—to serve the state
50 Of Venice with red herrings for three years,
And at a certain rate, from Rotterdam,<sup>8</sup>

Where I have correspondence. [He shows PEREGRINE a paper.]

There's a letter

Sent me from one o'th'States,<sup>o</sup> and to that purpose;
He cannot write his name, but that's his mark.

55

PEREGRINE [examining the paper] He is a chandler?<sup>9</sup>

POLITIC

No, a cheesemonger.

There are some other<sup>o</sup> too, with whom I treat<sup>o</sup>
About the same negotiation;

And I will undertake it, for 'tis thus 60

I'll do't with ease; I've cast it all.<sup>o</sup> Your hoy<sup>1</sup>

Carries but three men in her and a boy,

And she shall make me three returns<sup>o</sup> a year.

So if there come but one of three, I save;<sup>o</sup>

If two, I can defalk.<sup>o</sup> But this is, now,

If my main project fail.

65

PEREGRINE Then you have others?

POLITIC I should be loath to draw<sup>o</sup> the subtle air

Of such a place without my thousand aims.

I'll not dissemble, sir: where'er I come,

I love to be considerative;<sup>o</sup> and 'tis true

70

I have at my free hours thought upon

Some certain goods<sup>o</sup> unto the state of Venice,

Which I do call my cautions,<sup>o</sup> and, sir, which

I mean, in hope of pension,<sup>o</sup> to propound

To the Great Council, then unto the Forty,

75

So to the Ten.<sup>2</sup> My means<sup>o</sup> are made already—

PEREGRINE By whom?

POLITIC

Sir, one that though his place

b'obscure,

Yet he can sway and they will hear him. He's

A commendatore.

PEREGRINE What, a common sergeant?

POLITIC Sir, such as they are put it in their mouths

80 What they should say, sometimes, as well as greater.<sup>3</sup>
 I think I have my notes to show you—
 [He searches in his garments.]
 PEREGRINE Good, sir.
 POLITIC But you shall swear unto me on your gentry<sup>o</sup>
 Not to anticipate—
 PEREGRINE I, sir?
 POLITIC Nor reveal
 A circumstance—My paper is not with me.
 PEREGRINE Oh, but you can remember, sir.
 POLITIC My first is 85 Concerning tinderboxes.<sup>o</sup> You must know
 No family is here without its box.
 Now, sir, it being so portable a thing,
 Put case<sup>o</sup> that you or I were ill affected<sup>o</sup>
 Unto the state; sir, with it in our pockets
 90 Might not I go into the Arsenale?<sup>4</sup>
 Or you? Come out again? And none the wiser?
 PEREGRINE Except yourself, sir.
 POLITIC Go to,<sup>o</sup> then. I therefore Advertise to<sup>o</sup> the state how fit it were
 That none but such as were known patriots,
 95 Sound lovers of their country, should be suffered T'enjoy them<sup>o</sup> in their houses, and even those Sealed<sup>o</sup> at some office, and at such a bigness
 As might not lurk in pockets.
 PEREGRINE Admirable!
 POLITIC My next is, how t'inquire and be resolved<sup>o</sup>
 100 By present<sup>o</sup> demonstration whether a ship Newly arrived from Syria, or from Any suspected part of all the Levant,<sup>o</sup>
 Be guilty of the plague. And where they use<sup>o</sup>
 To lie out<sup>o</sup> forty, fifty days sometimes 105

PEREGRINE Pray you, Sir Pol.
 POLITIC I have 'em<sup>o</sup> not about me.
 PEREGRINE That I feared.
 They are there, sir? [He indicates a book POLITIC is holding.]
 POLITIC No, this is my diary,
 Wherein I note my actions of the day.<sup>9</sup>
 PEREGRINE Pray you, let's see, sir. What is here?
 135 [reading]
 "Notandum,<sup>o</sup>
 A rat had gnawn my spur leathers;<sup>o</sup> notwithstanding
 I put on new and did go forth, but first
 I threw three beans over the threshold.<sup>o</sup> Item,
 I went and bought two toothpicks, whereof one
 I burst immediately in a discourse
 140 With a Dutch merchant, 'bout ragion' del stato.<sup>o</sup>
 From him I went, and paid a moccinigo<sup>o</sup>
 For piecing<sup>o</sup> my silk stockings; by the way
 I cheapened sprats,<sup>1</sup> and at Saint Mark's I urined."
 Faith, these are politic notes!
 POLITIC Sir, I do slip<sup>o</sup>
 145 No action of my life thus but I quote<sup>o</sup> it.
 PEREGRINE Believe me, it is wise!
 POLITIC Nay, sir, read forth.

Endnotes

- Note 1: I will not discuss those familiar ("old") topics: the language one ought to use or the clothes one ought to wear. In the next line, in an attempt at a joke, Peregrine deliberately misconstrues "your . . . clothes" to refer to his own apparel, but Politic does not get it. Return to reference 1
- Note 2: As for a traveler's bearing. Return to reference 2
- Note 3: An apparently trivial story subject to political allegorization. Return to reference 3

- Note 4: So that I might not be imposed upon. (“Be a saver” is a gambling term, meaning “to escape loss.”)Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Political theorists Niccolò Machiavelli (1469–1527) and Jean Bodin (1530–1596) argued that religious zeal was often politically inexpedient or divisive; as a result both were popularly thought to be atheists.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: An English translation of Gasparo Contarini’s important book, The Commonwealth and Government of Venice, was published in 1599.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: The usual Jews. (In Venice Jews served as moneylenders and pawnbrokers.)Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Venice, on the Adriatic Sea, had little need to import pickled fish from afar.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Candlemaker. (Evidently the paper is grease-stained.)Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Small vessel, not suitable for long voyages. Sir Pol’s scheme is thus obviously impractical.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: The Great Council was a large legislative group made up of wealthy Venetians; the Councils of Forty were much smaller groups that oversaw judicial affairs; the Council of Ten consisted of the elected Doge and his cabinet.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Common men, as well as those of higher status, may sometimes make suggestions to the government.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Shipyard where Venice built and repaired its naval vessels.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Quarantine hospital on an outlying island.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Onions were popularly supposed to absorb plague infection.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Perpetual-motion machines were popular attractions in early modern England, but Jonson regarded them contemptuously. Since Venice is in flat marshland, there are no waterfalls to harness there, as Sir Pol proposes.Return to reference 7

- Note 8: The Ottoman Turks, southeast of Venice along the Adriatic Sea, were maritime and religious rivals and a long-standing military threat.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Many Renaissance travel writers recommended that travelers keep a written record of their journeys.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Bargained over some small fish.Return to reference 1

Notes

- °: the mountebank episodeReturn to reference °
- °: as one who could giveReturn to reference °
- °: latitudeReturn to reference °
- °: inexperiencedReturn to reference °
- °: topics for adviceReturn to reference °
- °: accuseReturn to reference °
- °: guarded Return to reference °
- °: do notReturn to reference °
- °: foreignersReturn to reference °
- °: fellow countrymenReturn to reference °
- °: an Italian noveltyReturn to reference °
- °: compositionReturn to reference °
- °: statecraftReturn to reference °
- °: sees throughReturn to reference °
- °: ridicules; defraudsReturn to reference °
- °: household goodsReturn to reference °
- °: have to thinkReturn to reference °
- °: entrepreneurial schemesReturn to reference °
- °: revealReturn to reference °
- °: someoneReturn to reference °
- °: Dutch provincesReturn to reference °
- °: others Return to reference °
- °: dealReturn to reference °
- °: figured it all outReturn to reference °
- °: round tripsReturn to reference °

- °: break evenReturn to reference °
- °: pay off loansReturn to reference °
- °: breatheReturn to reference °
- °: analyticReturn to reference °
- °: benefitsReturn to reference °
- °: precautionsReturn to reference °
- °: financial rewardReturn to reference °
- °: contactsReturn to reference °
- °: gentleman's honorReturn to reference °
- °: for lighting firesReturn to reference °
- °: suppose Return to reference °
- °: disposedReturn to reference °
- °: impatient expressionReturn to reference °
- °: warnReturn to reference °
- °: tinderboxesReturn to reference °
- °: licensed; sealed shutReturn to reference °
- °: satisfiedReturn to reference °
- °: immediateReturn to reference °
- °: Middle EastReturn to reference °
- °: are accustomedReturn to reference °
- °: at anchorReturn to reference °
- °: understandReturn to reference °
- °: French coinsReturn to reference °
- °: a ship in questionReturn to reference °
- °: pay forReturn to reference °
- °: stretchReturn to reference °
- °: by means ofReturn to reference °
- °: as easy as can beReturn to reference °
- °: it (the onion)Return to reference °
- °: there's nothing to itReturn to reference °
- °: traitorousReturn to reference °
- °: warshipsReturn to reference °
- °: the notesReturn to reference °
- °: be it notedReturn to reference °
- °: lacesReturn to reference °
- °: for good luckReturn to reference °

- °: political expediencyReturn to reference °
- °: small coinReturn to reference °
- °: mendingReturn to reference °
- °: let passReturn to reference °
- °: without notingReturn to reference °

SCENE 2. *The scene continues.

[Enter] LADY [WOULD-BE], NANO, [and the two] WOMEN.

[They do not see POLITIC and PEREGRINE at first.]

LADY WOULD-BE     Where should this loose knight be, trow? Sure he's housed.

NANO Why, then he's fast.

LADY WOULD-BE me. Ay, he plays both o with

I pray you, stay. This heat will do more harm
To my complexion than his heart is worth.
I do not care to hinder, but to take<sup>o</sup> him.

5 [She rubs her cheeks.]

How it o comes off!

FIRST WOMAN [pointing] My master's yonder.

LADY WOULD-BE Where?

FIRST WOMAN      With a young gentleman.

LADY WOULD-BE                      That same's
the party,

In man's apparel!<sup>1</sup> [to NANO] Pray you, sir, jog my knight.

I will be tender to his reputation,

However he demerit. o

POLITIC [seeing her]      My lady!

PEREGRINE Where?

10       POLITIC   'Tis she indeed, sir; you shall know her. She is,

Were she not mine,<sup>2</sup> a lady of that merit
For fashion and behavior; and for beauty
I durst compare—

PEREGRINE                      It seems you are not jealous,
That dare commend her.

POLITIC                      Nay, and for discourse—

PEREGRINE Being your wife, she cannot miss<sup>o</sup> that.

POLITIC [introducing PEREGRINE]

Madam,

Here is a gentleman; pray you use him fairly.

He seems a youth, but he is—

LADY WOULD-BE

None?

POLITIC

Yes, one

Has<sup>o</sup> put his face as soon<sup>o</sup> into the world—

LADY WOULD-BE You mean, as early? But today

POLITIC

How's

20

this!

LADY WOULD-BE Why, in this habit,<sup>o</sup> sir; you apprehend<sup>o</sup> me.

Well, Master Would-be, this doth not become you;

I had thought the odor, sir, of your good name

Had been more precious to you, that you would not

Have done this dire massacre on your honor—

25

One of your gravity and rank besides!

But knights, I see, care little for the oath

They make to ladies, chiefly their own ladies.

POLITIC Now, by my spurs—the symbol of my kighthood—

30

PEREGRINE [aside] Lord, how his brain is humbled<sup>3</sup> for an oath!

POLITIC —I reach<sup>o</sup> you not.

LADY WOULD-BE

Right, sir, your polity<sup>o</sup>

May bear<sup>o</sup> it through thus. [to PEREGRINE] Sir, a word with you.

I would be loath to contest publicly

With any gentlewoman, or to seem 35

Froward<sup>o</sup> or violent; as The Courtier<sup>4</sup> says,

It comes too near rusticity<sup>o</sup> in a lady,

Which I would shun by all means. And however

I may deserve from Master Would-be, yet

T' have one fair gentlewoman<sup>o</sup> thus be made

40 Th'unkind instrument to wrong another,
 And one she knows not, ay, and to persevere,
 In my poor judgment is not warranted
 From being a solecism<sup>o</sup> in our sex,
 If not in manners.
 PEREGRINE How is this?
 POLITIC Sweet madam,
 Come nearer to your aim.<sup>o</sup>
 45 LADY WOULD-BE Marry, and will, sir.
 Since you provoke me with your impudence
 And laughter of your light land-siren<sup>5</sup> here,
 Your Sporus,<sup>6</sup> your hermaphrodite—
 PEREGRINE What's here?
 Poetic fury and historic storms!<sup>7</sup>
 50 POLITIC The gentleman, believe it, is of worth,
 And of our nation.
 LADY WOULD-BE Ay, your Whitefriars<sup>o</sup> nation!
 Come, I blush for you, Master Would-be, I,
 And am ashamed you should ha' no more forehead<sup>o</sup>
 Than thus to be the patron, or Saint George,<sup>8</sup>
 To a lewd harlot, a base fricatrice,<sup>o</sup>
 55 A female devil in a male outside.
 POLITIC [to PEREGRINE] Nay,
 An<sup>o</sup> you be such a one, I must bid adieu
 To your delights. The case appears too liquid.<sup>9</sup>
 [POLITIC starts to leave.] LADY WOULD-BE Ay, you may carry't clear, with your stateface!<sup>o</sup>
 But for your carnival concupiscence,<sup>o</sup>
 60 Who here is fled for liberty of conscience<sup>o</sup>
 From furious persecution of the marshal,<sup>1</sup>
 Her will I disc'ple.<sup>o</sup>
 [Exit POLITIC, LADY POLITIC accosts PEREGRINE.]
 PEREGRINE This is fine, i'faith!
 And do you use this<sup>o</sup> often? Is this part

65      Of your wit's exercise, 'gainst you have occasion?<sup>2</sup>
 Madam—
 LADY WOULD-BE      Go to,<sup>o</sup> sir.
 PEREGRINE                      Do you hear me, lady?
 Why, if your knight have set you to beg shirts,<sup>3</sup>
 Or to invite me home, you might have done it
 A nearer<sup>o</sup> way by far.
 LADY WOULD-BE              This cannot work you
 Out of my snare.
 70      PEREGRINE              Why, am I in it, then?
 Indeed, your husband told me you were fair,
 And so you are; only your nose inclines—
 That side that's next the sun—to the queen-apple.<sup>4</sup> LADY WOULD-BE      This cannot be endured by any patience.

Endnotes

- Note 1: Lady Would-be believes that Peregrine is the whore Mosca mentioned, in transvestite attire.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Even though I, her husband, say so.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Literally, "brought down" to his feet—where spurs, the appurtenances of a knight, are worn.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Baldassare Castiglione's famous handbook of gentility.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: The Sirens were mythical sea creatures who lured sailors to their deaths by sitting on dangerous rocks and singing irresistibly. (Lady Would-be refers to Peregrine.)Return to reference 5
- Note 6: A eunuch whom the emperor Nero dressed in drag and married.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Peregrine notes that even Lady Would-be's tantrums include literary allusions.Return to reference 7

- Note 8: Patron saint of England, often pictured rescuing a damsel from a dragon.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Obvious. (Sir Pol has become convinced that his wife is right in believing that Peregrine is a transvestite whore.)Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Official charged with punishing prostitutes. Lady Would-be thinks that Peregrine has dressed as a man to flee prosecution.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: To keep it ready for when it is really needed?Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Peregrine pretends to believe that Lady Would-be is tearing off his shirt in order to give it to her husband. Probably she is just trying to prevent his leaving.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: A bright red apple. See 3.4.15–16, where we learn that Lady Would-be is sensitive about her red nose.Return to reference 4

Notes

- °: do you suppose?Return to reference °
- °: in a brothelReturn to reference °
- °: fast-moving; secureReturn to reference °
- °: both fast and looseReturn to reference °
- °: catchReturn to reference °
- °: the makeupReturn to reference °
- °: deserves blameReturn to reference °
- °: lack (sarcastic)Return to reference °
- °: who hasReturn to reference °
- °: so youngReturn to reference °
- °: apparelReturn to reference °
- °: understandReturn to reference °
- °: comprehendReturn to reference °
- °: cunningReturn to reference °
- °: bluffReturn to reference °
- °: bad-temperedReturn to reference °

- °: ill breedingReturn to reference °
- °: PeregrineReturn to reference °
- °: improprietyReturn to reference °
- °: speak more clearlyReturn to reference °
- °: London brothel districtReturn to reference °
- °: shameReturn to reference °
- °: whoreReturn to reference °
- °: IfReturn to reference °
- °: dignified expressionReturn to reference °
- °: lecherous strumpetReturn to reference °
- °: licentious conductReturn to reference °
- °: disciplineReturn to reference °
- °: act this wayReturn to reference °
- °: impatient expressionReturn to reference °
- °: more directReturn to reference °

SCENE 3. *The scene continues.

[Enter] MOSCA.

MOSCA What's the matter, madam?

LADY WOULD-BE If the Senate<sup>o</sup>
Right not my quest<sup>o</sup> in this, I will protest 'em
To all the world no aristocracy.

MOSCA What is the injury, lady?

LADY WOULD-BE Why, the callet<sup>o</sup>
You told me of, here I have ta'en disguised.

5 MOSCA Who, this? What means Your Ladyship? The creature

I mentioned to you is apprehended now
Before the Senate. You shall see her—

LADY WOULD-BE Where?

MOSCA I'll bring you to her. This young gentleman,
I saw him land this morning at the port.

10 LADY WOULD-BE Is't possible! How has my judgment wandered!

[Releasing PEREGRINE] Sir, I must, blushing, say to you
I have erred,
And plead your pardon.

PEREGRINE What, more changes
yet?

LADY WOULD-BE I hope you ha' not the malice to remember

15 A gentlewoman's passion. If you stay
In Venice here, please you to use me,<sup>1</sup> sir—

MOSCA Will you go, madam?

LADY WOULD-BE Pray you, sir, use me. In faith,

The more you see me, the more I shall conceive
You have forgot our quarrel.

[Exeunt MOSCA, LADY WOULD-BE, NANO, and WOMEN.]

20 PEREGRINE This is rare!
Sir Politic Would-be? No, Sir Politic Bawd,
To bring me thus acquainted with his wife!
Well, wise Sir Pol, since you have practiced thus Upon my freshmanship,<sup>2</sup> I'll try your salt-head,
What proof<sup>o</sup> it is against a counterplot. [Exit.]

Endnotes

- Note 1: Make use of my services. (With a sexual innuendo continued in "The more you see me, the more I shall conceive" [line 18], where "conceive" means both "understand" and "conceive a child.")Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Taken advantage of my inexperience. (Peregrine apparently believes that Sir Pol has deliberately involved him in a humiliating setup. "Salt-head," following, plays on both "salt" meaning "seasoned," "old," and "salt" meaning "lecherous."Return to reference 2

Notes

- °: Venetian governmentReturn to reference °
- °: petitionReturn to reference °
- °: prostituteReturn to reference °
- °: how invulnerableReturn to reference °

SCENE 4. *The Scrutineo, or Court of Law, in the Doge's palace.

[Enter] VOLTORE, CORBACCIO, CORVINO, [and] MOSCA.

VOLTORE Well, now you know the carriage<sup>o</sup> of the business,
Your constancy is all that is required
Unto the safety of it.

MOSCA Is the lie
Safely conveyed<sup>o</sup> amongst us? Is that sure?
Knows every man his burden?<sup>o</sup>

CORVINO Yes.

5 MOSCA Then shrink
not.

CORVINO [aside to MOSCA] But knows the advocate the truth?

MOSCA [aside to CORVINO] Oh, sir,
By no means. I devised a formal<sup>o</sup> tale
That salved your reputation. But be valiant, sir.

CORVINO I fear no one but him,<sup>o</sup> that this his pleading

Should make him stand for a co-heir—

10 MOSCA Co-halter!<sup>1</sup>
Hang him, we will but use his tongue, his noise,
As we do Croaker's,<sup>o</sup> here.

CORVINO Ay, what shall he do?

MOSCA When we ha' done, you mean?

CORVINO Yes.

MOSCA Why, we'll think—

Sell him for mumma;<sup>2</sup> he's half dust already.

15 ([Aside] to VOLTORE) Do not you smile to see this buffalo,<sup>3</sup>

How he doth sport it with his head? [to himself] I
should,

If all were well and past. ([aside] to CORBACCIO) Sir,
 only you
 Are he that shall enjoy the crop<sup>o</sup> of all,
 And these not know for whom they toil.

CORBACCIO Ay, peace!

20 MOSCA ([aside] to CORVINO) But you shall eat it. [To himself]
 Much!<sup>o</sup> (then to VOLTRE again) Worshipful sir,
 Mercury<sup>4</sup> sit upon your thund'ring tongue,
 Or the French Hercules, and make your language
 As conquering as his club,<sup>5</sup> to beat along,
 As with a tempest, flat, our adversaries!
 [Aside to CORVINO] But much more yours,<sup>o</sup> sir.

25 VOLTRE Here they come. Ha' done.
<sup>o</sup>
 MOSCA I have another witness<sup>o</sup> if you need, sir,
 I can produce.

VOLTRE Who is it?

MOSCA Sir, I have her.

Endnotes

- Note 1: Playing on "halter," a hangman's noose, to suggest that both Corbaccio and Voltore are being duped. Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Powdered embalmed corpse, used medicinally. Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Corvino, with his cuckold's horns. Return to reference 3
- Note 4: May the god of rhetoric (and thieves). Return to reference 4
- Note 5: After his tenth labor, according to some legendary accounts, Hercules, aged by now but powerfully eloquent, fathered the Celts in Gaul, or France. He was traditionally pictured with a club. Return to reference 5

Notes

- °: managementReturn to reference °
- °: agreed uponReturn to reference °
- °: refrain, tuneReturn to reference °
- °: elaborateReturn to reference °
- °: VoltoreReturn to reference °
- °: Corbaccio'sReturn to reference °
- °: harvestReturn to reference °
- °: Sure you will!Return to reference °
- °: your adversariesReturn to reference °
- °: shut upReturn to reference °
- °: Lady Would-beReturn to reference °

SCENE 5. *The scene continues.

[Enter] four AVOCATORI, BONARIO, CELIA. Notario
[NOTARY], COMMENDATORI<sup>o</sup> [and other court officials].

FIRST AVOCATORE The like of this the Senate never heard of.

SECOND AVOCATORE 'Twill come most strange to them
when we report it.

FOURTH AVOCATORE The gentlewoman has been ever held
Of unreprieved name.

THIRD AVOCATORE So, the young man.

5 FOURTH AVOCATORE The more unnatural part that of his father.

SECOND AVOCATORE More of the husband.

FIRST AVOCATORE I not know to give

His act a name, it is so monstrous!

FOURTH AVOCATORE But the impostor,<sup>o</sup> he is a thing created

T'exceed example!<sup>o</sup>

FIRST AVOCATORE And all aftertimes!<sup>o</sup>

10 SECOND AVOCATORE I never heard a true voluptuary
Described but him.

THIRD AVOCATORE Appear yet those were cited?

NOTARY All but the old magnifico, Volpone.

FIRST AVOCATORE Why is not he here?

MOSCA Please Your

Fatherhoods,

Here is his advocate. Himself's so weak,

So feeble—

FOURTH AVOCATORE What are you?

15 BONARIO His parasite,

His knave, his pander! I beseech the court
 He may be forced to come, that your grave eyes
 May bear strong witness of his strange impostures.
 VOLTRE Upon my faith and credit with your virtues,
 He is not able to endure the air.
 20 SECOND AVOCATORE Bring him, however.
 THIRD AVOCATORE We will see
 him.
 FOURTH AVOCATORE Fetch him.
 [Exit officers.]
 VOLTRE Your Fatherhoods' fit pleasures be obeyed,
 But sure the sight will rather move your pities
 Than indignation. May it please the court,
 In the meantime he may be heard in me.
 25 I know this place most void of prejudice,
 And therefore crave it, since we have no reason
 To fear our truth should hurt our cause.
 THIRD AVOCATORE Speak free.
 VOLTRE Then know, most honored fathers, I must
 now
 30 Discover<sup>o</sup> to your strangely abused ears
 The most prodigious and most frontless<sup>o</sup> piece
 Of solid<sup>o</sup> impudence and treachery
 That ever vicious nature yet brought forth
 To shame the state of Venice. [indicating CELIA] This lewd woman,
 That wants<sup>o</sup> no artificial looks or tears
 35 To help the visor<sup>o</sup> she has now put on,
 Hath long been known a close<sup>o</sup> adulteress
 To that lascivious youth there [indicating BONARIO];
 not suspected,
 I say, but known, and taken in the act
 With him; and by this man, the easy<sup>o</sup> husband, 40 Pardoned; whose timeless<sup>o</sup> bounty makes him now Stand here, the most unhappy, innocent person

That ever man's own goodness made accused.<sup>1</sup>
 For these, not knowing how to owe<sup>o</sup> a gift
 Of that dear grace but<sup>o</sup> with their shame, being 45 placed
 So above all powers of their gratitude,<sup>2</sup>
 Began to hate the benefit, and in place
 Of thanks devise t'extirp<sup>o</sup> the memory
 Of such an act. Wherein I pray Your Fatherhoods
 To observe the malice, yea, the rage of creatures
 50 Discovered in their evils, and what heart<sup>o</sup>
 Such take even from their crimes. But that anon
 Will more appear. This gentleman, the father, [indicating CORBACCIO]
 Hearing of this foul fact,<sup>o</sup> with many others
 Which daily struck at his too tender ears,
 55 And grieved in nothing more than that he could not Preserve himself a parent—his son's ills<sup>o</sup>
 Growing to that strange flood—at last decreed
 To disinherit him.
 FIRST AVOCATORE      These be strange turns!
 SECOND AVOCATORE      The young man's fame<sup>o</sup> was ever 60 fair
 and honest.
 VOLTORE      So much more full of danger is his vice,
 That can beguile so under shade of virtue.
 But, as I said, my honored sires, his father
 Having this settled purpose, by what means
 To him<sup>o</sup> betrayed we know not, and this day
 65 Appointed for the deed, that parricide—
 I cannot style him better<sup>o</sup>—by confederacy
 Preparing this his paramour to be there,
 Entered Volpone's house—who was the man,
 Your Fatherhoods must understand, designed 70 For the inheritance—there sought his father.
 But with what purpose sought he him, my lords?

I tremble to pronounce it, that a son
Unto a father, and to such a father,
Should have so foul, felonious intent:
75 It was to murder him. When, being prevented
By his more happy<sup>o</sup> absence, what then did he?
Not check his wicked thoughts; no, now new deeds

—
Mischief doth ever end where it begins<sup>3</sup>—
An act of horror, fathers! He dragged forth
80 The agèd gentleman, that had there lain bedrid
Three years and more, out of his innocent couch;
Naked upon the floor there left him; wounded
His servant in the face, and with this strumpet,
The stale<sup>o</sup> to his forged practice,<sup>o</sup> who was glad 85 To be so active—I shall here desire
Your Fatherhoods to note but my collections<sup>o</sup>
As most remarkable—thought at once to stop
His father's ends,<sup>o</sup> discredit his free choice
In the old gentleman,<sup>o</sup> redeem themselves
90 By laying infamy upon this man<sup>o</sup>
To whom with blushing they should owe their lives.

FIRST AVOCATORE      What proofs have you of this?

BONARIO      Most
honored fathers,
I humbly crave there be no credit given
To this man's mercenary tongue.

SECOND AVOCATORE      Forbear.

95 BONARIO      His soul moves in his fee.

THIRD AVOCATORE      Oh, sir!

BONARIO      This
fellow,

For six sols<sup>o</sup> more, would plead against his Maker.

FIRST AVOCATORE      You do forget yourself.

VOLTORE      Nay, nay, grave
fathers,

Let him have scope. Can any man imagine
 That he will spare 's<sup>o</sup> accuser, that would not 100 Have spared his parent?
 FIRST AVOCATORE Well, produce your proofs.
 CELIA I would I could forget I were a creature!<sup>o</sup>
 VOLTRE [calling a witness] Signor Corbaccio!
 FOURTH AVOCATORE What is
 he?
 VOLTRE The father.
 SECOND AVOCATORE Has he had an oath?
 NOTARY Yes.
 CORBACCIO What must I do now?
 NOTARY Your testimony's craved.
 CORBACCIO [mis-hearing] Speak to the 105 knave?
 I'll ha' my mouth first stopped with earth! My heart
 Abhors his knowledge;<sup>o</sup> I disclaim in<sup>o</sup> him.
 FIRST AVOCATORE But for what cause?
 CORBACCIO The mere portent of nature.<sup>4</sup>
 He is an utter stranger to my loins.
 BONARIO Have they made you to this?
 CORBACCIO I will not hear
 110 thee,
 Monster of men, swine, goat, wolf, parricide!
 Speak not, thou viper.
 BONARIO Sir, I will sit down,
 And rather wish my innocence should suffer
 Than I resist the authority of a father.
 VOLTRE [calling a witness] Signor Corvino!
 SECOND AVOCATORE This is
 strange!
 FIRST AVOCATORE Who's this?
 115 NOTARY The husband.

FOURTH AVOCATORE            Is he sworn?

NOTARY He is.

THIRD AVOCATORE Speak, then.

CORVINO     This woman, please Your Fatherhoods, is a
               whore

Of most hot exercise, more than a partridge,<sup>5</sup>
Upon record<sub>o</sub>—

FIRST AVOCATORE      No more.

CORVINO Neighs like a jennet.o

NOTARY      Preserve the honor of the court.

120 CORVINO I shall,
And modesty of your most reverend ears.

And yet I hope that I may say these eyes
Have seen her glued unto that piece of cedar,
That fine well-timbered gallant,<sup>6</sup> and that here [Pointing to his forehead] The letters may be read, 125           thorough the horn,<sup>7</sup>

That make the story perfect. o

MOSCA [aside to CORVINO]      Excellent, sir!

CORVINO [aside to MOSCA] There is no shame in this,
now, is there?

MOSCA [aside to CORVINO]

None.

CORVINO [to the court] Or if I said I hoped that she were onward<sup>o</sup>

130 To her damnation, if there be a hell
Greater than whore and woman—a good Catholic
May make the doubt<sup>o</sup>—

THIRD AVOCATORE                      His grief hath made him frantic.

FIRST AVOCATORE    Remove him hence.    She [CELIA]
swoons.

SECOND AVOCATORE                      Look to the woman!

CORVINO [taunting her]

Rare!

Prettily feigned! Again!

FOURTH AVOCATORE Stand from about her.

FIRST AVOCATORE Give her the air.

THIRD AVOCATORE [to MOSCA] What can you say?

MOSCA My wound,

135 May't please Your Wisdoms, speaks for me, received
In aid of my good patron when he<sup>o</sup> missed
His sought-for father, when that well-taught dame
Had her cue given her to cry out a rape.

BONARIO Oh, most laid<sup>o</sup> impudence! Fathers—

THIRD AVOCATORE Sir, be silent.

140 You had your hearing free,<sup>o</sup> so must they theirs.

SECOND AVOCATORE I do begin to doubt th'imposture
here.

FOURTH AVOCATORE This woman has too many moods.

VOLTRE Grave fathers,
She is a creature of a most professed
And prostituted lewdness.

CORVINO Most impetuous!
Unsatisfied,<sup>o</sup> grave fathers!

145 VOLTRE May her feignings
Not take<sup>o</sup> Your Wisdoms! But<sup>o</sup> this day she baited
A stranger, a grave knight, with her loose eyes
And more lascivious kisses. This man<sup>o</sup> saw 'em
Together on the water in a gondola.

150 MOSCA Here is the lady herself that saw 'em too,
Without;<sup>o</sup> who then had in the open streets
Pursued them, but for saving her knight's honor.

FIRST AVOCATORE Produce that lady.

SECOND AVOCATORE Let her come.

[Exit MOSCA.]

FOURTH AVOCATORE These things,

They strike with wonder!

THIRD AVOCATORE

I am turned a stone!

Endnotes

- Note 1: That ever had his own goodness turned against him.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Since the rare value of Corvino's forgiveness was so far beyond their powers of gratitude.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Wickedness is always persistent.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: A completely monstrous birth. (A deformed child was often considered to be a portent, or evil omen.)Return to reference 4
- Note 5: A bird capable of numerous consecutive sexual acts and so a byword for lechery.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Corvino sarcastically compliments Bonario as a strapping fellow to whom Celia no doubt wishes to cling. The cedars of the Middle East are tall and stately.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Children learned to read the alphabet from pages protected by transparent sheets of horn. (With an allusion to the cuckold's horn.)Return to reference 7

Notes

- °: law court deputiesReturn to reference °
- °: VolponeReturn to reference °
- °: precedentReturn to reference °
- °: later erasReturn to reference °
- °: revealReturn to reference °
- °: shamelessReturn to reference °
- °: completeReturn to reference °
- °: who lacksReturn to reference °
- °: (weeping) maskReturn to reference °
- °: secret; intimateReturn to reference °

- °: lenientReturn to reference °
- °: unseasonable; endlessReturn to reference °
- °: acknowledgeReturn to reference °
- °: other thanReturn to reference °
- °: to extirpate, wipe outReturn to reference °
- °: audacityReturn to reference °
- °: deedReturn to reference °
- °: evil deedsReturn to reference °
- °: reputationReturn to reference °
- °: BonarioReturn to reference °
- °: give him a better nameReturn to reference °
- °: Corbaccio's fortunateReturn to reference °
- °: decoy Return to reference °
- °: plotReturn to reference °
- °: deductionsReturn to reference °
- °: aimsReturn to reference °
- °: VolponeReturn to reference °
- °: CorvinoReturn to reference °
- °: halfpenniesReturn to reference °
- °: spare hisReturn to reference °
- °: living beingReturn to reference °
- °: knowing him Return to reference °
- °: disavowReturn to reference °
- °: as is well attestedReturn to reference °
- °: mare (in heat)Return to reference °
- °: completeReturn to reference °
- °: well on her wayReturn to reference °
- °: may wonderReturn to reference °
- °: BonarioReturn to reference °
- °: premeditatedReturn to reference °
- °: uninterruptedReturn to reference °
- °: insatiableReturn to reference °
- °: take in Return to reference °
- °: onlyReturn to reference °
- °: MoscaReturn to reference °
- °: waiting outsideReturn to reference °

SCENE 6. *The scene continues.

[Enter] MOSCA [and] LADY [WOULD-BE].

MOSCA Be resolute, madam.

LADY WOULD-BE Ay, this same is she.

[To CELIA] Out, thou chameleon<sup>o</sup> harlot! Now thine eyes

Vie tears with the hyena.<sup>1</sup> Dar'st thou look Upon my wrongèd face? [to the AVOCATORI] I cry<sup>o</sup> your pardons.

5 I fear I have forgettingly transgressed
Against the dignity of the court—

SECOND AVOCATORE No, madam.

LADY WOULD-BE And been exorbitant<sup>o</sup>—

SECOND AVOCATORE You have not, lady.

FOURTH AVOCATORE These proofs are strong.

LADY WOULD-BE Surely, I had no purpose

To scandalize your honors, or my sex's.

THIRD AVOCATORE We do believe it.

10 LADY WOULD-BE Surely, you may believe it.

SECOND AVOCATORE Madam, we do.

LADY WOULD-BE Indeed, you may. My breeding

Is not so coarse—

FOURTH AVOCATORE We know it.

LADY WOULD-BE —to offend

With pertinacy<sup>o</sup>—

THIRD AVOCATORE Lady—

LADY WOULD-BE —such a presence;

No, surely.

FIRST AVOCATORE We well think it.

LADY WOULD-BE You may think it.
FIRST AVOCATORE [to the other AVOCATORI] Let her o'ercome.<sup>1</sup>
[To CELIA and BONARIO] What witnesses have you
To make good your report?
BONARIO Our consciences.
CELIA And heaven, that never fails the innocent.
FOURTH AVOCATORE These are no testimonies.
BONARIO Not in your courts,
Where multitude and clamor overcomes.
FIRST AVOCATORE Nay, then, you do wax insolent.
VOLPONE is brought in [on a litter], as impotent.<sup>2</sup>
[LADY WOULD-BE embraces him.]<sup>3</sup>
VOLTORE
Here, here
The testimony comes that will convince
And put to utter dumbness their bold tongues.
See here, grave fathers, here's the ravisher,
The rider on men's wives, the great impostor,
The grand voluptuary! Do you not think
These limbs should affect ventry?<sup>4</sup> Or these eyes
Covet a concubine? Pray you, mark these hands:
Are they not fit to stroke a lady's breasts?
Perhaps he doth dissemble?
BONARIO So he does.
VOLTORE Would you ha' him tortured?
BONARIO I would have him proved.<sup>5</sup>
VOLTORE Best try him, then, with goads or burning irons;
Put him to the strappado.<sup>6</sup> I have heard
The rack<sup>7</sup> hath cured the gout; faith, give it him
And help him of a malady; be courteous.
I'll undertake, before these honored fathers,

35 He shall have yet as many left<sup>o</sup> diseases
As she has known adulterers, or thou strumpets.
O my most equal<sup>o</sup> hearers, if these deeds,
Acts of this bold and most exorbitant strain,
May pass with sufferance,<sup>o</sup> what one citizen
40 But owes the forfeit of his life, yea, fame
To him that dares traduce him?<sup>6</sup> Which of you
Are safe, my honored fathers? I would ask,
With leave of Your grave Fatherhoods, if their plot
Have any face or color like to truth?
45 Or if unto the dullest nostril here
It smell not rank and most abhorred slander?
I crave your care of this good gentleman,
Whose life is much endangered by their fable;
And as for them, I will conclude with this:
50 That vicious persons, when they are hot, and fleshed<sup>z</sup>

In impious acts, their constancy<sup>o</sup> abounds.
Damned deeds are done with greatest confidence.
FIRST AVOCATORE Take 'em to custody, and sever
them.

55 SECOND AVOCATORE 'Tis pity two such prodigies<sup>o</sup> should live.

[Exeunt CELIA and BONARIO, guarded.]

FIRST AVOCATORE Let the old gentleman be returned with care.

I'm sorry our credulity wronged him.

[Exeunt litter-bearers with VOLPONE.]

FOURTH AVOCATORE These are two creatures!<sup>o</sup>

THIRD AVOCATORE I have an earthquake in me!

SECOND AVOCATORE Their shame, even in their cradles, fled their faces.

60 FOURTH AVOCATORE [to VOLTORE] You've done a worthy service to the state, sir,

In their discovery.

FIRST AVOCATORE You shall hear ere night
What punishment the court decrees upon 'em.

VOLTORE We thank Your Fatherhoods.

[Exeunt AVOCATORI, NOTARY, COMMENDATORI.]

[To MOSCA] How like you it?

MOSCA

Rare!

I'd ha' your tongue, sir, tipped with gold for this;
I'd ha' you be the heir to the whole city;
65 The earth I'd have want men ere you want living.<sup>o</sup>
They're bound to erect your statue in Saint Mark's.—
Signor Corvino, I would have you go
And show yourself,<sup>8</sup> that you have conquered.

CORVINO Yes.

70 MOSCA [aside to CORVINO] It was much better that you should profess

Yourself a cuckold thus, than that the other<sup>9</sup>
Should have been proved.

CORVINO Nay, I considered that.
Now it is her fault.

MOSCA Then it had been yours.

CORVINO True. I do doubt this advocate still.

MOSCA I'faith,
You need not; I dare ease you of that care.

75 CORVINO I trust thee, Mosca.

MOSCA As your own soul, sir.

[Exit CORVINO.]

CORBACCIO

Mosca!

MOSCA Now for your business, sir.

CORBACCIO How? Ha' you
business?

MOSCA Yes, yours, sir.
 CORBACCIO Oh, none else?
 MOSCA None else, not
 I.
 CORBACCIO Be careful, then.
 MOSCA Rest you with both your eyes,<sup>o</sup> sir.
 CORBACCIO Dispatch it.<sup>1</sup>
 MOSCA Instantly.
 CORBACCIO And look that all
 80 Whatever be put in: jewels, plate, moneys,
 Household stuff, bedding, curtains.
 MOSCA Curtain rings,
 sir.
 Only the advocate's fee must be deducted.
 CORBACCIO I'll pay him, now; you'll be too prodigal.
 MOSCA Sir, I must tender<sup>o</sup> it.
 CORBACCIO Two cecchines is well?
 85 MOSCA No, six, sir.
 CORBACCIO 'Tis too much.
 MOSCA He talked a great
 while,
 You must consider that, sir.
 CORBACCIO [giving money] Well, there's three—
 MOSCA I'll give it him.
 CORBACCIO Do so, and [he tips MOSCA]
 there's for thee.
 [Exit CORBACCIO.]
 MOSCA [aside] Bountiful bones! What horrid strange offense
 Did he commit 'gainst nature in his youth 90 Worthy this age?<sup>2</sup> [to VOLTORE] You see, sir, how I
 work
 Unto your ends; take you no notice.<sup>o</sup>
 VOLTORE No,

I'll leave you.
 MOSCA All is yours, [Exit
 VOLTRE.]
 [aside] the devil and all,
 Good advocate! [to LADY WOULD-BE] Madam, I'll bring you home.
 LADY WOULD-BE No, I'll go see your patron.
 MOSCA That you
 95 shall not.
 I'll tell you why. My purpose is to urge
 My patron to reform<sup>o</sup> his will; and, for
 The zeal you've shown today, whereas before
 You were but third or fourth, you shall be now
 Put in the first, which would appear as begged 100 If you were present. Therefore—
 LADY WOULD-BE You shall sway me.
 [Exeunt.]

Endnotes

- Note 1: A symbol of treachery, the hyena was supposed to be able to change its sex and the color of its eyes at will and to imitate human voices.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Delight in sexual activity.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Tested for impotence, a regular court procedure in some divorce and rape cases. (Torture was another method sometimes used to extract confessions.)Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Torture in which the victim's arms were tied behind his back; he was then hoisted up by the wrists and dropped.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Torture instrument that stretched the victim to the point of dislocating his joints.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: What citizen is there whose life and reputation might not be forfeit to a slanderer?Return to reference 6

- Note 7: Excited by the taste of blood, like hunting hounds.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Appear in public. (To indicate that he is not ashamed of having admitted to being a cuckold.)Return to reference 8
- Note 9: The attempt to prostitute Celia to Volpone.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: That is, Hurry to make Volpone's will, since Corbaccio has already delivered on his half of the promise.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: To deserve this old age.Return to reference 2

Notes

- °: deceitfully changeableReturn to reference °
- °: begReturn to reference °
- °: excessiveReturn to reference °
- °: stubborn resolutionReturn to reference °
- °: have the last wordReturn to reference °
- °: disabledReturn to reference °
- °: (see 5.2.97)Return to reference °
- °: remainingReturn to reference °
- °: impartialReturn to reference °
- °: be permittedReturn to reference °
- °: resolutenessReturn to reference °
- °: monstersReturn to reference °
- °: monstersReturn to reference °
- °: lack incomeReturn to reference °
- °: rest assuredReturn to reference °
- °: presentReturn to reference °
- °: leave it to meReturn to reference °
- °: reviseReturn to reference °

Act 5

SCENE 1. VOLPONE'S house.

[Enter] VOLPONE [attended].

VOLPONE Well, I am here, and all this brunt<sup>o</sup> is past.
I ne'er was in dislike with my disguise
Till this fled<sup>o</sup> moment; here 'twas good, in private,
But, in your public—cave<sup>o</sup> whilst I breathe.
Fore God, my left leg 'gan to have the cramp,
5 And I apprehended straight<sup>o</sup> some power had struck
me
With a dead palsy.<sup>o</sup> Well, I must be merry
And shake it off. A many of these fears
Would put me into some villainous disease,
Should they come thick upon me. I'll prevent 'em.
10 Give me a bowl of lusty wine to fright
This humor from my heart.<sup>1</sup>—Hum, hum, hum! He drinks.
'Tis almost gone already; I shall conquer,<sup>o</sup>
Any device, now, of rare ingenious knavery,
That would possess me with a violent laughter, 15 Would make me up<sup>o</sup> again. So, so, so, so. Drinks again.
This heat is life; 'tis blood by this time. [calling]
Mosca!

Endnotes

- Note 1: Wine was supposed to convert quickly to blood (see line 17), thus giving courage to the drinker.Return to reference 1

Notes

- <sup>o</sup>: crisisReturn to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: pastReturn to reference <sup>o</sup>

- °: watch outReturn to reference °
- °: thought at onceReturn to reference °
- °: paralysisReturn to reference °
- °: overcome my fearsReturn to reference °
- °: restore meReturn to reference °

SCENE 2. *The scene continues.

[Enter] MOSCA.

MOSCA How now, sir? Does the day look clear
again?

Are we recovered and wrought out of error
Into our way, to see our path before us?
Is our trade free once more?

VOLPONE Exquisite Mosca!

MOSCA Was it not carried learnedly?

5 VOLPONE And stoutly.°
Good wits are greatest in extremities.

MOSCA It were a folly beyond thought to trust
Any grand act unto a cowardly spirit.

10 You are not taken with it enough, methinks?
VOLPONE Oh, more than if I had enjoyed the wench!
The pleasure of all womankind's not like it.

MOSCA Why, now you speak, sir. We must here be fixed;

Here we must rest. This is our masterpiece.
We cannot think to go beyond this.

VOLPONE True,
Th'hast played thy prize,<sup>1</sup> my precious Mosca.

15 MOSCA Nay,
sir,
To gull° the court—

VOLPONE And quite divert the torrent
Upon the innocent.

MOSCA Yes, and to make
So rare a music out of discords<sup>2</sup>—

20 VOLPONE Right.
That yet to me's the strangest, how th'ast borne it!°
That these,° being so divided 'mongst themselves,
Should not scent° somewhat, or° in me or thee,

Or doubt their own side.°

MOSCA True, they will not see't.

Too much light blinds 'em, I think. Each of 'em
Is so possessed and stuffed with his own hopes
That anything unto the contrary,

25 Never so true or never so apparent,
Never so palpable, they will resist it—

VOLPONE Like a temptation of the devil.

MOSCA Right, sir.

Merchants may talk of trade, and your great signors
Of land that yields well; but if Italy

30 Have any glebe° more fruitful than these fellows,
I am deceived. Did not your advocate rare?°

VOLPONE Oh!—"My most honored fathers, my grave
fathers,

Under correction of Your Fatherhoods,
What face of truth is here? If these strange deeds
May pass, most honored fathers"—I had much ado
To forbear laughing.

35

MOSCA 'T seemed to me you sweat,°
sir.

VOLPONE In troth, I did a little.

MOSCA But confess, sir,
Were you not daunted?

VOLPONE In good faith, I was

A little in a mist,° but not dejected;°

40 Never but still myself.

MOSCA I think° it, sir.

Now, so truth help me, I must needs say this, sir,
And out of conscience for your advocate:

He's taken pains, in faith, sir, and deserved,
In my poor judgment—I speak it under favor,°

45 Not to contrary° you, sir—very richly—
Well—to be cozened.°

VOLPONE Troth, and I think so too,
By that° I heard him° in the latter end.

MOSCA Oh, but before, sir! Had you heard him first Draw it to certain heads, then aggravate,<sup>3</sup>
 50 Then use his vehement figures<sup>o</sup>—I looked still
 When he would shift<sup>4</sup> a shirt; and doing this
 Out of pure love, no hope of gain—
 VOLPONE 'Tis right.
 I cannot answer<sup>o</sup> him, Mosca, as I would,
 Not yet; but for thy sake, at thy entreaty
 55 I will begin ev'n now to vex 'em all,
 This very instant.
 MOSCA Good, sir.
 VOLPONE Call the dwarf
 And eunuch forth.
 MOSCA [calling] Castrone, Nano!
 [Enter] NANO [and] CASTRONE.
 NANO Here.
 VOLPONE Shall we have a jig, now?
 MOSCA What you please, sir.
 VOLPONE [to CASTRONE and NANO]
 Go,
 60 Straight give out about the streets, you two,
 That I am dead. Do it with constancy,<sup>o</sup>
 Sadly, do you hear? Impute it to the grief
 Of this late slander. [Exeunt CASTRONE and NANO.]
 MOSCA What do you mean, sir?
 VOLPONE Oh,
 I shall have instantly my vulture, crow,
 Raven come flying hither on the news
 65 To peck for carrion, my she-wolf<sup>o</sup> and all,
 Greedy and full of expectation—
 MOSCA And then to have it ravished from their mouths?
 VOLPONE 'Tis true. I will ha' thee put on a gown<sup>5</sup>
 And take upon thee as<sup>o</sup> thou wert mine heir;
 70

Show 'em a will. Open that chest and reach Forth one of those that has the blanks.◊ I'll straight
Put in thy name.

MOSCA [fetching a blank will] It will be rare, sir.

VOLPONE Ay,
When they e'en gape, and find themselves deluded

—
MOSCA Yes.

75 VOLPONE And thou use them scurvily. Dispatch,
Get on thy gown.

[VOLPONE signs the will MOSCA has given him. MOSCA puts on a mourning garment.]

MOSCA But, what, sir, if they ask
After the body?

VOLPONE Say it was corrupted.

MOSCA I'll say it stunk, sir, and was fain◊ t'have it
Coffined up instantly and sent away.

80 VOLPONE Anything; what thou wilt. Hold, here's my will.

Get thee a cap, a count-book, pen and ink,
Papers afore thee; sit as thou wert taking
An inventory of parcels.◊ I'll get up
Behind the curtain on a stool, and hearken;
Sometime peep over, see how they do look,
85 With what degrees their blood doth leave their faces.
Oh, 'twill afford me a rare meal of laughter!

MOSCA Your advocate will turn stark dull◊ upon it.

VOLPONE It will take off his oratory's edge.

90 MOSCA But your clarissimo,◊ old round-back, he Will crump you◊ like a hog-louse with the touch.

VOLPONE And what Corvino?

MOSCA Oh, sir, look for him
Tomorrow morning with a rope and a dagger<sup>6</sup>
To visit all the streets; he must run mad.

95 My lady, too, that came into the court

To bear false witness for Your Worship—
VOLPONE Yes,
And kissed me 'fore the fathers, when my face
Flowed all with oils.°

MOSCA And sweat, sir. Why, your gold
Is such another° med'cine, it dries up
All those offensive savors! It transforms 100 The most deformèd, and restores 'em lovely,
As 'twere the strange poetical girdle.⁷ Jove
Could not invent t'himself a shroud more subtle
To pass Acrisius' guards.⁸ It is the thing
105 Makes all the world her grace, her youth, her beauty.
VOLPONE I think she loves me.
MOSCA Who? The lady, sir?
She's jealous of you.⁹
VOLPONE Dost thou say so?
[Knocking offstage.]
MOSCA Hark,
There's some already.
VOLPONE Look.
MOSCA [peeping out the door] It is the vulture.
He has the quickest scent.
VOLPONE I'll to my place,
Thou to thy posture.°
MOSCA I am set.
VOLPONE But, Mosca,
110 Play the artificer° now; torture 'em rarely.
[VOLPONE conceals himself.]

Endnotes

- Note 1: Professional fencers “played the prize,” that is, competed for purses and titles, in virtuoso displays of swordsmanship.Return to reference 1

- Note 2: To bring harmony out of various discordant elements was thought to be the highest achievement of art.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Arrange his material under various headings, then bring charges.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Change (because his efforts made him sweat).Return to reference 4
- Note 5: This must be the long black gown ordinarily worn by chief mourners, not the clarissimo's (aristocrat's) garment, which Mosca dons later in the scene and which constitutes a different kind of insult to Voltore, Corbaccio, and Corvino.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Traditional equipment of suicidal madmen, borne by the allegorical figure of Despair in Spenser's Faerie Queene 1.9 and by the revenger Hieronimo in The Spanish Tragedy.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: The girdle of Venus, the goddess of love, made its wearer irresistible.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: King Acrisius shut his daughter Danaë in a tower, but the god Jove came to her in a shower of gold.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: (1) Devoted to you; (2) covetous of your wealth.Return to reference 9

Notes

- °: resolutelyReturn to reference °
- °: hoodwinkReturn to reference °
- °: brought it offReturn to reference °
- °: these menReturn to reference °
- °: suspect Return to reference °
- °: eitherReturn to reference °
- °: positionReturn to reference °
- °: soilReturn to reference °
- °: do brilliantlyReturn to reference °

- °: sweated (with fear)Return to reference °
- °: uncertain Return to reference °
- °: overwhelmedReturn to reference °
- °: believeReturn to reference °
- °: with your permissionReturn to reference °
- °: contradictReturn to reference °
- °: cheatedReturn to reference °
- °: what Return to reference °
- °: him sayReturn to reference °
- °: figures of speechReturn to reference °
- °: repayReturn to reference °
- °: convictionReturn to reference °
- °: Lady Would-beReturn to reference °
- °: act as thoughReturn to reference °
- °: blank spacesReturn to reference °
- °: I was obligedReturn to reference °
- °: itemsReturn to reference °
- °: gloomyReturn to reference °
- °: aristocrat (Corbaccio)Return to reference °
- °: curl up on youReturn to reference °
- °: (see 4.6.20.1–2)Return to reference °
- °: so effective aReturn to reference °
- °: poseReturn to reference °
- °: artistReturn to reference °

SCENE 3. *The scene continues.

[Enter] VOLTRE.

VOLTRE How now, my Mosca?

MOSCA [pretending not to notice him, and reading from an inventory] "Turkey carpets, 9 nine"—

VOLTRE Taking an inventory? That is well.

MOSCA "Two suits of bedding, tissue"<sup>1</sup>—

VOLTRE Where's the will?

Let me read that the while.<sup>9</sup>

[Enter] CORBACCIO [on a litter].

CORBACCIO [to the litter-bearers] So, set me down And get you home. [Exeunt litter-bearers.]

VOLTRE Is he come now to trouble us?

5 MOSCA "Of cloth-of-gold, 2 two more"—

CORBACCIO Is it done, Mosca?

MOSCA "Of several velvets, 9 eight"—

VOLTRE [aside] I like his care.

CORBACCIO [to MOSCA] Dost thou not hear?

[Enter] CORVINO.

CORVINO Ha! Is the hour come, Mosca?

VOLPONE peeps from behind a traverse.<sup>9</sup>

VOLPONE [aside] Ay, now they muster.<sup>9</sup>

CORVINO What does the advocate here?

Or this Corbaccio?

CORBACCIO What do these here?

[Enter] LADY [WOULD-BE].

LADY WOULD-BE Mosca,

Is his thread spun?<sup>3</sup>

MOSCA

"Eight chests of linen"—

VOLPONE [aside]

Oh,

My fine Dame Would-be, too!

CORVINO

Mosca, the will,

That I may show it these, and rid 'em hence.

MOSCA "Six chests of diaper, four of damask"<sup>4</sup>—
there.

[He gives them the will.]

CORBACCIO Is that the will?

MOSCA

"Down beds and bolsters"—

VOLPONE [aside]

15

Rare!

Be busy still. Now they begin to flutter;

They never think of me. Look, see, see, see!

How their swift eyes run over the long deed

Unto the name, and to the legacies,

What is bequeathed them there—

MOSCA

"Ten suits of 20 hangings"<sup>5</sup>—

VOLPONE [aside]

Ay, i' their garters,<sup>5</sup> Mosca. Now their hopes

Are at the gasp.<sup>6</sup>

VOLTRE

Mosca the heir!

CORBACCIO

What's that?

VOLPONE [aside]

My advocate is dumb. Look to my merchant;

He has heard of some strange storm, a ship is lost,

He faints. My lady will swoon. Old glazen-eyes,<sup>6</sup>

25

He hath not reached his despair yet.

CORBACCIO

All these

Are out of hope; I'm sure the man.

CORVINO

But, Mosca—

MOSCA "Two cabinets"—

CORVINO Is this in earnest?
MOSCA "One
Of ebony"—
CORVINO Or do you but delude me?
MOSCA "The other, mother-of-pearl"—I am very 30 busy.
Good faith, it is a fortune thrown upon me—
"It<sub>o</sub>em, one salt<sub>o</sub> of agate"—not my seeking.
LADY WOULD-BE Do you hear, sir?
MOSCA "A perfumed box"—
pray you, forbear;
You see I am troubled<sub>o</sub>—"made of an onyx"—
LADY WOULD-BE How!
MOSCA Tomorrow or next day I shall be at leisure
35 To talk with you all.
CORVINO Is this my large hope's issue?<sub>o</sub>
LADY WOULD-BE Sir, I must have a fairer answer.
MOSCA
Madam!
Marry, and shall: pray you, fairly<sub>o</sub> quit my house.
Nay, raise no tempest with your looks, but hark you,
Remember what Your Ladyship offered me<sub>o</sub>
40 To put you in<sub>o</sub> an heir; go to, think on't,
And what you said e'en your best madams did
For maintenance,<sub>o</sub> and why not you? Enough.
Go home and use the poor Sir Pol, your knight, well,
For fear I tell some riddles.<sub>o</sub> Go, be melancholic.
45 [Exit LADY WOULD-BE.]
VOLPONE [aside] Oh, my fine devil!
CORVINO Mosca, pray you a word.
MOSCA Lord! Will not you take your dispatch hence
yet?
Methinks of all you should have been th'ex<sub>o</sub>ample.
Why should you stay here? With what thought?
What promise?

50 Hear you, do not you know I know you an ass?
And that you would most fain have been a wittol<sup>o</sup>
If fortune would have let you? That you are
A declared cuckold, on good terms?<sup>o</sup> This pearl, You'll say, was yours? Right. This diamond?
I'll not deny't, but thank you. Much here else?
55 It may be so. Why, think that these good works
May help to hide your bad. I'll not betray you.
Although you be but extraordinary<sup>o</sup>
And have it<sup>o</sup> only in title, it sufficeth.
Go home. Be melancholic too, or mad. [Exit
60 CORVINO.]
VOLPONE [aside] Rare, Mosca! How his villainy becomes him!
VOLTORE [aside] Certain he doth delude all these for
me.
CORBACCIO [finally making out the will] Mosca the heir?
VOLPONE [aside] Oh, his four eyes have found it!
CORBACCIO I'm cozened, cheated by a parasite-slave!
Harlot,<sup>z</sup> th'ast gulled me.
65 MOSCA Yes, sir. Stop your mouth,
Or I shall draw the only tooth is left.
Are not you he, that filthy covetous wretch
With the three legs,<sup>o</sup> that here, in hope of prey,
Have, any time this three year, snuffed about 70 With your most grov'ling nose, and would have hired
Me to the pois'ning of my patron? Sir?
Are not you he that have today in court
Professed the disinheriting of your son?
Perjured yourself? Go home, and die, and stink.
75 If you but croak a syllable, all comes out.

Away and call your porters. Go, go stink! [Exit
CORBACCIO.]

VOLPONE [aside] Excellent varlet!<sup>o</sup>

VOLTORE Now, my faithful

Mosca,
I find thy constancy—

MOSCA Sir?

VOLTORE Sincere.

MOSCA "A table
Of porphyry"—I mar'l<sup>o</sup> you'll be thus troublesome.

VOLTORE Nay, leave off now, they are gone.

MOSCA Why,
80 who are you?

What? Who did send for you? Oh, cry you mercy,<sup>o</sup>
Reverend sir! Good faith, I am grieved for you,
That any chance of mine should thus defeat
Your—I must needs say—most deserving travails.

85 But I protest, sir, it was cast upon me,
And I could almost wish to be without it,
But that the will o'th'dead must be observed.

Marry, my joy is that you need it not;
You have a gift, sir—thank your education—
90 Will never let you want, while there are men
And malice to breed causes.<sup>o</sup> Would I had
But half the like, for all my fortune, sir!
If I have any suits—as I do hope,

Things being so easy and direct,<sup>8</sup> I shall not—
I will make bold with your obstreperous<sup>o</sup> aid,
95 Conceive me, for your fee,<sup>9</sup> sir. In meantime You, that have so much law, I know, ha' the conscience

Not to be covetous of what is mine.
Good sir, I thank you for my plate;<sup>o</sup> 'twill help
To set up a young man.<sup>o</sup> Good faith, you look 100 As you were costive; best go home and purge, sir.

[Exit VOLTORE.]

VOLPONE [coming from behind the traverse] Bid him eat
lettuce<sup>o</sup> well. My witty mischief, Let me embrace thee! [He hugs MOSCA.] Oh, that I could now
Transform thee to a Venus!<sup>o</sup> Mosca, go, Straight take my habit of clarissimo<sup>1</sup>
105 And walk the streets; be seen, torment 'em more.
We must pursue as well as plot. Who would Have lost<sup>o</sup> this feast?
MOSCA I doubt<sup>o</sup> it will lose them.<sup>o</sup>
VOLPONE Oh, my recovery shall recover all.<sup>2</sup>
110 That I could now but think on some disguise
To meet 'em in, and ask 'em questions.
How I would vex 'em still at every turn!
MOSCA Sir, I can fit you.
VOLPONE Canst thou?
MOSCA Yes, I know
One o'the commendatori, sir, so like you,
Him will I straight make drunk, and bring you his 115 habit.
VOLPONE A rare disguise, and answering thy brain!<sup>o</sup>
Oh, I will be a sharp disease unto 'em.
MOSCA Sir, you must look for curses—
VOLPONE Till they burst!
The fox fares ever best when he is curst.<sup>o</sup>
[Exeunt.]

Endnotes

- Note 1: Sets of bedcovers and hangings, made of cloth with gold or silver threads interwoven. The fancy textiles Mosca mentions in this scene were extremely expensive to produce in the days before automation.Return to reference 1

- Note 2: Cloth made of gold threads.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Is he dead? (In Greek mythology, the Fates spin out the thread of a human being's life and cut it at the time of death.)Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Two kinds of costly textile with interwoven motifs. Diaper was linen with a diamond pattern; damask could be linen or silk with floral or other designs.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: "Go hang yourself in your own garters" was a common phrase of ridicule.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Corbaccio wears spectacles (see also line 63 below).Return to reference 6
- Note 7: A word used of wicked men as well as women.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: The situation being so straightforward.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: It being understood that I will pay you, of course.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Aristocrat. (By obeying this order, Mosca violates the sumptuary laws that restricted the wearing of distinctive high-status garments, such as the clarissimo's robe, to persons of the appropriate rank.)Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Volpone believes that by "undoing" his death, he will be able to resuscitate his scam.Return to reference 2

Notes

- °: Oriental rugsReturn to reference °
- °: while you're busyReturn to reference °
- °: separate velvet hangingsReturn to reference °
- °: curtainReturn to reference °
- °: assembleReturn to reference °
- °: tapestriesReturn to reference °
- °: last gaspReturn to reference °
- °: saltcellarReturn to reference °
- °: busyReturn to reference °

- °: outcomeReturn to reference °
- °: positivelyReturn to reference °
- °: implicitly, sexual favorsReturn to reference °
- °: your name in asReturn to reference °
- °: financial supportReturn to reference °
- °: secretsReturn to reference °
- °: led the wayReturn to reference °
- °: willing cuckoldReturn to reference °
- °: in good standingReturn to reference °
- °: in name onlyReturn to reference °
- °: the name of cuckoldReturn to reference °
- °: including his caneReturn to reference °
- °: servant; rascalReturn to reference °
- °: marvelReturn to reference °
- °: beg your pardonReturn to reference °
- °: lawsuitsReturn to reference °
- °: vociferousReturn to reference °
- °: (see 1.3.1–20)Return to reference °
- °: set up my householdReturn to reference °
- °: used as a laxativeReturn to reference °
- °: for Volpone's sexual useReturn to reference °
- °: missedReturn to reference °
- °: fearReturn to reference °
- °: as dupesReturn to reference °
- °: suiting your witReturn to reference °
- °: proverbial wisdomReturn to reference °

SCENE 4. *The WOULD-BES' house.

[Enter] PEREGRINE [in disguise, and] three MERCATORI [MERCHANTS].

PEREGRINE Am I enough disguised?

FIRST MERCHANT I warrant you.

PEREGRINE All my ambition is to fright him only.

SECOND MERCHANT If you could ship him away, 'twere excellent.

THIRD MERCHANT To Zante, or to Aleppo?<sup>1</sup>

PEREGRINE Yes, and ha' his

5 Adventures put i'th'book of voyages,<sup>2</sup>
And his gulled<sup>o</sup> story registered for truth?
Well, gentlemen, when I am in awhile,
And that you think us warm in our discourse,
Know<sup>o</sup> your approaches.

FIRST MERCHANT Trust it to our care.

[Exeunt MERCHANTS.]

[PEREGRINE knocks. A] WOMAN [servant answers the door].

10 PEREGRINE Save you, fair lady. Is Sir Pol within?

WOMAN I do not know, sir.

PEREGRINE Pray you, say unto him
Here is a merchant upon earnest business
Desires to speak with him.

WOMAN I will see, sir.

PEREGRINE Pray you.

[Exit WOMAN.]

I see the family is all female here.

[Enter WOMAN.]

15 WOMAN He says, sir, he has weighty affairs of state
That now require him whole;<sup>o</sup> some other time
You may possess<sup>o</sup> him.

PEREGRINE                                Pray you say again,
If those require him whole, these will exact him<sup>o</sup>
Whereof I bring him tidings.                                [Exit
WOMAN.]

What might be
His grave affair of state, now? How to make Bolognian sausages here in Venice, sparing
One o'th'ingredients?
[Enter WOMAN.]

WOMAN                      Sir, he says he knows
By your word "tidings" that you are no statesman,<sup>3</sup>
And therefore wills you stay.<sup>o</sup>

PEREGRINE Sweet, pray you return<sup>o</sup> him
25 I have not read so many proclamations
And studied them for words as he has done,
But—here he deigns to come.

[Enter] POLITIC.
[Exit WOMAN.]

POLITIC Sir, I must crave
Your courteous pardon. There hath chanced today
Unkind disaster 'twixt my lady and me,
And I was penning my apology
30 To give her satisfaction, as you came now.

PEREGRINE Sir, I am grieved I bring you worse disaster.

The gentleman you met at th'port today,
That told you he was newly arrived—

POLITIC Ay, was
A fugitive punk?_

PEREGRINE                      No, sir, a spy set on you;
35      And he has made relation to the Senate
That you professed to him to have a plot
To sell the state of Venice to the Turk. ◊

POLITIC Oh, me!

PEREGRINE For which warrants are signed by this time
To apprehend you, and to search your study
For papers—
POLITIC Alas, sir, I have none but notes
Drawn out of playbooks<sup>o</sup>—
PEREGRINE All the better, sir.
POLITIC And some essays. What shall I do?
PEREGRINE Sir, best
Convey yourself into a sugar-chest;
Or, if you could lie round, a frail were rare,<sup>4</sup>
And I could send you aboard.
POLITIC Sir, I but talked so,
For discourse sake merely.<sup>o</sup> They knock without.
PEREGRINE Hark, they are there!
POLITIC I am a wretch, a wretch!
PEREGRINE What will you do,
sir?
Ha' you ne'er a currant-butt<sup>o</sup> to leap into?
They'll put you to the rack; you must be sudden.
POLITIC Sir, I have an engine<sup>o</sup>—
THIRD MERCHANT [without] Sir Politic Would-be!
SECOND MERCHANT [without] Where is he?
POLITIC That I have thought upon beforetime.
PEREGRINE What is it?
POLITIC I shall ne'er endure the torture!
Marry, it is, sir, of a tortoiseshell, [producing the shell]
Fitted for these extremities. Pray you sir, help me.
Here I have a place, sir, to put back my legs—
Please you to lay it on, sir—with this cap
And my black gloves. I'll lie, sir, like a tortoise
Till they are gone.

PEREGRINE [laying the shell on POLITIC'S back] And call you this an engine?
 60 POLITIC Mine own device—good sir, bid my wife's women
 To burn my papers. [Exit PEREGRINE.]
They [the MERCHANTS] rush in.
 FIRST MERCHANT Where's he hid?
 THIRD MERCHANT We must
 And will, sure, find him.
 SECOND MERCHANT Which is his study?
 [Enter PEREGRINE.]
 FIRST MERCHANT What
 Are you, sir?
 PEREGRINE I'm a merchant, that came here
 To look upon this tortoise.
 THIRD MERCHANT How?
 FIRST MERCHANT Saint Mark!
 What beast is this?
 PEREGRINE It is a fish.
 SECOND MERCHANT [to POLITIC] Come out here!
 65 PEREGRINE Nay, you may strike him, sir, and tread upon him.
 He'll bear a cart.
 FIRST MERCHANT What, to run over him?
 PEREGRINE Yes.
 THIRD MERCHANT Let's jump upon him.
 SECOND MERCHANT Can he not go?°
 PEREGRINE He creeps, sir.
 FIRST MERCHANT [poking POLITIC] Let's see him creep.
 PEREGRINE
 No, good sir, you will hurt him.
 70 SECOND MERCHANT Heart! I'll see him creep, or prick his guts.
 THIRD MERCHANT [to POLITIC] Come out here!

PEREGRINE [aside to POLITIC] Pray you, sir, creep a little.

[POLITIC creeps.]

FIRST MERCHANT

Forth!

SECOND MERCHANT Yet further.

PEREGRINE [aside to POLITIC] Good sir, creep.

SECOND MERCHANT We'll see his legs.

They pull off the shell and discover<sup>o</sup> him.

THIRD MERCHANT Godso, he has garters!

FIRST MERCHANT Ay, and gloves!

SECOND MERCHANT

Is this

Your fearful tortoise?

PEREGRINE [revealing himself] Now, Sir Pol, we are even.

75

For your next project I shall be prepared.

I am sorry for the funeral of your notes, sir.

FIRST MERCHANT 'Twere a rare motion to be seen in Fleet Street!<sup>5</sup>

SECOND MERCHANT Ay, i'the term.

FIRST MERCHANT Or Smithfield, in the fair.<sup>6</sup>

THIRD MERCHANT Methinks 'tis but a melancholic sight!

80

PEREGRINE Farewell, most politic tortoise.

[Exeunt PEREGRINE and MERCHANTS.]

[Enter WOMAN.]

POLITIC

Where's

my lady?

Knows she of this?

WOMAN

I know not, sir.

POLITIC

Inquire.

[Exit WOMAN.]

Oh, I shall be the fable of all feasts,<sup>o</sup>
The freight of the gazetti, ship boys' tale,<sup>z</sup>
And, which is worst, even talk for ordinaries.<sup>o</sup>

[Enter WOMAN.]

85

WOMAN My lady's come most melancholic home,
And says, sir, she will straight to sea for physic.

POLITIC And I, to shun this place and clime forever,
Creeping with house on back, and think it well
To shrink my poor head in my politic shell.

[Exeunt.]

Endnotes

- Note 1: Zante is an island off Greece under Venetian control; Aleppo, a big trading center, is in Syria.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: An enlarged edition of Richard Hakluyt's Principal Navigations, Voyages, Traffics, and Discoveries of the English Nation was published in 1598–1600.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Government agent. (Sir Pol believes that a spy would use the word "intelligence.")Return to reference 3
- Note 4: If you could curl up, a fruit basket would be excellent.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Puppet shows, called "motions," were frequently performed on London's Fleet Street, adjacent to the Inns of Court, where attorneys were trained and cases were argued during the three law terms.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Smithfield, just northwest of London, was the site every August of Bartholomew Fair; puppet shows were a prime entertainment there.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Topic of the newspapers and the gossip of boys serving on board ships.Return to reference 7

Notes

- °: erroneousReturn to reference °
- °: makeReturn to reference °
- °: demand all his attentionReturn to reference °
- °: gain audience withReturn to reference °
- °: force him outReturn to reference °
- °: wishes you to waitReturn to reference °
- °: reply toReturn to reference °
- °: prostituteReturn to reference °
- °: (see 4.1.128–30)Return to reference °
- °: printed playsReturn to reference °
- °: just to be conversingReturn to reference °
- °: casket for currantsReturn to reference °
- °: contrivanceReturn to reference °
- °: walkReturn to reference °
- °: exposeReturn to reference °
- °: talk of the townReturn to reference °
- °: tavernsReturn to reference °

SCENE 5. VOLPONE'S house.

[Enter] VOLPONE [and] MOSCA, the first in the habit of a commendatore, the other, of a clarissimo.

VOLPONE Am I then like him?

MOSCA Oh, sir, you are he.
No man can sever you.

VOLPONE Good.

MOSCA But what am I?

VOLPONE 'Fore heav'n, a brave clarissimo; thou becom'st it!

Pity thou wert not born one.

MOSCA If I hold
My made one, 'twill be well.

5 VOLPONE I'll go and see
What news, first, at the court.

MOSCA Do so. [Exit
VOLPONE.]

My fox
Is out on his hole, <sup>1</sup> and ere he shall reenter
I'll make him languish in his borrowed case,
Except he come to composition with me.
[Calling] Androgyno, Castrone, Nano!

[Enter ANDROGYNO, CASTRONE, and NANO.]

10 ALL Here.
MOSCA Go recreate yourselves abroad; go sport.
[Exeunt ANDROGYNO, CASTRONE, and NANO.]

So, now I have the keys, and am possessed.
Since he will needs be dead afore his time,
I'll bury him or gain by him. I am his heir,
And so will keep me till he share at least.
15 To cozen him of all were but a cheat
Well placed; no man would construe it a sin.

Let his sport pay for't.° This is called the Fox Trap.
[Exit.]

Endnotes

- Note 1: Alluding to the children's game, fox-in-the-hole.Return to reference 1

Notes

- °: (see 5.3.104–15)Return to reference °
- °: distinguishReturn to reference °
- °: splendidReturn to reference °
- °: ofReturn to reference °
- °: disguiseReturn to reference °
- °: unless he makes a dealReturn to reference °
- °: outsideReturn to reference °
- °: in possessionReturn to reference °
- °: remainReturn to reference °
- °: for itselfReturn to reference °

SCENE 6. A street in Venice.

[Enter] CORBACCIO [and] CORVINO.

CORBACCIO They say the court is set.°

CORVINO We must maintain

Our first tale good, for both our reputations.

CORBACCIO Why, mine's no tale; my son would there have killed me.

CORVINO That's true; I had forgot. [aside] Mine is, I am sure.—

But for your will, sir.

5 CORBACCIO Ay, I'll come upon him
For that hereafter, now his patron's dead.

[Enter] VOLPONE [disguised].

VOLPONE Signor Corvino! And Corbaccio! Sir,
Much joy unto you.

CORVINO Of what?

VOLPONE The sudden good
Dropped down upon you—

CORBACCIO Where?

VOLPONE And none knows
how—

From old Volpone, sir.

10 CORBACCIO Out, arrant knave!

VOLPONE Let not your too much wealth, sir, make you furious.°

CORBACCIO Away, thou varlet!

VOLPONE Why, sir?

CORBACCIO Dost thou
mock me?

VOLPONE You mock the world, sir.<sup>1</sup> Did you not change° wills?

CORBACCIO Out, harlot!

15 VOLPONE [to CORVINO] Oh, belike you are the man,
 Signor Corvino? Faith, you carry it<sup>o</sup> well;
 You grow not mad withal. I love your spirit.
 You are not overleavened<sup>o</sup> with your fortune.
 You should ha' some would swell now like a wine-vat
 With such an autumn.<sup>o</sup> Did he gi' you all, sir?
 CORVINO Avoid,<sup>o</sup> you rascal!
 20 VOLPONE Troth, your wife has shown
 Herself a very<sup>o</sup> woman. But you are well;
 You need not care; you have a good estate
 To bear it out, sir, better by this chance—
 Except Corbaccio have a share?
 CORBACCIO Hence, varlet!
 25 VOLPONE You will not be aknow<sup>2</sup>n, sir; why, 'tis wise.
 Thus do all gamesters at all games dissemble.
 No man will seem to win.<sup>o</sup>
 [Exeunt CORBACCIO and CORVINO.]
 Here comes my vulture,
 Heaving his beak up i'the air and snuffing.

Endnotes

- Note 1: Volpone pretends to believe that Corbaccio is misleading people by refusing to admit to his good fortune.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: You prefer not to be recognized (as heir).Return to reference 2

Notes

- °: in sessionReturn to reference °
- °: insaneReturn to reference °
- °: exchangeReturn to reference °

- °: carry it offReturn to reference °
- °: too puffed upReturn to reference °
- °: harvestReturn to reference °
- °: go awayReturn to reference °
- °: typicalReturn to reference °
- °: admit he's winningReturn to reference °

SCENE 7. *The scene continues.

[Enter] VOLTORE.

VOLTORE [to himself] Outstripped thus by a parasite? A slave
Would run on errands, and make legs<sup>o</sup> for crumbs?
Well, what I'll do—

VOLPONE The court stays for<sup>o</sup> Your Worship.

I e'en rejoice, sir, at Your Worship's happiness,
And that it fell into so learnèd hands
5 That understand the fingering<sup>1</sup>—

VOLTORE What do you
mean?

VOLPONE I mean to be a suitor to Your Worship
For the small tenement, out of reparations<sup>2</sup>—
That at the end of your long row of houses
By the piscaria.<sup>o</sup> It was in Volpone's time,
10 Your predecessor, ere he grew diseased,
A handsome, pretty, customed<sup>o</sup> bawdy house
As any was in Venice—none dispraised<sup>3</sup>—
But fell with him; his body and that house
Decayed together.

VOLTORE Come, sir, leave your prating.<sup>o</sup>

15 VOLPONE Why, if Your Worship give me but your
hand,

That I may ha' the refusal,<sup>o</sup> I have done.

'Tis a mere toy to you, sir, candle-rents,<sup>4</sup>

As Your learned Worship knows—

VOLTORE What do I know?

20 VOLPONE Marry, no end of your wealth, sir, God decrease<sup>5</sup> it.

VOLTORE Mistaking knave! What, mock'st thou my misfortune?

VOLPONE    His<sup>o</sup> blessing on your heart, sir! Would
              'twere more.

              [Exit VOLTORE.]

Now, to my first<sup>6</sup> again, at the next corner.

Endnotes

- Note 1: That understand how to handle money.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: For the rental house in bad repair.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Not to disparage the others.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: (1) Revenue from deteriorating property; (2) "pin money," money for incidentals.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Instead of "increase".Return to reference 5
- Note 6: The ones I was taunting earlier, Corvino and Corbaccio.Return to reference 6

Notes

- °: curtsiesReturn to reference °
- °: awaitsReturn to reference °
- °: fish marketReturn to reference °
- °: much-patronizedReturn to reference °
- °: chatteringReturn to reference °
- °: right of first refusalReturn to reference °
- °: God'sReturn to reference °

SCENE 8. *The scene continues.

[Enter] CORBACCIO [and] CORVINO. [Enter] MOSCA, passant<sup>o</sup> [over the stage in clarissimo's attire,
and exit].

CORBACCIO See, in our habit! See the impudent varlet!

CORVINO That I could shoot mine eyes at him, like gunstones!<sup>o</sup>

VOLPONE But, is this true, sir, of the parasite?

CORBACCIO Again t'afflict us? Monster!

VOLPONE In good faith,
sir,

5 I'm heartily grieved a beard of your grave length<sup>o</sup>
Should be so overreached. I never brooked<sup>o</sup>
That parasite's hair; methought his nose should cozen.<sup>o</sup>

There still<sup>o</sup> was somewhat in his look did promise.
The bane<sup>o</sup> of a clarissimo.

CORBACCIO Knave—

VOLPONE [to CORVINO] Methinks

10 Yet you that are so traded<sup>o</sup> i'the world,
A witty merchant, the fine bird Corvino,
That have such moral emblems<sup>1</sup> on your name,
Should not have sung your shame and dropped your cheese,

To let the fox laugh at your emptiness.<sup>2</sup>

15 CORVINO Sirrah, you think the privilege of the place,<sup>3</sup>

And your red saucy cap, that seems to me
Nailed to your jolt-head with those two cecchines,<sup>4</sup>
Can warrant<sup>o</sup> your abuses. Come you hither.

You shall perceive, sir, I dare beat you. Approach!

VOLPONE No haste, sir, I do know your valor well,

- °: so wise an old manReturn to reference °
- °: could standReturn to reference °
- °: he had a cheating noseReturn to reference °
- °: alwaysReturn to reference °
- °: ruinReturn to reference °
- °: experiencedReturn to reference °
- °: sanctionReturn to reference °
- °: make publicReturn to reference °
- °: to withstandReturn to reference °

SCENE 9. *The scene continues.

[Enter] VOLTORE.

VOLTORE [to Mosca] Well, flesh fly, it is summer with you now;
Your winter will come on.

MOSCA Good advocate,
Pray thee not rail, nor threaten out of place<sup>o</sup> thus;
Thou'lt make a solecism,<sup>o</sup> as madam says.
Get you a biggin<sup>1</sup> more; your brain breaks loose.

5 VOLTORE Well, sir. [Exit
MOSCA.]

VOLPONE Would you ha' me beat the insolent slave?
Throw dirt upon his first good clothes?

VOLTORE This same<sup>o</sup>
Is doubtless some familiar!<sup>o</sup>

VOLPONE Sir, the court,
In troth, stays for you. I am mad<sup>o</sup> a mule
That never read Justinian<sup>2</sup> should get up 10 And ride an advocate. Had you no quirk<sup>o</sup>
To avoid gullage,<sup>o</sup> sir, by such a creature?
I hope you do but jest; he has not done't.
This's but confederacy to blind the rest.<sup>o</sup>
You are the heir?

VOLTORE A strange, officious,
15 Troublesome knave! Thou dost torment me.

VOLPONE I know

—
It cannot be, sir, that you should be cozened;
'Tis not within the wit of man to do it.
You are so wise, so prudent, and 'tis fit
That wealth and wisdom still should go together.

20 [Exeunt.]

Endnotes

- Note 1: A larger skullcap (worn by lawyers).Return to reference 1
- Note 2: The Roman law, codified under Emperor Justinian and still influential on the Continent. Lawyers traditionally rode mules to the courts; here the image is comically inverted.Return to reference 2

Notes

- °: unsuitablyReturn to reference °
- °: (see 4.2.43)Return to reference °
- °: the disguised VolponeReturn to reference °
- °: attendant devilReturn to reference °
- °: furious thatReturn to reference °
- °: trickReturn to reference °
- °: deceptionReturn to reference °
- °: Corvino and CorbaccioReturn to reference °

SCENE 10. *The law court.

[Enter] four AVOCATORI, NOTARIO [NOTARY], COMMENDATORI, BONARIO [and] CELIA [under guard],
CORBACCIO, [and] CORVINO.

FIRST AVOCATORE     Are all the parties here?

NOTARY     All but the advocate.

SECOND AVOCATORE     And here he comes.

FIRST AVOCATORE     Then bring 'em forth to sentence.

[Enter] VOLTORE, [and] VOLPONE [still disguised as a commendatore].

VOLTORE     O my most honored fathers, let your mercy

Once win upon<sup>o</sup> your justice, to forgive—
I am distracted—

VOLPONE (aside)     What will he do now?

5 VOLTORE     Oh,
I know not which t'address myself to first,
Whether Your Fatherhoods or these innocents<sup>o</sup>—

CORVINO [aside]     Will he betray himself?

VOLTORE     Whom equally

I have abused, out of most covetous ends—

CORVINO [aside to CORBACCIO]     The man is mad!

CORBACCIO     What's
that?

10 CORVINO     He is possessed.

VOLTORE     For which, now struck in conscience, here I prostrate

Myself at your offended feet for pardon.

[He throws himself down.]

FIRST AND SECOND AVOCATORI      Arise!
CELIA                                      O heav'n, how just thou art!

VOLPONE [aside]
caught
I' mine own noose—

CORVINO [aside to CORBACCIO]      Be constant, sir; naught now
Can help but impudence.      [VOLTORE
rises.]

FIRST AVOCATORE [to VOLTORE]    Speak forward. o

COMMENDATORI [to the courtroom]

15 Silence!

VOLTRE It is not passion<sup>o</sup> in me, reverend fathers,
But only conscience, conscience, my good sires,
That makes me now tell truth. That parasite,
That knave hath been the instrument of all.

SECOND AVOCATORE     Where is that knave? Fetch him.

VOLPONE [as commendatore] I go. [Exit.]

20 CORVINO Grave fathers,
This man's distracted; he confessed it now;
For, hoping to be old Volpone's heir,
Who now is dead—

THIRD AVOCATORE      How?

SECOND AVOCATORE                      Is Volpone dead?

CORVINO Dead since, o grave fathers—

BONARIO O sure vengeance!

FIRST AVOCATORE

Stay.

Then he was no deceiver?

25 VOLTRE Oh, no, none.
The parasite, grave fathers.

CORVINO    He does speak
Out of mere envy, 'cause the servant's made

The thing he gaped<sup>o</sup> for. Please Your Fatherhoods,
 This is the truth; though I'll not justify
 The other,<sup>o</sup> but he may be somedeal<sup>o</sup> faulty.
 30 VOLTRE Ay, to your hopes as well as mine, Corvino;
 But I'll use modesty.<sup>o</sup> Pleaseth Your Wisdoms
 To view these certain notes, and but confer<sup>o</sup> them.
 As I hope favor, they shall speak clear truth.
 [He gives documents to the AVOCATORI.]
 CORVINO The devil has entered him!
 BONARIO Or bides in you.
 35 FOURTH AVOCATORE We have done ill, by a public officer
 To send for him, if he be heir.
 SECOND AVOCATORE For whom?
 FOURTH AVOCATORE Him that they call the parasite.
 THIRD AVOCATORE
 'Tis true;
 He is a man of great estate now left.<sup>o</sup> 40 FOURTH AVOCATORE [to NOTARY] Go you and learn his name, and say the court
 Entreats his presence here but to the clearing
 Of some few doubts. [Exit
 NOTARY.]
 SECOND AVOCATORE This same's a labyrinth!
 FIRST AVOCATORE [to CORVINO] Stand you unto<sup>o</sup> your first report?
 CORVINO My
 state,<sup>o</sup>
 My life, my fame<sup>o</sup>—
 BONARIO Where is't?<sup>1</sup>
 CORVINO —are at the stake.
 FIRST AVOCATORE [to CORBACCIO] Is yours so too?
 45 CORBACCIO The
 advocate's a knave,
 And has a forkèd tongue—

50

- : prevail over Return to reference °
- : Celia and Bonario Return to reference °
- : continue Return to reference °
- : madness Return to reference °
- : just now Return to reference °
- : since his appearance here Return to reference °
- : Voltore yearned Return to reference °
- : Mosca Return to reference °
- : somewhat Return to reference °
- : self-control Return to reference °
- : compare Return to reference °
- : bequeathed to him Return to reference °
- : do you stand by Return to reference °
- : estate Return to reference °
- : reputation Return to reference °

SCENE 11. A street.<sup>1</sup>

[Enter] VOLPONE [on a separate part of the stage].

VOLPONE To make a snare for mine own neck! And run

My head into it willfully! With laughter!

When I had newly scaped, was free and clear!

Out of mere wantonness!° Oh, the dull devil

5 Was in this brain of mine when I devised it,

And Mosca gave it second. He must now

Help to sear up° this vein, or we bleed dead.

[Enter] NANO, ANDROGYNO, [and] CASTRONE.

How now, who let you loose? Whither go you now?

What, to buy gingerbread? Or to drown kitlings?°

10 NANO Sir, Master Mosca called us out of doors,

And bid us all go play, and took the keys.

ANDROGYNO Yes.

VOLPONE Did Master Mosca take the keys? Why, so!

I am farther in.° These are my fine conceits!°

I must be merry, with a mischief to me!

15 What a vile wretch was I, that could not bear

My fortune soberly! I must ha' my crotchets°

And my conundrums! Well, go you and seek him.

His meaning may be truer than my fear.²

Bid him he straight come to me, to the court.

20 Thither will I, and, if't be possible,

Unscrew° my advocate upon° new hopes.

When I provoked him, then I lost myself.

[Exeunt VOLPONE and his entourage. The AVOCATORI and parties to the courtroom proceedings remain onstage.]

Endnotes

- Note 1: The courtroom characters remain visible onstage, perhaps in silent tableau, while Volpone is understood to be outside.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Mosca's intentions may be truer (more loyal) than my fear is true (accurate).Return to reference 2

Notes

- °: capriceReturn to reference °
- °: cauterizeReturn to reference °
- °: kittensReturn to reference °
- °: in trouble Return to reference °
- °: notionsReturn to reference °
- °: perverse whimsReturn to reference °
- °: dissuade Return to reference °
- °: by means ofReturn to reference °

SCENE 12. The courtroom.

FIRST AVOCATORE [with VOLTORE 's notes] These things can ne'er be reconciled. He here
Professeth that the gentleman<sup>o</sup> was wronged,
And that the gentlewoman was brought thither,
Forced by her husband, and there left.

VOLTORE Most true.

CELIA How ready is heav'n to those that pray!

5 FIRST AVOCATORE But
that

Volpone would have ravished her, he holds
Utterly false, knowing his impotence.

CORVINO Grave fathers, he is possessed; again I
say,

Possessed. Nay, if there be possession
And obsession, he has both.

10 THIRD AVOCATORE Here comes our officer.
[Enter VOLPONE, still disguised.]

VOLPONE The parasite will straight be here, grave fathers.

FOURTH AVOCATORE You might invent some other name, sir varlet.

THIRD AVOCATORE Did not the notary meet him?

VOLPONE Not that
I know.

FOURTH AVOCATORE His coming will clear all.

SECOND AVOCATORE Yet it is misty.

VOLTORE May't please Your Fatherhoods—

15 VOLPONE (whispers [to] the advocate) Sir, the parasite

Willed me to tell you that his master lives,
That you are still the man, your hopes the same;

And this was only a jest—
 VOLTORE [aside to VOLPONE] How?
 VOLPONE [aside to VOLTORE] Sir, to try
 If you were firm, and how you stood affected.°
 VOLTORE Art sure he lives?
 VOLPONE Do I live,° sir?
 VOLTORE Oh, me!
 20 I was too violent.
 VOLPONE Sir, you may redeem it.
 They said you were possessed; fall down, and seem
 so.
 I'll help to make it good. VOLTORE falls.
 [Aloud] God bless the man!
 [Aside to VOLTORE] Stop your wind hard, and swell.!
 [Aloud]
 See, see, see, see!
 25 He vomits crooked pins! His eyes are set
 Like a dead hare's hung in a poulter's² shop!
 His mouth's running away!° [to CORVINO] Do you see,
 signor?
 Now 'tis in his belly.
 CORVINO Ay, the devil!
 VOLPONE Now in his throat.
 CORVINO Ay, I perceive it plain.
 VOLPONE 'Twill out, 'twill out! Stand clear. See where 30 it flies,
 In shape of a blue toad with a bat's wings!
 [To CORBACCIO] Do not you see it, sir?
 CORBACCIO What? I think I
 do.
 CORVINO 'Tis too manifest.
 VOLPONE Look! He comes t'
 himself!
 VOLTORE Where am I?

VOLPONE Take good heart; the worst is past, sir.
 You are dispossessed.
 35 FIRST AVOCATORE What accident<sup>o</sup> is this?
 SECOND AVOCATORE Sudden, and full of wonder!
 THIRD AVOCATORE If he were
 Possessed, as it appears, all this<sup>o</sup> is nothing.
 CORVINO He has been often subject to these fits.
 FIRST AVOCATORE Show him that writing. [To VOLTORE]
 Do you know it, sir?
 40 VOLPONE [aside to VOLTORE] Deny it, sir; forswear it;
 know it not.
 VOLTORE Yes, I do know it well, it is my hand;
 But all that it contains is false.
 BONARIO Oh, practice!<sup>o</sup>
 SECOND AVOCATORE What maze is this!
 FIRST AVOCATORE Is he not guilty,
 then,
 Whom you there name the parasite?
 VOLTORE Grave fathers,
 No more than his good patron, old Volpone.
 45 FOURTH AVOCATORE Why, he is dead!
 VOLTORE Oh, no, my honored fathers.
 He lives—
 FIRST AVOCATORE How! Lives?
 VOLTORE Lives.
 SECOND AVOCATORE This is subtler
 yet!
 THIRD AVOCATORE [to VOLTORE] You said he was dead?
 VOLTORE Never.
 THIRD AVOCATORE [to CORVINO] You said so?
 CORVINO I heard so.

FOURTH AVOCATORE     Here comes the gentleman; make him way.
[Enter MOSCA.]

THIRD AVOCATORE     A stool!

50     FOURTH AVOCATORE [aside]     A proper<sup>o</sup> man! And, were Volpone dead,
A fit match for my daughter.

THIRD AVOCATORE     Give him way.

VOLPONE [aside to MOSCA]     Mosca, I was almost lost; the advocate
Had betrayed all; but now it is recovered.
All's o'the hinge<sup>o</sup> again. Say I am living.

55     MOSCA [aloud]     What busy<sup>o</sup> knave is this? Most reverend fathers,
I sooner had attended your grave pleasures,
But that my order for the funeral
Of my dear patron did require me—

VOLPONE (aside)     Mosca!

MOSCA     Whom I intend to bury like a gentleman.

VOLPONE [aside]     Ay, quick,<sup>o</sup> and cozen me of all.<sup>3</sup>

60     SECOND AVOCATORE     Still stranger!
More intricate!

FIRST AVOCATORE     And come about<sup>o</sup> again!

FOURTH AVOCATORE [aside]     It is a match; my daughter is bestowed.

MOSCA [aside to VOLPONE]     Will you gi' me half?

VOLPONE [aside to MOSCA]     First, I'll be hanged.

MOSCA [aside to VOLPONE]
I know
Your voice is good. Cry not so loud.

FIRST AVOCATORE     Demand<sup>o</sup>
The advocate. [To VOLTRE] Sir, did not you affirm

65     Volpone was alive?

VOLPONE     Yes, and he is;

This gent'man told me so. [Aside to MOSCA] Thou shalt have half.

MOSCA Whose drunkard is this same? Speak, some that know him;

I never saw his face. (Aside to VOLPONE) I cannot now Afford it you so cheap.

VOLPONE [aside to MOSCA] No?

FIRST AVOCATORE [to VOLTORE] What say you?

70 VOLTORE The officer told me.

VOLPONE I did, grave fathers,
And will maintain he lives with mine own life,
And that this creature<sup>o</sup> told me. [aside] I was born
With all good stars my enemies.

MOSCA Most grave fathers,
75 If such an insolence as this must pass<sup>o</sup>
Upon me, I am silent. 'Twas not this
For which you sent, I hope.

SECOND AVOCATORE [pointing to VOLPONE] Take him away.

VOLPONE (aside to MOSCA) Mosca!

THIRD AVOCATORE Let him be whipped.

VOLPONE (aside to MOSCA) Wilt thou betray me?
Cozen me?

THIRD AVOCATORE And taught to bear himself
Toward a person of his<sup>o</sup> rank.

80 FOURTH AVOCATORE Away!
[Officers seize VOLPONE.]

MOSCA I humbly thank Your Fatherhoods.

VOLPONE Soft, soft.
[Aside] Whipped?

And lose all that I have? If I confess,
It cannot be much more.

FOURTH AVOCATORE [to MOSCA] Sir, are you married?

VOLPONE [aside] They'll be allied<sup>o</sup> anon; I must be resolute.
The fox shall here uncase.<sup>o</sup> He puts off his disguise.
MOSCA [aside] Patron!
VOLPONE Nay, now
85 My ruins shall not come alone. Your match
I'll hinder sure; my substance shall not glue you
Nor screw you into a family.
MOSCA [aside] Why, patron!
VOLPONE I am Volpone, and [pointing to MOSCA] this is my knave;
[Pointing to VOLTORE] This his own knave; [pointing to CORBACCIO] this, avarice's fool;
90 [Pointing to CORVINO] This, a chimera<sup>o</sup> of wittol, fool, and knave;
And, reverend fathers, since we all can hope
Naught but a sentence, let's not now despair it.<sup>o</sup>
You hear me brief.<sup>o</sup>
CORVINO May it please Your Fatherhoods
—
COMMENDATORE<sup>4</sup>
Silence!
95 FIRST AVOCATORE The knot is now undone by miracle!
SECOND AVOCATORE Nothing can be more clear.
THIRD AVOCATORE Or can more prove
These innocent.
FIRST AVOCATORE Give 'em their liberty.
[BONARIO and CELIA are released.]
BONARIO Heaven could not long let such gross crimes be hid.
SECOND AVOCATORE If this be held the highway to get riches,
May I be poor!
THIRD AVOCATORE This's not the gain, but torment.
100

[VOLPONE is placed under guard.]

125 VOLPONE This is called mortifying<sup>6</sup> of a fox.
FIRST AVOCATORE Thou, Voltore, to take away the scandal

Thou hast giv'n all worthy men of thy profession,
Art banished from their fellowship and our state.<sup>o</sup>

[VOLTORE is placed under guard.]

130 Corbaccio—bring him near.—We here possess
Thy son of all thy state,<sup>o</sup> and confine thee
To the monastery of San' Spirito,<sup>o</sup>
Where, since thou knew'st not how to live well here,
Thou shalt be learned<sup>o</sup> to die well.

CORBACCIO Ha! What said
he?

COMMENDATORE You shall know anon,<sup>o</sup> sir.

[CORBACCIO is placed under guard.]

135 FIRST AVOCATORE Thou, Corvino, shalt Be straight embarked from thine own house and rowed

Bound about Venice, through the Grand Canal,
Wearing a cap with fair<sup>o</sup> long ass's ears
Instead of horns, and so to mount, a paper
Pinned on thy breast, to the berlino<sup>7</sup>—

140 CORVINO Yes,
And have mine eyes beat out with stinking fish,
Bruised fruit, and rotten eggs—'Tis well. I'm glad
I shall not see my shame yet.

FIRST AVOCATORE And to expiate
Thy wrongs done to thy wife, thou art to send her Home to her father with her dowry trebled.<sup>8</sup>
And these are all your judgments—

145 ALL Honored fathers!
FIRST AVOCATORE Which may not be revoked. Now you begin,
When crimes are done and past and to be punished,

To think what your crimes are.—Away with them!

[MOSCA, VOLPONE, VOLTORE, CORBACCIO, and CORVINO retire to the back of the stage, guarded.]<sup>9</sup>

Let all that see these vices thus rewarded

150 Take heart,<sup>o</sup> and love to study 'em. Mischiefs feed Like beasts, till they be fat, and then they bleed.

[The AVOCATORI step back.]

[VOLPONE comes forward.]

VOLPONE The seasoning of a play is the applause

Now, though the fox be punished by the laws,

He yet doth hope there is no suff'ring due

155 Nor any fact<sup>o</sup> which he hath done 'gainst you.
If there be, censure him; here he, doubtful,<sup>o</sup> stands.

If not, fare jovially, and clap your hands.

[Exeunt.]

performed 1606 Endnotes

published 1616

- Note 1: The details of Voltore's dispossession in the following lines resemble the fake exorcisms described in Samuel Harsnett's lively exposé, A Discovery of the Fraudulent Practices of John Darrell (1599). "Stop your wind": hold your breath.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Seller of poultry and small game.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Volpone sees that Mosca's pious pretense of burying the "dead" Volpone will mean an end to all of Volpone's hopes; he'll be cheated out of everything.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Not Volpone, of course, but one of the genuine Commendatori. They are probably the officers who strip Mosca at line 103.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: The Hospital of the Incurables was founded in Venice in 1522 to care for people terminally ill with syphilis.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: (1) Hanging of meat to make it tender; (2) disciplining spiritually; (3) killing. (Volpone's sentence is almost certain to

- bring about his death.)Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Pillory. Versions of such shaming punishments were commonly imposed for sexual and marital infractions. The offender typically had to wear a placard specifying his crimes; hence the paper pinned on Corvino's breast.Return to reference 7
  - Note 8:
The judges grant Celia "separation from bed and board." Such legal separations could be permitted to the innocent party in a case of adultery or, as here, to a victim of gross spousal abuse. Because legal separation entailed the finding of serious fault, the guilty spouse could also, as here, be forced to pay financial damages. Legal separation did not bring with it, however, the right of remarriage for either party.
Return to reference 8
  - Note 9: Alternatively, the prisoners, and later the Avocatori and the others, could exit, and Volpone could return to speak the epilogue. The advantage of the staging preferred here is that almost all the players are onstage to receive the audience's applause.Return to reference 9

Notes

- °: BonarioReturn to reference °
- °: how loyal you wereReturn to reference °
- °: he's as alive as I amReturn to reference °
- °: twitching spasmodicallyReturn to reference °
- °: unforeseen eventReturn to reference °
- °: Voltore's written statementReturn to reference °
- °: deceptionReturn to reference °
- °: handsomeReturn to reference °
- °: running smoothlyReturn to reference °
- °: troublesomeReturn to reference °
- °: aliveReturn to reference °
- °: reversing directionReturn to reference °

- °: questionReturn to reference °
- °: MoscaReturn to reference °
- °: be permittedReturn to reference °
- °: Mosca'sReturn to reference °
- °: linked by marriageReturn to reference °
- °: reveal himselfReturn to reference °
- °: monstrous combination Return to reference °
- °: be disappointed (ironic)Return to reference °
- °: that's all I have to sayReturn to reference °
- °: pleading Return to reference °
- °: agentReturn to reference °
- °: vile, obsceneReturn to reference °
- °: garbReturn to reference °
- °: curses onReturn to reference °
- °: bailiffs Return to reference °
- °: the same sentenceReturn to reference °
- °: wealthReturn to reference °
- °: VeniceReturn to reference °
- °: estateReturn to reference °
- °: the Holy SpiritReturn to reference °
- °: taughtReturn to reference °
- °: soon enoughReturn to reference °
- °: handsome; clearly visibleReturn to reference °
- °: take them to heartReturn to reference °
- °: crimeReturn to reference °
- °: apprehensiveReturn to reference °

The Masque of Blackness When James I and Queen Anna ascended the English throne in 1603, they presided over the development of the court masque as a major form of praise, entertainment, and political idealization, celebrating the Stuart court as the embodiment of perfection. The Masque of Blackness established Jonson and Inigo Jones as the chief makers of court masques for more than two decades. Jonson provided the words and Jones the spectacle; over the years they developed an intense rivalry. For the first decade, the queen took an active role in planning and performing in court masques, which were usually performed only once—most often on Twelfth Night, as in this case, or sometimes for a wedding or other special occasion. The Masque of Blackness also began the tradition of prodigiously expensive masques: the queen's bill for it came to around £5000 (more than five hundred times what the young Jonson would have made in a year as an apprentice bricklayer). Masques were customarily followed by elaborate feasts and all-night dancing known as "the revels." On this occasion, as on many that followed, the evening was chaotic. The banquet table was overturned by the crush of diners before the meal began; guests were beaten by the palace guards; light-fingered revelers stole jewels, chains, and purses; and sexual liaisons went on in dark corners.

Court masques differed from performances in the public theater in almost every respect, particularly in their focus on dance. Masques were multimedia events combining song, speech, richly ornamented costumes and masks, shifting scene panels depicting elaborate architecture and landscapes, and intricate machines in which gods and goddesses descended from the heavens. They were presented to King James, who occupied the Chair of State, which was placed in the ideal viewing position. While the speaking parts were taken by professionals, the dancers were members of the court, including—to the chagrin of some godly Protestants—women. In the reign of Charles I, William Prynne lost his ears for attacking masques and comparing the women who danced in them (including the queen) to whores.

On the surface, The Masque of Blackness asserts the cultural superiority of the English over non-European peoples and celebrates the power of James, the “Sun King” of Britain, who can turn black skin to white. But as in other masques commissioned by the queen, there is also a subversive element in The Masque of Blackness. Jonson tells us it was “her Majesty’s will” that she and her court ladies appear as beautiful black African women: the daughters of Niger. (Two of Inigo Jones’s designs for their costumes are included in the color insert in this volume.) The power of the supposed Sun King is further undercut by Niger’s lengthy praise of black beauty and by the fact that the promised transformation of the ladies’ skin is never seen. (They have, however, become white in the sequel, The Masque of Beauty, performed three years later.) One contemporary response to the masque gives a sense of its racially charged nature. Instead of wearing “vizards,” Sir Dudley Carleton wrote from the court, the ladies’ “faces and arms, up to the elbows, were painted black, which was disguise sufficient, for they were hard to be known; but it became them nothing so well as their red and white, and you cannot imagine a more ugly sight than a troop of lean-cheeked Moors.” Here we see racist ideas both about the intimate relationship between Petrarchan ideals of beauty (“red and white”) and white skin, and about racial phenotypes. Queen Anna danced in six masques, but the masques of Blackness and Beauty stand out for their impact on the imaginations of later writers, including John Smith, who finds echoes of the masques in Algonquin Virginia, and Richard Ligon, who finds them in a mixed-race woman in the Cape Verde islands.

In many later Jacobean masques, the glorification of the monarch seems less conflicted. Jonson developed a kind of prologue known as the antimasque, in which wicked, disruptive, or rustic characters played by professional actors invade the court, only to be banished by aristocratic masquers whose dancing transforms the court into a golden world. The aristocrats enact the mixture of the ideal and real as they unmask, revealing themselves as courtiers, and proceed to dance the revels with the other members of the court. Caroline court masques, in which Charles I and Queen Henrietta Maria regularly danced, tended to be longer, more elaborate, more dialogic, more spectacular, and even more hyperbolic. But early to late, many masques contain features that subtly resist the politics of Stuart absolutism.

The Masque of Blackness

The Queen's Masques: the first Of Blackness

Personated at the Court at Whitehall, on the Twelfth Night, 1605.

Pliny, Solinus, Ptolemy, and of late Leo the African,<sup>1</sup> remember unto us a river in Ethiopia famous by the name of Niger,<sup>2</sup> of which the people were called Nigritae, now Negroes, and are the blackest nation of the world. This river taketh spring out of a certain lake,<sup>3</sup> eastward, and after a long race, falleth into the western ocean. Hence (because it was her Majesty's will to have them blackamoors at first) the invention was derived by me, and presented thus.

First, for the scene, was drawn a Landscape<sup>4</sup> consisting of small woods, and here and there a void place filled with huntings; which falling, an artificial sea was seen to shoot forth, as if it flowed to the land, raised with waves which seemed to move, and in some places the billow to break,<sup>5</sup> as imitating that orderly disorder, which is common in nature. In front of this sea were placed six tritons,<sup>6</sup> in moving and sprightly actions; their upper parts human, save that their hairs were blue, as partaking of the sea-color; their desinent<sup>7</sup> parts fish, mounted above their heads, and all varied in disposition. From their backs were borne out certain light pieces of taffeta, as if carried by the wind, and their music made out of wreathed shells. Behind these, a pair of sea-maids, for song, were as conspicuously seated; between which two great sea-horses, as big as the life, put forth themselves; the one mounting aloft, and writhing his head from the other, which seemed to sink forwards; so intended for variation, and that the figure behind might come off better. Upon their backs Oceanus<sup>8</sup> and Niger were advanced.

Oceanus, presented in a human form, the color of his flesh blue, and shadowed with a robe of sea green; his head grey and horned, as he is described by the ancients; his beard of the like mixed color. He was garlanded with algae or sea-grass, and in his hand a trident.

Niger, in form and color of an Ethiop, his hair and rare beard curled, shadowed with a blue and bright mantle; his front, neck, and wrists adorned with pearl; and crowned with an artificial wreath of cane and paper-rush.<sup>9</sup>

These induced the masquers, which were twelve nymphs, negroes, and the daughters of Niger, attended by so many of the Oceaniae,<sup>1</sup> which were their light-bearers.

The masquers were placed in a great concave shell, like mother of pearl, curiously made to move on those waters, and rise with the billow; the top thereof was stuck with a chevron of lights which, indented to the proportion of the shell, struck a glorious beam upon them as they were seated one above another; so that they were all seen, but in an extravagant<sup>2</sup> order.

On sides of the shell did swim six huge sea-monsters, varied in their shapes and dispositions, bearing on their backs the twelve torch-bearers, who were planted there in several greces,<sup>3</sup> so as the backs of some were seen, some in purple<sup>4</sup> (or side), others in face, and all having their lights burning out of whelks or murex shells.<sup>5</sup>

The attire of the masquers was alike in all, without difference; the colors azure and silver, their hair thick, and curled upright in tresses, like pyramids, but returned on the top with a scroll and antique dressing of feathers, and jewels interlaced with ropes of pearl. And for the front, ear, neck and wrists, the ornament was of the most choice and orient pearl, best setting off from the black.

For the light-bearers, sea-green, waved about the skirts with gold and silver; their hair loose and flowing, garlanded with sea-grass, and that stuck with branches of coral.

These thus presented, the scene behind seemed a vast sea (and united with this that flowed forth)<sup>6</sup> from the termination or horizon of which (being the level of the state,<sup>7</sup> which was placed in the upper end of the hall) was drawn, by the lines of perspective, the whole work shooting downwards from the eye; which decorum made it more conspicuous, and caught the eye afar off with a wandering beauty. To which was added an obscure and cloudy night piece,<sup>8</sup> that made the whole set off. So much for the bodily part, which was of Master Inigo Jones his design and act.

By this, one of the tritons, with the two sea-maids, began to sing to the others loud music, their voices being a tenor and two trebles.

SONG

Sound, sound aloud
The welcome of the orient flood
Into the west;

5 Fair Niger, son to great Oceanus,
Now honored thus
With all his beauteous race,
Who though but black in face,
Yet are they bright,
And full of life and light,
10 To prove that beauty best
Which not the color, but the feature
Assures unto the creature.

OCEANUS Be silent, now the ceremony's done,
And Niger, say, how comes it, lovely son,
That thou, the Ethiop's river, so far east,
15 Art seen to fall into th'extremest west
Of me, the king of floods, Oceanus,
And in mine empire's heart salute me thus?
My ceaseless current now amazed stands
To see thy labor through so many lands
20 Mix thy fresh billow with my brackish stream,
And in thy sweetness, stretch thy diadem<sup>o</sup>
To these far distant and unequalled skies,
This squared circle of celestial bodies.<sup>9</sup>

NIGER Divine Oceanus, 'tis not strange at all
25 That, since the immortal souls of creatures mortal
Mix with their bodies, yet reserve for ever
A power of separation, I should sever
My fresh streams from thy brackish, like things fixed,
Though with thy powerful saltness thus far mixed.
30 'Virtue though chained to earth, will still live free;
And hell itself must yield to industry.<sup>1</sup>

OCEANUS But what's the end of thy Herculean labors,
Extended to these calm and blessed shores?

NIGER To do a kind and careful father's part,
35 In satisfying every pensive heart
Of these my daughters, my most loved birth;
Who, though they were the first formed dames of earth,
And in whose sparkling and refulgent<sup>o</sup> eyes
The glorious sun did still delight to rise,
40 Though he (the best judge, and most formal cause<sup>2</sup>
Of all dames' beauties) in their firm hues<sup>o</sup> draws

Signs of his fervent'st love, and thereby shows
That in their black the perfect'st beauty grows,
Since the fixed color of their curlèd hair
45 (Which is the highest grace of dames most fair)
No cares, no age can change, or there display
The fearful tincture<sup>o</sup> of abhorrèd grey,
Since Death herself (herself being pale and blue)
Can never alter their most faithful hue;
50 All which are arguments to prove how far
Their beauties conquer in great beauty's war;
And more, how near divinity they be,
That stand from passion or decay so free.
Yet, since the fabulous voices of some few 55 Poor brain-sick men, styled poets<sup>3</sup> here with you,
Have, with such envy of their graces, sung
The painted beauties other empires sprung,
Letting their loose and wingèd fictions fly
To infect all climates, yea, our purity;
60 As of one Phaëton, that fired the world,<sup>4</sup>
And that before his heedless flames were hurled
About the globe, the Ethiops were as fair
As other dames, now black with black despair,
And in respect of their complexions changed,
65 Are eachwhere, since, for luckless creatures ranged.
Which when my daughters heard (as women are Most jealous of their beauties) fear and care
Possessed them whole; yea, and believing them,<sup>5</sup>
They wept such ceaseless tears into my stream
70 That it hath thus far overflowed his shore
To seek them patience; who have since e'ermore
As the sun riseth, charged his burning throne
With volleys of revilings, 'cause he shone
On their scorched cheeks with such intemperate fires,
75 And other dames made queens of all desires.
To frustrate which strange error oft I sought,
Though most in vain against a settled thought
As women's are, till they confirmed at length
By miracle what I with so much strength
80 Of argument resisted; else they feigned:

For in the lake where their first spring they gained,
 As they sat cooling their soft limbs one night,
 Appeared a face all circumfused with light;
 (And sure they saw't, for Ethiops never dream)<sup>6</sup>
 85 Wherein they might decipher through the stream
 These words:
 That they a land must forthwith seek,
 Whose termination (of the Greek)
 Sounds -tania; where bright Sol, that heat
 90 Their bloods, doth never rise or set,
 But in his journey passeth by,
 And leaves that climate of the sky
 To comfort of a greater light,<sup>7</sup>
 Who forms all beauty with his sight.
 95 In search of this have we three pryncedoms past
 That speak out -tania in their accents last:
 Black Mauritania<sup>8</sup> first, and secondly Swarth<sup>9</sup> Lusitania,<sup>9</sup> next we did descry<sup>0</sup>
 Rich Aquitania,<sup>1</sup> and yet cannot find 100 The place unto these longing nymphs designed.<sup>0</sup>
 Instruct and aid me, great Oceanus:
 What land is this that now appears to us?
 OCEANUS This land, that lifts into the temperate air
 His snowy cliff, is Albion the fair,
 105 So called of Neptune's son, who ruleth here;<sup>2</sup>
 For whose dear guard, myself four thousand year,
 Since old Deucalion's<sup>3</sup> days, have walked the round
 About his empire, proud to see him crowned Above my waves.

At this, the moon was discovered in the upper part of the house, triumphant in a silver throne, made in figure of a pyramis.<sup>4</sup> Her garments white and silver, the dressing of her head antique, and crowned with a luminary or sphere of light, which striking on the clouds, and heightened with silver, reflected as natural clouds do by the splendor of the moon. The heaven about her was vaulted with blue silk, and set with stars of silver which had in them their several lights burning. The sudden sight of which made Niger to interrupt Oceanus with this present passion.<sup>5</sup>

NIGER —O see, our silver star!
 110 Whose pure auspicious light greets us thus far!
 Great Æthiopia, goddess of our shore,<sup>6</sup>
 Since with particular worship we adore
 Thy general brightness, let particular grace
 Shine on my zealous daughters. Show the place 115 Which long their longings urged their eyes to see.
 Beautify them, which long have deified thee.
 AETHIOPIA Niger, be glad; resume thy native cheer.
 Thy daughters' labors have their period<sup>o</sup> here,
 And so thy errors. I was that bright face
 120 Reflected by the lake, in which thy race
 Read mystic<sup>o</sup> lines (which skill Pythagoras<sup>7</sup>
 First taught to men by a reverberate<sup>o</sup> glass).
 This blessed isle doth with that -tania end
 Which there they saw inscribed, and shall extend 125 Wished satisfaction to their best desires.
 Britannia, which the triple world admires,<sup>8</sup>
 This isle hath now recovered for her name;
 Where reign those beauties that with so much fame
 The sacred Muses' sons<sup>o</sup> have honorèd, 130 And from bright Hesperus to Eos spread.<sup>9</sup>
 With that great name, Britannia, this blessed isle
 Hath won her ancient dignity and style,
A world divided from the world,<sup>1</sup> and tried
 The abstract of it in his general pride.
 135 For were the world, with all his wealth, a ring,
 Britannia (whose new name makes all tongues sing)
 Might be a diamond worthy to enchase<sup>o</sup> it,
 Ruled by a sun, that to this height doth grace it.
 Whose beams shine day and night, and are of force
 140 To blanch<sup>o</sup> an Ethiop and revive a corpse.<sup>2</sup>
 His light sciential<sup>o</sup> is and (past mere nature)
 Can salve<sup>o</sup> the rude defects of every creature.
 Call forth thy honored daughters, then,
 And let them 'fore the Britain men
 145 Indent the land with those pure traces<sup>3</sup>
 They flow with in their native graces.
 Invite them boldly to the shore,

Their beauties shall be scorched no more;
 This sun is temperate, and refines
 All things on which his radiance shines.

Here the tritons sounded, and they danced on shore, every couple as they advanced severally presenting their fans,<sup>4</sup> in one of which were inscribed their mixed names, in the other a mute hieroglyphic, expressing their mixed qualities.<sup>5</sup> Which manner of symbol I rather chose than imprecise, as well for strangeness, as relishing of antiquity, and more applying to that original doctrine of sculpture which the Egyptians are said first to have brought from the Ethiopians.

	The Names<sup>6</sup>	The Symbols
The Queen	Euphoris	A golden tree, laden with fruit
Countess of Bedford	Aglaia
Lady Herbert	Diaphane	The figure icosahedron<sup>7</sup> of cryst
Countess of Derby	Eucampse
Lady Rich	Ocyte	A pair of naked feet in a river
Countess of Suffolk	Kathare
Lady Bevill	Notis	The salamander simple
Lady Effingham	Psychrote
Lady Elizabeth Howard	Glycyte	A cloud full of rain dropping
Lady Susan Vere	Malacia
Lady Wroth	Baryte	An urn, sphered with wine
Lady Walsingham	Periphere

The names of the Oceaniae were

Doris	Cydippe	Beroe	Ianthe
Petraea	Glauce	Acaste	Lycoris
Ocyrhoe	Tyche	Clytia	Plexaure

Their own single dance ended, as they were about to make choice of their men, one from the sea was heard to call 'em with this charm,<sup>8</sup> sung by a tenor voice.

SONG

Come away, come away,

155 We grow jealous of your stay.
If you do not stop your ear,
We shall have more cause to fear
Sirens of the land, than they
To doubt the sirens of the sea.

Here they danced with their men several measures and corantos. All which ended, they were again accited<sup>9</sup> to sea, with a song of two trebles, whose cadences were iterated by a double echo from several parts of the land.

SONG

160 Daughters of the subtle flood,
Do not let earth longer entertain you;
1st ECHO Let earth longer entertain you
2nd ECHO Longer entertain you

165 'Tis to them enough of good
That you give this little hope to gain you.
1st ECHO Give this little hope to gain you.
2nd ECHO Little hope to gain you.

170 If they love
You shall quickly see;
For when to flight you move,
They'll follow you, the more you flee.
1st ECHO Follow you, the more you flee.
2nd ECHO The more you flee.

175 If not, impute<sup>o</sup> it each to other's matter;
They are but earth—
1st ECHO But earth,
2nd ECHO Earth—
And what you vowed was water.
1st ECHO And what you vowed was water
2nd ECHO You vowed was water.

AETHIOPIA Enough, bright nymphs, the night grows old,
And we are grieved we cannot hold

180 You longer light; but comfort take.
 Your father only to the lake
 Shall make return; yourselves, with feasts,
 Must here remain the Ocean's guests.
 Nor shall this veil the sun hath cast
 185 Above your blood more summers last.
 For which you shall observe these rites:
 Thirteen times thrice, on thirteen nights
 (So often as I fill my sphere
 With glorious light, throughout the year)
 190 You shall, when all things else do sleep
 Save your chaste thoughts, with reverence steep
 Your bodies in that purer brine
 And wholesome dew, called rosmarine;<sup>o</sup>
 Then with that soft and gentler foam,
 195 Of which the ocean yet yields some,
 Whereof bright Venus, beauty's queen,
 Is said to have begotten been,
 You shall your gentler limbs o'er-lave.<sup>o</sup>
 And for your pains, perfection have.
 200 So that, this night, the year gone round,<sup>1</sup>
 You do again salute this ground;
 And in the beams of yond bright sun
 Your faces dry, and all is done.

At which, in a dance they returned to the sea, where they took their shell, and with this full song, went out.

SONG

205 Now Dian,<sup>o</sup> with her burning face,
 Declines apace:
 By which our waters know
 To ebb, that late did flow.
 Back seas, back nymphs, but with a forward grace
 Keep still your reverence to the place,
 210 And shout with joy of favor you have won,
 In sight of Albion, Neptune's son.

Endnotes

- Note 1: This long introductory note is Jonson's. Leo wrote the Description of Africa (1526); the others are classical authorities on geography.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Some, though not Pliny, identified it as the Niger, which means black in Latin.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Lake Chad.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Painted on the front curtain.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Effects created by a series of painted cloths raised and lowered by a machine.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Sea gods.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Back.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: The Atlantic Ocean, father of the river Niger. Both ride on the backs of hippopotamuses ("sea-horses.")Return to reference 8
- Note 9: The papyrus plant.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Sea nymphs, daughters of Oceanus and Tethys.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Moving about.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Steps.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Profile.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Whelks and murex are sea snails.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: The painted backdrop and the wave machine.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: The king's throne, placed at the ideal viewing position, the vanishing point of the perspective.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: The upper part of the scenery, through which the moon later descends.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: The squared circle is an image of perfection, a hyperbolic compliment to Britain.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Alludes to Horace, Odes I.3.36.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Aristotle's formal cause produces the form or essence of anything.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: English Petrarchan poets, whose ideal of beauty involves fair skin, blonde hair, and blue eyes. See, for example, the sonnets of Sidney, Spenser, and Wroth.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Son of Apollo, the sun god, whose ill-fated attempt to drive the sun's chariot scorched the earth and reportedly turned the skin of the daughters of Niger black.Return to reference 4

- Note 5: The poets (line 56).Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Jonson cites The Natural History of Pliny the Elder for this saying.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: The allusion is to James, the “Sun King” of Britain.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Land of the Moors in North Africa.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Portugal.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Southwest France.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: King James, regularly so styled because of Britain’s close relationship to the sea. Albion (previous line): ancient name for England (from Latin: albus, white). The “snowy cliff” refers to the cliffs of Dover, whose chalk content makes them seem white.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: A Greek analogue to Noah, as the survivor of a great flood.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Pyramid.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Instant outburst.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Jonson identifies her as the moon, worshipped by the Ethiopians.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Mystical Greek philosopher, said to have taught men how to read writing on the moon.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: The triple realms of heaven, earth, and underworld, admiring the three kingdoms of England, Scotland, and Wales, united under James. In 1604, James reintroduced the name “Britain” to refer to the united island.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Hesperus is the evening star, and Eos the rising sun/dawn, so west and east, respectively.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Britain as a separate world, divided from Europe by the channel.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Both are proverbial impossibilities. On the proverb “to blanch an Ethiopie [white],” see the illustration on p. 1213 of this volume.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Imprint the land with their dancing feet. This is the call for the main masque dances.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: The women advanced in pairs holding fans to the audience: on one appeared both women’s names; on the other, an allegorical symbol of their conjoined qualities.Return to reference 4
- Note 5:
A “hieroglyph” is a character used in pictorial writing, standing for the object it depicts or for a syllable or sound; such writing is best known from ancient Egyptian monuments and records. An “imprese” was an emblem or device, often accompanied by a motto. The “hieroglyphic” of the fruit-laden tree carried by Queen Anna and the Countess of Bedford alluded to the queen’s fertility. (She was pregnant during the performance.)

Return to reference 5

- Note 6:

The meaning of the paired women’s names and symbols, in order: abundance and splendor, fertility symbol; transparency and flexibility, a twenty-sided water symbol; swiftness and spotlessness, symbol of purity; moisture and coldness, symbol, the salamander who lives in fire unharmed; sweetness and delicacy, symbol of education; weight and revolution, symbol, the earth’s globe. The women are members of Queen Anna’s court. Donne and Jonson wrote poems about Lucy Harington Russell, Countess of Bedford; Lady Mary Wroth wrote poems and a romance.

Return to reference 6

- Note 7: A solid formed by twenty plane faces.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Chanting or recitation of a verse supposed to possess occult influence. See also The Tempest 5.1.31.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Summoned.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Jonson had probably already planned The Masque of Beauty, in which the women’s black skin was turned white, but intervening masques prevented its production until 1608.Return to reference 1

Notes

- °: realm, ruleReturn to reference °
- °: radiantReturn to reference °
- °: fixed colorsReturn to reference °
- °: tingeReturn to reference °
- °: blackReturn to reference °
- °: catch sight ofReturn to reference °
- °: appointedReturn to reference °
- °: end, completionReturn to reference °
- °: spiritual, allegoricalReturn to reference °
- °: reflectingReturn to reference °
- °: singers and poetsReturn to reference °
- °: ornamentReturn to reference °

- °: whitenReturn to reference °
- °: knowledgeableReturn to reference °
- °: redeem, overcomeReturn to reference °
- °: attributeReturn to reference °
- °: sea sprayReturn to reference °
- °: washReturn to reference °
- °: the moonReturn to reference °

FROM EPIGRAMS<sup>1</sup>

Endnotes

- Note 1:
Epigrams are commonly thought of as brief, witty, incisive poems of personal invective, often with a surprise turn at the end. But Jonson uses the word in a more liberal sense. His "Epigrams," a separate section in his collected Works of 1616, include not only sharp, satiric poems but also many complimentary ones to friends and patrons, as well as memorial epitaphs and a verse letter, "Inviting a Friend to Supper."
Return to reference 1

To My Book

It will be looked for, book, when some but see
Thy title, Epigrams, and named of me,
Thou should'st be bold, licentious, full of gall, Wormwood<sup>o</sup> and sulphur, sharp and toothed<sup>2</sup> withal,
5 Become a petulant thing, hurl ink and wit
As madmen stones, not caring whom they hit.
Deceive their malice who could wish it so,
And by thy wiser temper let men know
Thou art not covetous of least self-fame
10 Made from the hazard of another's shame<sup>3</sup>—
Much less with lewd, profane, and beastly phrase
To catch the world's loose laughter or vain gaze.
He that departs<sup>o</sup> with his own honesty
For vulgar praise, doth it too dearly buy.

1616

Endnotes

- Note 2: The distinction between toothed (biting) and toothless (general) satires was a commonplace.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Here, as often elsewhere, Jonson echoes the greatest Roman epigrammatist, Martial.Return to reference 3

Notes

- °: bitter-tasting plantReturn to reference °
- °: partsReturn to reference °

On Something, That Walks Somewhere

At court I met it, in clothes brave<sup>o</sup> enough
To be a courtier, and looks grave enough
To seem a statesman: as I near it came,
It made me a great face. I asked the name.
5 "A lord," it cried, "buried in flesh and blood,
And such from whom let no man hope least good,
For I will do none; and as little ill,
For I will dare none." Good lord, walk dead still.
1616

Notes

- <sup>o</sup>: fineReturn to reference <sup>o</sup>

To Fine Lady Would-Be<sup>1</sup>

Fine madam Would-Be,<sup>2</sup> wherefore should you fear,
That love to make so well, a child to bear?
The world reputes<sup>o</sup> you barren: but I know
Your 'pothecary,<sup>o</sup> and his drug says no.
Is it the pain affrights? That's soon forgot.
5 Or your complexion's loss? you have a pot<sup>o</sup>
That can restore that. Will it hurt your feature?<sup>o</sup>
To make amends, you are thought a wholesome
creature.
What should the cause be? Oh, you live at court;
And there's both loss of time, and loss of sport,
10 In a great belly: Write then on thy womb,
"Of the not born, yet buried, here's the tomb."

1616

Endnotes

- Note 1: This poem, epigram LXII, reads like a sonnet of rhyming couplets, yet falls two lines short of the fourteen-line sonnet form. Return to reference 1
- Note 2:
Jonson's play Volpone features a character by the same name, Fine Madame [Lady] Would-be. Although she is said by her husband to have traveled to Venice "to observe / To quote, to learn the language, and so forth" (2.1.12–13), his interlocutor, Peregrine, reveals that she "Lies here, in Venice, for intelligence / Of tires, and fashions, and behavior / Among the courtesans" (2.1.26–29). Upon learning of Volpone's fabricated death, she realizes that she has not been made an heir and resolves to become a courtesan.

Return to reference 2

Notes

- °: considersReturn to reference °
- °: druggist, chemistReturn to reference °
- °: makeupReturn to reference °
- °: good shape, comelinessReturn to reference °

On My First Daughter<sup>1</sup>

Here lies, to each her parents' ruth,<sup>o</sup>
Mary, the daughter of their youth;
Yet all heaven's gifts being heaven's due,
It makes the father less to rue.<sup>o</sup>
5 At six months' end she parted hence
With safety of her innocence;
Whose soul heaven's queen,<sup>o</sup> whose name she bears,
In comfort of her mother's tears,
Hath placed amongst her virgin-train:
10 Where, while that severed doth remain,
This grave partakes the fleshly birth;<sup>o</sup>
Which cover lightly, gentle earth!<sup>2</sup>

1616

Endnotes

- Note 1: Probably written in the late 1590s, in Jonson's Roman Catholic period (ca. 1598–1610).Return to reference 1
- Note 2: A common sentiment in Latin epitaphs.Return to reference 2

Notes

- °: griefReturn to reference °
- °: regretReturn to reference °
- °: MaryReturn to reference °
- °: the bodyReturn to reference °

On My First Son

Farewell, thou child of my right hand,<sup>1</sup> and joy;
My sin was too much hope of thee, loved boy.
Seven years thou wert lent to me, and I thee pay,
Exacted by thy fate, on the just day.
5 O could I lose all father now! For why
Will man lament the state he should envy,
To have so soon 'scaped world's and flesh's rage,
And, if no other misery, yet age?
Rest in soft peace, and asked, say, "Here doth lie
10 Ben Jonson his best piece of poetry."<sup>2</sup>
For whose sake henceforth all his vows be such
As what he loves may never like too much.<sup>3</sup>

1616

Endnotes

- Note 1: A literal translation of the Hebrew name "Benjamin," which implies the meaning "dexterous" or "fortunate." The boy was born in 1596 and died on his birthday in 1603.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Poet and father are both "makers," Jonson's favorite term for the poet.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: The obscure grammar of the last lines allows for various readings; "like" may carry the sense of "please."Return to reference 3

To Lucy, Countess of Bedford, with Mr. Donne's Satires<sup>1</sup>

Lucy, you brightness<sup>2</sup> of our sphere, who are Life of the Muses' day, their morning star!
If works, not th' authors, their own grace should look,<sup>o</sup>
Whose poems would not wish to be your book?
But these, desired by you, the maker's ends
5 Crown with their own. Rare poems ask rare friends.
Yet satires, since the most of mankind be
Their unavowed<sup>o</sup> subject, fewest see:
For none e'er took that pleasure in sin's sense,<sup>o</sup>
But, when they heard it taxed, took more offense.
10 They then that, living where the matter is bred,<sup>3</sup>
Dare for these poems yet both ask and read
And like them too, must needfully, though few,
Be of the best: and 'mongst those, best are you;
Lucy, you brightness of our sphere, who are 15 The Muses' evening, as their morning star.<sup>4</sup>

1616

Endnotes

- Note 1: With this poem, Jonson offered a manuscript collection of Donne's satires (see pp. 905–08), such as commonly passed from hand to hand in court circles. Bedford was a well-known literary patron in the period.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Lucy's name derives from the Latin lux, meaning "light."Return to reference 2

- Note 3: That is, at court.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: The planet Venus is called Lucifer (“light-bearing”) when it appears before sunrise, Hesperus when it appears after sunset.Return to reference 4

Notes

- °: have regard toReturn to reference °
- °: inevitableReturn to reference °
- °: experienceReturn to reference °

To Sir Thomas Roe<sup>1</sup>

Thou hast begun well, Roe, which stand<sup>o</sup> well too,
And I know nothing more thou hast to do.
He that is round<sup>o</sup> within himself, and straight,
Need seek no other strength, no other height;
5 Fortune upon him breaks herself, if ill,
And what should hurt his virtue makes it still.<sup>o</sup>
That thou at once, then, nobly may'st defend
With thine own course the judgment of thy friend,
Be always to thy gathered self the same,
10 And study conscience, more than thou wouldst fame.
Though both be good, the latter yet is worst,
And ever is ill got without the first.

1616

Endnotes

- Note 1: Knighted in 1605, Roe was sent as ambassador to the Great Mogul—the ruler of the Muslim Mughal empire in South Asia—in 1614. His collection of coins and of Greek and Eastern manuscripts is in the Bodleian Library.Return to reference 1

Notes

- °: continueReturn to reference °
- °: honestReturn to reference °
- °: constantReturn to reference °

Inviting a Friend to Supper

Tonight, grave sir, both my poor house and I
Do equally desire your company:
Not that we think us worthy such a guest,
But that your worth will dignify our feast
5 With those that come; whose grace may make that seem
Something, which else could hope for no esteem.
It is the fair acceptance, sir, creates
The entertainment perfect: not the cates.<sup>o</sup>
Yet shall you have, to rectify your palate,
10 An olive, capers, or some better salad
Ushering the mutton; with a short-legged hen,
If we can get her, full of eggs, and then
Lemons and wine for sauce; to<sup>o</sup> these, a coney<sup>o</sup>
Is not to be despaired of for our money;
15 And though fowl now be scarce, yet there are clerks,
<sup>o</sup>
The sky not falling, think we may have larks.
I'll tell you of more, and lie, so you will come:
Of partridge, pheasant, woodcock, of which some
May yet be there; and godwit if we can,
20 Knot, rail, and ruff, too.<sup>1</sup> Howsoe'er, my man<sup>o</sup>
Shall read a piece of Virgil, Tacitus,
Livy, or of some better book to us,
Of which we'll speak our minds amidst our meat;<sup>o</sup>
And I'll profess<sup>o</sup> no verses to repeat:
25 To this,<sup>o</sup> if aught appear which I not know of,
That will the pastry, not my paper, show of.<sup>2</sup>
Digestive cheese and fruit there sure will be;
But that which most doth take my muse and me
Is a pure cup of rich canary wine,

30 Which is the Mermaid's now, but shall be mine;
Of which, had Horace or Anacreon<sup>3</sup> tasted,
Their lives, as do their lines, till now had lasted.
Tobacco, nectar, or the Thespian spring
Are all but Luther's beer to this I sing.<sup>4</sup>
35 Of this we will sup free but moderately,
And we will have no Pooley or Parrot<sup>5</sup> by;
Nor shall our cups make any guilty men,
But at our parting we will be as when
We innocently met. No simple word
40 That shall be uttered at our mirthful board
Shall make us sad next morning, or affright
The liberty that we'll enjoy tonight.

1616

Endnotes

- Note 1: All these are edible birds.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Cooks sometimes lined pans with paper to keep pastry from sticking. The writing sometimes rubbed off on the crust.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Horace and Anacreon (one in Latin, the other in Greek) wrote many poems in praise of wine. "Mermaid": the Mermaid tavern was a favorite haunt of the poets; sweet wine from the Canary Islands was popular in England.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Tobacco was an expensive New World novelty in Jonson's time. Nectar is the drink of the gods. The Thespian spring on Mount Helicon is a legendary source of poetic inspiration. Compared with canary wine, these intoxicants are no better than inferior German beer. (The Protestant reformer Martin Luther was German.)Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Robert Poley and (Henry?) Parrot were government spies. (A parrot was also a proverbial speaker.) As a Roman Catholic convert, Jonson had reason to be wary of undercover agents.Return to reference 5

Notes

- °: foodReturn to reference °
- °: besides Return to reference °
- °: rabbitReturn to reference °
- °: scholarsReturn to reference °
- °: servantReturn to reference °
- °: food (of any kind)Return to reference °
- °: promiseReturn to reference °
- °: on this pointReturn to reference °

On Gut

Gut eats all day, and lechers all the night,
So all his meat he tasteth over twice;
And striving so to double his delight,
He makes himself a thoroughfare of vice.
Thus in his belly can he change a sin:
5 Lust it comes out, that gluttony went in.

1616

FROM THE FOREST<sup>1</sup>

Endnotes

- Note 1: In the 1616 Works, Jonson grouped some of his nonepigrammatic poems under the heading “The Forest,” a translation of the term Sylvae, meaning a poetic miscellany. “To Penshurst” and the two following poems are from that group.Return to reference 1

To Penshurst<sup>2</sup>

Thou art not, Penshurst, built to envious show,
Of touch<sup>3</sup> or marble; nor canst boast a row
Of polished pillars, or a roof of gold;
Thou hast no lantern<sup>o</sup> whereof tales are told,
Or stair, or courts; but stand'st an ancient pile,<sup>o</sup>
5 And, these grudged at,<sup>4</sup> art revered the while.
Thou joy'st in better marks, of soil, of air,
Of wood, of water; therein thou art fair.
Thou hast thy walks for health, as well as sport;
Thy mount, to which the dryads<sup>o</sup> do resort, 10 Where Pan and Bacchus their high feasts have made,
Beneath the broad beech and the chestnut shade;
That taller tree, which of a nut was set
At his great birth where all the Muses met.<sup>5</sup>
There in the writhèd bark are cut the names
15 Of many a sylvan,<sup>o</sup> taken with his flames;
And thence the ruddy satyrs oft provoke
The lighter fauns<sup>6</sup> to reach thy Lady's Oak.<sup>7</sup>
Thy copse<sup>o</sup> too, named of Gamage<sup>8</sup> thou hast there,
That never fails to serve thee seasoned deer
20 When thou wouldst feast or exercise thy friends.
The lower land, that to the river bends,
Thy sheep, thy bullocks, kine,<sup>o</sup> and calves do feed;
The middle grounds thy mares and horses breed.
Each bank doth yield thee conies;<sup>o</sup> and the tops,<sup>o</sup>
25 Fertile of wood, Ashore and Sidney's copse,
To crown thy open table, doth provide
The purpled pheasant with the speckled side;
The painted partridge lies in every field,
And for thy mess<sup>o</sup> is willing to be killed.
30 And if the high-swollen Medway<sup>9</sup> fail thy dish,

Thou hast thy ponds, that pay thee tribute fish:
Fat agèd carps that run into thy net,
And pikes, now weary their own kind to eat,
As loath the second draft or cast to stay,
35      Officiously<sup>o</sup> at first themselves betray;
Bright eels that emulate them, and leap on land
Before the fisher, or into his hand.
Then hath thy orchard fruit, thy garden flowers,
Fresh as the air, and new as are the hours.
40      The early cherry, with the later plum,
Fig, grape, and quince, each in his time doth
come;
The blushing apricot and woolly peach
Hang on thy walls, that every child may reach.
And though thy walls be of the country stone,
45      They're reared with no man's ruin, no man's groan;
There's none that dwell about them wish them
down;
But all come in, the farmer and the clown,<sup>o</sup>
And no one empty-handed, to salute
Thy lord and lady, though they have no suit.<sup>o</sup>
50      Some bring a capon, some a rural cake,
Some nuts, some apples; some that think they make
The better cheeses bring them, or else send
By their ripe daughters, whom they would commend
This way to husbands, and whose baskets bear
55      An emblem of themselves in plum or pear.
But what can this (more than express their love)
Add to thy free provisions, far above
The need of such? whose liberal board doth flow
With all that hospitality doth know;
60      Where comes no guest but is allowed to eat,
Without his fear, and of thy lord's own meat;<sup>o</sup>

Where the same beer and bread, and selfsame wine,
That is his lordship's shall be also mine,<sup>1</sup>
And I not fain to sit (as some this day 65 At great men's tables), and yet dine away.
Here no man tells<sup>o</sup> my cups; nor, standing by,
A waiter doth my gluttony envy,<sup>o</sup>
But gives me what I call, and lets me eat;
He knows below<sup>o</sup> he shall find plenty of meat.
70 Thy tables hoard not up for the next day;
Nor, when I take my lodging, need I pray
For fire, or lights, or livery;<sup>o</sup> all is there,
As if thou then wert mine, or I reigned here:
There's nothing I can wish, for which I stay.<sup>o</sup> 75 That found King James when, hunting late this way
With his brave son, the Prince,<sup>2</sup> they saw thy fires
Shine bright on every hearth, as the desires
Of thy Penates<sup>o</sup> had been set on flame
To entertain them; or the country came 80 With all their zeal to warm their welcome here.
What (great I will not say, but) sudden cheer Didst thou then make 'em! And what praise was heaped
On thy good lady then, who therein reaped
The just reward of her high housewifery;
85 To have her linen, plate, and all things nigh,
When she was far; and not a room but dressed
As if it had expected such a guest!
These, Penshurst, are thy praise, and yet not all.
Thy lady's noble, fruitful, chaste withal.
90 His children thy great lord may call his own,
A fortune in this age but rarely known.
They are, and have been, taught religion; thence
Their gentler spirits have sucked innocence.
Each morn and even they are taught to pray,
95

100                    With the whole household, and may, every day,
                         Read in their virtuous parents' noble parts<sup>o</sup>
                         The mysteries of manners,<sup>o</sup> arms, and arts.
                         Now, Penshurst, they that will proportion<sup>o</sup> thee
                         With other edifices, when they see
                         Those proud, ambitious heaps, and nothing else,
                         May say, their lords have built, but thy lord dwells.
1616

Endnotes

- Note 2: Penshurst, in Kent, was the estate of Robert Sidney, Viscount Lisle (later, earl of Leicester), a younger brother of the poet Sir Philip Sidney. Along with Lanyer's "The Description of Cookham" (p. 936), this poem inaugurated the genre of English "country house" poems, which includes Marvell's Upon Appleton House (p. 1287). Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Touchstone, an expensive black basalt. Return to reference 3
- Note 4: More pretentious houses attract envy. Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Sir Philip Sidney was born at Penshurst. Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Satyrs and fauns were woodland spirits. Satyrs had the bodies of men and the legs (and horns) of goats. "Provoke": challenge to a race. Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Named after a lady of the house who went into labor under its branches. Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Lady Barbara (Gamage) Sidney, wife of Sir Robert. Return to reference 8
- Note 9: The local river. Return to reference 9
- Note 1: In many great houses, different courses might be served to different guests, depending on their social status. The lord would have the best food. Return to reference 1

- Note 2: Prince Henry, the heir apparent, died in November 1612. Return to reference 2

Notes

- °: cupola Return to reference °
- °: edifice Return to reference °
- °: wood nymphs Return to reference °
- °: country dweller, rustic Return to reference °
- °: little woods Return to reference °
- °: cattle Return to reference °
- °: rabbits Return to reference °
- °: high ground Return to reference °
- °: table Return to reference °
- °: dutifully Return to reference °
- °: peasant Return to reference °
- °: request to make Return to reference °
- °: food Return to reference °
- °: counts Return to reference °
- °: resent Return to reference °
- °: in the servants' quarters Return to reference °
- °: provisions Return to reference °
- °: wait Return to reference °
- °: Roman household gods Return to reference °
- °: attributes Return to reference °
- °: moral behavior Return to reference °
- °: compare Return to reference °

Song: To Celia<sup>1</sup>

Drink to me only with thine eyes,
And I will pledge with mine;
Or leave a kiss but in the cup,
And I'll not look for wine.
5 The thirst that from the soul doth rise
Doth ask a drink divine:
But might I of Jove's nectar sup,
I would not change for thine.
I sent thee late a rosy wreath,
Not so much honoring thee,
10 As giving it a hope that there
It could not withered be.
But thou thereon didst only breathe,
And sent'st it back to me;
Since when it grows and smells, I swear,
15 Not of itself, but thee.

1616

Endnotes

- Note 1: These famous lines translate a patchwork of five separate prose passages by Philostratus, a Greek sophist (3rd century C.E.). The music that made it a barroom favorite is by an anonymous 18th-century composer. Return to reference 1

To Heaven

Good and great God, can I not think of thee
But it must straight<sup>o</sup> my melancholy be?
Is it interpreted in me disease
That, laden with my sins, I seek for ease?
5 Oh, be thou witness, that the reins<sup>1</sup> dost know
And hearts of all, if I be sad for show,
And judge me after, if I dare pretend
To aught but grace, or aim at other end.
As thou art all, so be thou all to me,
10 First, midst, and last, converted<sup>o</sup> one and three,
My faith, my hope, my love; and in this state,
My judge, my witness, and my advocate.
Where have I been this while exiled from thee,
And whither rapt,<sup>o</sup> now thou but stoop'st to me?
15 Dwell, dwell here still:<sup>o</sup> Oh, being everywhere,
How can I doubt to find thee ever here?
I know my state, both full of shame and scorn,
Conceived in sin and unto labor born,
Standing with fear, and must with horror fall,
20 And destined unto judgment after all.
I feel my griefs too, and there scarce is ground
Upon my flesh to inflict another wound.
Yet dare I not complain or wish for death
With holy Paul,<sup>2</sup> lest it be thought the breath 25 Of discontent; or that these prayers be
For weariness of life, not love of thee.

1616

Endnotes

- Note 1: Literally, kidneys, but also the seat of the affections, with a glance at Psalm 7:9: “the righteous God trieth the hearts and reins.”Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Jonson refers to Paul’s question: “Who shall deliver me from the body of this death?” (Romans 7:24).Return to reference 2

Notes

- °: immediatelyReturn to reference °
- °: interchangingReturn to reference °
- °: carried offReturn to reference °
- °: alwaysReturn to reference °

FROM UNDERWOOD1

Endnotes

- Note 1: Preparing a second edition of his Works (published posthumously in 1640–41), Jonson added a third section of poems, “Underwood,” “out of the analogy they hold to The Forest in my former book.”Return to reference 1

A Sonnet, to the Noble Lady, the Lady Mary Wroth<sup>2</sup>

I that have been a lover, and could show it,
Though not in these,<sup>o</sup> in rhymes not wholly dumb,
Since I exscribe<sup>o</sup> your sonnets, am become
A better lover, and much better poet.
Nor is my muse, or I, ashamed to owe it
5 To those true numerous graces; whereof some
But charm the senses, others overcome
Both brains and hearts; and mine now best do know
it:
For in your verse all Cupid's armory,
His flames, his shafts, his quiver, and his bow,
10 His very eyes are yours to overthrow.
But then his mother's<sup>o</sup> sweets you so apply,
Her joys, her smiles, her loves, as readers take
For Venus' ceston,<sup>3</sup> every line you make.

1640–41

Endnotes

- Note 2:
Mary Wroth, author of the sonnet sequence Pamphilia to Amphilanthus ( pp. 1074–79) and the romance The Countess of Montgomery's Urania (pp. 1069–73), was the daughter of Robert Sidney and his wife, Barbara Gamage, of Penshurst, the niece of Sir Philip Sidney and the Countess of Pembroke; she was the wife of Sir Robert Wroth, whose country estate Jonson also praised in "The Forest." The poem exhibits how poems were exchanged within a coterie, though Jonson also writes as a client to a patron. Jonson's only sonnet, the poem pays tribute to Wroth's mastery of the genre and shows how well Jonson knew her verse.

Return to reference 2

- Note 3: Venus's girdle or belt, which had aphrodisiacal powers; it aroused passion in all beholders. Return to reference 3

Notes

- °: in sonnets Return to reference °
- °: copy out Return to reference °
- °: Venus's Return to reference °

My Picture Left in Scotland<sup>1</sup>

I now think Love is rather deaf than blind,
For else it could not be
That she
Whom I adore so much should so slight me
And cast my love behind;
5 I'm sure my language to her was as sweet,
And every close<sup>o</sup> did meet
In sentence<sup>o</sup> of as subtle feet,<sup>o</sup>
As hath the youngest he
That sits in shadow of Apollo's tree.<sup>2</sup> 10
O, but my conscious fears
That fly my thoughts between,
Tell me that she hath seen
My hundreds of gray hairs,
Told<sup>o</sup> seven and forty years,
15 Read so much waist<sup>3</sup> as she cannot embrace
My mountain belly and my rocky face;
And all these through her eyes have stopped her ears.

Ben Jonson. This 1617 portrait of Jonson by Abraham van Blyenberch shows the writer much as he describes himself in some of his poems, particularly "My Picture Left in Scotland."

---

Endnotes

- Note 1: After his walking tour of Scotland in 1618–19, Jonson sent a manuscript version of this poem to William Drummond, with whom he had stayed. The woman of the poem may or may not be a real person.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Bay laurel, the tree associated with Apollo, god of poetry.Return to reference 2

- Note 3: With a pun on “waste,” meaning “untillable ground.”Return to reference 3

Notes

- °: cadenceReturn to reference °
- °: wise sayings Return to reference °
- °: rhythmReturn to reference °
- °: countedReturn to reference °

The Ode on Cary and Morison The ode, originally a classical form, is a lyric poem in an elevated style, celebrating a lofty theme, a noble personage, or a grand occasion. The Greek poet Pindar wrote many odes for winners of the Olympic games, known as Great Odes because of their exalted subject and style. Later, the Roman poet Horace wrote more restrained poems that came to be known as Lesser Odes. Jonson's Cary-Morison ode comes closer than any other in the language to the lofty style and manner of Pindar. "To Penshurst" is in the Horatian style, as is Marvell's "An Horatian Ode upon Cromwell's Return from Ireland."

Pindar's odes were designed to be sung by a chorus and often followed a three-part scheme: the chorus moved in one direction while chanting the strophe, reversed direction for the antistrophe, and stood still for the epode. Jonson imitates this pattern with his triple division of "turn," "counterturn," and "stand"—the terms more or less literally translated from the original Greek. His turns and counterturns rhyme in couplets, with line lengths varying in all stanzas according to a uniform scheme; the twelve-line stands follow a more complex but equally strict design. He imitates Pindar also in his moral generalizations and lofty but impersonal praise of the two noble friends.

To the Immortal Memory and Friendship of That Noble Pair, Sir Lucius Cary and Sir H. Morison<sup>1</sup>

The Turn

Brave infant of Saguntum,<sup>2</sup> clear<sup>o</sup>
Thy coming forth in that great year
When the prodigious Hannibal did crown
His rage, with razing your immortal town.
Thou, looking then about 5 Ere thou wert half got out,
Wise child, didst hastily return
And mad'st thy mother's womb thine urn.<sup>o</sup>
How summed<sup>o</sup> a circle<sup>3</sup> didst thou leave mankind
Of deepest lore, could we the center find!

10

The Counterturn

Did wiser nature draw thee back
From out the horror of that sack,
Where shame, faith, honor, and regard of right
Lay trampled on?—the deeds of death and night Urged, hurried forth, and hurled
15 Upon th' affrighted world?
Sword, fire, and famine, with fell<sup>o</sup> fury met,
And all on utmost ruin set:
As, could they but life's miseries foresee,
No doubt all infants would return like thee.

20

The Stand

For what is life if measured by the space,

Not by the act?
Or maskèd man, if valued by his face,
Above his fact?<sup>o</sup>
Here's one outlived his peers
25 And told forth fourscore years:
He vexèd time, and busied the whole state,
Troubled both foes and friends,
But ever to no ends:
30 What did this stirrer but die late?<sup>4</sup>
How well at twenty had he fall'n or stood!
For three of his four score, he did no good.

The Turn

He<sup>5</sup> entered well, by virtuous parts,<sup>o</sup>
Got up and thrived with honest arts:
He purchased friends and fame and honors then,
35 And had his noble name advanced with men;
But, weary of that flight,
He stooped in all men's sight
To sordid flatteries, acts of strife,
And sunk in that dead sea of life
40 So deep, as he did then death's waters sup;
But that the cork of title buoyed him up.

The Counterturn

Alas, but Morison fell young;—
He never fell, thou fall'st,<sup>6</sup> my tongue.
He stood, a soldier, to the last right end,
45 A perfect patriot and a noble friend,
But most a virtuous son.
All offices<sup>o</sup> were done
By him, so ample, full, and round
In weight, in measure, number, sound,
50 As, though his age imperfect might appear,

His life was of humanity the sphere.

The Stand

Go now, and tell out<sup>o</sup> days summed up with fears,
And make them years;
Produce thy mass of miseries on the stage
55 To swell thine age;
Repeat of things a throng,
To show thou hast been long,
Not lived; for life doth her great actions spell,<sup>o</sup>
By what was done and wrought
60 In season, and so brought
To light: her measures are, how well
Each syllab'e<sup>o</sup> answered, and was formed how fair;
These make the lines of life, and that's her air.<sup>z</sup>

The Turn

It is not growing like a tree
65 In bulk, doth make man better be,
Or standing long an oak, three hundred year,
To fall a log at last, dry, bald, and sere:<sup>o</sup>
A lily of a day
Is fairer far in May,
70 Although it fall and die that night;
It was the plant and flower of light.
In small proportions we just beauties see,
And in short measures life may perfect be.

The Counterturn

Call, noble Lucius, then for wine,
75 And let thy looks with gladness shine:
Accept this garland,<sup>8</sup> plant it on thy head,
And think, nay, know, thy Morison's not dead.

80 He leaped the present age,
Possessed with holy rage,<sup>o</sup>
To see that bright eternal day,
Of which we priests and poets say
Such truths as we expect for happy men,
And there he lives with memory: and Ben

The Stand

85 Jonson, who sung this of him ere he went Himself to rest,
Or taste a part of that full joy he meant
To have expressed
In this bright asterism:<sup>o</sup>
Where it were friendship's schism
90 (Were not his Lucius long with us to tarry)
To separate these twi-
Lights, the Dioscuri,<sup>9</sup>
And keep the one half from his Harry.
But fate doth so alternate the design,
95 Whilst that in heaven, this light on earth must shine.

The Turn

And shine as you exalted are,
Two names of friendship, but one star,
Of hearts the union. And those not by chance
Made, or indentured,<sup>o</sup> or leased out t' advance
100 The profits for a time.
No pleasures vain did chime
Of rhymes or riots at your feasts,
Orgies of drink, or feigned protests;
But simple love of greatness and of good 105 That knits brave minds and manners, more than blood.

The Counterturn

This made you first to know the why
You liked, then after to apply
That liking; and approach so one the tother,<sup>o</sup>
Till either grew a portion of the other;
110 Each stylèd<sup>o</sup> by his end,
The copy of his friend.
You lived to be the great surnames
And titles by which all made claims
Unto the virtue: nothing perfect done,
115 But as a Cary or a Morison.

The Stand

And such a force the fair example had,
As they that saw
The good and durst not practice it, were glad
That such a law
120 Was left yet to mankind;
Where they might read and find
Friendship in deed was written, not in words.
And with the heart, not pen,
Of two so early<sup>o</sup> men,
125 Whose lives<sup>1</sup> her rolls were, and records,
Who, ere the first down bloomèd on the chin
Had sowed these fruits, and got the harvest in.

1629

1640–41

Endnotes

- Note 1: Henry Morison died in 1629 at the age of twenty. His good friend Lucius Cary (son of Elizabeth Cary, the author of a 1613 closet drama, The Tragedy of Mariam) became the second Viscount Falkland. He was known for his learning; he died fighting for King Charles in the first years of the civil war.Return to reference 1

- Note 2: The ancient Roman writer Pliny the Elder tells the story of an infant born while Hannibal was assaulting Sagunto, in Spain. The infant dived back into his mother's womb (setting a record for brevity of life), where he was 'buried.'Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Emblem of perfection.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Punning on "dilate," meaning "talk endlessly."Return to reference 4
- Note 5: That is, another man.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Slip, with a latent pun on Latin fallo, "to make a mistake."Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Life is a poem set to music; life's "measures" are its metrical patterns as well as the standards by which it is judged.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Celebratory wreath; that is, this poem.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: The mythical Greek twins, Castor and Pollux, the Dioscuri, were said to have exchanged places regularly, after Castor's death, between earth and the underworld. They are the principal stars of the constellation Gemini (the twins).Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Some texts read "lines."Return to reference 1

Notes

- °: explainReturn to reference °
- °: burial vesselReturn to reference °
- °: completeReturn to reference °
- °: fierceReturn to reference °
- °: deedsReturn to reference °
- °: qualitiesReturn to reference °
- °: duties of lifeReturn to reference °

- °: countReturn to reference °
- °: tell overReturn to reference °
- °: syllableReturn to reference °
- °: witheredReturn to reference °
- °: inspirationReturn to reference °
- °: constellationReturn to reference °
- °: contracted forReturn to reference °
- °: otherReturn to reference °
- °: calledReturn to reference °
- °: youthfulReturn to reference °

Queen and Huntress<sup>1</sup>

Queen and huntress, chaste and fair,
Now the sun is laid to sleep,
Seated in thy silver chair,
State in wonted<sup>o</sup> manner keep;
5 Hesperus entreats thy light,
Goddess excellently bright.

Earth, let not thy envious shade
Dare itself to interpose;<sup>2</sup>
Cynthia's shining orb was made
Heaven to clear, when day did close.
10 Bless us then with wishèd sight,
Goddess excellently bright.

Lay thy bow of pearl apart,
And thy crystal-shining quiver;
Give unto the flying hart
15 Space to breathe, how short soever.
Thou that mak'st a day of night,
Goddess excellently bright.

1600

Endnotes

- Note 1: Also from Cynthia's Revels (4.3), this song is sung by Hesperus, the evening star, to Cynthia, or Diana, goddess of chastity and the moon—with whom Queen Elizabeth was frequently compared.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Eclipses were thought to portend evil.Return to reference 2

Notes

- °: accustomed Return to reference °

To the Memory of My Beloved, The Author, Mr. William Shakespeare, and What He Hath Left Us<sup>1</sup>

To draw no envy, Shakespeare, on thy name,
Am I thus ample<sup>o</sup> to thy book and fame,
While I confess thy writings to be such
As neither man nor muse can praise too much.
5 'Tis true, and all men's suffrage.<sup>o</sup> But these ways
Were not the paths I meant unto thy praise;
For silliest<sup>o</sup> ignorance on these may light,
Which, when it sounds at best, but echoes right;
Or blind affection, which doth ne'er advance
The truth, but gropes, and urgeth all by chance;
10 Or crafty malice might pretend this praise,
And think to ruin where it seemed to raise.
These are as<sup>o</sup> some infamous bawd or whore Should praise a matron. What could hurt her
more?
But thou art proof against them, and, indeed,
15 Above th' ill fortune of them, or the need.
I therefore will begin. Soul of the age!
The applause! Delight! The wonder of our stage!
My Shakespeare, rise; I will not lodge thee by Chaucer or Spenser, or bid Beaumont lie
20 A little further to make thee a room:<sup>2</sup>
Thou art a monument without a tomb,
And art alive still while thy book doth live,
And we have wits to read and praise to give.
That I not mix thee so, my brain excuses,
25 I mean with great, but disproportioned<sup>o</sup> Muses;
For, if I thought my judgment were of years,

I should commit thee surely with thy peers,
And tell how far thou didst our Lyly outshine,
Or sporting Kyd, or Marlowe's mighty line.<sup>3</sup>
30 And though thou hadst small Latin and less Greek,<sup>4</sup>
From thence to honor thee I would not seek<sup>o</sup>
For names, but call forth thund'ring Aeschylus,
Euripides, and Sophocles to us,
Pacuvius, Accius, him of Cordova dead,<sup>5</sup>
35 To life again, to hear thy buskin<sup>o</sup> tread
And shake a stage; or, when thy socks<sup>o</sup> were on,
Leave thee alone for the comparison
Of all that insolent Greece or haughty Rome
Sent forth, or since did from their ashes come.
40 Triumph, my Britain; thou hast one to show
To whom all scenes<sup>o</sup> of Europe homage owe.
He was not of an age, but for all time!
And all the Muses still were in their prime
When like Apollo<sup>o</sup> he came forth to warm
45 Our ears, or like a Mercury<sup>o</sup> to charm.
Nature herself was proud of his designs,
And joyed to wear the dressing of his lines,
Which were so richly spun, and woven so fit,
As, since, she will vouchsafe<sup>o</sup> no other wit:
50 The merry Greek, tart Aristophanes,
Neat Terence, witty Plautus<sup>6</sup> now not please,
But antiquated and deserted lie,
As they were not of Nature's family.
Yet must I not give nature all; thy art,
55 My gentle Shakespeare, must enjoy a part.
For though the poet's matter<sup>o</sup> nature be,
His art doth give the fashion;<sup>o</sup> and that he
Who casts<sup>o</sup> to write a living line must sweat (Such as thine are) and strike the second heat
60 Upon the Muses' anvil; turn the same,
And himself with it, that he thinks to frame,

Or for<sup>o</sup> the laurel he may gain a scorn;
 For a good poet's made as well as born,
 And such wert thou. Look how the father's face
 65 Lives in his issue;<sup>o</sup> even so the race
 Of Shakespeare's mind and manners brightly shines
 In his well-turnèd and true-filèd lines,
 In each of which he seems to shake a lance,<sup>7</sup>
 As brandished at the eyes of ignorance.
 70 Sweet swan of Avon, what a sight it were
 To see thee in our waters yet appear,
 And make those flights upon the banks of Thames
 That so did take Eliza and our James!<sup>8</sup>
 But stay; I see thee in the hemisphere
 75 Advanced and made a constellation there!<sup>9</sup>
 Shine forth, thou star of poets, and with rage
 Or influence<sup>1</sup> chide or cheer the drooping stage,
 Which, since thy flight from hence, hath mourned
 like night,
 And despairs day, but for thy volume's light.
 80

1623

Endnotes

- Note 1: This poem was prefixed to the first folio of Shakespeare's plays (1623).Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Chaucer, Spenser, and Francis Beaumont were buried in Westminster Abbey; Shakespeare, in Stratford.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: John Lyly, Thomas Kyd, and Christopher Marlowe were Elizabethan dramatists contemporary or nearly contemporary with Shakespeare.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Shakespeare's Latin was pretty good, but Jonson is judging by the standard of his own remarkable scholarship.Return to reference 4

- Note 5: Marcus Pacuvius, Lucius Accius (2nd century B.C.E.), and “him of Cordova,” Seneca the Younger (1st century C.E.), were Latin tragedians. Seneca’s tragedies had a large influence on Elizabethan revenge tragedy.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Aristophanes, an ancient Greek satirist and writer of comedy; Terence and Plautus (2nd and 3rd centuries B.C.E.), Roman writers of comedy.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Pun on Shake-speare.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Queen Elizabeth and King James.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Heroes and demigods were typically exalted after death to a place among the stars.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: “Rage” and “influence” describe the supposed effects of the planets on earthly affairs. “Rage” also implies poetic inspiration.Return to reference 1

Notes

- °: copiousReturn to reference °
- °: admissionReturn to reference °
- °: simplestReturn to reference °
- °: as thoughReturn to reference °
- °: not comparableReturn to reference °
- °: lackReturn to reference °
- °: symbol of tragedyReturn to reference °
- °: symbol of comedyReturn to reference °
- °: stagesReturn to reference °
- °: god of poetryReturn to reference °
- °: god of eloquenceReturn to reference °
- °: grantReturn to reference °
- °: subject matterReturn to reference °
- °: form, styleReturn to reference °
- °: undertakesReturn to reference °
- °: instead ofReturn to reference °
- °: offspringReturn to reference °

Ode to Himself<sup>1</sup>

Come, leave the loathèd stage,
And the more loathsome age,
Where pride and impudence, in faction knit,
Usurp the chair of wit,
5 Indicting and arraigning every day
Something they call a play.
Let their fastidious, vain
Commission of the brain
Run on and rage, sweat, censure, and condemn:
10 They were not made for thee, less thou for them.

Say that thou pour'st them wheat,
And they will acorns eat;
'Twere simple<sup>o</sup> fury still thyself to waste
On such as have no taste!
To offer them a surfeit of pure bread,
15 Whose appetites are dead!
No, give them grains their fill,
Husks, draff to drink, and swill:<sup>2</sup>
If they love lees,<sup>o</sup> and leave the lusty wine, 20 Envy them not; their palate's with the swine.

No doubt some moldy tale
Like Pericles,<sup>3</sup> and stale
As the shrieve's<sup>o</sup> crusts, and nasty as his fish—
Scraps, out of every dish
25 Thrown forth and raked into the common tub,<sup>4</sup>
May keep up the play club:
There, sweepings do as well
As the best-ordered meal;
For who the relish of these guests will fit

Needs set them but the alms basket of wit.
30
And much good do 't you then:
Brave plush and velvet men
Can feed on orts;<sup>o</sup> and, safe in your stage clothes,<sup>5</sup>
Dare quit,<sup>o</sup> upon your oaths,
35 The stagers and the stage-wrights<sup>6</sup> too, your peers,
Of larding your large ears
With their foul comic socks,<sup>o</sup>
Wrought upon twenty blocks;<sup>7</sup>
Which, if they're torn, and turned, and patched enough,
40 The gamesters<sup>o</sup> share your guilt,<sup>8</sup> and you their stuff.

Leave things so prostitute
And take th' Alcaic lute;
Or thine own Horace, or Anacreon's lyre;
Warm thee by Pindar's fire:<sup>9</sup> 45 And though thy nerves<sup>o</sup> be shrunk, and blood be cold,
Ere years have made thee old,
Strike that disdainful heat
Throughout, to their defeat,
As curious fools, and envious of thy strain,
May, blushing, swear no palsy's in thy brain.<sup>1</sup>
50

But when they hear thee sing
The glories of thy king,
His zeal to God and his just awe o'er men,
They may, blood-shaken then,
55 Feel such a flesh-quake to possess their powers
As they shall cry, "Like ours,
In sound of peace or wars,
No harp e'er hit the stars

In tuning forth the acts of his sweet reign,
And raising Charles his chariot 'bove his Wain."<sup>2</sup>

60

1629 Endnotes

1631, 1640–41

- Note 1: The failure of Jonson's play The New Inn (1629) inspired this assault on criticism and the public taste.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: All three items are food for pigs.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Shakespeare's play, at least in part (printed 1609).Return to reference 3
- Note 4: The basket outside the jail to receive food for prisoners was called the sheriff's tub.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Actors often wore on the stage clothes cast off by the gentry; these parasites wear clothes cast off by actors.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Playwrights. "Stagers": actors.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: A pun: molds/blockheads.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: A pun: guilt/gilt.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Alcaeus (ca. 600 B.C.E.), Horace, Anacreon, and Pindar were among the greatest lyric poets in ancient Greece and Rome.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: By 1629 Jonson was partially paralyzed.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Jonson's poetry will elevate the chariot of Charles I (symbol of his royal power) above Charles's Wain (Wagon)—the seven bright stars of Ursa Major.Return to reference 2

Notes

- °: foolishReturn to reference °
- °: dregsReturn to reference °
- °: sheriff'sReturn to reference °
- °: scrapsReturn to reference °
- °: acquitReturn to reference °

- °: symbols of comedyReturn to reference °
- °: gamblersReturn to reference °
- °: sinewsReturn to reference °

MARY WROTH

1587–1651?

In 1621 Mary Wroth published The Countess of Montgomery's Urania, a 558-page pastoral romance, with her Petrarchan lyric sequence Pamphilia to Amphilanthus appended. (She also wrote a manuscript continuation of her romance, first printed in 1999.) Both genres were firsts for an Englishwoman, as was the pastoral drama, Love's Victory, which she composed around the same time and circulated only in manuscript. Wroth's achievement was fostered by her strong sense of identity as heir to the literary and cultural fame of her uncle Sir Philip Sidney; her aunt Mary Sidney Herbert, Countess of Pembroke (who may have served as her mentor); and her father, Robert Sidney, Viscount Lisle, whose unpublished sonnet sequence was rediscovered in 1975. While Wroth was clearly influenced by her family's work, particularly Philip Sidney's The Countess of Pembroke's Arcadia and Astrophil and Stella, the Urania and Pamphilia to Amphilanthus stand alone as major contributions to the privileged genres of the English Renaissance.

Wroth was raised and educated at Penshurst, the Sidney country house celebrated by Ben Jonson. She also spent time at the Herberts' London residence, Baynard's castle; her aunt's "little college" at Wilton House; and the English garrison in Flushing, where her father and brother held military posts. Lady Anne Clifford noted that Wroth taught her "a great deal of news from beyond the seas" during a visit to Penshurst in 1616. At age seventeen, Wroth was married (not wholly compatibly) to Sir Robert Wroth, whose office it was to facilitate the king's hunting; and she befriended several poets, including Ben Jonson. Wroth's poems circulated in manuscript well before their publication, and her reputation as a poet and literary patron is attested by numerous dedicatory poems. Jonson celebrated her in two epigrams and in a verse letter honoring her husband, dedicated to her his great comedy The Alchemist, and claimed in his only sonnet (p. 1057) that her sonnets had made him a "better lover, and much better poet." An accomplished musician and dancer, Wroth also performed in Jonson's The Masque of Blackness (1605) at the behest of Queen Anna. After her husband's death, Wroth carried on a long-standing love affair with her married first cousin, William Herbert, Earl of Pembroke, himself a poet, powerful courtier, and patron of literature and the theater. (He is one of the dedicatees of Shakespeare's First Folio.) That relationship, which occasioned some scandal, produced two children.

The title characters of Wroth's Petrarchan sequence, Pamphilia ("all-loving") to Amphilanthus ("lover of two"), derive from the romance to which they were appended, and at times shadow Wroth and Pembroke. The sonnet sequence was less popular in Jacobean than in Elizabethan England, but as the major genre for analyzing the (male) lover's passions, frustrations, and fantasies (and sometimes career anxieties), it was an obvious choice for a poet of Wroth's ambition. Yet Pamphilia to Amphilanthus does more than reverse the roles of lover and beloved; Pamphilia addresses few sonnets to Amphilanthus, and seldom assumes the Petrarchan lover's position of abject servitude to a cruel beloved. Instead, she proclaims her subjection to Cupid, usually identified with the force of her own desire. This radical revision identifies female desire as the source and center of the love relationship, and celebrates the woman lover-poet's movement from the bondage of chaotic passion to the freedom of self-chosen constancy.

The love affair between Pamphilia and Amphilanthus plays a central role in the Urania, but the romance as a whole focuses on the activities of the interrelated royal families of Morea and Naples, particularly the political and literary activities of their queens.

Conventional romance tropes abound in the Urania—humble shepherdesses are revealed to be princesses; idealized knights fight monsters and tyrants—but rather than an Arcadia or Fairyland, the landscape of the Urania is an ambiguously ancient, war-torn Europe and Asia that often mirrors the contentious geopolitics of the early seventeenth century. Amphilanthus’s “valor” and Pamphilia’s “loyalty, met together” secure the future of Bohemia and the Holy Roman Empire, both hot topics of political dispute in the 1620s, and convert the Muslims of Cyprus to Christianity. Love stories proliferate in the romance, but while the male heroes are often courageous fighters and attractive lovers, they are often flawed by inconstancy, and it is the women’s steadfastness that serves as the romance’s guiding ethos. Almost all of Wroth’s female characters are also storytellers and poets, and they compose twice as many poems in the romance as the men do. Pamphilia, Wroth’s surrogate, is singled out as a poet by vocation, both by the number of her poems and by their excellence.

Lady Mary Wroth, with archlute (attributed to John de Critz).

The image represents Mary Wroth in a conventional pose and role, holding the archlute, which indicates that she has been educated in the graceful arts that an aristocratic woman was expected to know. But the massive archlute, emblem of song making, also points to her identity as a poet and to her literary heritage as a Sidney—niece of the poets Sir Philip Sidney and the Countess of Pembroke, and daughter of Sir Robert Sidney of Penshurst, also a poet.

---

Many contemporaries read the Urania as a scandalous roman à clef, finding allusions not only to Sidney-Pembroke-Wroth affairs, but to notable personages of the Jacobean court, and to matters of political controversy. The historian Edmund Bolton placed the Urania in the company of the Arcadia and John Barclay's Argenis (1621) as texts that "shadow out some persons, or matter, which it were not otherwise safe, or convenient to discover directly." A public outcry from one reader, Lord Edward Denny, elicited a spirited satiric response from Wroth. Although she offered to withdraw the work from circulation, there is no evidence that she actually did so. Indeed, her choice of the famous Simon van de Passe as her engraver, and her use of publishers who had recently been punished for publishing politically sensitive materials, suggest that she may well have courted a degree of notoriety.

From The Countess of Montgomery's Urania<sup>1</sup>

From The First Book

When the spring began to appear like the welcome messenger of summer, one sweet (and in that more sweet) morning, after Aurora<sup>2</sup> had called all careful eyes to attend the day, forth came the fair shepherdess Urania<sup>3</sup> (fair indeed; yet that far too mean a title for her, who for beauty deserved the highest style<sup>4</sup> could be given by best-knowing judgments). Into the mead<sup>5</sup> she came, where usually she drove her flocks to feed, whose leaping and wantonness showed they were proud of such a guide: but she, whose sad thoughts led her to another manner of spending her time, made her soon leave them, and follow her late-begun custom; which was (while they delighted themselves) to sit under some shade, bewailing her misfortune; while they fed, to feed upon her own sorrow and tears, which at this time she began again to summon, sitting down under the shade of a well-spread beech; the ground (then blest) and the tree, with full and fine-leaved branches, growing proud to bear and shadow such perfections. But she regarding nothing, in comparison of her woe, thus proceeded in her grief: "Alas Urania," said she (the true servant to misfortune), "of any misery that can befall woman, is not this the most and greatest which thou art fallen into? Can there be any near the unhappiness of being ignorant, and that in the highest kind, not being certain of mine own estate or birth? Why was I not still continued in the belief I was, as I appear, a shepherdess, and daughter to a shepherd? My ambition then went no higher than this estate, now flies it to a knowledge; then was I contented, now perplexed. O ignorance, can thy dullness yet procure so sharp a pain? and that such a thought as makes me now aspire unto knowledge? How did I joy in this poor life, being quiet! blessed in the love of those I took for parents, but now by them I know the contrary, and by that knowledge, now to know myself. Miserable Urania, worse art thou now than these thy lambs; for they know their dams, while thou dost live unknown of any." By this were others come into that mead with their flocks: but she, esteeming her sorrowing thoughts her best and choicest company, left that place, taking a little path which brought her to the further side of the plain, to the foot of the rocks, speaking as she went these lines, her eyes fixed upon the ground, her very soul turned into mourning.

The Countesse of Mountgomeries URANIA.

Written by the right honorable the Lady
MARY WROTH
Daughter to the right Noble Robert Earle of Leicester.
And Neece to the ever famous, and renowned S<sup>r</sup> Phillips Sidney knight. And to S<sup>t</sup> most exalt<sup>d</sup> Lady Mary Countesse of Pembroke late deceased.

LONDON
Printed for IOH<sup>n</sup> MARRIOTT and IOH<sup>n</sup> GRISMAND And are to bee sould at their shoppes in S<sup>t</sup> Dunstons Churchyard in Fleetstreet and in Poules Alley at y<sup>e</sup> signe of the Gunne.

Sim: Pascheus sculp.

1621

The Countess of Montgomerie's Urania. The frontispiece to Wroth's work was engraved by Simon van de Passe. The publishers, John Marriot and John Grismond, had been fined a year earlier for publishing the overly topical Wither's Motto (1621).

---

Unseen, unknown, I here alone complain
To rocks, to hills, to meadows, and to springs,
Which can no help return to ease my pain,
But back my sorrows the sad Echo<sup>6</sup> brings.
Thus still increasing are my woes to me,
5 Doubly resounded by that moanful voice,
Which seems to second me in misery,
And answer gives like friend of mine own choice.
Thus only she doth my companion prove,
The others silently do offer ease.
10 But those that grieve, a grieving note do love;
Pleasures to dying eyes bring but disease:
And such am I, who daily ending live,
Wailing a state which can no comfort give.

In this passion she went on, till she came to the foot of a great rock, she thinking of nothing less than ease, sought how she might ascend it; hoping there to pass away her time more peaceably with loneliness, though not to find least respite from her sorrow, which so dearly she did value, as by no means she would impart it to any. The way was hard, though by some windings making the ascent pleasing. Having attained the top, she saw under some hollow trees the entry into the rock: she fearing nothing but the continuance of her ignorance, went in; where she found a pretty room, as if that stony place had yet in pity, given leave for such perfections to come into the heart as chiefest, and most beloved place, because most loving. The place was not unlike the ancient (or the descriptions of ancient) hermitages, instead of hangings, covered and lined with ivy, disdaining aught else should come there, that being in such perfection. This richness in Nature's plenty made her stay to behold it, and almost grudge the pleasant fullness of content that place might have, if sensible, while she must know to taste of torments. As she was thus in passion mixed with pain, throwing her eyes as wildly as timorous lovers do for fear of discovery, she perceived a little light, and such a one, as a chink doth oft discover to our sights. She curious to see what this was, with her delicate hands put the natural ornament aside, discerning a little door, which she putting from her, passed through it into another room, like the first in all proportion; but in the midst there was a square stone, like to a pretty table, and on it a wax candle burning; and by that a paper,<sup>7</sup> which had suffered itself patiently to receive the discovering of so much of it, as presented this sonnet (as it seemed newly written) to her sight.

Here all alone in silence might I mourn:
But how can silence be where sorrows flow?
Sighs with complaints have poorer pains outworn;
But broken hearts can only true grief show.

5 Drops of my dearest blood shall let Love know
Such tears for her I shed, yet still do burn,
As no spring can quench least part of my woe,
Till this live earth, again to earth do turn.

10 Hateful all thought of comfort is to me,
Despised day, let me still night possess;
Let me all torments feel in their excess,
And but this light allow my state to see.

Which still doth waste, and wasting as this light,
Are my sad days unto eternal night.

"Alas Urania!" sighed she. "How well do these words, this place, and all agree with thy fortune? Sure, poor soul, thou wert here appointed to spend thy days, and these rooms ordained to keep thy tortures in; none being assuredly so matchlessly unfortunate."

Turning from the table, she discerned in the room a bed of boughs, and on it a man lying, deprived of outward sense, as she thought, and of life, as she at first did fear, which struck her into a great amazement: yet having a brave spirit, though shadowed under a mean habit,<sup>8</sup> she stepped unto him, whom she found not dead, but laid upon his back, his head a little to her wards,<sup>9</sup> his arms folded on his breast, hair long, and beard disordered, manifesting all care;<sup>1</sup> but care itself had left him: curiousness thus far afforded him, as to be perfectly discerned the most exact piece of misery; apparel he had suitable to the habitation, which was a long gray<sup>2</sup> robe. This grieveful spectacle did much amaze the sweet and tender-hearted shepherdess; especially, when she perceived (as she might by the help of the candle) the tears which distilled from his eyes; who seeming the image of death, yet had this sign of worldly sorrow, the drops falling in that abundance, as if there were a kind strife among them, to rid their master first of that burdenous<sup>3</sup> carriage; or else meaning to make a flood, and so drown their woeful patient in his own sorrow, who yet lay still, but then fetching a deep groan from the profoundest part of his soul, he said:

"Miserable Perissus,<sup>4</sup> canst thou thus live, knowing she that gave thee life is gone? Gone, O me! and with her all my joy departed. Wilt thou (unblessed creature) lie here complaining for her death, and know she died for thee? Let truth and shame make thee do something worthy of such a love, ending thy days like thyself, and one fit to be her servant. But that I must not do: then thus remain and foster storms, still to torment thy wretched soul withall, since all are little, and too too little for such a loss. O dear Limena,<sup>5</sup> loving Limena, worthy Limena, and more rare, constant Limena: perfections delicately feigned to be in women were verified in thee, was such worthiness framed only to be wondered at by the best, but given as a prey to base and unworthy jealousy? When were all worthy parts joined in one, but in thee my best Limena? Yet all these grown subject to a creature ignorant of all but ill; like unto a fool, who in a dark cave, that hath but one way to get out, having a candle, but not the understanding what good it doth him, puts it out: this ignorant wretch not being able to comprehend thy virtues, did so by thee in thy murder, putting out the world's light, and men's admiration: Limena, Limena, O my Limena."

With that he fell from complaining into such a passion, as weeping and crying were never in so woeful a perfection, as now in him; which brought as deserved a compassion from the excellent shepherdess, who already had her heart so tempered with grief, as that it was apt to take any impression that it would come to seal withal. Yet taking a brave courage to her, she stepped unto him, kneeling down by his side, and gently pulling him by the arm, she thus spoke.

"Sir," said she, "having heard some part of your sorrows, they have not only made me truly pity you, but wonder at you; since if you have lost so great a treasure, you should not lie thus leaving her and your love unrevenged, suffering her murderers to live, while you lie here complaining; and if such perfections be dead in her, why make you not the phoenix<sup>6</sup> of your deeds live again, as to new life raised out of the revenge you should take on them? Then were her end satisfied, and you deservedly accounted worthy of her favor, if she were so worthy as you say."

"If she were, O God," cried out Perissus, "what devilish spirit art thou, that thus dost come to torture me? But now I see you are a woman; and therefore not much to be marked, and less resisted: but if you know charity, I pray now practice it, and leave me who am afflicted sufficiently without your company; or if you will stay, discourse not to me."

"Neither of these will I do," said she.

"If you be then," said he, "some Fury<sup>7</sup> of purpose sent to vex me, use your force to the uttermost in martyring me; for never was there a fitter subject, then the heart of poor Perissus is."

"I am no Fury," replied the divine Urania, "nor hither come to trouble you, but by accident lighted on this place; my cruel hap being such, as only the like can give me content, while the solitariness of this like cave might give me quiet, though not ease. Seeking for such a one, I happened hither; and this is the true cause of my being here, though now I would use it to a better end if I might: Wherefore favor me with the knowledge of your grief; which heard, it may be I shall give you some counsel, and comfort in your sorrow."

"Cursed may I be," cried he, "if ever I take comfort, having such cause of mourning: but because you are, or seem to be afflicted, I will not refuse to satisfy your demand, but tell you the saddest story that ever was rehearsed by dying man to living woman, and such a one, as I fear will fasten too much sadness in you; yet should I deny it, I were to blame, being so well known to these senseless places; as were they sensible of sorrow, they would condole, or else amazed at such cruelty stand dumb as they do, to find that man should be so inhuman."

* * *

SONG<sup>8</sup>

Love what art thou? A vain thought
In our minds by fancy wrought.
Idle smiles did thee beget,
While fond wishes made the net
Which so many fools have caught.

5

Love what art thou? Light and fair,
Fresh as morning, clear as th' air.
But too soon thy evening change
Makes thy worth with coldness range;
Still thy joy is mixed with care.

10

Love what art thou? A sweet flower
Once full blown, <sup>o</sup> dead in an hour.
Dust in wind as staid remains
As thy pleasure or our gains,

15                    If thy humor<sup>o</sup> change, to lour.<sup>o</sup>

Love what art thou? Childish, vain,
Firm as bubbles made by rain,
Wantonness thy greatest pride.
These foul faults thy virtues hide—
20                    But babes can no staidness gain.

Love what art thou? Causeless cursed,
Yet alas these not the worst:
Much more of thee may be said.
But thy law I once obeyed,
25                    Therefore say no more at first.

1621

Endnotes

- Note 8: This song, one of a group of eclogues that marks the conclusion of book 1 of the Urania, is sung to a shepherdess by a shepherd, “being, as it seemed, fallen out with Love.” Return to reference 8
- Note 1: The Greek goddess of the dawn. Return to reference 2
- Note 3:
The name has multiple associations: the Muse of astronomy, the Muse of Christian poetry, and a surname for Aphrodite (Venus) designating heavenly beauty. It was also an honorific commonly bestowed on Wroth’s aunt, Mary Sidney, Countess of Pembroke. In Wroth’s romance, Urania is a foundling adopted by shepherds but actually the daughter of the King of Naples; after losing one lover and gaining another, she marries, becomes a matriarch, and is throughout (as in this episode) a counselor of others.
Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Title. Return to reference 4
- Note 4: Title. Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Meadow. Return to reference 5

- Note 6: In classical mythology Echo was a wood nymph who pined away in unrequited love for the handsome Narcissus until only her voice remained (Ovid, Metamorphoses 3).Return to reference 6
- Note 7: The episode alludes to an episode in Philip Sidney's Old Arcadia in which one of the heroines, Cleophila, enters a darkened cave illuminated by a single candle and finds a poem on top of a stone table.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Lowly garment.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Toward her.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Trouble.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Gray is typically associated with mourning and despair.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Burdensome.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Perissus: "Lost one."Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Literally, "woman of home or threshold."Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Mythical bird said to live five hundred years, then expire in flames, out of which a new phoenix arose. Only one phoenix existed at a time.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Goddess of vengeance.Return to reference 7
- °: in full bloomReturn to reference °
- °: whim Return to reference °
- °: frownReturn to reference °

From Pamphilia to Amphilanthus<sup>1</sup>

Endnotes

- Note 1:
Pamphilia ("all-loving") is the protagonist of the Urania. Her unfaithful beloved's name means "lover of two." These characters are first cousins, like Mary Wroth and William Herbert; their names adumbrate the main theme of both the romance and the appended sonnet sequence: constancy in the face of unfaithfulness.

While the sequence exists in two formats, one that circulated in manuscript and one in print, we have used the versions that appear in the printed edition of 1621. Pamphilia to Amphilanthus is broken into several separately numbered series (the first of which includes forty-eight sonnets, with songs inserted after every sixth sonnet except the last). In Josephine A. Roberts's edition of Wroth's poetry, the poems are numbered consecutively throughout the work; we have adopted this convenient renumbering.

Return to reference 1

1

When night's black mantle could most darkness prove,
And sleep, death's image, did my senses hire
From knowledge of myself, then thoughts did move
Swifter than those most swiftness need require.
In sleep, a chariot drawn by winged desire
5 I saw, where sat bright Venus, Queen of Love,
And at her feet, her son,<sup>o</sup> still adding fire
To burning hearts, which she did hold above.
But one heart flaming more than all the rest
The goddess held, and put it to my breast.
10 "Dear son, now shut,"<sup>2</sup> said she: "thus must we win."
He her obeyed, and martyred my poor heart.
I, waking, hoped as dreams it would depart:
Yet since, O me, a lover I have been.

Endnotes

- Note 2: That is, shut the burning heart into Pamphilia's breast.Return to reference 2

Notes

- <sup>o</sup>: CupidReturn to reference <sup>o</sup>

Am I thus conquered? Have I lost the powers
 That to withstand, which joys to ruin me?<sup>3</sup>
 Must I be still while it my strength devours,
 And captive leads me prisoner, bound, unfree?
 5 Love first shall leave men's fant'sies to them free,<sup>4</sup> Desire shall quench love's flames, spring, hate sweet showers,
 Love shall loose all his darts, have sight, and see
 His shame, and wishings hinder happy hours.
 Why should we not Love's purblind<sup>o</sup> charms resist?
 10 Must we be servile, doing what he list?<sup>o</sup>
 No, seek some host to harbor thee: I fly
 Thy babish tricks, and freedom do profess.
 But O my hurt makes my lost heart confess
 I love, and must: so farewell liberty.

Endnotes

- Note 3: That is, have I lost the power to withstand love ("That"), which takes pleasure in ruining me? Return to reference 3
- Note 4: That is, this and the other impossibilities that follow will occur before I surrender to love. Return to reference 4

Notes

- °: completely blind Return to reference °
- °: what pleases him Return to reference °

Like to the Indians scorched with the sun,
 The sun which they do as their god adore,
 So am I used by Love, for evermore◦
 I worship him, less favors have I won.
 5 Better are they who thus to blackness run,
 And so can only whiteness want deplore:
 Than I, who pale and white am with grief's store,
 Nor can have hope, but to see hopes undone.
 Besides their sacrifice received in sight
 10 Of their chose Saint, mine hid as worthless rite, Grant me to see where I my offerings give.
 Then let me wear the mark of Cupid's might
 In heart, as they in skin of Phoebus◦ light,
 Not ceasing offerings to Love while I live.

Notes

- ◦: the more Return to reference ◦
- ◦: the sun god Return to reference ◦

When everyone to pleasing pastime hies,<sup>o</sup>
 Some hunt, some hawk, some play, while some delight
 In sweet discourse, and music shows joy's might:
 Yet I my thoughts do far above these prize.
 The joy which I take, is that free from eyes
 5 I sit and wonder at this day-like night,
 So to dispose themselves as void<sup>o</sup> of right,
 And leave true pleasure for poor vanities.
 When others hunt, my thoughts I have in chase;
 If hawk, my mind at wished end doth fly;
 10 Discourse, I with my spirit talk and cry;
 While others music choose as greatest grace.
 O God, say I, can these fond pleasures move?
 Or music be but in sweet thoughts of love?

Notes

- °: hastensReturn to reference °
- °: devoidReturn to reference °

Sweetest love, return again,
Make not too long stay:
Killing mirth and forcing pain,
Sorrow leading way:
5 Let us not thus parted be,
Love and absence ne'er agree.

But since you must needs depart,
And me hapless leave,
In your journey take my heart,
Which will not deceive:
10 Yours it is, to you it flies,
Joying in those lovèd eyes.

So in part we shall not part,
Though we absent be,
15 Time, nor place, nor greatest smart
Shall my bands make free:
Tied I am, yet think it gain,
In such knots I feel no pain.

But can I live, having lost
Chiefest part of me?
20 Heart is fled, and sight is crossed,
These my fortunes be:
Yet dear heart go, soon return,
As good there as here to burn.

Endnotes

- Note 5: The poem seems to revise one of Donne's songs:
"Sweetest love, I do not go," p. 891. Return to reference 5

Take heed mine eyes, how you your looks do cast,
 Lest they betray my heart's most secret thought:
 Be true unto yourselves, for nothing's bought
 More dear than doubt, which brings a lover's fast.<sup>6</sup>
 5 Catch you all-watching eyes ere they be past,
 Or take yours fixed where your best love hath sought
 The pride of your desires; let them be taught
 Their faults for shame they could no truer last.
 Then look, and look with joy, for conquest won
 10 Of those that searched your hurt in double kind;<sup>7</sup>
 So you kept safe, let them themselves look blind,
 Watch, gaze, and mark till they to madness run,
 While you mine eyes enjoy full sight of Love
 Contented that such happinesses move.

Endnotes

- Note 6: Lack of nourishment for love, due to jealousy ("doubt").Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Those who spy and pry with their two eyes, to discover my secret love.Return to reference 7

False hope which feeds but to destroy and spill<sup>8</sup>
 What it first breeds; unnatural to the birth
 Of thine own womb, conceiving but to kill,
 And plenty gives to make the greater dearth.<sup>9</sup>
 So tyrants do, who falsely ruling earth,
 5 Outwardly grace them,<sup>1</sup> and with profits fill,
 Advance those who appointed are to death,
 To make their greater fall to please their will.
 Thus shadow<sup>o</sup> they their wicked vile intent,
 Coloring evil with a show of good
 10 While in fair shows their malice so is spent;<sup>2</sup>
 Hope kills the heart, and tyrants shed the blood.
 For hope deluding brings us to the pride
 Of our desires the farther down to slide.

Endnotes

- Note 8: Kill. The image is of miscarriage or infanticide.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Gives abundance only to make scarcity more painful afterward.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: That is, those whom they mean to destroy (see next line).Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Expended, employed. "Shows": appearances.Return to reference 2

Notes

- °: concealReturn to reference °

Love like a juggler comes to play his prize,<sup>3</sup>
 And all minds draw his wonders to admire,
 To see how cunningly he (wanting eyes)<sup>4</sup>
 Can yet deceive the best sight of desire.
 5 The wanton child, how he can feign his fire
 So prettily, as none sees his disguise,
 How finely do his tricks; while we fools hire
 The badge and office of his tyrannies.<sup>5</sup>
 For in the end such juggling he doth make,
 10 As he our hearts instead of eyes doth take;
 For men can only by their sleights abuse
 The sight with nimble and delightful skill;
 But if he play, his gain is our lost will,
 Yet child-like we cannot his sports refuse.

Endnotes

- Note 3: Engage in a sporting contest. Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Cupid, the god of love, was represented as a blind child. Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Seek, at our own cost, the external tokens and ceremonies of tyrannical Love. Return to reference 5

My pain still smothered in my grievèd breast,
 Seeks for some ease, yet cannot passage find
 To be discharged of this unwelcome guest;
 When most I strive, more fast his burdens bind,
 5 Like to a ship on Goodwin's<sup>6</sup> cast by wind,
 The more she strives, more deep in sand is pressed,
 Till she be lost: so am I, in this kind,°
 Sunk, and devoured, and swallowed by unrest.
 Lost, shipwrecked, spoiled, debarred of smallest hope,
 10 Nothing of pleasure left, save thoughts have scope
 Which wander may. Go then, my thoughts, and cry
 "Hope's perished, love tempest-beaten, joy lost:
 Killing despair hath all these blessings crossed."
 Yet faith still cries, "love will not falsify."

Endnotes

- Note 6: Goodwin Sands, a line of shoals at the entrance to the Strait of Dover. Return to reference 6

Notes

- °: manner Return to reference °

Love a child is ever crying,
 Please him, and he straight is flying;
 Give him, he the more is craving,
 Never satisfied with having.

5 His desires have no measure,
 Endless folly is his treasure;
 What he promiseth he breaketh:
 Trust not one word that he speaketh.

10 He vows nothing but false matter,
 And to cozen<sup>o</sup> you he'll flatter:
 Let him gain the hand,<sup>o</sup> he'll leave you,
 And still glory to deceive you.

15 He will triumph in your wailing,
 And yet cause be of your failing:
 These his virtues are, and slighter
 Are his gifts, his favors lighter.

20 Feathers are as firm in staying,
 Wolves no fiercer in their preying.
 As a child then leave him crying,
 Nor seek him so given to flying.

Notes

- <sup>o</sup>: cheat Return to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: the upper hand Return to reference <sup>o</sup>

From A Crown of Sonnets Dedicated to Love<sup>7</sup>

77

In this strange labyrinth how shall I turn?
Ways<sup>o</sup> are on all sides, while the way I miss:
If to the right hand, there in love I burn,
Let me go forward, therein danger is.
If to the left, suspicion hinders bliss:
5 Let me<sup>o</sup> turn back, shame cries I ought return:
Nor faint, though crosses<sup>8</sup> with my fortunes kiss,
Stand still is harder, although sure to mourn.<sup>9</sup>
Then let me take the right- or left-hand way,
Go forward, or stand still, or back retire;
10 I must these doubts endure without allay<sup>o</sup>
Or help, but travel find for my best hire.<sup>1</sup>
Yet that which most my troubled sense doth move,
Is to leave all, and take the thread of love.<sup>2</sup>

Endnotes

- Note 7:

The “crown” is a difficult poetic form (originally Italian and usually known by its Italian name, corona) in which the last line of each poem serves as the first line of the next, until a circle is completed by the last line of the final poem, which is the same as the first line of the first one. The number of poems varies from seven to (as in Wroth’s corona) fourteen.

In contrast to the errant-child Cupid of the preceding part of the sequence, Love in this series is a mature and just monarch, whose true service ennobles lovers. The crown is in part a recantation of the harsh judgment of love earlier in the sequence. But Pamphilia relapses into melancholy afterward.

Return to reference 7

- Note 8: Troubles, adversity. "Faint": lose heart. Return to reference 8
- Note 9: That is, certain to make me mourn. Return to reference 9
- Note 1: That is, I find travel (with a pun on "travail," the spelling in the manuscript edition) is my only reward. Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Ariadne gave Theseus a thread to follow so as to find his way out of the Labyrinth, after killing the Minotaur at its center. Return to reference 2

Notes

- °: paths Return to reference °
- °: if I Return to reference °
- °: abatement Return to reference °

My muse now happy lay thyself to rest,
 Sleep in the quiet of a faithful love,
 Write you no more, but let these fant'sies move
 Some other hearts, wake not to new unrest.
 5 But if you study, be those thoughts addressed
 To truth, which shall eternal goodness prove;
 Enjoying of true joy, the most, and best
 The endless gain which never will remove.
 Leave the discourse of Venus and her son
 10 To young beginners,<sup>3</sup> and their brains inspire
 With stories of great love, and from that fire
 Get heat to write the fortunes they have won.
 And thus leave off; what's past shows you can love,
 Now let your constancy your honor prove.<sup>4</sup>

1621

Endnotes

- Note 3: In Neoplatonic love philosophy, “beginners” in love are attracted to physical beauty and sensory delights, while more advanced lovers love virtue and spiritual beauty. Writing love sonnets is traditionally the business of young lovers.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: In a symbolic episode in the Urania, Pamphilia embodies the virtue of constancy; she accepts the keys to the Throne of Love, “at which instant Constancy vanished as metamorphosing herself into her breast” (1.1.141).Return to reference 4

JOHN WEBSTER

1580?–1625?

John Webster's fame rests on two remarkable tragedies, both set in Roman Catholic Italy and both evoking the common Jacobean stereotype of that land as a place of sophisticated corruption. Both plays have bold heroines who choose for themselves in love and refuse to submit to male authority. The White Devil, first performed in 1608, is based on events that took place in Italy in 1581–85; in this play Vittoria Corombona defies a courtroom full of corrupt magistrates who convict her of adultery and murder. The Duchess of Malfi, first performed in 1614 and published in 1623, is based on an Italian novella. In this play, the spirited ruler of Malfi secretly marries her steward for love, defying her brothers, a duke and a cardinal, who demand that she remain a widow. Their dark motives include greed for her fortune, overweening pride in their noble blood, and incestuous desire. The play weds sublime poetry and gothic horror in the devious machinations set in motion against the duchess by her brothers' melancholy spy Bosola, in the macabre mental and physical torments to which they subject her, and in the final scenes, in which the stage is littered with the slaughtered bodies of all the principal characters.

Webster was the son of a London tailor and a member of the Merchant Tailors' Company, but we know little else about him. He wrote a tragicomedy, The Devil's Law Case (1621), and collaborated on several plays with contemporary playwrights, among them

Thomas Dekker in Westward Ho (1607) and John Marston in The Malcontent (1604). Of all the Stuart dramatists, Webster is the one who comes closest to Shakespeare in his power of tragic utterance and his flashes of poetic brilliance.

The Duchess of Malfi

DRAMATIS PERSONAE

FERDINAND, Duke of Calabria

THE CARDINAL, his brother

ANTONIO BOLOGNA, steward of the household to the DUCHESS

DELIO, his friend

DANIEL DE BOSOLA, gentleman of the horse to the DUCHESS

CASTRUCCIO, an old lord

MARQUIS OF PESCARA

COUNT MALATESTA

SILVIO, a lord, of Milan

RODERIGO

gentlemen attending on the DUCHESS

GRISOLAN

DOCTOR

Several MADMEN, PILGRIMS, EXECUTIONERS, OFFICERS, ATTENDANTS &c.

THE DUCHESS OF MALFI, sister of FERDINAND and the CARDINAL

CARIOLA, her woman

JULIA, CASTRUCCIO's wife, and the CARDINAL's mistress

OLD LADY, LADIES, and CHILDREN

SCENE. Amalfi, Rome, Loreto, and Milan

Act 1

SCENE 1. *Amalfi; a hall in the DUCHESS's palace.

[Enter ANTONIO and DELIO.]

DELIO You are welcome to your country, dear Antonio;

You have been long in France, and you return
A very formal Frenchman in your habit.<sup>1</sup>
How do you like the French court?

ANTONIO I admire it:

5 In seeking to reduce both state and people
To a fixed order, their judicious king
Begins at home; quits<sup>o</sup> first his royal palace
Of flattering sycophants, of dissolute
And infamous persons—which he sweetly terms
10 His Master's masterpiece, the work of heaven<sup>2</sup>—
Considering duly that a prince's court
Is like a common fountain, whence should flow
Pure silver drops in general, but if 't chance
Some cursed example poison 't near the head,
15 Death and diseases through the whole land spread.
And what is 't makes this blessed government
But a most provident council, who dare freely
Inform him the corruption of the times?
Though some o' th' court hold it presumption
20 To instruct princes what they ought to do,
It is a noble duty to inform them
What they ought to foresee.—Here comes Bosola,
The only court-gall;<sup>3</sup> yet I observe his railing
Is not for simple love of piety.
Indeed, he rails at those things which he wants;
25 Would be as lecherous, covetous, or proud,
Bloody, or envious, as any man,

If he had means to be so. Here's the cardinal.

[Enter the CARDINAL and BOSOLA.]

BOSOLA I do haunt you still.

CARDINAL So.

30 BOSOLA I have done you better service than to be slighted thus. Miserable age, where the only reward of doing well is the doing of it!

CARDINAL You enforce your merit too much.

BOSOLA I fell into the galleys<sup>4</sup> in your service; where,
for two years
35 together, I wore two towels instead of a shirt, with a knot on the shoulder, after the fashion of a Roman mantle. Slighted thus? I will thrive some way. Blackbirds fatten best in hard weather; why not
I in these dog days?<sup>5</sup>

CARDINAL Would you could become honest!

BOSOLA With all your divinity do but direct me the way to it. I have known 40 many travel far for it, and yet return as arrant knaves as they went forth, because they carried themselves always along with them. [Exit CARDINAL.]
Are you gone? Some fellows, they say, are possessed with the devil,
but this great fellow were able to possess the greatest devil, and make him
worse.

ANTONIO He hath denied thee some suit?

45 BOSOLA He and his brother are like plum trees that grow crooked over standing pools;<sup>6</sup> they are rich and o'erladen with fruit, but none but crows, pies,<sup>7</sup> and caterpillars feed on them. Could I be one of their flattering panders, I would hang on their ears like a horse leech till I were 50 full and then drop off. I pray, leave me. Who would rely upon these miserable dependencies, in expectation to be advanced tomorrow?

What creature ever fed worse than hoping Tantalus?
<sup>8</sup> Nor ever died any man more fearfully than he that hoped for a pardon.
There are rewards
for hawks and dogs when they have done us service;
but for a soldier
that hazards his limbs in a battle, nothing but a kind 55 of geometry is his last supportation.<sup>9</sup>

DELIO Geometry?

BOSOLA Aye, to hang in a fair pair of slings, take his latter swing in the world upon an honorable pair of crutches, from hospital to hospital.<sup>1</sup> 60 Fare ye well, sir: and yet do not you scorn us; for places in the court are but like beds in the hospital, where this man's head lies at that man's foot, and so lower and lower.

[Exit.]

DELIO I knew this fellow seven years<sup>2</sup> in the galleys
For a notorious murder; and 'twas thought
The cardinal suborned it. He was released
65 By the French general, Gaston de Foix,
When he recovered Naples.<sup>3</sup>

ANTONIO 'Tis great pity
He should be thus neglected; I have heard

70        He's very valiant. This foul melancholy
Will poison all his goodness; for, I'll tell you,
If too immoderate sleep be truly said
To be an inward rust unto the soul,
It then doth follow want of action
Breeds all black malcontents; and their close rearing,
75        Like moths in cloth, do hurt for want of wearing.<sup>4</sup>

Endnotes

- Note 1: An absolute Frenchman in your dress.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Alludes to Christ ridding the temple of money changers (John 2:13–22).Return to reference 2
- Note 3: One who frets the court, but with the overtone of a disease, a blight.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Forced labor at the oar of a Mediterranean galley was the last penalty this side of torture and execution, and was likely to be a death sentence.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: The hot, sultry season of midsummer.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Stagnant waters.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Magpies, birds of evil omen like blackbirds.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Tantalus, in classical mythology, was “tantalized” by the constant presence of delectable food and drink that, though he was desperate, he could never reach.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Support.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: In the 17th century, a place of last resort for the indigent dying.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: In speaking to the cardinal himself (line 34), Bosola had mentioned only two years.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Gaston de Foix, French commander, was active in Italy during the early 1500s; hence, the time of the tragedy is about a hundred years before Webster wrote. Ferdinand and the cardinal are Spaniards established in Italy, like the infamous house of Borgia.Return to reference 3

- Note 4: That is, enforced idleness breeds discontent, as moths breed in unused clothing.Return to reference 4

Notes

- °: ridsReturn to reference °

SCENE 2. *The scene continues.

[Enter CASTRUCCIO, SILVIO, RODERIGO, and GRISOLAN.]

DELIO The presence<sup>o</sup> 'gins to fill: you promised me
To make me the partaker of the natures
Of some of your great courtiers.

ANTONIO The Lord Cardinal's,
And other strangers' that are now in court?
I shall. Here comes the great Calabrian duke.

5

[Enter FERDINAND and ATTENDANTS.]

FERDINAND Who took the ring oftenest?<sup>1</sup>

SILVIO Antonio Bologna, my lord.

FERDINAND Our sister duchess' great master of her household?

Give him the jewel. When shall we leave this sportive action, and fall to action
indeed?

10

CASTRUCCIO Methinks, my lord, you should not desire to go to war in person.

FERDINAND Now for some gravity. Why, my lord?

CASTRUCCIO It is fitting a soldier arise to be a prince, but not necessary a prince descend to be a captain.

FERDINAND No?

15

CASTRUCCIO No, my lord, he were far better do it by a deputy.

FERDINAND Why should he not as well sleep or eat by a deputy? This might take idle, offensive, and base office from him, whereas the other
deprives him of honor.

20

CASTRUCCIO Believe my experience, that realm is never long in quiet
where the ruler is a soldier.

FERDINAND    Thou told'st me thy wife could not endure fighting.
 CASTRUCCIO   True, my lord.
 FERDINAND    And of a jest she broke of a captain she met full of wounds. I have forgot it.
 25    CASTRUCCIO   She told him, my lord, he was a pitiful fellow, to lie, like the children of Israel, all in tents.<sup>2</sup> FERDINAND    Why, there's a wit were able to undo all the chirurgeons<sup>3</sup> o' the city; for although gallants should quarrel and had drawn their weapons
 30                    and were ready to go to it, yet her persuasions would make them put up.
 CASTRUCCIO    That she would, my lord.
 FERDINAND    How do you like my Spanish gennet?<sup>4</sup>
 RODERIGO    He is all fire.
 FERDINAND    I am of Pliny's opinion, I think he was begot by the wind; he runs as if he were ballassed<sup>5</sup> with quicksilver.
 35    SILVIO    True, my lord, he reels from the tilt often.<sup>6</sup>
 RODERIGO and GRISOLAN   Ha, ha, ha!
 FERDINAND    Why do you laugh? Methinks, you that are courtiers should be my touchwood, take fire when I give fire; that is, laugh but when I laugh, were the subject never so witty.
 40    CASTRUCCIO   True, my lord, I myself have heard a very good jest, and have scorned to seem to have so silly a wit as to understand it.
 FERDINAND    But I can laugh at your fool, my lord.
 CASTRUCCIO    He cannot speak, you know, but he makes faces: my lady cannot abide him.

45 FERDINAND No?

CASTRUCCIO Nor endure to be in merry company, for she says too much laughing and too much company fills her too full of the wrinkle.

FERDINAND I would, then, have a mathematical instrument made for her face, that she might not laugh out of compass.<sup>7</sup> I 50 shall shortly visit you at Milan, Lord Silvio.

SILVIO Your grace shall arrive most welcome.

FERDINAND You are a good horseman, Antonio. You have excellent riders
in France. What do you think of good horsemanship?

55 ANTONIO Nobly, my lord: as out of the Grecian horse issued many famous princes,<sup>8</sup> so out of brave horsemanship arise the first sparks of growing resolution that raise the mind to noble action.

FERDINAND You have bespoke it worthily.

SILVIO Your brother, the Lord Cardinal, and sister
duchess.

[Reenter CARDINAL, with DUCHESS, CARIOLA, and JULIA.]

CARDINAL Are the galleys come about?

60 GRISOLAN They are, my
lord.

FERDINAND Here's the Lord Silvio, is come to take his leave.

DELIO [aside to ANTONIO] Now, sir, your promise.
What's that Cardinal?
I mean his temper? They say he's a brave fellow,
Will play<sup>9</sup> his five thousand crowns at tennis, dance,

Court ladies, and one that hath fought single combats.

ANTONIO Some such flashes superficially hang on him for form; but observe his inward character: he is a melancholy churchman; the spring
in his face is nothing but the engendering of toads;
where he is jealous of any man, he lays worse plots for them than ever was imposed on Hercules,<sup>1</sup> for he strews in his way flatterers, panders, 70 intelligencers,<sup>2</sup> atheists, and a thousand such political monsters. He should have been Pope; but instead of coming to it by the primitive decency of the church, he did bestow bribes so largely and so impudently as if he would have carried it away without heaven's knowledge. Some good he hath done—

75 DELIO You have given too much of him. What's his brother?

ANTONIO The duke there? A most perverse and turbulent nature.
What appears in him mirth is merely outside;
If he laugh heartily, it is to laugh
All honesty out of fashion.

DELIO Twins?

80 ANTONIO In quality.
He speaks with others' tongues, and hears men's suits
With others' ears; will seem to sleep o' th' bench
Only to entrap offenders in their answers;
Dooms men to death by information;<sup>o</sup>
Rewards by hearsay.<sup>o</sup>

85 DELIO Then the law to him
 Is like a foul black cobweb to a spider:
 He makes of it his dwelling and a prison
 To entangle those shall feed him.

ANTONIO Most true:
 He ne'er pays debts unless they be shrewd turns,o
 And those he will confess that he doth owe.
 90 Last, for his brother there, the Cardinal,
 They that do flatter him most say oracles
 Hang at his lips; and verily I believe them,
 For the devil speaks in them.
 But for their sister, the right noble duchess,
 95 You never fixed your eye on three fair medals
 Cast in one figure, of so different temper.
 For her discourse, it is so full of rapture,
 You only will begin then to be sorry
 When she doth end her speech, and wish, in wonder,
 100 She held it less vaingloryo to talk much,
 Than your penance to hear her: whilst she speaks,
 She throws upon a man so sweet a look,
 That it were able to raise one to a galliardo
 That lay in a dead palsy, and to dote
 105 On that sweet countenance; but in that look
 There speaketh so divine a continence
 As cuts off all lascivious and vain hope.
 Her days are practiced in such noble virtue
 That sure her nights, nay, more, her very sleeps,
 110 Are more in heaven than other ladies' shrifts.o
 Let all sweet ladies break their flattering glasses,o
 And dress themselves in her.

DELIO Fie, Antonio,
 You play the wire-drawer<sup>3</sup> with her commendations.

ANTONIO I'll caseo the picture up only thus much;
 115 All her particular worth grows to this sum:
 She stainso the time past, lights the time to come.

CARDINAL You must attend my lady in the gallery,
Some half an hour hence.

ANTONIO I shall. [Exeunt ANTONIO
and DELIO.]

FERDINAND Sister, I have a suit to you.

DUCHESS To me, sir?

120 FERDINAND A gentleman here, Daniel de Bosola,
One that was in the galleys—

DUCHESS Yes, I know him.

FERDINAND A worthy fellow he is. Pray, let me entreat for

The provisorship of your horse.<sup>4</sup>

DUCHESS Your knowledge of
him

Commends him and prefers him.

125 FERDINAND Call him hither.
[Exit ATTENDANT.]

We are now upon<sup>o</sup> parting. Good Lord Silvio,
Do us commend to all our noble friends
At the leaguer.<sup>o</sup>

SILVIO Sir, I shall.

DUCHESS You are for Milan?

SILVIO I am.

DUCHESS Bring the caroches. We'll bring you down to the haven.<sup>5</sup>

[Exeunt all but FERDINAND and the CARDINAL.]

130 CARDINAL Be sure you entertain<sup>o</sup> that Bosola
For your intelligence:<sup>o</sup> I would not be seen in 't;
And therefore many times I have slighted him
When he did court our furtherance, as this morning.

FERDINAND Antonio, the great master of her
household,
Had been far fitter.

135 CARDINAL You are deceived in him:
His nature is too honest for such business.

He comes: I'll leave you.

[Exit.]

[Reenter BOSOLA.]

BOSOLA

I was lured to you.

FERDINAND My brother here the cardinal could never Abide you.

BOSOLA

Never since he was in my debt.

140

FERDINAND Maybe some oblique character<sup>o</sup> in your face

Made him suspect you.

BOSOLA

Doth he study

physiognomy?

There's no more credit to be given to th' face
Than to a sick man's urine, which some call
The physician's whore, because she cozens<sup>o</sup> him.
He did suspect me wrongfully.

145

FERDINAND

For that

You must give great men leave to take their times.
Distrust doth cause us seldom be deceived:
You see, the oft shaking of the cedar tree
Fastens it more at root.

BOSOLA

Yet, take heed;

150

For to suspect a friend unworthily
Instructs him the next<sup>o</sup> way to suspect you,
And prompts him to deceive you.

FERDINAND [giving him money] There's gold.

BOSOLA

So:

What follows? Never rained such showers as these Without thunderbolts i' th' tail of them.
Whose throat must I cut?

155

FERDINAND Your inclination to shed blood rides post<sup>o</sup>
Before my occasion to use you. I give you that
To live i' th' court here, and observe the duchess;
To note all the particulars of her 'havior,
What suitors do solicit her for marriage,
160 And whom she best affects. She's a young widow:
I would not have her marry again.

BOSOLA No, sir?
 FERDINAND Do not you ask the reason, but be satisfied
 I say I would not.
 BOSOLA It seems you would create me
 One of your familiars.◊
 FERDINAND Familiar? What's that?
 165 BOSOLA Why, a very quaint invisible devil in flesh,
 An intelligencer.◊
 FERDINAND Such a kind of thriving thing
 I would wish thee, and ere long thou may'st arrive
 At a higher place by 't.
 BOSOLA Take your devils,
 170 Which hell calls angels;◊ these cursed gifts would make
 You a corrupter, me an impudent traitor;
 And should I take these, they'd take me to hell.
 FERDINAND Sir, I'll take nothing from you that I have given:
 There is a place that I procured for you
 This morning, the provisorship o' th' horse;
 175 Have you heard on 't?
 BOSOLA No.
 FERDINAND 'Tis yours. Is 't not worth thanks?
 BOSOLA I would have you curse yourself now, that your bounty,
 Which makes men truly noble, e'er should make me
 A villain. Oh, that to avoid ingratitude
 For the good deed you have done me, I must do 180 All the ill man can invent! Thus the devil
 Candies all sins o'er; and what heaven terms vile,
 That names he complimentary.◊
 FERDINAND Be yourself;
 Keep your old garb of melancholy; 'twill express

185 You envy those that stand above your reach,
 Yet strive not to come near 'em: this will gain
 Access to private lodgings, where yourself
 May, like a politic dormouse—

BOSOLA As I have seen some Feed in a lord's dish, half asleep, not seeming
 To listen to any talk; and yet these rogues
 190 Have cut his throat in a dream. What's my place?
 The provisorship o' th' horse? Say, then, my corruption
 Grew out of horse dung. I am your creature.

FERDINAND Away!

BOSOLA Let good men, for good deeds, covet good fame,
 Since place and riches oft are bribes of shame:
 195 Sometimes the devil doth preach.
 [Exit.]

Endnotes

- Note 1: A common game around court, used in training for tournaments, involved catching a hanging ring on the tip of a lance. But some of Webster's audience would have caught a sexual analogy.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Lint bandages were called "tents."Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Surgeons.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Sometimes "jennet": a small Spanish horse of Arabian stock.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Ballasted. Pliny in his Natural History tells about some Spanish horses generated by a swift wind (8.67).Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Veers away from the target, undesirable in a warhorse.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Excessively; with a pun on the draftsman's compass.Return to reference 7

- Note 8: The Trojan horse, in which the Greek warriors hid, to overrun Troy.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Wager. "Brave": fine; ostentatious.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Hercules' uncle, King Eurystheus, sent him on twelve suicide missions to get rid of him, but Hercules performed all these "labors" successfully.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Spies, "political" schemers.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Draw out her praises excessively.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Let me beg (for him) the position of supervisor of your horse.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Harbor. "Caroches": carriages.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Gold coins, marked with the image of the archangel Michael.Return to reference 6

Notes

- °: audience hallReturn to reference °
- °: testimony of spiesReturn to reference °
- °: random reportReturn to reference °
- °: hurtful actsReturn to reference °
- °: excessive prideReturn to reference °
- °: gay and lively danceReturn to reference °
- °: confessionsReturn to reference °
- °: mirrorsReturn to reference °
- °: frameReturn to reference °
- °: darkensReturn to reference °
- °: at the point ofReturn to reference °
- °: campReturn to reference °
- °: hireReturn to reference °
- °: spyReturn to reference °
- °: crooked featureReturn to reference °
- °: tricksReturn to reference °
- °: nearestReturn to reference °
- °: hurriesReturn to reference °
- °: diabolical spiritsReturn to reference °

- °: spy Return to reference °
- °: gracious Return to reference °

SCENE 3. The scene continues.

[Enter DUCHESS, CARDINAL, and CARIOLA.]

CARDINAL We are to part from you, and your own discretion

Must now be your director.

FERDINAND You are a widow:
You know already what man is; and therefore Let not youth, high promotion, eloquence—

5 CARDINAL No, nor any thing without the addition,
honor,
Sway your high blood.

FERDINAND Marry! They are most luxurious<sup>o</sup>
Will wed twice.

CARDINAL Oh, fie!

FERDINAND Their livers are more spotted
Than Laban's sheep.<sup>1</sup>

DUCHESS Diamonds are of most value,
They say, that have passed through most jewelers'
hands.

FERDINAND Whores by that rule are precious.

10 DUCHESS Will you
hear me?
I'll never marry.

CARDINAL So most widows say;
But commonly that motion<sup>o</sup> lasts no longer
Than the turning of an hourglass; the funeral sermon
And it end both together.

15 FERDINAND Now hear me:
You live in a rank pasture, here, i' th' court;
There is a kind of honeydew<sup>2</sup> that's deadly;

'Twill poison your fame<sup>o</sup> look to 't; be not cunning;
For they whose faces do belie their hearts
Are witches ere they arrive at twenty years,
Aye, and give the devil suck.

20 DUCHESS This is terrible good counsel.

FERDINAND Hypocrisy is woven of a fine small thread,
Subtler than Vulcan's engine:<sup>3</sup> yet, believe 't,
Your darkest actions, nay, your privatest thoughts,
Will come to light.

CARDINAL You may flatter yourself,
And take your own choice; privately be married
25 Under the eaves of night—

FERDINAND Think 't the best voyage
That e'er you made; like the irregular crab,
Which, though 't goes backward, thinks that it goes right

30 Because it goes its own way; but observe,
Such weddings may more properly be said
To be executed than celebrated.

CARDINAL The marriage night
Is the entrance into some prison.

FERDINAND And those joys,
Those lustful pleasures, are like heavy sleeps
Which do forerun man's mischief.

CARDINAL Fare you well.
Wisdom begins at the end: remember it.
35 [Exit.]

DUCHESS I think this speech between you both was studied,
It came so roundly<sup>o</sup> off.

FERDINAND You are my sister;
This was my father's poniard,<sup>o</sup> do you see?
I'd be loath to see 't look rusty, 'cause 'twas his.

40 I would have you to give o'er these chargeable<sup>o</sup> revels:
A visor<sup>4</sup> and a mask are whispering rooms
That were ne'er built for goodness—fare ye well—
And women like that part which, like the lamprey,<sup>5</sup>
Hath never a bone in 't.
DUCHESS Fie, sir!
FERDINAND Nay,
I mean the tongue; variety of courtship.
45 What cannot a neat knave with a smooth tale
Make a woman believe? Farewell, lusty widow.
[Exit.]
DUCHESS Shall this move me? If all my royal kindred Lay in my way unto this marriage,
I'd make them my low footsteps; and even now,
50 Even in this hate, as men in some great battles,
By apprehending danger, have achieved Almost impossible actions (I have heard soldiers say
so),
So I through frights and threatenings will assay<sup>o</sup>
This dangerous venture. Let old wives report
55 I winked and chose a husband. Cariola,
To thy known secrecy I have given up
More than my life—my fame.
CARIOLA Both shall be safe,
For I'll conceal this secret from the world
As warily as those that trade in poison
60 Keep poison from their children.
DUCHESS Thy protestation
Is ingenious<sup>o</sup> and hearty:<sup>o</sup> I believe it.
Is Antonio come?
CARIOLA He attends you.
DUCHESS Good dear soul,
Leave me, but place thyself behind the arras,<sup>6</sup>

Where thou mayst overhear us. Wish me good speed,
For I am going into a wilderness
Where I shall find nor path nor friendly clue
To be my guide. [CARIOLA goes behind the arras.]

[Enter ANTONIO.]

I sent for you: sit down;
Take pen and ink, and write. Are you ready?
ANTONIO Yes.

DUCHESS What did I say?

70 ANTONIO That I should write somewhat.

DUCHESS Oh, I remember:
After these triumphs<sup>o</sup> and this large expense,
It's fit, like thrifty husbands,<sup>z</sup> we inquire
What's laid up for tomorrow.

ANTONIO So please your beauteous excellence.

75 DUCHESS
Beauteous?

Indeed, I thank you: I look young for your sake;
You have ta'en my cares upon you.

ANTONIO I'll fetch your
grace

The particulars of your revenue and expense.

DUCHESS Oh, you are an upright treasurer: but you mistook;

80 For when I said I meant to make inquiry
What's laid up for tomorrow, I did mean
What's laid up yonder for me.

ANTONIO Where?

DUCHESS In heaven.

I am making my will (as 'tis fit princes should,
In perfect memory), and I pray sir, tell me,
Were not one better make it smiling thus 85

Than in deep groans and terrible ghastly looks,
As if the gifts we parted with procured<sup>o</sup>
That violent distraction?

ANTONIO Oh, much better.

DUCHESS If I had a husband now, this care were quit:

90 But I intend to make you overseer.
What good deed shall we first remember? Say.

ANTONIO Begin with that first good deed begun i' th'
world

After man's creation, the sacrament of marriage:
I'd have you first provide for a good husband;
Give him all.

DUCHESS All?

95 ANTONIO Yes, your excellent self.

DUCHESS In a winding-sheet?

ANTONIO In a couple.

DUCHESS Saint Winfred, that were a strange will!<sup>8</sup>

ANTONIO 'Twere stranger if there were no will in you
To marry again.

DUCHESS What do you think of marriage?

100 ANTONIO I take 't, as those that deny purgatory;
It locally<sup>o</sup> contains or heaven or hell;
There's no third place in 't.

DUCHESS How do you affect it?<sup>o</sup>

ANTONIO My banishment,<sup>o</sup> feeding my melancholy,
Would often reason thus—

DUCHESS Pray, let's hear it.

105 ANTONIO Say a man never marry, nor have children,
What takes that from him? Only the bare name
Of being a father, or the weak delight
To see the little wanton ride a-cock-horse
Upon a painted stick, or hear him chatter
Like a taught starling.

110 DUCHESS Fie, fie, what's all this?

To warm them.

DUCHESS                    So, now the ground's broke,
You may discover what a wealthy mine
I make you lord of.

ANTONIO                    O my unworthiness!

135 DUCHESS    You were ill to sell<sup>o</sup> yourself:
This darkening of your worth is not like that
Which tradesmen use i' th' city; their false lights
Are to rid bad wares off:<sup>3</sup> and I must tell you,
If you will know where breathes a complete man
140 (I speak it without flattery), turn your eyes,
And progress through yourself.

ANTONIO                    Were there nor
   heaven
Nor hell, I should be honest: I have long served virtue,
And ne'er ta'en wages of her.

DUCHESS                    Now she pays it.
The misery of us that are born great!
We are forced to woo, because none dare woo us;
145 And as a tyrant doubles<sup>o</sup> with his words
And fearfully equivocates, so we
Are forced to express our violent passions
In riddles and in dreams, and leave the path
Of simple virtue, which was never made
150 To seem the thing it is not. Go, go brag
You have left me heartless;<sup>o</sup> mine is in your bosom:
I hope 'twill multiply love there. You do tremble:
Make not your heart so dead a piece of flesh,
To fear more than to love me. Sir, be confident:
155 What is 't distracts you? This is flesh and blood, sir;
'Tis not the figure cut in alabaster
Kneels at my husband's tomb. Awake, awake, man!
I do here put off all vain ceremony,
160 And only do appear to you a young widow

That claims you for her husband, and, like a widow,
I use but half a blush in 't.

ANTONIO Truth speak for me,
I will remain the constant sanctuary
Of your good name.

165 DUCHESS I thank you, gentle love:
And 'cause<sup>o</sup> you shall not come to me in debt,
Being now my steward, here upon your lips
I sign your Quietus est.<sup>4</sup> This you should have begged now;
I have seen children oft eat sweetmeats thus,
As fearful to devour them too soon.

ANTONIO But for your brothers?

170 DUCHESS Do not think of
them.

All discord without this circumference<sup>5</sup>
Is only to be pitied, and not feared;
Yet, should they know it, time will easily
Scatter the tempest.

175 ANTONIO These words should be mine,
And all the parts you have spoke, if some part of it
Would not have savored flattery.

DUCHESS Kneel.

[CARIOLA comes from behind the arras.]

ANTONIO Ha!

DUCHESS Be not amazed; this woman's of my
counsel:

I have heard lawyers say, a contract in a chamber
Per verba de present<sup>6</sup> is absolute marriage. [She and ANTONIO kneel.]

180 Bless, heaven, this sacred gordian,<sup>o</sup> which let violence

Never untwine!

ANTONIO And may our sweet affections, like the spheres,

- Note 1: In Genesis 30:31–33, Laban promises to Jacob any speckled lambs born while Jacob is herding Laban’s sheep; the liver as seat of the passions was thought to be diseased when spotted.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: A sweet, sticky substance left on plants by aphids.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: The net in which Vulcan, Venus’s husband, caught her misbehaving with Mars.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: A half-mask, worn by ladies at carnivals, theaters, and other dubious resorts.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Lamprey eels have a cartilaginous, not a bony, skeleton.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Tapestries were often hung in Renaissance palaces to moderate the chill of the bare walls.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Though used here in its original sense of one who preserves and safeguards property, the word shows where the duchess’s thoughts are tending.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Saint Winifred, Welsh virgin and martyr, is an odd saint for the Duchess of Malfi to swear on. “In a couple”: that is, of sheets—but with a play on “coupling.”Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Healing, but with an overtone implying royal power.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: To conjure up a devil, the necromancer first draws a charmed circle on the ground—like the duchess’s ring.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: His head as he kneels.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Tradesmen in the city display their goods in a poor light so the defects won’t be seen.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: The legal formula for marking a bill “paid” or “acquitted.”Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Outside this room, or their embrace.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: “By words in the present tense” (that is, not a betrothal or promise for the future). In canon law, the agreement of two parties to consider themselves married is valid with or without priest, ceremony, or witness.Return to reference 6

- Note 7: Like the supposed music of the spheres.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: The phrase is addressed to Cariola as the duchess shuts her eyes and rejects all support.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Alexander and Lodowick were look-alike friends in an old ballad. For purely virtuous reasons, one slept with the wife of the other, but with the precaution indicated.Return to reference 9

Notes

- °: lecherousReturn to reference °
- °: impulseReturn to reference °
- °: reputationReturn to reference °
- °: gliblyReturn to reference °
- °: daggerReturn to reference °
- °: expensiveReturn to reference °
- °: attemptReturn to reference °
- °: ingenuous Return to reference °
- °: sincereReturn to reference °
- °: tournamentsReturn to reference °
- °: brought onReturn to reference °
- °: within itselfReturn to reference °
- °: feel about itReturn to reference °
- °: solitary conditionReturn to reference °
- °: evaluateReturn to reference °
- °: speaks ambiguouslyReturn to reference °
- °: without a heartReturn to reference °
- °: so thatReturn to reference °
- °: knotReturn to reference °
- °: constantlyReturn to reference °
- °: giving lifeReturn to reference °
- °: tighterReturn to reference °
- °: ideaReturn to reference °
- °: cholericReturn to reference °

Act 2

SCENE 1. *The scene continues.

[Enter BOSOLA and CASTRUCCIO.]

BOSOLA You say you would fain be taken for an eminent courtier?

CASTRUCCIO 'Tis the very main of my ambition.

BOSOLA Let me see: you have a reasonable good face for 't already, and your nightcap expresses your ears sufficient largely. I would have you

5 learn to twirl the strings of your band<sup>1</sup> with a good grace, and in a set speech, at th' end of every sentence, to hum three or four times, or blow your nose till it smart again, to recover your memory.
When you come to be a president<sup>2</sup> in criminal causes, if you smile upon a prisoner, hang him, but if you frown upon him and threaten him, let him be sure to
'scape the gallows.

10 CASTRUCCIO I would be a very merry president.

BOSOLA Do not sup o' nights; 'twill beget you an admirable wit.

CASTRUCCIO Rather it would make me have a good stomach<sup>3</sup> to quarrel; for they say, your roaring boys<sup>4</sup> eat meat seldom,
and that makes them
so valiant. But how shall I know whether the people 15 take me for an eminent fellow?

BOSOLA I will teach a trick to know it: give out you lie
a-dying, and if you hear the common people curse you, be sure you are taken for one of the prime nightcaps.<sup>5</sup>

[Enter an OLD LADY.]

20 You come from painting now?

OLD LADY From what?

BOSOLA Why, from your scurvy face-physic. To behold thee not painted inclines somewhat near a miracle; these in thy face
here were deep ruts and foul sloughs the last progress.<sup>6</sup> There was a lady in France that,

25 having had the smallpox, flayed the skin off her face to make it more

level; and whereas before she looked like a nutmeg grater, after she resembled an abortive hedgehog.

OLD LADY Do you call this painting?

BOSOLA No, no, but you call it careening of an old morphewed lady, to

30 make her disembugue again: there's rough-cast phrase to your plastic.<sup>7</sup>

OLD LADY It seems you are well acquainted with my closet.

BOSOLA One would suspect it for a shop of witchcraft, to find in it the fat of serpents, spawn of snakes, Jews' spittle, and their young children's ordure;

and all these for the face. I would sooner eat a dead pigeon taken from the

35 soles of the feet of one sick of the plague than kiss one of you fasting.<sup>8</sup>

Here are two of you, whose sin of your youth is the very patrimony of the physician; makes him renew his footcloth with the spring, and change his high-prized courtesan with the fall of the leaf.<sup>9</sup> I do wonder you do not loathe yourselves. Observe my meditation now:
What thing is in this outward form of man
40 To be beloved? We account it ominous,
If nature do produce a colt, or lamb,
A fawn, or goat, in any limb resembling
A man, and fly from 't as a prodigy:<sup>o</sup>
Man stands amazed to see his deformity
45 In any other creature but himself.
But in our own flesh, though we bear diseases
Which have their true names only ta'en from beasts
—

As the most ulcerous wolf and swinish measles<sup>1</sup>—
Though we are eaten up of lice and worms,
50 And though continually we bear about us
A rotten and dead body, we delight
To hide it in rich tissue: all our fear,
Nay, all our terror, is lest our physician
Should put us in the ground to be made sweet—55 Your wife's gone to Rome: you two couple, and get
you

To the wells at Lucca to recover your aches.<sup>2</sup>

[Exeunt CASTRUCCIO and OLD LADY.]

I have other work on foot. I observe our duchess
Is sick a-days: she pukes, her stomach seethes,
The fins of her eyelids look most teeming blue,
60 She wanes i' th' cheek, and waxes fat i' th' flank,
And contrary to our Italian fashion,
Wears a loose-bodied gown: there's somewhat in 't.
I have a trick may chance discover it, man's mind rides faster than his horse can gallop,

they quickly both tire.

ANTONIO You would look up to heaven, but I think
The devil, that rules i' th' air, stands in your light.

BOSOLA Oh, sir, you are lord of the ascendant,<sup>5</sup> chief man with the duchess;
a duke was your cousin-german removed.<sup>6</sup> Say you were lineally descended 90 from King Pepin,<sup>7</sup> or he himself, what of this? Search the heads of the greatest rivers in the world, you shall find them but bubbles of water. Some would think the souls of princes were brought forth by some more weighty cause than those of meaner persons: they are deceived, there's the same hand to them; the like passions sway them; the same reason that makes a 95 vicar go to law for a tithe-pig<sup>8</sup> and undo his neighbors, makes them spoil a whole province, and batter down goodly cities with the cannon.

[Enter DUCHESS and LADIES.]

DUCHESS Your arm, Antonio; do I not grow fat?
I am exceeding short-winded. Bosola,
I would have you, sir, provide for me a litter,
Such a one as the Duchess of Florence rode in.

100 BOSOLA The duchess used one when she was great
with child.

DUCHESS I think she did. Come hither, mend my ruff;
Here, when? Thou art such a tedious<sup>9</sup> lady, and Thy breath smells of lemon peels;<sup>9</sup> would thou hadst
done;
Shall I swoon under thy fingers? I am

105 So troubled with the mother!<sup>1</sup>
 BOSOLA [aside] I fear too much.
 DUCHESS I have heard you say that the French courtiers
 Wear their hats on 'fore the king.
 ANTONIO I have seen it.
 DUCHESS In
 the presence?
 ANTONIO Yes.
 DUCHESS Why should not we bring up that fashion?
 110 'Tis
 Ceremony more than duty that consists
 In the removing of a piece of felt.
 Be you the example to the rest o' th' court;
 Put on your hat first.
 ANTONIO You must pardon me.
 I have seen, in colder countries than in France,
 115 Nobles stand bare to th' prince, and the distinction
 Methought showed reverently.
 BOSOLA I have a present for your grace.
 DUCHESS For me, sir?
 BOSOLA Apricots, madam.
 DUCHESS O, sir, where are they?
 I have heard of none to-year.
 BOSOLA [aside] Good: her color rises.
 120 DUCHESS Indeed, I thank you: they are wondrous fair ones.
 What an unskillful fellow is our gardener!
 We shall have none this month.
 BOSOLA Will not your grace pare them?
 DUCHESS No. They taste of musk, methinks; indeed 125 they do.
 BOSOLA I know not: yet I wish your grace had pared 'em.
 DUCHESS Why?

BOSOLA I forgot to tell you, the knave gardener,
 Only to raise his profit by them the sooner,
 Did ripen them in horse dung.<sup>2</sup>

DUCHESS O, you jest.
 You shall judge: pray taste one.

130 ANTONIO Indeed, madam,
 I do not love the fruit.

DUCHESS Sir, you are loath
 To rob us of our dainties: 'tis a delicate fruit;
 They say they are restorative.

BOSOLA 'Tis a pretty art,
 This grafting.

DUCHESS 'Tis so; a bettering of nature.

135 BOSOLA To make a pippin grow upon a crab,<sup>o</sup>
 A damson on a blackthorn. [aside] How greedily she eats them!

A whirlwind strike off these bawd farthingales!<sup>3</sup>
 For, but for that and the loose-bodied gown,
 I should have discovered apparently<sup>o</sup>

140 The young springal<sup>o</sup> cutting a caper in her belly.

DUCHESS I thank you, Bosola. They were right good ones,
 If they do not make me sick.

ANTONIO How now, madam?

DUCHESS This green fruit and my stomach are not friends;
 How they swell me!

BOSOLA [aside] Nay, you are too much swelled
 already.

DUCHESS Oh, I am in an extreme cold sweat!

145 BOSOLA I am very sorry.

DUCHESS Lights to my chamber! O good Antonio,
 I fear I am undone!

DELIO Lights there, lights!

[Exeunt DUCHESS and LADIES. Exit, on the other side, BOSOLA.]

ANTONIO O my most trusty Delio, we are lost!
I fear she's fall'n in labor; and there's left
No time for her remove.

DELIO Have you prepared
Those ladies to attend her? And procured
That politic<sup>o</sup> safe conveyance for the midwife
Your duchess plotted?

ANTONIO I have.

DELIO Make use, then, of this forced occasion:
Give out that Bosola hath poisoned her
With these apricots; that will give some color
For her keeping close.

ANTONIO Fie, fie, the physicians
Will then flock to her.

DELIO For that you may pretend
She'll use some prepared antidote of her own,
Lest the physicians should re-poison her.

ANTONIO I am lost in amazement:<sup>o</sup> I know not what to think on 't. [Exeunt.]

Endnotes

- Note 1: The elaborate ruff of the day had strings attached to it.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Presiding magistrate.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Disposition.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: London town bullies.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Lawyers (who wore a white coif or skullcap; see line 4, above).Return to reference 5
- Note 6: A progress was a formal royal journey of state.Return to reference 6

- Note 7: Scraping ("careening") of an old, scaly ("morphewed") ship ("lady") to fit her for the ocean ("making her disemboque") again. All these metaphors are applied to the model ("plastic") of the lady's condition as "rough-cast," a mixture of lime and gravel, is troweled over a base.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Centuries of traditional invective about women's cosmetic practices lie behind this speech. Freshly killed pigeons were applied to the feet of plague victims to draw off the infection; fasting was supposed to cause bad breath.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: The physician grows rich on those who have outworn their youth; every spring he buys a new harness for his horse and every fall a new mistress for himself.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: "Wolf": cancer or lupus; "measle": an infection of swine, sometimes confused with human measles.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: The wells at Lucca are the mineral springs at nearby Montecatini, renowned as a place to "take the cure." Aches are a symptom of syphilis.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Skin disease.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Foolishness.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: In astrology, the predominating influence, controlling destiny.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: First cousin once removed.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Father of Charlemagne, hence source of a great dynasty.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: A parson was entitled to a tenth ("tithe") of his parishioners' annual profit and was often paid in crops or livestock, but was thought mean if he sued for a petty sum.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Lemon peels, chewed to sweeten the breath.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Heartburn, but with a second meaning not lost on Bosola.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Which grows warm as it decomposes.Return to reference 2

- Note 3: Early hoopskirts, capable of concealing the figure.Return to reference 3

Notes

- °: evil omenReturn to reference °
- °: clumsyReturn to reference °
- °: crab appleReturn to reference °
- °: certainlyReturn to reference °
- °: fellowReturn to reference °
- °: secretReturn to reference °
- °: confusionReturn to reference °

SCENE 2. *The scene continues.

[Enter BOSOLA.]

BOSOLA So, so, there's no question but her tetchiness<sup>1</sup> and most vulturous eating of the apricots are apparent signs of breeding.

[Enter an OLD LADY.]

Now?

OLD LADY I am in haste, sir.

5 BOSOLA There was a young waiting woman had a monstrous desire to see the glasshouse<sup>2</sup>—

OLD LADY Nay, pray let me go.

BOSOLA And it was only to know what strange instrument it was should swell up a glass to the fashion of a woman's belly.

10 OLD LADY I will hear no more of the glasshouse. You are still<sup>3</sup> abusing women!

BOSOLA Who, I? No; only by the way now and then mention your frailties.
The orange tree bears ripe and green fruit and blossoms all together;
and some of you give entertainment for pure love,
but more for more precious 15 reward. The lusty spring smells well, but drooping autumn tastes well. If we have the same golden showers that rained in the time of Jupiter the thunderer, you have the same Danaës still,<sup>4</sup> to hold up their laps to receive them. Didst thou never study the mathematics?

2 SERVANT There
 was 35 A cunning traitor: who would have searched his codpiece?
 1 SERVANT True, if he had kept out of the ladies' chambers.
 And all the molds of his buttons were leaden bullets.
 2 SERVANT O wicked cannibal!
 A firelock<sup>o</sup> in 's codpiece!
 1 SERVANT 'Twas a French plot,
 Upon my life.
 2 SERVANT To see what the devil can do!
 40 ANTONIO Are all the officers here?
 SERVANTS We are.
 ANTONIO
 Gentlemen,
 We have lost much plate<sup>z</sup> you know, and but this evening
 Jewels, to the value of four thousand ducats,
 Are missing in the duchess' cabinet.
 Are the gates shut?
 SERVANT Yes.
 ANTONIO 'Tis the duchess' pleasure
 45 Each officer be locked into his chamber
 Till the sun-rising; and to send the keys
 Of all their chests and of their outward doors
 Into her bedchamber. She is very sick.
 RODERIGO At her pleasure.
 ANTONIO She entreats you take 't
 50 not ill:
 The innocent shall be the more approved by it.
 BOSOLA Gentlemen o' th' wood-yard, where's your Switzer now?
 1 SERVANT By this hand, 'twas credibly reported by one o' th' black guard.<sup>8</sup>

[Exeunt all except ANTONIO and DELIO.]

DELIO     How fares it with the duchess?

ANTONIO    She's exposed
Unto the worst of torture, pain, and fear.

---

55 DELIO Speak to her all happy comfort.

ANTONIO    How I do play the fool with mine own danger!

You are this night, dear friend, to post to Rome;
My life lies in your service.

DELIO Do not doubt me.

60 ANTONIO Oh, 'tis far from me, and yet fear presents
me

Somewhat that looks like danger.

DELIO Believe it,

'Tis but the shadow of your fear, no more;

How superstitiously we mind our evils!

The throwing down salt, or crossing of a hare,

Bleeding at nose, the stumbling of a horse,

65 Or singing of a cricket, are of power

To daunt whole mano in us. Sir, fare you well:

I wish you all the joys of a blessed father:

And, for my faith, lay this unto your breast,

Old friends, like old swords, still are trusted best.

[Exit.]

[Enter CARIOLA.]

CARIOLA Sir, you are the happy father of a son:

Your wife commends him to you.

ANTONIO Blessed comfort!

For heaven's sake tend her well: I'll presently

Go set a figure for 's nativity.<sup>9</sup>

[Exeunt.]

Endnotes

- Note 1: Irritability. Return to reference 1

- Note 2: Where bottles were blown, near the theater in Blackfriars.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Always.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Jupiter's success in wooing Danaë in a shower of gold traditionally illustrated female venality.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: At once. "Posterns": outer gates.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: An outsize flap worn on the front of men's trunk hose.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Massive gold and silver dishes, a frequent form of wealth in the days before banks.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Kitchen scullions. The "wood-yard" is a source of firewood for kitchen and fireplaces.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Cast his horoscope right away.Return to reference 9

Notes

- °: Swiss guardReturn to reference °
- °: pistolReturn to reference °
- °: all courageReturn to reference °

SCENE 3. The scene continues.

[Enter BOSOLA, with a dark lantern.]

5 BOSOLA Sure I did hear a woman shriek: list, ha!
And the sound came, if I received it right,
From the duchess' lodgings. There's some stratagem
In the confining all our courtiers
To their several<sup>o</sup> wards: I must have part of it;
My intelligence will freeze else.<sup>1</sup> List, again!
It may be 'twas the melancholy bird,
Best friend of silence and of solitariness,
The owl, that screamed so. Ha! Antonio?

[Enter ANTONIO with a candle, his sword drawn.]

10 ANTONIO I heard some noise. Who's there? What art thou? Speak.

BOSOLA Antonio? Put not your face nor body
To such a forced expression of fear.
I am Bosola, your friend.

ANTONIO Bosola!

[aside] This mole does undermine me.—Heard you
not

A noise even now?

BOSOLA From whence?

15 ANTONIO From the duchess' lodging.

BOSOLA Not I. Did you?

ANTONIO I did, or else I dreamed.

BOSOLA Let's walk towards it.

ANTONIO No, it may be 'twas
But the rising of the wind.

BOSOLA Very likely.

Methinks 'tis very cold, and yet you sweat:
You look wildly.

20 ANTONIO I have been setting a figure<sup>2</sup>

For the duchess' jewels.

BOSOLA

Ah, and how falls your question?

Do you find it radical?<sup>o</sup>

ANTONIO

What's that to you?

'Tis rather to be questioned what design,
When all men were commanded to their lodgings,
Makes you a nightwalker.

BOSOLA

In sooth, I'll tell you:

25

Now all the court's asleep, I thought the devil
Had least to do here; I came to say my prayers;
And if it do offend you I do so,
You are a fine courtier.

ANTONIO [aside]

This fellow will undo me.

You gave the duchess apricots today:

30

Pray heaven they were not poisoned!

BOSOLA

Poisoned? A

Spanish fig<sup>3</sup>

For the imputation!

ANTONIO

Traitors are ever confident

Till they are discovered. There were jewels stolen,
too;

In my conceit,<sup>o</sup> none are to be suspected
More than yourself.

BOSOLA

You are a false steward.

35

ANTONIO Saucy slave, I'll pull thee up by the roots.

BOSOLA May be the ruin will crush you to pieces.

ANTONIO You are an impudent snake indeed, sir:

Are you scarce warm, and do you show your sting?
You libel well, sir.

BOSOLA

No, sir: copy it out,

40

And I will set my hand to 't.<sup>4</sup>

ANTONIO [aside]

My nose bleeds.

One that were superstitious would count

This ominous, when it merely comes by chance:

Two letters, that are wrought here for my name,<sup>5</sup>
 Are drowned in blood!
 45 Mere accident.—For you, sir, I'll take order
 I' th' morn you shall be safe.° [aside] 'Tis that must color
 Her lying-in.°—Sir, this door you pass not:
 I do not hold it fit that you come near
 The duchess' lodgings, till you have quit° yourself.
 50 [aside] The great are like the base, nay, they are the
 same,
 When they seek shameful ways to avoid shame.
 [Exit.]
 BOSOLA Antonio hereabout did drop a paper:
 Some of your help, false friend: [opening his lantern]
 Oh, here it is.
 What's here? A child's nativity calculated?
 55 [reads]
 "The duchess was delivered of a son, 'tween the hours twelve and one in the night, Anno Dom. 1504,"—that's this year
 —"decimo nono
Decembris,<sup>6</sup>—that's this night—"taken according to the meridian of Malfi"—that's our duchess: happy discovery! "The lord of the first house being combust<sup>7</sup> in the ascendant, signifies short life; 60 and Mars being in a human sign, joined to the tail of the Dragon, in the eighth house,
 doth threaten a violent death. Caetera non scrutantur."<sup>8</sup>
 Why, now 'tis most apparent: this precise° fellow
 Is the duchess' bawd:° I have it to my wish!
 This is a parcel of intelligency
 65

Our courtiers were cased up for: it needs must follow
That I must be committed on pretense
Of poisoning her; which I'll endure, and laugh at.
If one could find the father now! But that
Time will discover. Old Castruccio
70 I' th' morning posts to Rome: by him I'll send
A letter that shall make her brothers' galls
O'erflow their livers. This was a thrifty<sup>o</sup> way.
Though lust do mask in ne'er so strange disguise,
75 She's oft found witty, but is never wise.
[Exit.]

Endnotes

- Note 1: All my news will be cold otherwise.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Establishing the loss involved. But Bosola takes the expression astrologically, as if Antonio were casting a horoscope.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: An obscene gesture, which Bosola doubtless makes onstage.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Bosola denies the charge, not by denying malignancy, but by offering to publish it.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Embroidered on the handkerchief.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: December 19.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Burned up; that is, the ruling planet is close to the sun.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: "The rest is not examined"—that is, the horoscope is incomplete. Mars and the Dragon are sinister signs, even separately; fatal together.Return to reference 8

Notes

- °: separateReturn to reference °
- °: significantReturn to reference °

- °: opinionReturn to reference °
- °: under guardReturn to reference °
- °: giving birthReturn to reference °
- °: clearedReturn to reference °
- °: officiousReturn to reference °
- °: procurerReturn to reference °
- °: shrewdReturn to reference °

SCENE 4. *The palace of the CARDINAL at Rome.

[Enter CARDINAL and JULIA.]

CARDINAL Sit. Thou art my best of wishes. Prithee,
tell me

What trick didst thou invent to come to Rome
Without thy husband.

JULIA Why, my lord, I told him
I came to visit an old anchorite<sup>o</sup>
Here for devotion.

5 CARDINAL Thou are a witty false one—
I mean, to him.

JULIA You have prevailed with me
Beyond my strongest thoughts! I would not now Find you inconstant.

CARDINAL Do not put thyself
To such a voluntary torture, which proceeds
Out of your own guilt.

JULIA How, my lord?

10 CARDINAL You fear
My constancy, because you have approved<sup>o</sup>
Those giddy and wild turnings in yourself.

JULIA Did you e'er find them?

CARDINAL Sooth, generally for
women;

A man might strive to make glass malleable,
Ere he should make them fixed.

15 JULIA So, my lord.

CARDINAL We had need go borrow that fantastic glass

Invented by Galileo the Florentine<sup>1</sup>
To view another spacious world i' th' moon,
And look to find a constant woman there.

JULIA This is very well, my lord.

20 CARDINAL Why do you weep?
Are tears your justification? The selfsame tears
Will fall into your husband's bosom, lady,
With a loud protestation that you love him
Above the world. Come, I'll love you wisely,
That's jealously, since I am very certain 25 You cannot make me cuckold.

JULIA I'll go home
To my husband.

CARDINAL You may thank me, lady,
I have taken you off your melancholy perch,
Bore you upon my fist, and showed you game,
And let you fly at it.<sup>2</sup> I pray thee, kiss me.
30 When thou wast with thy husband, thou wast watched

Like a tame elephant: still you are to thank me:
Thou hadst only kisses from him and high feeding;
But what delight was that? 'Twas just like one
That hath a little fingering on the lute,
35 Yet cannot tune it: still you are to thank me.

JULIA You told me of a piteous wound i' th' heart
And a sick liver, when you wooed me first,
And spake like one in physic.<sup>3</sup> [A knock is heard.]

CARDINAL Who's that?
Rest firm,<sup>o</sup> for my affection to thee,
40 Lightning moves slow to 't.<sup>o</sup>
[Enter SERVANT.]

SERVANT Madam, a gentleman,
That's come post from Malfi, desires to see you.

CARDINAL Let him enter. I'll withdraw.
[Exit.]

SERVANT He says
Your husband, old Castruccio, is come to Rome,

Most pitifully tired with riding post.<sup>4</sup>

[Exit.]

[Enter DELIO.]

JULIA Signor Delio! [aside]'tis one of my old suitors.

DELIO I was bold to come and see you.

JULIA Sir, you are welcome.

DELIO Do you lie<sup>o</sup> here?

JULIA Sure, your own experience
Will satisfy you no: our Roman prelates
Do not keep lodging for ladies.

DELIO Very well.

50 I have brought you no commendations from your husband,
For I know none by him.

JULIA I hear he's come to Rome.

DELIO I never knew man and beast, of a horse and a knight,

55 So weary of each other: if he had had a good back,
He would have undertook to have borne his horse,
His breech was so pitifully sore.

JULIA Your laughter
Is my pity.

DELIO Lady, I know not whether
You want money, but I have brought you some.

JULIA From my husband?

DELIO No, from mine own allowance.

60 JULIA I must hear the condition, ere I be bound to take it.

DELIO Look on 't, 'tis gold: hath it not a fine color?

JULIA I have a bird more beautiful.

DELIO Try the sound on 't.

- Note 1: In 1504, Galileo's telescope was more than one hundred years in the future, but the reference was topical for Webster's audience.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: The cardinal speaks of himself as a falconer training a bird (Julia).Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Like a person under a doctor's care.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: When riding post, one changed horses at regular intervals without stopping to rest oneself.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: That is, who judge of actions before seeing their final consequences.Return to reference 5

Notes

- °: hermitReturn to reference °
- °: experiencedReturn to reference °
- °: be assuredReturn to reference °
- °: by comparisonReturn to reference °
- °: lodgeReturn to reference °
- °: medicinal Return to reference °
- °: foolishReturn to reference °
- °: brothReturn to reference °
- °: chastityReturn to reference °

SCENE 5. *The scene continues.

[Enter CARDINAL, and FERDINAND with a letter.]

FERDINAND I have this night digged up a mandrake.<sup>1</sup>

CARDINAL

Say you?

FERDINAND And I am grown mad with 't.

CARDINAL What's the prodigy?<sup>o</sup>

FERDINAND Read there—a sister damned: she's loose i'
th' hilt;<sup>2</sup>

Grown a notorious strumpet.

CARDINAL Speak lower.

FERDINAND Lower?

5 Rogues do not whisper 't now, but seek to publish 't
(As servants do the bounty of their lords)

Aloud; and with a covetous searching eye,
To mark who note them. O, confusion seize her!
She hath had most cunning bawds to serve her turn,
And more secure conveyances for lust
10 Than towns of garrison for service.<sup>o</sup>

CARDINAL Is 't possible?
Can this be certain?

FERDINAND Rhubarb, oh, for rhubarb
To purge this choler!<sup>3</sup> Here's the cursèd day
To prompt my memory, and here 't shall stick 15 Till of her bleeding heart I make a sponge
To wipe it out.

CARDINAL Why do you make yourself
So wild a tempest?

FERDINAND Would I could be one,
That I might toss her palace 'bout her ears,
Root up her goodly forests, blast her meads,<sup>o</sup>
20 And lay her general territory as waste

CARDINAL You fly beyond your reason.

FERDINAND Go to,
mistress!

'Tis not your whore's milk that shall quench my wild fire,

But your whore's blood.

50 CARDINAL How idly shows this rage, which carries
you,

As men conveyed by witches through the air,
On violent whirlwinds! This intemperate noise
Fitly resembles deaf men's shrill discourse,
Who talk aloud, <sup>o</sup> thinking all other men
To have their imperfection.

55 FERDINAND Have not you
My palsy?

CARDINAL Yes, I can be angry, but Without this rupture: there is not in nature
A thing that makes man so deformed, so beastly,
As doth intemperate anger. Chide yourself.
60 You have divers men who never yet expressed
Their strong desire of rest but by unrest,
By vexing of themselves. Come, put yourself
In tune.

FERDINAND So; I will only study to seem
The thing I am not. I could kill her now,
In you, or in myself; for I do think 65 It is some sin in us heaven doth revenge
By her.

CARDINAL Are you stark mad?

FERDINAND I would have their bodies

Burnt in a coal pit with the ventage <sup>o</sup> stopped,
That their cursed smoke might not ascend to
heaven;

70 Or dip the sheets they lie in in pitch or sulphur,
Wrap them in 't, and then light them like a match;

Or else to boil their bastard to a cullis,<sup>o</sup>
 And give 't his lecherous father to renew<sup>o</sup>
 The sin of his back.<sup>7</sup>

CARDINAL I'll leave you.

FERDINAND Nay, I have done.

75 I am confident, had I been damned in hell,
 And should have heard of this, it would have put me
 Into a cold sweat. In, in; I'll go sleep.
 Till I know who leaps my sister, I'll not stir:
 That known, I'll find scorpions to string my whips,<sup>8</sup>
 And fix her in a general eclipse.

80 [Exeunt.]

Endnotes

- Note 1: A fabulous root, violently aphrodisiac but also deadly poison. Both aspects apply to Ferdinand. Return to reference 1
- Note 2: That is, promiscuous. Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Rhubarb, as a laxative, was thought curative of the high pressures of hot rage. Return to reference 3
- Note 4: By which people were bled. Return to reference 4
- Note 5: The left is the sinister side, associated with bad luck, deceit, and passion. Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Gross tests of strength. Return to reference 6
- Note 7: As Atreus did to Thyestes in Greek legend. "The sin of his back": sexual capacity. Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Tipping the thongs of a whip with "scorpions" (tips of jagged steel or lead that sting and bite the flesh) is an old metaphor for aggravated punishment. Return to reference 8

Notes

- °: fearful wonder Return to reference °
- °: receiving supplies Return to reference °
- °: meadows Return to reference °

- °: medicineReturn to reference °
- °: balm Return to reference °
- °: cauteryReturn to reference °
- °: perhapsReturn to reference °
- °: throw the hammerReturn to reference °
- °: loudlyReturn to reference °
- °: chimneyReturn to reference °
- °: brothReturn to reference °
- °: repairReturn to reference °

Act 3

SCENE 1. *Amalfi.

[Enter ANTONIO and DELIO.]

ANTONIO Our noble friend, my most beloved Delio!
Oh, you have been a stranger long at court;
Came you along with the Lord Ferdinand?

DELIO I did, sir. And how fares your noble duchess?

5 ANTONIO Right fortunately well: she's an excellent
Feeder of pedigrees; since you last saw her,
She hath had two children more, a son and daughter.

DELIO Methinks 'twas yesterday: let me but wink,
And not behold your face, which to mine eye
Is somewhat leaner, verily I should dream
10 It were within this half-hour.

ANTONIO You have not been in law, friend Delio,
Nor in prison, nor a suitor at the court,
Nor begged the reversion of some great man's place,
Nor troubled with an old wife, which doth make 15 Your time so insensibly<sup>o</sup> hasten.

DELIO Pray, sir, tell me,
Hath not this news arrived yet to the ear
Of the Lord Cardinal?

ANTONIO I fear it hath:
The Lord Ferdinand, that's newly come to court,
Doth bear himself right dangerously.

DELIO Pray, why?
20 ANTONIO He is so quiet that he seems to sleep
The tempest out, as dormice do in winter.

Those houses that are haunted are most still
Till the devil be up.

DELIO What say the common people?

ANTONIO The common rabble do directly say

25 She is a strumpet.
 DELIO And your graver heads,
 Which would be politic,<sup>o</sup> what censure<sup>o</sup> they?
 ANTONIO They do observe I grow to infinite purchase
 The left-hand way,<sup>1</sup> and all suppose the duchess Would amend it, if she could; for, say they,
 30 Great princes, though they grudge their officers
 Should have such large and unconfined means
 To get wealth under them, will not complain,
 Lest thereby they should make them odious
 Unto the people; for other obligation
 35 Of love or marriage between her and me
 They never dream of.
 DELIO The Lord Ferdinand
 Is going to bed.
 [Enter DUCHESS, FERDINAND, and BOSOLA.]
 FERDINAND I'll instantly to bed,
 For I am weary.—I am to bespeak
 A husband for you.
 DUCHESS For me, sir? Pray, who is 't?
 40 FERDINAND The great Count Malateste.
 DUCHESS Fie upon
 him!
 A count? He's a mere stick of sugar candy;
 You may look quite through him. When I choose
 A husband, I will marry for your honor.
 45 FERDINAND You shall do well in 't.—How is 't, worthy
 Antonio?
 DUCHESS But, sir, I am to have private conference
 with you
 About a scandalous report is spread
 Touching mine honor.
 FERDINAND Let me be ever deaf to 't:
 One of Pasquil's paper bullets,<sup>2</sup> court-calumny,

50 A pestilent air, which princes' palaces
Are seldom purged of. Yet, say that it were true,
I pour it in your bosom, my fixed love
Would strongly excuse, extenuate, nay, deny Faults, were they apparent in you. Go, be safe
In your own innocence.

55 DUCHESS [aside] O blessed comfort!
This deadly air is purged.

[Exeunt DUCHESS, ANTONIO, and DELIO.]

FERDINAND Her guilt treads on Hot-burning coulters.<sup>3</sup> Now, Bosola,
How thrives our intelligence?<sup>o</sup>

BOSOLA Sir, uncertainly:
'Tis rumored she hath had three bastards, but
By whom, we may go read i' th' stars.

60 FERDINAND Why, some
Hold opinion all things are written there.

BOSOLA Yes, if we could find spectacles to read
them.

I do suspect there hath been some sorcery
Used on the duchess.

FERDINAND Sorcery? To what purpose?

65 BOSOLA To make her dote on some desertless fellow
She shames to acknowledge.

FERDINAND Can your faith give way

To think there's power in potions or in charms,
To make us love whether we will or no?

BOSOLA Most certainly.

70 FERDINAND Away! These are mere gulleries,<sup>o</sup> horrid things,

Invented by some cheating mountebanks<sup>4</sup>

To abuse us. Do you think that herbs or charms
Can force the will? Some trials have been made
In this foolish practice, but the ingredients

75 Were lenitive<sup>o</sup> poisons, such as are of force
 To make the patient mad; and straight the witch
 Swears by equivocation they are in love.
 The witchcraft lies in her rank<sup>o</sup> blood. This night
 I will force confession from her. You told me
 80 You had got, within these two days, a false<sup>o</sup> key
 Into her bedchamber.
 BOSOLA I have.
 FERDINAND As I would wish.
 BOSOLA What do you intend to do?
 FERDINAND Can you guess?
 BOSOLA
 No.
 FERDINAND Do not ask, then:
 He that can compass<sup>o</sup> me, and know my drifts,<sup>o</sup>
 85 May say he hath put a girdle 'bout the world,
 And sounded all her quicksands.
 BOSOLA I do not Think so.
 FERDINAND What do you think, then, pray?
 BOSOLA That you
 Are your own chronicle too much, and grossly Flatter yourself.
 FERDINAND Give me thy hand; I thank thee:
 90 I ne'er gave pension but to flatterers,
 Till I entertained<sup>o</sup> thee. Farewell.
 That friend a great man's ruin strongly checks,
 Who rails into his belief all his defects.
 [Exeunt.]

Endnotes

- Note 1: That is, they think I am getting rich dishonestly.Return to reference 1

- Note 2: Anonymous satires were traditionally pasted on the statue of Pasquillo, or Pasquino, near Piazza Navona in Rome, and attributed to his authorship.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Medieval chastity inquests customarily required the questioned lady to walk barefoot over red-hot plowshares ("coulters").Return to reference 3
- Note 4: A mixture of street entertainer and patent medicine salesman.Return to reference 4

Notes

- °: imperceptiblyReturn to reference °
- °: statesmanlike Return to reference °
- °: opineReturn to reference °
- °: detective workReturn to reference °
- °: deceitsReturn to reference °
- °: slow-workingReturn to reference °
- °: wantonReturn to reference °
- °: unauthorizedReturn to reference °
- °: comprehend Return to reference °
- °: purposesReturn to reference °
- °: employedReturn to reference °

SCENE 2. The bedchamber of the DUCHESS.

[Enter DUCHESS, ANTONIO, and CARIOLA.]

DUCHESS Bring me the casket hither, and the glass.
You get no lodging here tonight, my lord.

ANTONIO Indeed, I must persuade one.

DUCHESS Very good:

I hope in time 'twill grow into a custom,
That noblemen shall come with cap and knee
5 To purchase a night's lodging of their wives.

ANTONIO I must lie here.

DUCHESS Must! You are a lord of misrule.<sup>1</sup>

ANTONIO Indeed, my rule is only in the night.

DUCHESS To what use will you put me?

ANTONIO We'll sleep
together.

10 DUCHESS Alas, what pleasure can two lovers find in sleep?

CARIOLA My lord, I lie with her often, and I know
She'll much disquiet you.

ANTONIO See, you are complained
of.

CARIOLA For she's the sprawling'st bedfellow.

ANTONIO I shall like her

The better for that.

CARIOLA Sir, shall I ask you a question?

ANTONIO I pray thee, Cariola.

15 CARIOLA Wherefore still,<sup>2</sup> when you lie
with my lady,
Do you rise so early?

ANTONIO Laboring men

Count the clock oftenest, Cariola,
Are glad when their task's ended.

DUCHESS

I'll stop your mouth.

[Kisses him.]

ANTONIO Nay, that's but one; Venus had two soft doves

20 To draw her chariot; I must have another— [She kisses him again.]

When wilt thou marry, Cariola?

CARIOLA

Never, my lord.

ANTONIO Oh, fie upon this single life! Forgo it.

We read how Daphne, for her peevish flight,

Became a fruitless bay tree; Syrinx turned

25 To the pale empty reed; Anaxarete

Was frozen into marble: whereas those

Which married, or proved kind unto their friends,

Were by a gracious influence trans-shaped

Into the olive, pomegranate, mulberry,

30 Became flowers, precious stones, or eminent stars.<sup>2</sup>

CARIOLA

This is a vain poetry, but I pray you tell
me,

If there were proposed me, wisdom, riches, and
beauty,

In three several young men, which should I choose?

ANTONIO 'Tis a hard question: this was Paris' case,

35 And he was blind in 't, and there was great cause;

For how was 't possible he could judge right,

Having three amorous goddesses in view,

And they stark naked? 'Twas a motion<sup>3</sup>

Were able to benight the apprehension

Of the severest counselor of Europe.

40

Now I look on both your faces so well formed,

It puts me in mind of a question I would ask.

CARIOLA

What is 't?

ANTONIO I do wonder why hard-favored
ladies,

To attend them, and cannot endure fair ones.

DUCHESS Oh, that's soon answered.

ANTONIO Pray thee, Cariola, let's steal forth the
room,

And let her talk to herself: I have divers times
Served her the like, when she hath chafed extremely.
I love to see her angry. Softly, Cariola. [Exeunt

ANTONIO and CARIOLA.]

When I wax gray, I shall have all the court
Powder their hair with arras,<sup>4</sup> to be like me.
You have cause to love me; I entered you into my heart

Before you would vouchsafe to call for the keys.

We shall one day have my brothers take you napping;

You shall get no more children till my brothers Consent to be your gossips.<sup>5</sup> Have you lost your tongue?

[She turns and sees FERDINAND.]

'Tis welcome:

For know, whether I am doomed to live or die,
I can do both like a prince.

FERDINAND Die, then, quickly! [Giving her a poniard.<sup>6</sup>]

70 Virtue, where art thou hid? What hideous thing
Is it that doth eclipse thee?

DUCHESS Pray, sir, hear me.

FERDINAND Or is it true thou art but a bare name,
And no essential<sup>o</sup> thing?

DUCHESS Sir—

FERDINAND Do not speak.

DUCHESS No, sir: I will plant my soul in mine ears, to hear you.

75 FERDINAND O most imperfect light of human reason,
That mak'st us so unhappy to foresee
What we can least prevent! Pursue thy wishes,
And glory in them: there's in shame no comfort
But to be past all bounds and sense of shame.

DUCHESS I pray, sir, hear me. I am married.

80 FERDINAND So!

DUCHESS Haply,<sup>o</sup> not to your liking: but for that,
Alas, your shears do come untimely now
To clip the bird's wings that's already flown!
Will you see my husband?

FERDINAND Yes, if I could change
Eyes with a basilisk.<sup>7</sup>

85 DUCHESS Sure, you came hither
By his confederacy.

FERDINAND The howling of a wolf
Is music to thee, screech owl: prithee, peace.
Whate'er thou art that hast enjoyed my sister,
For I am sure thou hear'st me, for thine own sake
90 Let me not know thee. I came hither prepared
To work thy discovery; yet am now persuaded
It would beget such violent effects

As would damn us both. I would not for ten millions
I had beheld thee: therefore use all means
I never may have knowledge of thy name;
95 Enjoy thy lust still, and a wretched life,
On that condition. And for thee, vile woman,
If thou do wish thy lecher may grow old
In thy embracements, I would have thee build
Such a room for him as our anchorites
100 To holier use inhabit. Let not the sun Shine on him till he's dead; let dogs and monkeys
Only converse with him, and such dumb things
To whom nature denies use to sound his name;
Do not keep a paraquito, lest she learn it;
105 If thou do love him, cut out thine own tongue,
Lest it bewray him.

DUCHESS Why might not I marry?
I have not gone about in this to create
Any new world or custom.

FERDINAND Thou art undone;
And thou hast ta'en that massy sheet of lead
110 That hid thy husband's bones, and folded it
About my heart.

DUCHESS Mine bleeds for 't.

FERDINAND Thine? Thy
heart?

What should I name 't unless a hollow bullet
Filled with unquenchable wildfire?

DUCHESS You are in this 115 Too strict, and were you not my princely brother,
I would say, too willful. My reputation
Is safe.

FERDINAND Dost thou know what reputation is?
I'll tell thee—to small purpose, since the instruction
Comes now too late.
Upon a time, Reputation, Love, and Death
120 Would travel o'er the world; and it was concluded

That they should part, and take three several ways.
 Death told them, they should find him in great battles,
 Or cities plagued with plagues. Love gives them
 counsel
 To inquire for him 'mongst unambitious shepherds, 125 Where dowries were not talked of, and sometimes
 'Mongst quiet kindred that had nothing left
 By their dead parents. "Stay," quoth Reputation,
 "Do not forsake me; for it is my nature,
 130 If once I part from any man I meet,
 I am never found again." And so for you:
 You have shook hands<sup>o</sup> with Reputation,
 And made him invisible. So, fare you well.
 I will never see you more.
 DUCHESS Why should only I,
 135 Of all the other princes of the world,
 Be cased up, like a holy relic? I have youth
 And a little beauty.
 FERDINAND So you have some virgins
 That are witches. I will never see thee more.
 [Exit.]
 [Enter ANTONIO with a pistol, and CARIOLA.]
 DUCHESS You saw this apparition?
 ANTONIO Yes. We are 140 Betrayed. How came he hither? I should turn
 This to thee, for that. [Pointing the pistol at CARIOLA.]
 CARIOLA Pray, sir, do; and when
 That you have cleft my heart, you shall read there
 Mine innocence.
 DUCHESS That gallery gave him entrance.
 ANTONIO I would this terrible thing would come
 again,
 145 That, standing on my guard, I might relate

My warrantable<sup>8</sup> love. [She shows the poniard.]

Ha! What means this?

DUCHESS He left this with me.

ANTONIO And it seems did wish
You would use it on yourself.

DUCHESS His action seemed
To intend so much.

150 ANTONIO This hath a handle to 't
As well as a point: turn it towards him, and
So fasten the keen edge in his rank gall. [Knocking within.]

How now! Who knocks? More earthquakes?

DUCHESS I
stand

As if a mine beneath my feet were ready
To be blown up.

CARIOLA 'Tis Bosola.

155 DUCHESS Away!
O misery! Methinks unjust actions
Should wear these masks and curtains, and not we.
You must instantly part hence: I have fashioned it already.

[Exit ANTONIO.]

[Enter BOSOLA.]

BOSOLA The duke your brother is ta'en up in a whirlwind,
Hath took horse, and 's rid post to Rome.

DUCHESS So late?

160 BOSOLA He told me, as he mounted into th' saddle,
You were undone.

DUCHESS Indeed, I am very near it.

BOSOLA What's the matter?

DUCHESS Antonio, the master of our household,
Hath dealt so falsely with me in 's accounts:

165 My brother stood engaged with me for money
 Ta'en up of certain Neapolitan Jews,
 And Antonio lets the bonds be forfeit.<sup>9</sup>
 BOSOLA Strange!—[aside] This is cunning.
 DUCHESS And
 hereupon
 My brother's bills at Naples are protested
 Against.<sup>1</sup>—Call up our officers.
 BOSOLA I shall.
 170 [Exit.]
 [Reenter ANTONIO.]
 DUCHESS The place that you must fly to is Ancona:<sup>2</sup>
 Hire a house there; I'll send after you
 My treasure and my jewels. Our weak safety
 Runs upon ingenious wheels: short syllables
 175 Must stand for periods.<sup>3</sup> I must now accuse you
 Of such a feignèd crime as Tasso calls
Magnanima menzogna, a noble lie,
 'Cause it must shield our honors. Hark! They are coming.
 [Reenter BOSOLA and OFFICERS.]
 ANTONIO Will your grace hear me?
 DUCHESS I have got well by you; you have yielded
 180 me
 A million of loss: I am like to inherit
 The people's curses for your stewardship.
 You had the trick in audit time to be sick,
 Till I had signed your quietus;<sup>4</sup> and that cured you
 Without help of a doctor.—Gentlemen,
 185 I would have this man be an example to you all;
 So shall you hold my favor; I pray, let him;<sup>5</sup>
 For he's done that, alas, you would not think of,
 And, because I intend to be rid of him,
 I mean not to publish. [to ANTONIO] Use your fortune
 190 elsewhere.

ANTONIO I am strongly armed to brook my overthrow;
As commonly men bear with a hard year,
I will not blame the cause on 't; but do think
The necessity of my malevolent star
Procures this, not her humor. Oh, the inconstant 195 And rotten ground of service! You may see,
'Tis even like him that in a winter night
Takes a long slumber o'er a dying fire,
As loath to part from 't; yet parts thence as cold
As when he first sat down.

200 DUCHESS We do confiscate,
Towards the satisfying of your accounts,
All that you have.

ANTONIO I am yours, and 'tis very fit
All mine should be so.

DUCHESS So, sir, you have your pass.<sup>o</sup>

ANTONIO You may see, gentlemen, what 'tis to serve
A prince with body and soul.
205 [Exit.]

BOSOLA Here's an example for extortion: what moisture is drawn out of the sea, when foul weather comes, pours down, and runs into the sea again.

DUCHESS I would know what are your opinions of this
Antonio.

SECOND OFFICER He could not abide to see a pig's head gaping: I thought your grace would find him a Jew.<sup>4</sup>

210 THIRD OFFICER I would you had been his officer, for your own sake.

FOURTH OFFICER You would have had more money.

FIRST OFFICER He stopped his ears with black wool, and to those came to him for money said he was thick of hearing.

215 SECOND OFFICER Some said he was an hermaphrodite, for he could not abide a woman.

FOURTH OFFICER How scurvy proud he would look when the treasury was full! Well, let him go!

FIRST OFFICER Yes, and the chippings of the buttery fly after him, to scour his gold chain!<sup>5</sup>

220 DUCHESS Leave us. [Exeunt OFFICERS.] What do you think of these?

BOSOLA That these are rogues that in 's prosperity, but to have waited on his fortune, could have wished his dirty stirrup riveted through their noses, and followed after 's mule, like a bear in a ring;
would have prostituted their daughters to his lust; made their firstborn 225 intelligencers;<sup>6</sup> thought none happy but such as were born under his blessed planet, and wore his livery:
and do these lice drop off now? Well, never look to have the like again:<sup>7</sup> he hath left a sort of flattering rogues behind him;
their doom must follow.
Princes pay flatterers in their own money: flatterers dissemble their vices, and they dissemble their lies; that's justice.
230 Alas, poor gentleman!

DUCHESS Poor? He hath amply filled his coffers.

BOSOLA Sure, he was too honest. Pluto, the god of riches, when he's sent by Jupiter to any man, he goes limping, to signify that wealth that comes on God's name comes slowly; but when he's sent on the devil's errand, he rides post and comes in by scuttles. Let me show 235 you what a most unvalued<sup>8</sup> jewel you have in a wanton humor thrown away, to bless the man shall<sup>9</sup> find him. He was an excellent courtier and most faithful; a soldier that thought it as beastly to know his own value too little as devilish to acknowledge it too much. Both his virtue and form deserved a far better fortune: his discourse rather delighted to judge itself 240 than show itself; his breast was filled with all perfection, and yet it seemed a private whispering-room, it made so little noise of 't.

DUCHESS But he was basely descended.

BOSOLA Will you make yourself a mercenary herald, rather to examine 245 men's pedigrees than virtues? You shall want<sup>1</sup> him:
for know, an honest statesman to a prince is like a cedar planted by a spring; the spring bathes the tree's root, the grateful tree rewards it with his shadow: you have not done so. I would sooner swim to the Bermoothes<sup>2</sup> on two politicians' rotten bladders, tied together with an intelligencer's heartstring, than depend on so changeable a prince's favor. Fare thee well, 250 Antonio! Since the malice of the world would needs down with thee, it cannot be said yet that any ill happened unto thee, considering thy fall was accompanied with virtue.

DUCHESS Oh, you render me excellent music!

BOSOLA Say you?

DUCHESS This good one that you speak of is my
husband.

255 BOSOLA Do I not dream? Can this ambitious age
Have so much goodness in 't as to prefer
A man merely for worth, without these shadows
Of wealth and painted honors? Possible?

DUCHESS I have had three children by him.

BOSOLA Fortunate
lady!

260 For you have made your private nuptial bed
The humble and fair seminary<sup>o</sup> of peace.
No question but many an unbeneficed scholar<sup>3</sup>
Shall pray for you for this deed, and rejoice
That some preferment in the world can yet
Arise from merit. The virgins of your land
265 That have no dowries shall hope your example
Will raise them to rich husbands. Should you want Soldiers, 'twould make the very Turks and Moors
Turn Christians, and serve you for this act.
Last, the neglected poets of your time,
270 In honor of this trophy of a man,
Raised by that curious<sup>o</sup> engine, your white hand,
Shall thank you, in your grave, for 't; and make that
More reverend than all the cabinets
Of living princes.<sup>4</sup> For Antonio,
275 His fame shall likewise flow from many a pen,
When heralds shall want coats to sell to men.<sup>5</sup>

DUCHESS As I taste comfort in this friendly speech,
So would I find concealment.

280 BOSOLA Oh, the secret of my prince,
Which I will wear on th' inside of my heart!

DUCHESS    You shall take charge of all my coin and
              jewels,
              And follow him; for he retires himself
              To Ancona.

BOSOLA                So.

DUCHESS                Whither, within few days,
              I mean to follow thee.

BOSOLA                Let me think:
285        I would wish your grace to feign a pilgrimage
              To our Lady of Loreto,<sup>6</sup> scarce seven leagues
              From fair Ancona; so may you depart
              Your country with more honor, and your flight
              Will seem a princely progress,<sup>o</sup> retaining 290        Your usual train about you.

DUCHESS                Sir, your direction
              Shall lead me by the hand.

CARIOLA                In my opinion,
              She were better progress to the baths at Lucca,
              Or go visit the Spa in Germany;
              For, if you will believe me, I do not like 295        This jesting with religion, this feigned Pilgrimage.

DUCHESS                Thou art a superstitious fool.
              Prepare us instantly for our departure.
              Past sorrows, let us moderately lament them;
              For those to come, seek wisely to prevent them.
300        [Exit DUCHESS, with CARIOLA.]

BOSOLA    A politician<sup>o</sup> is the devil's quilted anvil;
              He fashions all sins on him, and the blows
              Are never heard: he may work in a lady's chamber,
              As here for proof. What rests<sup>o</sup> but I reveal
              All to my lord? Oh, this base quality
305        Of intelligencer! Why, every quality<sup>o</sup> i' th' world Prefers<sup>o</sup> but gain or commendation:
              Now for this act I am certain to be raised,

And men that paint weeds to the life are praised.
[Exit.]

Endnotes

- Note 1: The mock-monarch of a carnival festival.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: The olive was created by Athena; the mulberry gained its color from the blood of Pyramus and Thisbe; the pomegranate seems to have no particular mythological origin. Most of the other stories of ladies being transformed for complying, or not complying, with the solicitations of a god are from Ovid's Metamorphoses.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Spectacle. Paris had to choose among Hera, Athena, and Aphrodite, goddesses of regal power, wisdom, and love; his selecting the third led to the Trojan War.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Orris root, used in powdered form to make hair artificially gray.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Sponsors in baptism.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: A knife.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Monster that was fabled to kill with a glance.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Legitimate, defensible.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: That is, my brother stood security for some money I borrowed from Neapolitan moneylenders; now Antonio has let them call on the duke for payment.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: That is, Duke Ferdinand's checks have bounced.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: On the Adriatic coast of Italy, across the peninsula from Amalfi and well to the north.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Full sentences. "Enginous": delicately balanced, as in clockwork. The allusion to Tasso (next line) is literally accurate (Jerusalem Delivered 2.22) but anachronistic, since Tasso's poem was not published until 1574.Return to reference 3

- Note 4: Jews were identified by their antipathy to pork, but the assumptions here are deliberately ridiculous.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: A gold chain was the steward's traditional badge of office. Bread crumbs (the "chippings of the buttery") were used to polish gold and silver plate.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Spies.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: That is, a servant as good as he was.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Invaluable. "By scuttles": in haste.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Who shall.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Miss.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: The Bermudas, unknown at the time of the action, but very topical a hundred years later, when the play was written.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: A scholar without an official appointment.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: She will be more honored in her grave than living princes in their courts. "Cabinets": council chambers.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: The Heralds' College (an English royal corporation) carried on a brisk trade in coats of arms.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: The shrine of the Virgin at Loreto was famous throughout Europe.Return to reference 6

Notes

- °: alwaysReturn to reference °
- °: actualReturn to reference °
- °: perhapsReturn to reference °
- °: parrotReturn to reference °
- °: betrayReturn to reference °
- °: partedReturn to reference °
- °: receiptReturn to reference °
- °: release himReturn to reference °

- °: passportReturn to reference °
- °: seedbedReturn to reference °
- °: exquisiteReturn to reference °
- °: state journeyReturn to reference °
- °: crafty intriguerReturn to reference °
- °: remainsReturn to reference °
- °: professionReturn to reference °
- °: offersReturn to reference °

SCENE 3. *Rome.

[Enter CARDINAL, FERDINAND, MALATESTA, PESCARA, SILVIO, DELIO.]

CARDINAL     Must we turn soldier, then?

MALATESTES    The Emperor,<sup>1</sup>
Hearing your worth that way, ere you attained
This reverend garment, joins you in commission
With the right fortunate soldier the Marquis of Pescara,
And the famous Lannoy.

5 CARDINAL He that had the honor
Of taking the French king prisoner?<sup>2</sup>

[illegible]

FERDINAND    This great Count Malatesta, I perceive,
Hath got employment?

DELIO No employment, my lord;
A marginal note in the muster book, that he is 10 A voluntary lord.

FERDINAND                    He's no soldier?

DELIO He has worn gunpowder in 's hollow tooth for the toothache.<sup>3</sup>

SILVIO    He comes to the leaguer<sup>o</sup> with a full intent
To eat fresh beef and garlic, means to stay
Till the scent be gone, and straight return to court.

15 DELIO He hath read all the late service<sup>4</sup> as the city chronicle relates it, and keeps two painters going, only to express battles in model.

SILVIO Then he'll fight by the book.

DELIO By the almanac, I think, to choose good days and shun the critical.
 That's his mistress' scarf.
 20 SILVIO Yes, he protests he would do much for that taffeta.
 DELIO I think he would run away from a battle, to save it from taking<sup>5</sup> prisoner.
 SILVIO He is horribly afraid gunpowder will spoil the perfume on 't.
 25 DELIO I saw a Dutchman break his pate once for calling him pot-gun;<sup>6</sup> he made his head have a bore in 't like a musket.
 SILVIO I would he had made a touchhole to 't. He is indeed a guarded
 sumpter cloth,<sup>7</sup> only for the remove of the court.
 [Enter BOSOLA and speaks to FERDINAND and the CARDINAL.]
 PESCARA Bosola arrived? What should be the business?
 Some falling out amongst the cardinals.
 30 These factions amongst great men, they are like Foxes; when their heads are divided,
 They carry fire in their tails, and all the country
 About them goes to wrack for 't.<sup>8</sup>
 SILVIO What's that
 Bosola?
 35 DELIO I knew him in Padua—a fantastical scholar, like such who study to know how many knots were in Hercules' club, of what color Achilles' beard was, or whether Hector were not troubled with the toothache.
 He hath studied himself half blear-eyed to know the true symmetry of

Caesar's nose by a shoeing-horn; and this he did to gain the name of a speculative<sup>9</sup> man.

40 PESCARA Mark Prince Ferdinand:
A very salamander lives in 's eye,
To mock the eager violence of fire.<sup>1</sup>

SILVIO That Cardinal hath made more bad faces with his oppression than ever Michelangelo<sup>2</sup> made good ones: he lifts up 45 's nose, like a foul porpoise before a storm.

PESCARA The Lord Ferdinand laughs.

DELIO Like a deadly cannon that lightens ere it smokes.

PESCARA These are your true pangs of death,
The pangs of life, that struggle with great 50 statesmen.

DELIO In such a deformed silence witches whisper
Their charms.

CARDINAL Doth she make religion her riding hood
To keep her from the sun and tempest?

FERDINAND That,
That damns her. Methinks her fault and beauty,
Blended together, show like leprosy,
55 The whiter, the fouler. I make it a question
Whether her beggarly brats were ever christened.

CARDINAL I will instantly solicit the state of Ancona
To have them banished.

FERDINAND You are for Loreto?
I shall not be at your ceremony; fare you well.
60 Write to the Duke of Malfi, my young nephew
She had by her first husband, and acquaint him
With 's mother's honesty.

BOSOLA I will.

FERDINAND
 Antonio!
 A slave that only smelled of ink and counters,
 And never in 's life looked like a gentleman,
 65 But in the audit time. Go, go presently,<sup>o</sup>
 Draw me out an hundred and fifty of our horse,<sup>o</sup>
 And meet me at the fort-bridge.<sup>3</sup>
 [Exeunt.]

Endnotes

- Note 1: The Spanish emperor, Charles V. Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Charles de Lannoy, Belgian by origin, did indeed capture Francis I at Pavia in 1525, about two decades after the date of the play's supposed action. "Pescara": also a commander at Pavia. Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Saltpeter was sometimes used to relieve a toothache. Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Recent military operations. Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Being taken. Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Popgun. Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Decorated saddlecloth used only when the court is changing its residence; that is, he's only for show. "Touchhole": where the match was applied to set off a cannon. Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Samson once tied some foxes together by the tail and set them afire to burn down the fields of the Philistines (Judges 15). Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Profound, given to abstruse thoughts. Intense and especially fantastical scholarship was thought to be a cause of melancholy—Bosola's temperament—caused by an imbalance of black bile. Return to reference 9
- Note 1: The salamander was supposed to be so cold and wet of constitution that it could live in fire. Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Michelangelo Buonarroti (1475–1564), the great Florentine painter and sculptor. Another anachronism. Return to

reference 2

- Note 3: Drawbridge.Return to reference 3

Notes

- °: siegeReturn to reference °
- °: at onceReturn to reference °
- °: cavalryReturn to reference °

SCENE 4. The shrine of Our Lady of Loreto.

[Enter TWO PILGRIMS.]

FIRST PILGRIM I have not seen a goodlier shrine than
this;

Yet I have visited many.

SECOND PILGRIM The Cardinal of Aragon
Is this day to resign his cardinal's hat:
His sister duchess likewise is arrived
To pay her vow of pilgrimage. I expect
A noble ceremony.

FIRST PILGRIM No question. They come.

[Here the ceremony of the CARDINAL's installment in the habit of a soldier: performed in delivering up his cross, hat, robes, and ring at the shrine, and investing him with sword, helmet, shield, and spurs; then ANTONIO, the DUCHESS, and their children, having presented themselves at the shrine, are, by a form of banishment in dumb show expressed towards them by the CARDINAL and the state of Ancona, banished: during all which ceremony, this ditty is sung, to very solemn music, by divers churchmen.]<sup>1</sup>

Arms and honors deck thy story,
To thy fame's eternal glory!
Adverse fortune ever fly thee;
No disastrous fate come nigh thee!

I alone will sing thy praises,
Whom to honor virtue raises;
And thy study, that divine is,
Bent to martial discipline is.
Lay aside all those robes lie by thee;
Crown thy arts with arms, they'll beautify thee.

O worthy of worthiest name, adorned in this manner,
 Lead bravely thy forces on under war's warlike banner!
 Oh, mayst thou prove fortunate in all martial courses!
 Guide thou still by skill in arts and forces!
 20 Victory attend thee nigh, whilst fame sings loud thy powers;
 Triumphant conquest crown thy head, and blessings
 pour down showers!
 [Exeunt all except the TWO PILGRIMS.]
 FIRST PILGRIM Here's a strange turn of state! Who would have thought
 So great a lady would have matched herself
 25 Unto so mean a person? Yet the cardinal
 Bears himself much too cruel.
 SECOND PILGRIM They are banished.
 FIRST PILGRIM But I would ask what power hath this state
 Of Ancona to determine<sup>2</sup> of a free prince?
 SECOND PILGRIM They are a free state, sir, and her brother showed
 30 How that the pope, fore-hearing of her looseness,
 Hath seized into the protection of the church
 The dukedom which she held as dowager.<sup>3</sup>
 FIRST PILGRIM But by what justice?
 SECOND PILGRIM Sure, I think by
 none,
 Only her brother's instigation.
 FIRST PILGRIM What was it with such violence he 35 took Off from her finger?
 SECOND PILGRIM 'Twas her wedding ring,
 Which he vowed shortly he would sacrifice

To his revenge.
FIRST PILGRIM      Alas, Antonio!
If that a man be thrust into a well,
40 No matter who sets hands to 't, his own weight
Will bring him sooner to th' bottom. Come, let's hence.
Fortune makes this conclusion general,
All things do help th' unhappy man to fall.
[Exeunt.]

Endnotes

- Note 1: This song is not very suitable to the scene, and Webster, in the edition of 1623, denied writing it.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Pass judgment on.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: As widow to her first husband, the Duke of Malfi.Return to reference 3

SCENE 5. Near Loreto.

[Enter DUCHESS, ANTONIO, CHILDREN, CARIOLA, and SERVANTS.]

DUCHESS Banished Ancona!

ANTONIO Yes, you see what power

Lightens<sup>o</sup> in great men's breath.

DUCHESS Is all our train
Shrunk to this poor remainder?

ANTONIO These poor men,
Which have got little in your service, vow

5 To take your fortune, but your wiser buntings,<sup>1</sup>
Now they are fledged, are gone.

DUCHESS They have done wisely.

This puts me in mind of death: physicians thus,
With their hands full of money, use<sup>o</sup> to give o'er
Their patients.

ANTONIO Right<sup>o</sup> the fashion of the world:
10 From decayed fortunes every flatterer shrinks;
Men cease to build where the foundation sinks.

DUCHESS I had a very strange dream tonight.<sup>o</sup>

ANTONIO What was 't?

DUCHESS Methought I wore my coronet of state,
And on a sudden all the diamonds
Were changed to pearls.

ANTONIO My interpretation
15 Is, you'll weep shortly, for to me the pearls
Do signify your tears.

DUCHESS The birds that live
I' th' field on the wild benefit of nature

To be our after-ruin: tell them so.
 BOSOLA And what from you?
 ANTONIO Thus tell him: I will not
 45 come.
 BOSOLA And what of this? [Pointing to the letter.] ANTONIO My brothers have dispersed
 Bloodhounds abroad; which till I hear are muzzled,
 No truce, though hatched with ne'er such politic skill,
 Is safe, that hangs upon our enemies' will.
 I'll not come at<sup>o</sup> them.
 BOSOLA This proclaims your
 50 breeding:
 Every small thing draws a base mind to fear,
 As the adamant<sup>o</sup> draws iron. Fare you well, sir;
 You shall shortly hear from 's.
 [Exit.]
 DUCHESS I suspect some ambush;
 Therefore, by all my love I do conjure you
 To take your eldest son, and fly towards Milan.
 55 Let us not venture all this poor remainder
 In one unlucky bottom.<sup>2</sup>
 ANTONIO You counsel safely.
 Best of my life, farewell. Since we must part,
 Heaven hath a hand in 't, but no otherwise
 Than as some curious artist takes in sunder
 60 A clock or watch, when it is out of frame,<sup>3</sup>
 To bring 't in better order.
 DUCHESS I know not which is best,
 To see you dead, or part with you. Farewell, boy:
 Thou art happy that thou hast not understanding
 65 To know thy misery; for all our wit
 And reading brings us to a truer sense
 Of sorrow. In the eternal church,<sup>o</sup> sir,

I do hope we shall not part thus.

ANTONIO

Oh, be of comfort!

70     Make patience a noble fortitude,
And think not how unkindly we are used:
Man, like to cassia, is proved best being bruised.<sup>4</sup>

DUCHESS     Must I, like to a slave-born Russian,
Account it praise to suffer tyranny?

75     And yet, O heaven, thy heavy hand is in 't!
I have seen my little boy oft scourge his top,<sup>5</sup>
And compared myself to 't: naught made me e'er
Go right but heaven's scourge stick.

ANTONIO

Do not weep:

80     Heaven fashioned us of nothing, and we strive
To bring ourselves to nothing. Farewell, Cariola,
And thy sweet armful. If I do never see thee more,
Be a good mother to your little ones,
And save them from the tiger. Fare you well.

DUCHESS     Let me look upon you once more, for that speech

85     Came from a dying father. Your kiss is colder
Than that I have seen an holy anchorite<sup>o</sup>
Give to a dead man's skull.

ANTONIO     My heart is turned to a heavy lump of lead,

With which I sound<sup>6</sup> my danger. Fare you well.

[Exeunt ANTONIO and his son.]

DUCHESS     My laurel is all withered.

90     CARIOLA     Look, madam, what a troop of armèd men
Make toward us.

DUCHESS

Oh, they are very welcome:

When Fortune's wheel<sup>7</sup> is overcharged with princes,
The weight makes it move swift: I would have my ruin

Be sudden.

[Enter BOSOLA vizarded,<sup>o</sup> with a guard.]

95 I am your adventure,<sup>8</sup> am I not?
BOSOLA You are. You must see your husband no
more.

DUCHESS What devil art thou that counterfeits heaven's thunder?

BOSOLA Is that terrible? I would have you tell me whether
Is that note worse that frights the silly birds
Out of the corn,<sup>o</sup> or that which doth allure them 100 To the nets? You have hearkened to the last too much.

DUCHESS Oh, misery! Like to a rusty o'ercharged cannon,
Shall I never fly in pieces?—Come, to what prison?

BOSOLA To none.

DUCHESS Whither, then?

BOSOLA To your palace.

DUCHESS I have heard
That Charon's boat serves to convey all o'er 105 The dismal lake,<sup>9</sup> but brings none back again.
BOSOLA Your brothers mean you safety and pity.
DUCHESS Pity!
With such a pity men preserve alive
Pheasants and quails, when they are not fat enough
To be eaten.

110 BOSOLA These are your children?

DUCHESS Yes.

BOSOLA Can they prattle?

DUCHESS

No.

But I intend, since they were born accursed,
Curses shall be their first language.

BOSOLA Fie, madam!
 Forget this base, low fellow—
 DUCHESS Were I a man,
 I'd beat that counterfeit face<sup>o</sup> into thy other.
 115 BOSOLA One of no birth.<sup>1</sup>
 DUCHESS Say that he was born
mean,
 Man is most happy when 's own actions
 Be arguments and examples of his virtue.
 BOSOLA A barren, beggarly virtue!
 DUCHESS I prithee, who is greatest? Can you tell?
 120 Sad tales befit my woe: I'll tell you one.
 A salmon, as she swam unto the sea,
 Met with a dogfish, who encounters her
 With this rough language: "Why art thou so bold
 To mix thyself with our high state of floods,
 125 Being no eminent courtier, but one
 That for the calmest and fresh time o' th' year
 Dost live in shallow rivers, rank'st thyself
 With silly<sup>o</sup> smelts and shrimps? And darrest thou Pass by our dog-ship without reverence?"
 130 "Oh!" quoth the salmon, "sister, be at peace:
 Thank Jupiter we both have passed the net!
 Our value never can be truly known,
 Till in the fisher's basket we be shown:
 I' th' market then my price may be the higher,
 135 Even when I am nearest to the cook and fire."
 So to great men the moral may be stretchèd:
 Men oft are valued high, when they're most wretched.
 But come, whither you please. I am armed 'gainst misery;
 Bent to all sways of the oppressor's will:
 140 There's no deep valley but near some great hill.
[Exeunt.]

Endnotes

- Note 1: Migratory birds. "Take": accept.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: The metaphor is mercantile: let's not load all our cargo in one ship ("bottom").Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Not working. "Curious artist": clever craftsman.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Cinnamon bark ("cassia") is most aromatic (virtuous) when pressed.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Children used to make tops spin by whipping them.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Plumb the depths of.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: The wheel of fortune is an ancient emblem of mutability; people have their fixed positions on it and rise or fall as it turns.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: The object of your journey.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: In classical mythology, Charon transports the souls of the dead across the river Styx to Hades.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Of low rank by birth.Return to reference 1

Notes

- °: are accustomedReturn to reference °
- °: exactlyReturn to reference °
- °: last nightReturn to reference °
- °: whitewashReturn to reference °
- °: craftyReturn to reference °
- °: toReturn to reference °
- °: lodestoneReturn to reference °
- °: heavenly societyReturn to reference °
- °: hermitReturn to reference °
- °: maskedReturn to reference °
- °: grainReturn to reference °
- °: maskReturn to reference °
- °: simpleReturn to reference °

- °: flashes out Return to reference °

Act 4

SCENE 1. *Amalfi.

[Enter FERDINAND and BOSOLA.]

FERDINAND   How doth our sister duchess bear herself
In her imprisonment?

BOSOLA                               Nobly. I'll describe her.
She's sad as one long used to 't, and she seems Rather to welcome the end of misery
Than shun it; a behavior so noble
5   As gives a majesty to adversity:
You may discern the shape of loveliness
More perfect in her tears than in her smiles;
She will muse four hours together; and her silence,
Methinks, expresseth more than if she spake.

10   FERDINAND   Her melancholy seems to be fortified
With a strange disdain.

BOSOLA                               'Tis so; and this restraint,
Like English mastiffs that grow fierce with tying,
Makes her too passionately apprehend
Those pleasures she's kept from.

15   FERDINAND                               Curse upon her!
I will no longer study in the book
Of another's heart. Inform her what I told you.

[Exit.]

[Enter DUCHESS.]

BOSOLA   All comfort to your grace!

DUCHESS                               I will have none.
Pray thee, why dost thou wrap thy poisoned pills
In gold and sugar?

20   BOSOLA   Your elder brother, the Lord Ferdinand,
Is come to visit you, and sends you word,
'Cause once he rashly made a solemn vow
Never to see you more, he comes i' th' night,

25 And prays you gently neither torch nor taper
Shine in your chamber. He will kiss your hand
And reconcile himself, but for his vow
He dares not see you.
DUCHESS At his pleasure.
Take hence the lights: he's come.
[Enter FERDINAND.]
FERDINAND Where are you?
DUCHESS Here, sir.
30 FERDINAND This darkness suits you well.
DUCHESS I would ask your pardon.
FERDINAND You have it;
For I account it the honorabl'st revenge,
Where I may kill, to pardon. Where are your cubs?
DUCHESS Whom?
FERDINAND Call them your children;
35 For though our national law distinguish bastards
From true legitimate issue, compassionate nature
Makes them all equal.
DUCHESS Do you visit me for this?
You violate a sacrament o' th' church
Shall make you howl in hell for 't.
FERDINAND It had been well
40 Could you have lived thus always; for, indeed,
You were too much i' th' light<sup>1</sup>—but no more—
I come to seal my peace with you. Here's a hand [Gives her a dead man's hand.]
To which you have vowed much love; the ring upon
't
You gave.
DUCHESS I affectionately kiss it.
45 FERDINAND Pray, do, and bury the print of it in your heart.
I will leave this ring with you for a lovetoken,
And the hand as sure as the ring; and do not doubt

But you shall have the heart, too. When you need a friend,
50 Send it to him that owed<sup>o</sup> it; you shall see Whether he can aid you.
DUCHESS You are very cold;
I fear you are not well after your travel.
Ha! Lights! Oh, horrible!
FERDINAND Let her have lights enough.
[Exit.]
DUCHESS What witchcraft doth he practice, that he hath left
A dead man's hand here?
55 [Here is discovered, behind a traverse,<sup>2</sup> the artificial figures of Antonio and his children, appearing as if they were dead.]
BOSOLA Look you, here's the piece from which 'twas ta'en.
He doth present you this sad spectacle,
That, now you know directly they are dead,
Hereafter you may wisely cease to grieve
For that which cannot be recovered.
60 DUCHESS There is not between heaven and earth
one wish
I stay for after this: it wastes<sup>3</sup> me more
Than were 't my picture, fashioned out of wax,
Stuck with a magical needle, and then buried
In some foul dunghill; and yond's an excellent 65 property<sup>4</sup>
For a tyrant, which I would account mercy.
BOSOLA What's
that?
DUCHESS If they would bind me to that lifeless trunk
And let me freeze to death.
BOSOLA Come, you must live.

DUCHESS That's the greatest torture souls feel in hell,

In hell: that they must live, and cannot die.

70 Portia,<sup>5</sup> I'll new-kindle thy coals again,
And revive the rare and almost dead example
Of a loving wife.

BOSOLA Oh, fie! Despair? Remember
You are a Christian.

DUCHESS                      The church enjoins fasting:
I'll starve myself to death.

75      BOSOLA                                      Leave this vain sorrow.
Things being at the worst begin to mend: the bee
When he hath shot his sting into your hand, may then
Play with your eyelid.

80 DUCHESS Good comfortable fellow,
Persuade a wretch that's broke upon the wheel<sup>6</sup>
To have all his bones new set; entreat him live
To be executed again. Who must dispatch me?
I account this world a tedious theater,
For I do play a part in 't 'gainst my will.

BOSOLA Come, be of comfort; I will save your life.

DUCHESS

Indeed,
I have not leisure to tend so small a business.

85 BOSOLA Now, by my life, I pity you.

DUCHESS                                Thou art a fool,
then,

To waste thy pity on a thing so wretched
As cannot pity itself. I am full of daggers.
Puff, let me blow these vipers from me.

[Enter SERVANT.]

What are you?

90      SERVANT      One that wishes you long life.

DUCHESS I would thou wert hanged for the horrible curse
 Thou hast given me. I shall shortly grow one
 Of the miracles of pity. I'll go pray—
 No, I'll go curse.
 BOSOLA Oh, fie!
 DUCHESS I could curse the stars—
 BOSOLA Oh, fearful!
 95 DUCHESS And those three smiling seasons of the year
 Into a Russian winter,<sup>7</sup> nay, the world
 To its first chaos.
 BOSOLA Look you, the stars shine still.
 DUCHESS Oh, but you must Remember, my curse hath a great way to go.
 100 Plagues, that make lanes through largest families,
 Consume them!
 BOSOLA Fie, lady!
 DUCHESS Let them, like tyrants,
 Never be remembered but for the ill they have done;
 Let all the zealous prayers of mortified
 Churchmen forget them!
 BOSOLA Oh, uncharitable!
 105 DUCHESS Let Heaven a little while cease crowning martyrs
 To punish them!
 Go, howl them this, and say, I long to bleed:
 It is some mercy when men kill with speed.
 [Exeunt DUCHESS and SERVANT.]
 [Reenter FERDINAND.]
 110 FERDINAND Excellent, as I would wish; she's plagued in art:<sup>8</sup>
 These presentations are but framed in wax
 By the curious master in that quality,
 Vincentio Lauriola,<sup>8</sup> and she takes them

For true substantial bodies.

BOSOLA Why do you do this?

FERDINAND To bring her to despair.

115 BOSOLA 'Faith, end here,
And go no farther in your cruelty.
Send her a penitential garment to put on Next to her delicate skin, and furnish her
With beads and prayer books.

FERDINAND Damn her! That body of hers,
120 While that my blood ran pure in 't, was more worth
Than that which thou wouldst comfort, called a soul.
I will send her masques of common courtesans,
Have her meat<sup>o</sup> served up by bawds and ruffians,
And, 'cause she'll needs be mad, I am resolved
To remove forth the common hospital<sup>o</sup>
125 All the mad-folk, and place them near her lodging;
There let them practice together, sing and dance,
And act their gambols to the full o' th' moon:
If she can sleep the better for it, let her.
Your work is almost ended.

130 BOSOLA Must I see her again?

FERDINAND Yes.

BOSOLA Never.

FERDINAND You must.

BOSOLA Never in mine own shape;
That's forfeited by my intelligence<sup>o</sup>
And this last cruel lie. When you send me next,
The business shall be comfort.

FERDINAND Very likely.
135 Thy pity is nothing of kin to thee.<sup>9</sup> Antonio
Lurks about Milan: thou shalt shortly thither
To feed a fire as great as my revenge,
Which ne'er will slack till it have spent his fuel.

140

Intemperate agues<sup>1</sup> make physicians cruel.
[Exeunt.]

Endnotes

- Note 1: Punning on “light,” wanton. Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Curtain. Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Consumes, as by secret disease; witches were supposed to be able to “waste” their enemies by making wax images and tormenting them as indicated below. Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Appropriate act. Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Portia, the wife of Brutus, committed suicide by swallowing hot coals. Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Instrument of torture for stretching the body. Return to reference 6
- Note 7: A Russian winter would last all year long. Return to reference 7
- Note 8: The art of wax modeling was common enough, but the name of the artist seems to be imaginary. Return to reference 8
- Note 9: That is, pity doesn’t suit you very well. Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Fevers that cannot be controlled. Return to reference 1

Notes

- °: owned Return to reference °
- °: by a cunning device Return to reference °
- °: food (of any kind) Return to reference °
- °: asylum Return to reference °
- °: betrayal Return to reference °

SCENE 2

[Enter DUCHESS and CARIOLA.]

DUCHESS     What hideous noise was that?

CARIOLA
consort

Of madmen, lady, which your tyrant brother
Hath placed about your lodging. This tyranny,
I think, was never practiced till this hour.

5 DUCHESS Indeed, I thank him. Nothing but noise and folly

Can keep me in my right wits, whereas reason
And silence make me stark mad. Sit down;
Discourse to me some dismal tragedy.

CARIOLA Oh, 'twill increase your melancholy.

[illegible]

10 To hear of greater grief would lessen mine.
This is a prison?

CARLOTTA Yes, but you shall live
To shake this durance off.

DUCHESS                                      Thou art a fool:
The robin redbreast and the nightingale
Never live long in cages.

CARIOLA Pray, dry your eyes.
What think you of, madam?

15 DUCHESS Of nothing:
When I muse thus, I sleep.

CARIOLA Like a madman, with your eyes open?

DUCHESS Dost thou think we shall know one another in th' other world?

CARIOLA Yes, out of question.

[illegible]

20 But hold some two days' conference with the dead!
From them I should learn somewhat, I am sure,
I never shall know here. I'll tell thee a miracle;
I am not mad yet, to my cause of sorrow:
Th' heaven o'er my head seems made of molten
brass,

25 The earth of flaming sulphur, yet I am not mad.
I am acquainted with sad misery
As the tanned galley slave is with his oar;
Necessity makes me suffer constantly,
And custom makes it easy. Who do I look like now?
CARIOLA Like to your picture in the gallery,
30 A deal of life in show, but none in practice;
Or rather like some reverend monument
Whose ruins are even pitied.

DUCHESS Very proper.
And Fortune seems only to have her eyesight
To behold my tragedy.
35 How now! What noise is that?

[Enter SERVANT.]

SERVANT I am come to tell you
Your brother hath intended you some sport.
A great physician, when the pope was sick
Of a deep melancholy, presented him
40 With several sorts of madmen, which wild object
Being full of change and sport, forced him to laugh,
And so the imposthume<sup>o</sup> broke. The selfsame cure
The duke intends on you.

DUCHESS Let them come in.

SERVANT There's a mad lawyer; and a secular priest;<sup>1</sup>
45 A doctor that hath forfeited his wits
By jealousy; an astrologian
That in his works said such a day o' th' month
Should be the day of doom, and, failing of 't,

50 Ran mad; an English tailor crazed i' th' brain
With the study of new fashions; a gentleman-usher
Quite beside himself with care to keep in mind
The number of his lady's salutations
Or "How do you's" she employed him in each morning;
A farmer, too, an excellent knave in grain,
55 Mad 'cause he was hindered transportation:<sup>2</sup>
And let one broker that's mad loose to these,
You'd think the devil were among them.
DUCHESS Sit, Cariola. Let them loose when you please,
For I am chained to endure all your tyranny.
[Enter MADMEN.]
[Here by a MADMAN this song is sung to a dismal kind of music.]

60 Oh, let us howl some heavy note,
Some deadly dogged howl,
Sounding as from the threatening throat
Of beasts and fatal fowl!
As ravens, screech owls, bulls, and bears,
65 We'll bello and bawl our parts,
Till irksome noise have cloyed your ears
And corrosived your hearts.
At last, whenas our choir wants breath,
Our bodies being blest,
70 We'll sing, like swans, to welcome death,
And die in love and rest.

FIRST MADMAN Doomsday not come yet? I'll draw it nearer by a perspective,<sup>3</sup> or make a glass that shall set all the world on fire upon an instant. I cannot sleep; my pillow is stuffed with a litter of porcupines.

75 SECOND MADMAN Hell is a mere glasshouse, where the devils are continually blowing up women's souls on hollow irons, and the fire never goes out.

THIRD MADMAN I will lie with every woman in my parish
the tenth night;
I will tithe them over like haycocks.<sup>4</sup>

80 FOURTH MADMAN Shall my pothecary outgo me because I am a cuckold? I have found out his roguery; he makes alum of his wife's urine, and sells it to puritans that have sore throats with overstraining.<sup>5</sup>

FIRST MADMAN I have skill in heraldry.

SECOND MADMAN Hast?

85 FIRST MADMAN You do give for your crest a woodcock's<sup>6</sup> head with the brains picked out on 't; you are a very ancient gentleman.

THIRD MADMAN Greek is turned Turk: we are only to be saved by the Helvetian translation.<sup>7</sup>

FIRST MADMAN Come on, sir, I will lay the law to you.

SECOND MADMAN Oh, rather lay a corrosive: the law will eat to the bone.

90 THIRD MADMAN He that drinks but to satisfy nature is damned.

FOURTH MADMAN If I had my glass<sup>8</sup> here, I would show a sight should make all the women here call me mad doctor.

FIRST MADMAN What's he? A rope maker?

SECOND MADMAN No, no, no, a snuffling knave that, while he shows the tombs, will have his hand in a wench's placket.

95

THIRD MADMAN    Woe to the caroché<sup>9</sup> that brought home my wife from the masque at three o'clock in the morning! It had a large featherbed in it.

FOURTH MADMAN    I have pared the devil's nails forty times, roasted them
in raven's eggs, and cured agues with them.

100    THIRD MADMAN    Get me three hundred milchbats, to make possets<sup>1</sup> to procure sleep.

FOURTH MADMAN    All the college may throw their caps<sup>2</sup> at me: I have made a soap boiler costive;<sup>3</sup> it was my masterpiece.

[Here the dance, consisting of eight MADMEN, with music answerable thereunto; after which BOSOLA, like an old man, enters.]

DUCHESS    Is he mad too?

SERVANT    Pray, question him. I'll leave
you.

[Exeunt SERVANT and MADMEN.]

BOSOLA    I am come to make thy tomb.

105    DUCHESS    Ha! My tomb?
Thou speak'st as if I lay upon my deathbed,
Gasping for breath. Dost thou perceive me sick?

BOSOLA    Yes, and the more dangerously, since thy sickness is insensible.<sup>4</sup>

DUCHESS    Thou art not mad, sure. Dost know me?

110    BOSOLA    Yes.

DUCHESS    Who am I?

BOSOLA    Thou art a box of worm-seed, at best but a salvatory of green mummy. What's this flesh? A little crudded<sup>5</sup> milk, fantastical puff paste.

Our bodies are weaker than those paper prisons boys use to keep flies in,

115 more contemptible, since ours is to preserve earthworms. Didst thou ever see a lark in a cage? Such is the soul in the body:
this world is like her little turf of grass, and the heaven o'er our heads,
like her looking glass,
only gives us a miserable knowledge of the small compass of our prison.
DUCHESS Am not I thy duchess?

120 BOSOLA Thou art some great woman, sure, for riot<sup>6</sup> begins to sit on thy forehead, clad in gray hairs, twenty years sooner than on a merry milkmaid's.
Thou sleep'st worse than if a mouse should be forced to take up her lodging in a cat's ear: a little infant that breeds its teeth,<sup>7</sup> should it lie with thee, would cry out, as if thou wert the more unquiet bedfellow.
DUCHESS I am Duchess of Malfi still.

125 BOSOLA That makes thy sleep so broken:
Glories, like glowworms, afar off shine bright,
But, looked to near, have neither heat nor light.
DUCHESS Thou art very plain.

130 BOSOLA My trade is to flatter the dead, not the living; I am a tomb-maker.
DUCHESS And thou com'st to make my tomb?
BOSOLA Yes.
DUCHESS Let me be a little merry. Of what stuff wilt thou make it?
BOSOLA Nay, resolve<sup>8</sup> me first, of what fashion?
DUCHESS Why, do we grow fantastical in our deathbed?
135 Do we affect fashion in the grave?

BOSOLA Most ambitiously. Princes' images on their tombs do not lie, as they were wont, seeming to pray up to heaven, but with their hands
under their cheeks, as if they died of the toothache.
They are not carved with their eyes fixed upon the stars, but as their 140 minds were wholly bent upon the world, the selfsame way they seem to turn their faces.

DUCHESS Let me know fully therefore the effect
Of this thy dismal preparation,
This talk fit for a charnel.<sup>8</sup>

BOSOLA Now I shall.
[Enter EXECUTIONERS, with a coffin, cords, and a bell.]

145 Here is a present from your princely brothers;
And may it arrive welcome, for it brings
Last benefit, last sorrow.

DUCHESS Let me see it:
I have so much obedience in my blood,
I wish it in their veins to do them good.

150 BOSOLA This is your last presence chamber.<sup>9</sup>

CARIOLA O my sweet lady!

DUCHESS Peace, it affrights not me.

BOSOLA I am the common bellman,
That usually<sup>o</sup> is sent to condemned persons
The night before they suffer.

DUCHESS Even now thou said'st
Thou wast a tomb-maker.

155 BOSOLA 'Twas to bring you
By degrees to mortification.<sup>1</sup> Listen. [rings the bell]

Hark, now everything is still
The screech owl and the whistler<sup>2</sup> shrill

160 Call upon our dame aloud,
And bid her quickly don her shroud!
Much you had of land and rent:
Your length in clay's now competent.◊
A long war disturbed your mind:
Here your perfect peace is signed.
165 Of what is 't fools make such vain keeping?
Sin their conception, their birth weeping,
Their life a general mist of error,
Their death a hideous storm of terror.
Strew your hair with powders sweet,
170 Don clean linen, bathe your feet,
And (the foul fiend more to check)
A crucifix let bless your neck:
'Tis now full tide 'tween night and day;
End your groan, and come away.

175 CARIOLA Hence, villains, tyrants, murderers! Alas!
What will you do with my lady? Call for help.

DUCHESS To whom? To our next neighbors? They are mad-folks.

BOSOLA Remove that noise.

DUCHESS Farewell, Cariola.

In my last will I have not much to give:
A many hungry guests have fed upon me;
180 Thine will be a poor reversion.◊

CARIOLA I will die with her.

DUCHESS I pray thee, look thou giv'st my little boy
Some syrup for his cold, and let the girl Say her prayers ere she sleep. [CARIOLA is forced out by the EXECUTIONERS.]

Now what you please.

What death?

185 BOSOLA Strangling: here are your executioners.

DUCHESS I forgive them:
The apoplexy, catarrh, or cough o' th' lungs

Would do as much as they do.

BOSOLA Doth not death fright you?

DUCHESS Who would be afraid on 't,

190 Knowing to meet such excellent company
In th' other world?

BOSOLA Yet, methinks,
The manner of your death should much afflict you:
This cord should terrify you.

DUCHESS Not a whit.

What would it pleasure me to have my throat cut
With diamonds? Or to be smothered

195 With cassia? Or to be shot to death with pearls?

I know death hath ten thousand several doors

For men to take their exits, and 'tis found

They go on such strange geometrical hinges,

200 You may open them both ways.—Any way, for heaven sake,

So I were out of your whispering. Tell my brothers

That I perceive death, now I am well awake,

Best gift is they can give or I can take.

I would fain put off my last woman's fault,

I'd not be tedious to you.

205 EXECUTIONER We are ready.

DUCHESS Dispose my breath how please you, but my body

Bestow upon my women, will you?

EXECUTIONER Yes.

DUCHESS Pull, and pull strongly, for your able strength

Must pull down heaven upon me—

210 Yet stay; heaven gates are not so high arched

As princes' palaces; they that enter there

Must go upon their knees. [kneels] Come, violent death.

Serve for mandragora<sup>3</sup> to make me sleep!
 Go tell my brothers, when I am laid out,
 They then may feed in quiet. [They 215 strangle her.]
 BOSOLA Where's the waiting woman?
 Fetch her. Some other strangle the children.
 [Exeunt EXECUTIONERS, some of whom return with CARIOLA.]
 Look you, there sleeps your mistress.
 CARIOLA Oh, you are
 damned
 Perpetually for this! My turn is next.
 Is 't not so ordered?
 BOSOLA Yes, and I am glad 220 You are so well prepared for 't.
 CARIOLA You are deceived,
 sir,
 I am not prepared for 't, I will not die;
 I will first come to my answer,<sup>o</sup> and know
 How I have offended.
 BOSOLA Come, dispatch her.
 You kept her counsel; now you shall keep ours.
 225 CARIOLA I will not die, I must not; I am contracted
 To a young gentleman.
 EXECUTIONER Here's your wedding ring.
 [showing the noose] CARIOLA Let me but speak with the duke; I'll discover<sup>o</sup>
 Treason to his person.
 BOSOLA Delays! Throttle her.
 EXECUTIONER She bites and scratches.
 CARIOLA If you kill me
 230 now,
 I am damned; I have not been at confession
 This two years.

BOSOLA [to EXECUTIONERS] When!
CARIOLA I am quick with child.
BOSOLA

Why, then,
Your credit's saved.<sup>4</sup> [They strangle
CARIOLA.]

Bear her into th' next room;
Let this lie still. [Exeunt the EXECUTIONERS with the body of CARIOLA.]
[Enter FERDINAND.]

FERDINAND Is she dead?

BOSOLA She is what You'd have her. But here begin your pity. [Shows
235 the children strangled.]

Alas, how have these offended?

FERDINAND The death
Of young wolves is never to be pitied.

BOSOLA Fix
Your eye here.

FERDINAND Constantly.

BOSOLA Do you not weep?
Other sins only speak; murder shrieks out:
The element of water moistens the earth,
240 But blood flies upwards and bedews the heavens.

FERDINAND Cover her face; mine eyes dazzle: she died young.

BOSOLA I think not so; her infelicity<sup>o</sup>
Seemed to have years too many.

FERDINAND She and I were twins;
And should I die this instant, I had lived
245 Her time to a minute.

BOSOLA It seems she was born first:

You have bloodily approved<sup>o</sup> the ancient truth,
That kindred commonly do worse agree
Than remote strangers.

250 FERDINAND Let me see her face again.
Why didst not thou pity her? What an excellent Honest man mightst thou have been,
If thou hadst borne her to some sanctuary!
Or, bold in a good cause, opposed thyself,
With thy advanced sword above thy head,
Between her innocence and my revenge!
255 I bade thee, when I was distracted of my wits,
Go kill my dearest friend, and thou hast done 't.
For let me but examine well the cause:
What was the meanness of her match to me?
Only I must confess I had a hope,
260 Had she continued widow, to have gained
An infinite mass of treasure by her death:
And that was the main cause, her marriage,
That drew a stream of gall quite through my heart.
For thee, as we observe in tragedies
265 That a good actor many times is cursed
For playing a villain's part, I hate thee for 't,
And, for my sake, say thou hast done much ill well.
BOSOLA Let me quicken your memory, for I perceive
You are falling into ingratitude: I challenge
270 The reward due to my service.

FERDINAND I'll tell thee
What I'll give thee.

BOSOLA Do.

FERDINAND I'll give thee a pardon
For this murder.

BOSOLA Ha!

FERDINAND Yes, and 'tis
The largest bounty I can study to do thee.
By what authority didst thou execute
275 This bloody sentence?

BOSOLA By yours.
 FERDINAND Mine! Was I her judge?
 Did any ceremonial form of law
 Doom her to not-being? Did a complete<sup>o</sup> jury Deliver her conviction up i' th' court?
 280 Where shalt thou find this judgment registered,
 Unless in hell? See, like a bloody fool,
 Thou'st forfeited thy life, and thou shalt die for 't.
 BOSOLA The office of justice is perverted quite
 When one thief hangs another. Who shall dare
 To reveal this?
 285 FERDINAND Oh, I'll tell thee;
 The wolf shall find her grave, and scrape it up,
 Not to devour the corpse, but to discover
 The horrid murder.
 BOSOLA You, not I, shall quake for 't.
 FERDINAND Leave me.
 BOSOLA I will first receive my pension.
 FERDINAND You are a villain.
 290 BOSOLA When your ingratitude
 Is judge, I am so.
 FERDINAND Oh, horror!
 That not the fear of Him which binds the devils
 Can prescribe man obedience!
 Never look upon me more.
 BOSOLA Why, fare thee well.
 295 Your brother and your self are worthy men:
 You have a pair of hearts are rotten graves,
 Rotten, and rotting others; and your vengeance,
 Like two chained bullets, still<sup>o</sup> goes arm in arm.
 You may be brothers, for treason, like the plague,
 300 Doth take much in a blood.<sup>5</sup> I stand like one
 That long hath ta'en a sweet and golden dream.
 I am angry with myself, now that I wake.

BOSOLA Oh, she's gone again! There the cords of life broke.
 Oh, sacred innocence, that sweetly sleeps
 On turtles<sup>6</sup> feathers, whilst a guilty conscience
 Is a black register wherein is writ
 All our good deeds and bad, a perspective<sup>o</sup>
 335 That shows us hell! That we cannot be suffered<sup>o</sup>
 To do good when we have a mind to it!
 This is manly sorrow:
 These tears, I am very certain, never grew
 In my mother's milk. My estate is sunk 340 Below the degree of fear. Where were These penitent fountains while she was living?
 Oh, they were frozen up! Here is a sight
 As direful to my soul as is the sword
 Unto a wretch hath slain his father. Come,
 345 I'll bear thee hence,
 And execute thy last will; that's deliver
 Thy body to the reverend dispose<sup>o</sup>
 Of some good women: that the cruel tyrant
 Shall not deny me. Then I'll post to Milan, 350 Where somewhat I will speedily enact Worth my dejection. [Exit with the body.]

Endnotes

- Note 1: One serving a parish, not a member of an order. Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Forbidden to export. Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Telescope. Return to reference 3
- Note 4: As a priest takes his tenth ("tithe") of his parishioners' crops. "Haycocks": haystacks. Return to reference 4
- Note 5: In long prayers and sermons. Return to reference 5
- Note 6: A proverbially stupid bird. Return to reference 6

- Note 7: The Geneva Bible, a jibe at English Puritans who used that translation.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Looking glass.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Carriage. "Placket": slit in a skirt.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Sedative drafts, here made of bat's milk.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Despair of emulating.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Constipated.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Imperceptible.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Curdled. "Worm-seed" is a matter whose ultimate end is the generation of worms. "A salvatory of green mummy": the substance of mummified bodies was considered medicinal. The living body is a box ("salvatory") of such medicine, only not yet ready for use.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Debauchery.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: A teething infant.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: A storage place for bones reserved from old graves in the digging of new ones.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: A noble person's reception room.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Repentance, also death and decomposition.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: A bird premonitory of death.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: The word is used loosely for a stupefying drug.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Your reputation will now be safe.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Treason and plague run in certain families.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Turtledoves, emblems of a loving couple.Return to reference 6

Notes

- °: bandReturn to reference °
- °: imprisonmentReturn to reference °
- °: abscessReturn to reference °

- °: doorkeeperReturn to reference °
- °: cryReturn to reference °
- °: informReturn to reference °
- °: by customReturn to reference °
- °: sufficientReturn to reference °
- °: inheritanceReturn to reference °
- °: cinnamonReturn to reference °
- °: gladlyReturn to reference °
- °: judicial hearingReturn to reference °
- °: revealReturn to reference °
- °: unhappinessReturn to reference °
- °: given proof ofReturn to reference °
- °: qualifiedReturn to reference °
- °: continuallyReturn to reference °
- °: livingReturn to reference °
- °: restorativeReturn to reference °
- °: reconciliationReturn to reference °
- °: telescopeReturn to reference °
- °: allowedReturn to reference °
- °: dispositionReturn to reference °

Act 5

SCENE 1. *A public place in Milan.

[Enter ANTONIO and DELIO.]

ANTONIO    What think you of my hope of reconcilement
To the Aragonian brethren?

DELIO I misdoubt it;
For though they have sent their letters of safe conduct

For your repair<sup>o</sup> to Milan, they appear
But nets to entrap you. The Marquis of Pescara, 5 Under whom you hold certain land in cheat,<sup>1</sup>
Much 'gainst his noble nature hath been moved
To seize those lands, and some of his dependents
Are at this instant making it their suit
10 To be invested in your revenues.<sup>2</sup>
I cannot think they mean well to your life
That do deprive you of your means of life,
Your living.

ANTONIO      You are still an heretic<sup>o</sup>
To any safety I can shape myself.

15 DELIO Here comes the marquis. I will make myself
Petitioner for some part of your land,
To know whither it is flying.

ANTONIO I pray do.

[ Withdraws. ]

[Enter PESCARA.]

DELIO Sir, I have a suit to you.

PESCARA To me?

20 DELIO    An easy one.
There is the citadel of Saint Bennet,
With some demesnes,<sup>3</sup> of late in the possession

Of Antonio Bologna; please you bestow them on me.

PESCARA You are my friend, but this is such a suit,
Nor fit for me to give, nor you to take.

DELIO No, sir?

25 PESCARA I will give you ample reason for 't
Soon in private.—Here's the cardinal's mistress.

[Enter JULIA.]

JULIA My lord, I am grown your poor petitioner,
And should be an ill beggar, had I not
A great man's letter here, the cardinal's,
To court you in my favor. [Gives a letter.]

30 PESCARA He entreats for you
The citadel of Saint Bennet, that belonged
To the banished Bologna.

JULIA Yes.

PESCARA I could not Have thought of a friend I could rather pleasure with
it;
'Tis yours.

35 JULIA Sir, I thank you; and he shall know
How doubly I am engaged both in your gift,
And speediness of giving, which makes your grant
The greater. [Exit.]

ANTONIO [aside] How they fortify themselves
With my ruin!

DELIO Sir, I am little bound to you.

PESCARA Why?

DELIO Because you denied this suit to me, and gave
't
To such a creature.

40 PESCARA Do you know what it was?
It was Antonio's land, not forfeited
By course of law, but ravished from his throat
By the cardinal's entreaty. It were not fit
I should bestow so main<sup>o</sup> a piece of wrong

45        Upon my friend; 'tis a gratification
Only due to a strumpet, for it is injustice.
Shall I sprinkle the pure blood of innocents
To make those followers I call my friends
Look ruddier<sup>4</sup> upon me? I am glad 50        This land, ta'en from the owner by such wrong,
Returns again unto so foul an use
As salary for his lust. Learn, good Delio,
To ask noble things of me, and you shall find
I'll be a noble giver.
DELIO                                You instruct me well.
ANTONIO [aside]        Why, here's a man now would 55        fright impudence
From sauciest beggars.
PESCARA                                Prince Ferdinand's come to Milan,
Sick, as they give out, of an apoplexy,<sup>o</sup>
But some say 'tis a frenzy.<sup>o</sup> I am going
To visit him.
[Exit.]
ANTONIO                                'Tis a noble old fellow.
DELIO        What course do you mean to take, Antonio?
60        ANTONIO        This night I mean to venture all my fortune,
Which is no more than a poor lingering life,
To the cardinal's worst of malice. I have got Private access to his chamber, and intend
To visit him about the mid of night,
65        As once his brother did our noble duchess.
It may be that the sudden apprehension
Of danger—for I'll go in mine own shape—
When he shall see it fraught with love and duty,
May draw the poison out of him, and work
70        A friendly reconciliation. If it fail,
Yet it shall rid me of this infamous calling,

For better fall once than be ever falling.
DELIO I'll second you in all danger, and, howe'er,
My life keeps rank with yours.
75 ANTONIO You are still my loved and best friend.
[Exeunt.]

Endnotes

- Note 1: Escheat, that is, subject to forfeiture under certain conditions.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: That is, to be given your rents.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Associated estates. "Saint Bennet": St. Benedict.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: More agreeably, literally with a healthier (ruddy) complexion.Return to reference 4

Notes

- °: resortReturn to reference °
- °: skepticReturn to reference °
- °: egregiousReturn to reference °
- °: strokeReturn to reference °
- °: insanityReturn to reference °

SCENE 2. *The scene continues.

[Enter PESCARA and DOCTOR.]

PESCARA Now, doctor, may I visit your patient?

DOCTOR If 't please your lordship: but he's instantly<sup>o</sup>

To take the air here in the gallery

By my direction.

PESCARA Pray thee, what's his disease?

5 DOCTOR A very pestilent disease, my lord,
They call lycanthropia.

PESCARA What's that?

I need a dictionary to 't.

DOCTOR I'll tell you.

In those that are possessed with 't there o'erflows
Such melancholy humor, they imagine
10 Themselves to be transformèd into wolves;
Steal forth to churchyards in the dead of night,
And dig dead bodies up: as two nights since
One met the duke 'bout midnight in a lane
Behind Saint Mark's Church, with the leg of a man
Upon his shoulder; and he howled fearfully;
15 Said he was a wolf, only the difference
Was, a wolf's skin was hairy on the outside,
His on the inside; bade them take their swords, Rip up his flesh, and try. Straight<sup>o</sup> I was sent for,
And, having ministered to him, found his grace
20 Very well recovered.

PESCARA I'm glad on 't.

DOCTOR Yet not without some fear
Of a relapse. If he grow to his fit again,
I'll go a nearer way to work with him
25 Than ever Paracelsus<sup>1</sup> dreamed of: if They'll give me leave, I'll buffet his madness

Out of him. Stand aside; he comes.

[Enter FERDINAND, MALATESTA, CARDINAL, and BOSOLA
apart.]

FERDINAND Leave me.

MALATESTA Why doth your lordship love this solitariness?

FERDINAND Eagles commonly fly alone: they are crows, daws, and starlings

30 that flock together. Look, what's that follows me?

MALATESTA Nothing, my lord.

FERDINAND Yes.

MALATESTA 'Tis your shadow.

FERDINAND Stay it; let it not haunt me.

35 MALATESTA Impossible, if you move, and the sun shine.

FERDINAND I will throttle it. [Throws himself on the ground.]

MALATESTA O, my lord, you are angry with nothing.

FERDINAND You are a fool: how is 't possible I should catch my shadow, unless I fall upon 't? When I go to hell, I mean to carry a bribe; for, look

40 you, good gifts evermore make way for the worst persons.

PESCARA Rise, good my lord.

FERDINAND I am studying the art of patience.

PESCARA 'Tis a noble virtue.

FERDINAND To drive six snails before me from this town to Moscow; neither

45 use goad nor whip to them, but let them take their own time—the

patient'st man i' th' world match me for an experiment—and I'll crawl after like a sheep-biter.<sup>2</sup>

CARDINAL Force him up.
raise him.

[They

FERDINAND Use me well, you were best. What I have done, I have done:
I'll confess nothing.

50 DOCTOR Now let me come to him. Are you mad, my lord? Are you out of your princely wits?

FERDINAND What's he?

PESCARA Your doctor.

55 FERDINAND Let me have his beard sawed off, and his eyebrows filed more civil.

DOCTOR I must do mad tricks with him, for that's the only way on 't.<sup>3</sup> I have brought your grace a salamander's skin to keep you from sunburning.

FERDINAND I have cruel sore eyes.

60 DOCTOR The white of a cockatrix's<sup>4</sup> egg is present remedy.

FERDINAND Let it be a new-laid one, you were best.
Hide me from him:
physicians are like kings—they brook no contradiction.

DOCTOR Now he begins to fear me: now let me alone
with him.

CARDINAL How now? Put off your gown?

65 DOCTOR Let me have some forty urinals filled with rosewater: he and I'll go pelt one another with them. Now he begins to fear me. Can you fetch a frisk, sir?<sup>5</sup> Let him go, let him go, upon my peril: I find by his eye he stands in awe of me; I'll make him as tame as a dormouse.

FERDINAND Can you fetch your frisks, sir? I will stamp him into a cullis,<sup>6</sup> 70 flay off his skin, to cover one of the anatomies<sup>7</sup> this rogue hath set i' th' cold yonder in Barber-Surgeons' Hall. Hence, hence!
You are all of you like beasts for sacrifice: there's nothing left of you but tongue and belly,
flattery and lechery.
[Exit.]
PESCARA Doctor, he did not fear you thoroughly.
DOCTOR
True;
I was somewhat too forward.
BOSOLA [aside] Mercy upon me,
75 What a fatal judgment hath fall'n upon this Ferdinand!
PESCARA Knows your grace what accident hath brought
Unto the prince this strange distraction?
CARDINAL [aside] I must feign somewhat.—Thus they say it grew:
80 You have heard it rumored, for these many years
None of our family dies but there is seen
The shape of an old woman, which is given
By tradition to us to have been murdered
By her nephews for her riches. Such a figure
One night, as the prince sat up late at 's book, 85 Appeared to him; when, crying out for help,
The gentlemen of 's chamber found his grace
All on a cold sweat, altered much in face
And language; since which apparition,
He hath grown worse and worse, and I much fear
90 He cannot live.
BOSOLA Sir, I would speak with you.

PESCARA We'll leave your grace,
Wishing to the sick prince, our noble lord,
All health of mind and body.

CARDINAL You are most welcome.

[Exeunt PESCARA, MALATESTA, and DOCTOR.]

95 Are you come? So. [aside] This fellow must not know
By any means I had intelligence<sup>o</sup>
In our duchess' death; for, though I counseled it,
The full of all th' engagement seemed to grow
From Ferdinand.—Now, sir, how fares our sister?
I do not think but sorrow makes her look
100 Like to an oft-dyed garment: she shall now
Taste comfort from me. Why do you look so wildly?
Oh, the fortune of your master here the prince
Dejects you, but be you of happy comfort:
If you'll do one thing for me I'll entreat,
105 Though he had a cold tombstone o'er his bones,
I'll make you what you would be.

BOSOLA Anything;
Give it me in a breath, and let me fly to 't:
They that think long, small expedition win,
For musing much o' th' end cannot begin.

110 [Enter JULIA.]

JULIA Sir, will you come in to supper?

CARDINAL I am busy;
Leave me.

JULIA [aside] What an excellent shape hath that fellow! [Exit.]

CARDINAL 'Tis thus. Antonio lurks here in Milan:
Inquire him out, and kill him. While he lives,
Our sister cannot marry, and I have thought 115 Of an excellent match for her. Do this, and style me Thy advancement.<sup>8</sup>

BOSOLA But by what means shall I find him out?

CARDINAL    There is a gentleman called Delio
Here in the camp, that hath been long approved
His loyal friend. Set eye upon that fellow;
120 Follow him to Mass; maybe Antonio,
Although he do account religion
But a school-name, o for fashion of the world
May accompany him; or else go inquire out
Delio's confessor, and see if you can bribe 125 Him to reveal it. There are a thousand ways
A man might find to trace him; as to know
What fellows haunt the Jews for taking up
Great sums of money, for sure he's in want;
Or else to go to th' picture-makers, and learn 130 Who bought her picture lately. Some of these Haply may take.

BOSOLA                                Well, I'll not freeze i' th' business: o
I would see that wretched thing, Antonio,
Above all sights i' th' world.

CARDINAL                                Do, and be happy.

[Exit.]

BOSOLA    This fellow doth breed basilisks in 's eyes, 135 He's nothing else but murder; yet he seems
Not to have notice of the duchess' death.
'Tis his cunning: I must follow his example;
There cannot be a surer way to trace
Than that of an old fox.

[Reenter JULIA, with a pistol.]

JULIA                                        So, sir, you are well met.

140 BOSOLA    How now?

JULIA                                        Nay, the doors are fast enough.
Now, sir, I will make you confess your treachery.

BOSOLA    Treachery?

JULIA                                        Yes, confess to me
Which of my women 'twas, you hired to put Love-powder into my drink?

BOSOLA                                        Love powder?

145 JULIA Yes, when I was at Malfi.
 Why should I fall in love with such a face else?<sup>o</sup>
 I have already suffered for thee so much pain,
 The only remedy to do me good
 Is to kill my longing.

150 BOSOLA Sure, your pistol holds
 Nothing but perfumes or kissing-comfits.<sup>9</sup>
 Excellent lady! You have a pretty way on 't
 To discover<sup>o</sup> your longing. Come, come, I'll disarm
 you,
 And arm you thus:<sup>1</sup> yet this is wondrous strange.

155 JULIA Compare thy form and my eyes together, you'll find
 My love no such great miracle. Now you'll say
 I am wanton: this nice<sup>o</sup> modesty in ladies
 Is but a troublesome familiar<sup>2</sup> that haunts them.

BOSOLA Know you me, I am a blunt soldier.

JULIA The better:
 160 Sure, there wants<sup>o</sup> fire where there are no lively sparks
 Of roughness.

BOSOLA And I want compliment.<sup>3</sup>

JULIA Why,
 ignorance
 In courtship cannot make you do amiss,
 If you have a heart to do well.

BOSOLA You are very fair.

JULIA Nay, if you lay beauty to my charge,
 I must plead unguilty.

165 BOSOLA Your bright eyes
 Carry a quiver of darts in them, sharper
 Than sunbeams.

JULIA You will mar me with commendation,

Put yourself to the charge of courting me,
 Whereas now I woo you.
 BOSOLA [aside] I have it, I will work upon this 170 creature.—
 Let us grow most amorously familiar.
 If the great cardinal now should see me thus,
 Would he not count me a villain?
 JULIA No, he might count me a wanton,
 Not lay a scruple of offense on you;
 175 For if I see and steal a diamond,
 The fault is not i' th' stone, but in me the thief
 That purloins it. I am sudden with you.
 We that are great women of pleasure, use to cut off
 These uncertain wishes and unquiet longings,
 180 And in an instant join the sweet delight
 And the pretty excuse together. Had you been i' th' street,
 Under my chamber window, even there
 I should have courted you.
 BOSOLA Oh, you are an excellent
 lady!
 JULIA Bid me do somewhat for you presently<sup>o</sup>
 185 To express I love you.
 BOSOLA I will, and if you love me,
 Fail not to effect it.
 The cardinal is grown wondrous melancholy;
 Demand the cause, let him not put you off
 With feigned excuse; discover the main ground on 't.
 190 JULIA Why would you know this?
 BOSOLA I have depended on him,
 And I hear he is fallen in some disgrace
 With the emperor: if he be, like the mice
 That forsake falling houses, I would shift
 To other dependence.
 195 JULIA You shall not need follow the wars;

I'll be your maintenance.
 BOSOLA And I your loyal servant;
 But I cannot leave my calling.
 JULIA Not leave
 An ungrateful general for the love of a sweet lady?
 You are like some cannot sleep in featherbeds,
 200 But must have blocks for their pillows.
 BOSOLA Will you do
 this?
 JULIA Cunningly.
 BOSOLA Tomorrow I'll expect th' intelligence.
 JULIA Tomorrow? Get you into my cabinet,<sup>o</sup>
 You shall have it with you. Do not delay me,
 No more than I do you. I am like one 205 That is condemned: I have my pardon promised,
 But I would see it sealed. Go, get you in;
 You shall see me wind my tongue about his heart
 Like a skein of silk. [Exit
 BOSOLA.]
 [Reenter CARDINAL.]
 CARDINAL Where are you?
 [Enter SERVANTS.]
 SERVANTS Here.
 CARDINAL Let none, upon your lives,
 210 Have conference with the Prince Ferdinand,
 Unless I know it. [aside] In this distraction
 He may reveal the murder. [Exeunt
 SERVANTS.]
 Yond's my lingering consumption:
 I am weary of her, and by any means 215 Would be quit of.
 JULIA How now, my lord?
 What ails you?
 CARDINAL Nothing.
 JULIA Oh, you are much altered:

Come, I must be your secretary,<sup>o</sup> and remove
 This lead from off your bosom.<sup>4</sup> What's the matter?
 CARDINAL I may not tell you.
 220 JULIA Are you so far in love with sorrow
 You cannot part with part of it? Or think you
 I cannot love your grace when you are sad
 As well as merry? Or do you suspect
 225 I, that have been a secret to your heart
 These many winters, cannot be the same
 Unto your tongue?
 CARDINAL Satisfy thy longing—
 The only way to make thee keep my counsel
 Is not to tell thee.
 230 JULIA Tell your echo this,
 Or flatterers, that like echoes still report
 What they hear though most imperfect, and not me;
 For if that you be true unto yourself,
 I'll know.
 CARDINAL Will you rack<sup>o</sup> me?
 JULIA No, judgment shall
 Draw it from you: it is an equal fault,
 To tell one's secrets unto all or none.
 235 CARDINAL The first argues folly.
 JULIA But the last, tyranny.
 CARDINAL Very well. Why, imagine I have committed
 Some secret deed which I desire the world
 May never hear of.
 JULIA Therefore may not I know it?
 240 You have concealed for me as great a sin
 As adultery. Sir, never was occasion
 For perfect trial of my constancy
 Till now: sir, I beseech you—
 CARDINAL You'll repent it.
 JULIA Never.
 245 CARDINAL It hurries thee to ruin: I'll not tell thee.

Be well advised, and think what danger 'tis
To receive a prince's secrets: they that do,
Had need have their breasts hooped with adamant<sup>o</sup>
To contain them. I pray thee, yet be satisfied;
Examine thine own frailty; 'tis more easy
250 To tie knots than unloose them: 'tis a secret
That, like a lingering poison, may chance lie
Spread in thy veins, and kill thee seven year hence.

JULIA Now you dally with me.

CARDINAL No more; thou shalt know it.

255 By my appointment the great Duchess of Malfi
And two of her young children, four nights since,
Were strangled.

JULIA O Heaven! Sir, what have you
done?

CARDINAL How now? How settles this? Think you your bosom
Will be a grave dark and obscure enough
For such a secret?

260 JULIA You have undone yourself, sir.

CARDINAL Why?

JULIA It lies not in me to conceal it.

CARDINAL No?

Come, I will swear you to 't upon this book.

JULIA Most religiously.

CARDINAL Kiss it. [She kisses the book.]

Now you shall
Never utter it; thy curiosity
265 Hath undone thee: thou'rt poisoned with that book.
Because I knew thou couldst not keep my counsel,
I have bound thee to 't by death.

[Reenter BOSOLA.]

BOSOLA
Hold!

For pity sake,

A fortune attends thee.

BOSOLA Shall I go sue to Fortune any longer?
'Tis the fool's pilgrimage.

290 CARDINAL I have honors in store for
thee.

BOSOLA There are a many ways that conduct to seeming
Honor, and some of them very dirty ones.

CARDINAL Throw to the devil

Thy melancholy; the fire burns well,
What need we keep a stirring of 't, and make
A greater smother? Thou wilt kill Antonio?

295 BOSOLA Yes.

CARDINAL Take up that body.

BOSOLA I think I shall
Shortly grow the common bier for churchyards!

CARDINAL I will allow thee some dozen of attendants
To aid thee in the murder.

300 BOSOLA Oh, by no means. Physicians that apply horse leeches to any rank swelling use to cut off their tails, that the blood may run through them the faster. Let me have no train<sup>6</sup> when I go to shed blood, lest it make me have a greater when I ride to the gallows.<sup>7</sup>

CARDINAL Come to me after midnight, to help to remove that body to her own lodging. I'll give out she died of the plague; 305 'twill breed the less inquiry after her death.

BOSOLA Where's Castruccio her husband?

CARDINAL He's rode to Naples to take possession of Antonio's citadel.

BOSOLA Believe me, you have done a very happy turn.

310 CARDINAL Fail not to come. There is the master key of our lodgings, and by that you may conceive what trust I plant in you.

BOSOLA You shall find me ready. [Exit CARDINAL.]

315 Oh poor Antonio, though nothing be so needful To thy estate as pity, yet I find Nothing so dangerous. I must look to my footing; In such slippery ice-pavements men had need To be frost-nailed well;<sup>8</sup> they may break their necks else;

320 The precedent's here afore me. How this man Bears up in blood! Seems fearless! Why, 'tis well: Security some men call the suburbs of hell, Only a dead<sup>o</sup> wall between. Well, good Antonio, I'll seek thee out, and all my care shall be To put thee into safety from the reach Of these most cruel biters that have got Some of thy blood already. It may be,

325 I'll join with thee in a most just revenge: The weakest arm is strong enough that strikes With the sword of justice. Still methinks the duchess Haunts me. There, there, 'tis nothing but my melancholy.

330 O Penitence, let me truly taste thy cup, That throws men down only to raise them up! [Exit.]

Endnotes

- Note 1: The great Swiss alchemist, famous for his cures by sympathetic magic. Return to reference 1
- Note 2: A sheepdog. Return to reference 2

- Note 3: That is, to cure him.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: A fabulous, and deadly poisonous, serpent, supposed to be hatched of a cock's egg.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Cut a caper, dance a jig.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Broth.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Anatomical skeletons hung up in the surgeon's college, which Ferdinand proposes to cover with the doctor's flayed skin.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Call me your means of promotion.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Candies to sweeten the breath.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Disarm (by taking away her pistol); arm (by embracing her).Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Attendant spirit or demon.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: I don't have the gift of flattery.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Secretaries opened letters addressed to their masters by removing the heavy lead seals.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Plaster was often painted to look like marble.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Followers.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Criminals, carted through the streets to be hanged at Tyburn, were followed by crowds.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: To wear hobnailed boots.Return to reference 8

Notes

- °: very shortlyReturn to reference °
- °: immediatelyReturn to reference °
- °: was accessoryReturn to reference °
- °: an idle phraseReturn to reference °
- °: delayReturn to reference °
- °: otherwiseReturn to reference °
- °: revealReturn to reference °
- °: fastidiousReturn to reference °
- °: lacksReturn to reference °
- °: right awayReturn to reference °

- °: inner chamberReturn to reference °
- °: confidanteReturn to reference °
- °: tortureReturn to reference °
- °: the hardest metalReturn to reference °
- °: bareReturn to reference °

SCENE 3. *A fortification at Milan.

[Enter ANTONIO and DELIO. Echo from the DUCHESS' grave.]

DELIO    Yond's the cardinal's window. This fortification

5 Grew from the ruins of an ancient abbey;
And to yond side o' th' river lies a wall,
Piece of a cloister, which in my opinion
Gives the best echo that you ever heard,
So hollow and so dismal, and withal<sup>o</sup>
So plain in the distinction of our words,
That many have supposed it is a spirit
That answers.

ANTONIO I do love these ancient ruins.
We never tread upon them but we set
10 Our foot upon some reverend history:
And, questionless, here in this open court,
Which now lies naked to the injuries
Of stormy weather, some men lie interred
Loved the church so well, and gave so largely to 't,
15 They thought it should have canopied their bones
Till doomsday; but all things have their end:
Churches and cities, which have diseases like to
men,
Must have like death that we have.

ECHO "Like death that we have."

DELIO     Now the echo hath caught you.

ANTONIO

It groaned, methought, and gave
A very deadly accent.

ECHO "Deadly accent."

DELIO I told you 'twas a pretty one: you may make
 it
 A huntsman, or a falconer, a musician,
 Or a thing of sorrow.
 ECHO "A thing of sorrow."
 ANTONIO Aye, sure, that suits it best.
 ECHO "That suits it
 25 best."
 ANTONIO 'Tis very like my wife's voice.
 ECHO "Aye, wife's voice."
 DELIO Come, let's walk further from 't. I would not have you
 Go to th' cardinal's tonight: do not.
 ECHO "Do not."
 DELIO Wisdom doth not more moderate wasting sorrow
 Than time: take time for 't; be mindful of thy safety.
 30 ECHO "Be mindful of thy safety."
 ANTONIO Necessity compels
 me:
 Make<sup>o</sup> scrutiny throughout the passes
 Of your own life, you'll find it impossible
 To fly your fate.
 ECHO "Oh, fly your fate."
 DELIO Hark! The dead stones seem to have pity on 35 you,
 And give you good counsel.
 ANTONIO Echo, I will not talk with thee,
 For thou art a dead thing.
 ECHO "Thou art a dead thing."
 ANTONIO My duchess is asleep now,
 And her little ones, I hope sweetly: O heaven,
 40 Shall I never see her more?
 ECHO "Never see her more."
 ANTONIO I marked<sup>o</sup> not one repetition of the echo

But that, and on the sudden a clear light
Presented me a face folded in sorrow.
DELIO Your fancy merely.
ANTONIO Come, I'll be out of this 45       ague,<sup>o</sup>
For to live thus is not indeed to live;
It is a mockery and abuse of life.
I will not henceforth save myself by halves;
Lose all, or nothing.
DELIO Your own virtue save you!
50 I'll fetch your eldest son, and second you<sup>o</sup>
It may be that the sight of his own blood
Spread in so sweet a figure<sup>o</sup> may beget
The more compassion.
ANTONIO However, fare you well.
Though in our miseries Fortune have a part,
Yet in our noble sufferings she hath none:
55 Contempt of pain, that we may call our own.
[Exeunt.]

Notes

- °: in addition Return to reference °
- °: if you make Return to reference °
- °: attended to Return to reference °
- °: fever Return to reference °
- °: back you up Return to reference °
- °: face Return to reference °

SCENE 4. *A room in the CARDINAL's palace.

[Enter CARDINAL, PESCARA, MALATESTA, RODERIGO, and GRISOLAN.]

CARDINAL You shall not watch tonight by the sick prince;

His grace is very well recovered.

MALATESTA Good my lord, suffer<sup>o</sup> us.

CARDINAL Oh, by no
means;

5 The noise and change of object in his eye
Doth more distract him. I pray, all to bed;
And though you hear him in his violent fit,
Do not rise, I entreat you.

PESCARA So, sir; we shall not.

CARDINAL Nay, I must have you promise upon your honors,

For I was enjoined to 't by himself; and he seemed
To urge it sensibly.<sup>o</sup>

10 PESCARA Let our honors bind
This trifle.

CARDINAL Nor any of your followers.

MALATESTA Neither.

15 CARDINAL It may be, to make trial of your promise,
When he's asleep, myself will rise and feign
Some of his mad tricks, and cry out for help,
And feign myself in danger.

MALATESTA If your throat were cutting,

I'd not come at you, now I have protested against it.

CARDINAL Why, I thank you.

[Withdraws.]

GRISOLAN 'Twas a foul storm
tonight.

RODERIGO The Lord Ferdinand's chamber shook like an osier.°

20 MALATESTE 'Twas nothing but pure kindness in the
devil,
To rock his own child. [Exeunt all except the CARDINAL.]

CARDINAL The reason why I would not suffer° these
About my brother is because at midnight
I may with better privacy convey 25 Julia's body to her own lodging. Oh, my conscience!
I would pray now, but the devil takes away my heart
For having any confidence in prayer.
About this hour I appointed Bosola
To fetch the body: when he hath served my turn,
30 He dies.
[Exit.]
[Enter BOSOLA.]

BOSOLA Ha! 'Twas the cardinal's voice; I heard him name
Bosola and my death. Listen! I hear One's footing.
[Enter FERDINAND.]

FERDINAND Strangling is a very quiet death.

35 BOSOLA [aside] Nay, then, I see I must stand upon my guard.

FERDINAND What say to that? Whisper softly; do you agree to 't? So; it must be done i' th' dark: the cardinal would not for a thousand pounds the doctor should see it.
[Exit.]

BOSOLA My death is plotted; here's the consequence of murder.
40 We value not desert nor Christian breath,
When we know black deeds must be cured with death.

[Enter ANTONIO and SERVANT.]

SERVANT Here stay, sir, and be confident, I pray:
I'll fetch you a dark lantern.

[Exit.]

ANTONIO Could I take him at his prayers,
There were hope of pardon.

45 BOSOLA Fall right, my sword!
[Stabs him.]

I'll not give thee so much leisure as to pray.

ANTONIO Oh, I am gone! Thou hast ended a long suit<sup>1</sup>

In a minute.

BOSOLA What art thou?

ANTONIO A most wretched thing,
That only have thy benefit in death,
To appear myself.

[Reenter SERVANT with a lantern.]

50 SERVANT Where are you, sir?

ANTONIO Very near my home. Bosola?

SERVANT Oh,
misfortune!

BOSOLA Smother thy pity; thou art dead else.<sup>o</sup>
Antonio?

The man I would have saved 'bove mine own life!
We are merely the stars' tennis balls, struck and banded

55 Which way please them.<sup>2</sup> O good Antonio,
I'll whisper one thing in thy dying ear
Shall make thy heart break quickly! Thy fair duchess
And two sweet children—

ANTONIO Their very names
Kindle a little life in me.

BOSOLA Are murdered.

60 ANTONIO Some men have wished to die
At the hearing of sad tidings; I am glad

That I shall do 't in sadness: I would not now Wish my wounds balmed nor healed, for I have no use
 To put my life to. In all our quest of greatness,
 Like wanton boys, whose pastime is their care,
 65 We follow after bubbles blown in th' air.
 Pleasure of life, what is't? Only the good hours
 Of an ague; merely a preparative to rest,
 To endure vexation. I do not ask
 The process<sup>o</sup> of my death; only commend me
 70 To Delio.
 BOSOLA Break, heart!
 ANTONIO And let my son fly the courts of princes.
 [Dies.]
 BOSOLA Thou seem'st to have loved Antonio?
 SERVANT I brought him hither
 To have reconciled him to the cardinal.
 BOSOLA I do not ask thee that.
 75 Take him up, if thou tender thine own life,
 And bear him where the lady Julia
 Was wont to lodge. Oh, my fate moves swift;
 I have this cardinal in the forge already;
 Now I'll bring him to th' hammer. Oh direful
 80 misprision!<sup>o</sup>
 I will not imitate things glorious,
 No more than base; I'll be mine own example.
 On, on, and look thou represent,<sup>o</sup> for silence,
 The thing thou bear'st.<sup>3</sup>
 [Exeunt.]

Endnotes

- Note 1: Antonio thinks it is the cardinal, to whom he came to address a plea ("suit"), who has stabbed him.Return to

reference 1

- Note 2: The power of the stars over people's lives was a Renaissance commonplace. Return to reference 2
- Note 3: The corpse. Return to reference 3

Notes

- °: allow Return to reference °
- °: with strong feeling Return to reference °
- °: a willow wand Return to reference °
- °: allow Return to reference °
- °: otherwise Return to reference °
- °: reason, circumstances Return to reference °
- °: misunderstanding Return to reference °
- °: imitate Return to reference °

SCENE 5. *The scene continues.

[Enter CARDINAL, with a book.]

CARDINAL I am puzzled in a question about hell:
He says, in hell there's one material fire,
And yet it shall not burn all men alike.
Lay him by. How tedious is a guilty conscience!
When I look into the fish ponds in my garden,
5 Methinks I see a thing armed with a rake,
That seems to strike at me.

[Enter BOSOLA, and SERVANT bearing ANTONIO'S
body.]

Now, art thou come?

Thou look'st ghastly:
There sits in thy face some great determination
Mixed with some fear.

10 BOSOLA Thus it lightens<sup>o</sup> into action:
I am come to kill thee.

CARDINAL Ha! Help! Our guard!

BOSOLA Thou art deceived; they are out of thy howling.

CARDINAL Hold; and I will faithfully divide
Revenues with thee.

BOSOLA Thy prayers and proffers
Are both unseasonable.

15 CARDINAL Raise the watch!
We are betrayed!

BOSOLA I have confined your flight:<sup>o</sup>
I'll suffer your retreat to Julia's chamber,
But no further.

CARDINAL Help! We are betrayed!

[Enter, above, PESCARA, MALATESTA, RODERIGO, and GRISOLAN.]

MALATESTA

Listen.

CARDINAL My dukedom for rescue!
 RODERIGO Fie upon his counterfeiting!
 MALATESTES Why, 'tis not the cardinal.
 RODERIGO Yes, yes, 'tis
 20 he,
 But I'll see him hanged ere I'll go down to him.
 CARDINAL Here's a plot upon me. I am assaulted! I am lost,
 Unless some rescue.
 GRISOLAN He doth this pretty well,
 But it will not serve to laugh me out of my honor.
 CARDINAL The sword's at my throat!
 RODERIGO You would not bawl
 25 so loud then.
 MALATESTES Come, come, let's go to bed. He told us
 thus much aforehand.
 PESCARA He wished you should not come at him; but,
 believe 't,
 The accent of the voice sounds not in jest:
 I'll down to him, howsoever, and with engines.
 Force ope the doors. [Exit above.]
 RODERIGO Let's follow him aloof,
 30 And note how the cardinal will laugh at him.
[Exeunt, above, MALATESTES, RODERIGO, and
GRISOLAN.]
 BOSOLA There's for you first, [He kills the SERVANT.]
 'Cause you shall not unbarricade the door
 To let in rescue.
 CARDINAL What cause hast thou to pursue my life?
 BOSOLA
 35 Look there.
 CARDINAL Antonio?
 BOSOLA Slain by my hand unwittingly.

Pray, and be sudden: when thou killed'st thy sister,
Thou took'st from Justice her most equal balance,
And left her naught but her sword.

CARDINAL Oh, mercy!

40 BOSOLA Now it seems thy greatness was only
outward;
For thou fall'st faster of thyself than calamity
Can drive thee. I'll not waste longer time: there!
[Stabs him.]

CARDINAL Thou hast hurt me.

BOSOLA Again! [Stabs him
again.]

CARDINAL Shall I die like a leveret,<sup>1</sup>

Without any resistance? Help, help, help!
I am slain!

45 [Enter FERDINAND.]

FERDINAND Th' alarm? Give me a fresh horse;
Rally the vaunt-guard, or the day is lost.
Yield, yield! I give you the honor of arms,
Shake my sword over you; will you yield?<sup>2</sup>

CARDINAL Help me; I am your brother!

50 FERDINAND The devil!
My brother fight upon the adverse party?
[He wounds the CARDINAL and, in the scuffle, gives BOSOLA his death wound.]

There flies your ransom.

CARDINAL O justice!
I suffer now for what hath former<sup>o</sup> been:
Sorrow is held the eldest child of sin.

55 FERDINAND Now you're brave fellows. Caesar's fortune was harder than
Pompey's; Caesar died in the arms of prosperity, Pompey at the feet of disgrace. You both died in the field. The pain's nothing: pain many times is taken away with the apprehension of greater, as the toothache with the sight of a barber that comes to pull it out: there's philosophy for you.

60 BOSOLA Now my revenge is perfect. Sink, thou main cause

[He kills FERDINAND.]

Of my undoing! The last part of my life
Hath done me best service.

FERDINAND Give me some wet hay; I am brokenwinded.<sup>3</sup> I do account this world but a dog kennel: I will vault credit and affect high pleasures<sup>4</sup> beyond death.

65 BOSOLA He seems to come to himself, now he's so near the bottom.

FERDINAND My sister, O my sister! There's the cause
on 't.

Whether we fall by ambition, blood, or lust,
Like diamonds we are cut with our own dust.

[Dies.]

70 CARDINAL Thou hast thy payment, too.

BOSOLA Yes, I hold my weary soul in my teeth.

'Tis ready to part from me. I do glory
That thou, which stood'st like a huge pyramid
Begun upon a large and ample base,
Shalt end in a little point, a kind of nothing.

75 [Enter, below, PESCARA, MALATESTA, RODERIGO, and GRISOLAN.]

PESCARA How now, my lord?

MALATESTA O sad disaster!

RODERIGO How comes this?

BOSOLA    Revenge for the Duchess of Malfi murdered
By th' Aragonian brethren; for Antonio
Slain by this hand; for lustful Julia
Poisoned by this man; and lastly for myself,
80    That was an actor in the main of all,
Much 'gainst mine own good nature, yet i' th' end Neglected.

PESCARA    How now, my lord?

CARDINAL    Look to my brother:
He gave us these large wounds as we were struggling

85    Here i' the rushes.<sup>5</sup> And now, I pray, Let me be laid by and never thought of.
[Dies.]

PESCARA    How fatally, it seems, he did withstand
His own rescue!

MALATESTA    Thou wretched thing of blood,
How came Antonio by his death?

90    BOSOLA    In a mist: I know not how;
Such a mistake as I have often seen
In a play. Oh, I am gone!
We are only like dead walls or vaulted graves,
That, ruined, yield no echo. Fare you well.

95    It may be pain, but no harm to me to die
In so good a quarrel. Oh, this gloomy world,
In what a shadow or deep pit of darkness
Doth womanish and fearful mankind live!
Let worthy minds ne'er stagger in distrust
To suffer death or shame for what is just:
100    Mine is another voyage.

[Dies.]

PESCARA    The noble Delio, as I came to the palace,
Told me of Antonio's being here, and showed me
A pretty gentleman, his son and heir.

[Enter DELIO with ANTONIO'S SON.]

MALATESTTE O, sir, you come too late.
 DELIO I heard so, and 105 Was armed<sup>o</sup> for it ere I came. Let us make noble use
 Of this great ruin, and join all our force
 To establish this young hopeful<sup>o</sup> gentleman
 In 's mother's right. These wretched eminent things 110 Leave no more fame behind 'em, than should one
 Fall in a frost, and leave his print in snow;
 As soon as the sun shines, it ever melts
 Both form and matter. I have ever thought
 Nature doth nothing so great for great men
 As when she's pleased to make them lords of truth:
 115 Integrity of life is fame's best friend,
 Which nobly, beyond death, shall crown the end.
 [Exeunt.]

performed 1613

Endnotes

published 1623

- Note 1: A baby hare.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Ferdinand thinks he's on the field of battle and offering the "honor of arms" (liberal surrender terms) to his foes. "Vaunt-guard": vanguard.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Worn-out horses are said to be broken-winded.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Go beyond expectation and enjoy great pleasures.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Leafy plants, strewn over Elizabethan floors in lieu of carpets.Return to reference 5

Notes

- <sup>o</sup>: ignitesReturn to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: cut off your escapeReturn to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: battering ramsReturn to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: at a distanceReturn to reference <sup>o</sup>

- °: earlier Return to reference °
- °: prepared Return to reference °
- °: promising Return to reference °

FRANCIS BACON

1561–1626

As a literary figure Sir Francis Bacon played a central role in the development of the English essay and inaugurated the genre of the scientific utopia in his New Atlantis (1627). But he was even more important to the intellectual and cultural history of the earlier seventeenth century for his treatises on reforming learning through experiment. His life span closely overlapped that of Donne and of Jonson, but unlike them he was born into a leading political family close to the centers of government and power. During Elizabeth's reign he studied law and entered Parliament. But it was under James I that his political fortunes took off: he was knighted in 1603, became attorney general in 1613, lord chancellor (the highest judicial post) and Baron Verulam in 1618, and Viscount St. Albans in 1621. That same year, however, he was convicted on twenty-three counts of corruption and accepting bribes: he was fined, imprisoned, and forced from office. Bacon admitted the truth of the charges (though they were in part politically motivated), merely observing that everyone took bribes and that bribery never influenced his judgment.

As an essayist Bacon stands at almost the opposite pole from his great French predecessor Michel de Montaigne (1533–1592), who proposed to learn about humankind by an intensive analysis of his own sensations, emotions, and ideas. Bacon's essays are instead on topics "civil and moral," and they are written in a curt, deliberately impersonal style. The ten short pieces of the first edition of his essays (1597) are little more than collections of maxims placed in sequence; the thirty-eight of the second edition (1612) are longer and looser; the fifty-eight of the final edition (1625) are still longer, are smoother in texture, use more figurative language, and are more unified. In that last edition, more than half of the essays deal with public life, and many of the others—even on such topics as truth, marriage, and love—are written from the vantage point of a practical man of affairs. They evoke an atmosphere of expediency but also voice precepts of moral wisdom and public virtue, offering a penetrating insight into the thinking of the Jacobean ruling class.

Early in his life Bacon declared, "I have taken all knowledge to be my province." He believed that his new "scientific" method would lead humankind to a better future. The title of his Novum Organum (The New Instrument of Learning, 1620), written in Latin, challenged the authority of Aristotle's Organon, which was still the basis of university education. Bacon argued that the right method of investigating nature combined careful empirical observation with limited generalizations, which themselves could be tested by further experiments. Novum Organum includes a trenchant analysis of four kinds of "Idols"—psychological dispositions and intellectual habits that hold individuals back in their quest for truth. But despite his emphasis on experiment, in his written work Bacon generally ignored major scientific discoveries by Galileo, William Harvey, and others; his true role was as a herald of the modern age. And despite his critique of misleading words and intellectual fictions, he used the rich resources of literary and figurative language—and of utopian fiction in The New Atlantis—to urge a new faith in experiment and science. He segregated theology and science as "two truths," freeing science to go its own way unhampered by religious dogmas and unrestrained by the morality they supported. He is a primary creator of the myth of science as a pathway to utopia; in the 1660s the Royal Society honored him as a prophet.

FROM ESSAYS<sup>1</sup>

Endnotes

- Note 1: Bacon's essays appeared in three editions, 1597 (10 essays), 1612 (38 essays), and 1625 (58 essays); we illustrate the considerable stylistic differences between the earliest and latest collections by presenting two versions of "Of Studies." Otherwise, all selections are from the 1625 collection, in which "Of Truth" stands first.Return to reference 1

Of Truth

“What is truth?” said jesting Pilate; and would not stay for an answer.<sup>2</sup> Certainly there be that delight in giddiness,<sup>3</sup> and count it a bondage to fix a belief; affecting free will in thinking, as well as in acting. And though the sects of philosophers of that kind be gone, yet there remain certain discoursing wits,<sup>4</sup> which are of the same veins, though there be not so much blood in them as was in those of the ancients. But it is not only the difficulty and labor which men take in finding out of truth; nor again, that when it is found, it imposeth upon<sup>5</sup> men’s thoughts, that doth bring lies in favor; but a natural though corrupt love of the lie itself. One of the later school of the Grecians examineth the matter, and is at a stand<sup>6</sup> to think what should be in it, that men should love lies, where neither they make for pleasure, as with poets, nor for advantage, as with the merchant, but for the lie’s sake. But I cannot tell: this same truth is a naked and open daylight, that doth not show the masques and mummeries and triumphs of the world half so stately and daintily as candlelights. Truth may perhaps come to the price of a pearl, that showeth best by day, but it will not rise to the price of a diamond or carbuncle,<sup>7</sup> that showeth best in varied lights. A mixture of a lie doth ever add pleasure. Doth any man doubt that if there were taken out of men’s minds vain opinions, flattering hopes, false valuations, imaginations as one would, and the like, but it would leave the minds of a number of men poor shrunken things, full of melancholy and indisposition, and unpleasing to themselves? One of the fathers, in great severity, called poesy vinum daemonum,<sup>8</sup> because it filleth the imagination, and yet it is but with the shadow of a lie. But it is not the lie that passeth through the mind, but the lie that sinketh in, and settleth in it, that doth the hurt, such as we spake of before. But howsoever these things are thus in men’s depraved judgments and affections, yet truth, which only doth judge itself, teacheth that the inquiry of truth, which is the lovemaking or wooing of it, the knowledge of truth, which is the presence of it, and the belief of truth, which is the enjoying of it, is the sovereign good of human nature. The first creature<sup>9</sup> of God, in the works of the days, was the light of the sense; the last was the light of reason; and his sabbath work ever since is the illumination of his Spirit. First he breathed light upon the face of the matter, or chaos; then he breathed light into the face of man; and still he breatheth and inspireth light into the face of his chosen. The poet that beautified the sect that was otherwise inferior to the rest<sup>1</sup> saith yet excellently well: "It is a pleasure to stand upon the shore, and to see ships tossed upon the sea; a pleasure to stand in the window of a castle, and to see a battle, and the adventures thereof below; but no pleasure is comparable to the standing upon the vantage ground of truth" (a hill not to be commanded,<sup>2</sup> and where the air is always clear and serene), "and to see the errors, and wanderings, and mists, and tempests, in the vale below": so always that this prospect<sup>3</sup> be with pity, and not with swelling or pride. Certainly, it is heaven upon earth to have a man's mind move in charity, rest in providence, and turn upon the poles of truth.

To pass from theological and philosophical truth to the truth of civil business, it will be acknowledged even by those that practice it not, that clear and round<sup>4</sup> dealing is the honor of man's nature, and that mixture of falsehood is like alloy in coin of gold and silver, which may make the metal work the better, but it embaseth<sup>5</sup> it. For these winding and crooked courses are the goings of the serpent; which goeth basely upon the belly, and not upon the feet. There is no vice that doth so cover a man with shame as to be found false and perfidious. And therefore Montaigne saith prettily, when he inquired the reason why the word of the lie should be such a disgrace, and such an odious charge, saith he, "If it be well weighed, to say that a man lieth is as much to say as that he is brave towards God and a coward towards men."<sup>6</sup> For a lie faces God, and shrinks from man. Surely the wickedness of falsehood and breach of faith cannot possibly be so highly expressed, as in that it shall be the last peal to call the judgments of God upon the generations of men, it being foretold that when Christ cometh, he shall not “find faith upon the earth.”<sup>7</sup>

1625

Endnotes

- Note 2: See John 18:38 for Pilate’s idle query to Jesus.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Foolish changeability. “That”: those who.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Discursive minds. “Philosophers of that kind”: the Greek Skeptics, who taught the uncertainty of all things.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Restricts, controls.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: That is, is baffled.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Ruby.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: “The wine of devils”; St. Augustine is probably being cited.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Creation.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Lucretius’s On the Nature of Things expressed the Epicurean creed, which Bacon thought inferior because it emphasized pleasure.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Topped by anything higher.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: That is, provided always that this observation.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Upright.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Debases.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Essays 2.18.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Luke 18:8.Return to reference 7

Of Marriage and Single Life

Marriage. The Liturgy of Solemnizing Marriage from The Book of Common Prayer (1559) emphasized the purposes of marriage (with procreation primary), the indissolubility of marriage, and the biblical texts undergirding that definition of marriage. It also held up the ideal of mutual love and help, which is represented in this emblem from George Wither's A Collection of Emblems (1635). The Latin motto reads in English, "Hand Washes Hand."

---

He that hath wife and children hath given hostages to fortune; for they are impediments to great enterprises, either of virtue or mischief. Certainly the best works, and of greatest merit for the public, have proceeded from the unmarried or childless men, which both in affection and means have married and endowed the public. Yet it were great reason that those that have children should have greatest care of future times, unto which they know they must transmit their dearest pledges. Some there are who, though they lead a single life, yet their thoughts do end with themselves, and account future times impertinences.<sup>1</sup> Nay, there are some other that account wife and children but as bills of charges. Nay more, there are some foolish rich covetous men that take a pride in having no children, because they may be thought so much the richer. For perhaps they have heard some talk, "Such an one is a great rich man," and another except to it, "Yea, but he hath a great charge of children"; as if it were an abatement to his riches. But the most ordinary cause of a single life is liberty, especially in certain self-pleasing and humorous<sup>2</sup> minds, which are so sensible of every restraint, as they will go near to think their girdles and garters to be bonds and shackles. Unmarried men are best friends, best masters, best servants, but not always best subjects, for they are light to run away, and almost all fugitives are of that condition. A single life doth well with churchmen, for charity will hardly water the ground where it must first fill a pool. It is indifferent for judges and magistrates, for if they be facile<sup>3</sup> and corrupt, you shall have a servant five times worse than a wife. For soldiers, I find the generals commonly in their hortatives<sup>4</sup> put men in mind of their wives and children; and I think the despising of marriage amongst the Turks maketh the vulgar soldier more base. Certainly wife and children are a kind of discipline of humanity; and single men, though they be many times more charitable, because their means are less exhaust,<sup>5</sup> yet, on the other side, they are more cruel and hardhearted (good to make severe inquisitors), because their tenderness is not so oft called upon. Grave natures, led by custom, and therefore constant, are commonly loving husbands, as was said of Ulysses, Vetulam suam praetulit immortalitati.<sup>6</sup> Chaste women are often proud and froward,<sup>7</sup> as presuming upon the merit of their chastity. It is one of the best bonds, both of chastity and obedience, in the wife if she think her husband wise, which she will never do if she find him jealous. Wives are young men's mistresses, companions for middle age, and old men's nurses; so as a man may have a quarrel<sup>8</sup> to marry when he will. But yet he was reputed one of the wise men that made answer to the question when a man should marry: "A young man not yet, an elder man not at all."<sup>9</sup> It is often seen that bad husbands have very good wives; whether it be that it raiseth the price of their husbands' kindness when it comes, or that the wives take a pride in their patience. But this never fails, if the bad husbands were of their own choosing, against their friends' consent; for then they will be sure to make good their own folly.

1612, 1625

Endnotes

- Note 1: Irrelevant concerns.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Unbalanced, whimsical.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Pliable.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Exhortations.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Exhausted.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: "He preferred his old wife to immortality." Ulysses might have had immortality with the nymph Calypso but preferred to go back to Penelope.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Ill-tempered.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Pretext.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Thales (6th century B.C.E.), one of the Seven Sages of Greece.Return to reference 9

Of Great Place

Men in great place are thrice servants: servants of the sovereign or state, servants of fame, and servants of business. So as they have no freedom, neither in their persons, nor in their actions, nor in their times. It is a strange desire, to seek power and to lose liberty, or to seek power over others and to lose power over a man's self. The rising unto place is laborious, and by pains men come to greater pains; and it is sometimes base, and by indignities men come to dignities. The standing is slippery, and the regress is either a downfall or at least an eclipse, which is a melancholy thing: Cum non sis qui fueris, non esse cur velis vivere.<sup>1</sup> Nay, retire men cannot when they would, neither will they when it were reason; but are impatient of privateness, even in age and sickness, which require the shadow;<sup>2</sup> like old townsmen, that will be still sitting at their street door, though thereby they offer age to scorn. Certainly great persons had need to borrow other men's opinions to think themselves happy; for if they judge by their own feeling, they cannot find it; but if they think with themselves what other men think of them, and that other men would fain be as they are, then they are happy, as it were by report; when perhaps they find the contrary within. For they are the first that find their own griefs, though they be the last that find their own faults. Certainly men in great fortunes are strangers to themselves, and while they are in the puzzle of business they have no time to tend their health, either of body or mind. Illi mors gravis incubat, qui notus nimis omnibus, ignotus moritur sibi.<sup>3</sup> In place there is license to do good and evil, whereof the latter is a curse; for in evil the best condition is not to will, the second not to can.<sup>4</sup> But power to do good is the true and lawful end of aspiring; for good thoughts (though God accept them) yet towards men are little better than good dreams, except they be put in act; and that cannot be without power and place, as the vantage and commanding ground.

Merit and good works is the end of man's motion, and conscience<sup>5</sup> of the same is the accomplishment of man's rest; for if a man can be partaker of God's theater,<sup>6</sup> he shall likewise be partaker of God's rest. Et conversus Deus, ut aspiceret opera quae fecerunt manus suae, vidit quod omnia essent bona nimis;<sup>7</sup> and then the Sabbath.

In the discharge of thy place set before thee the best examples, for imitation is a globe<sup>8</sup> of precepts. And after a time set before thee thine own example; and examine thyself strictly, whether thou didst not best at first. Neglect not also the examples of those that have carried themselves ill in the same place; not to set off thyself by taxing<sup>9</sup> their memory, but to direct thyself what to avoid. Reform, therefore, without bravery, or scandal<sup>1</sup> of former times and persons; but yet set it down to thyself, as well to create good precedents as to follow them. Reduce things to the first institution,<sup>2</sup> and observe wherein and how they have degenerate; but yet ask counsel of both times; of the ancient time what is best, and of the latter time what is fittest. Seek to make thy course regular, that men may know beforehand what they may expect; but be not too positive and peremptory, and express thyself well when thou digressest from thy rule. Preserve the right of thy place, but stir not questions of jurisdiction; and rather assume thy right in silence and de facto,<sup>3</sup> than voice it with claims and challenges. Preserve likewise the rights of inferior places, and think it more honor to direct in chief than to be busy in all. Embrace and invite helps and advices touching the execution of thy place, and do not drive away such as bring thee information as meddlers, but accept of them in good part. The vices of authority are chiefly four: delays, corruption, roughness, and facility.<sup>4</sup> For delays, give easy access, keep times appointed, go through with that which is in hand, and interlace not business<sup>5</sup> but of necessity. For corruption, do not only bind thine own hands or thy servants' hands from taking, but bind the hands of suitors also from offering. For integrity used doth the one; but integrity professed, and with a manifest detestation of bribery, doth the other. And avoid not only the fault, but the suspicion. Whosoever is found variable and changeth manifestly, without manifest cause, giveth suspicion of corruption. Therefore, always when thou changest thine opinion or course, profess it plainly and declare it, together with the reasons that move thee to change; and do not think to steal it.<sup>6</sup> A servant or a favorite, if he be inward,<sup>7</sup> and no other apparent cause of esteem, is commonly thought but a byway to close<sup>8</sup> corruption. For roughness, it is a needless cause of discontent; severity breedeth fear, but roughness breedeth hate. Even reproofs from authority ought to be grave, and not taunting. As for facility, it is worse than bribery; for bribes come but now and then, but if importunity or idle respects<sup>9</sup> lead a man, he shall never be without. As Solomon saith, "To respect persons is not good, for such a man will transgress for a piece of bread."<sup>1</sup>

It is most true that was anciently spoken, "A place showeth the man"; and it showeth some to the better and some to the worse. Omnium consensu capax imperii, nisi imperasset,<sup>2</sup> saith Tacitus of Galba; but of Vespasian he saith, Solus imperantium Vespasianus mutatus in melius:<sup>3</sup> though the one was meant of sufficiency, the other of manners and affection. It is an assured sign of a worthy and generous spirit, whom honor amends.<sup>4</sup> For honor is, or should be, the place of virtue; and as in nature things move violently to their place and calmly in their place, so virtue in ambition is violent, in authority settled and calm. All rising to great place is by a winding stair; and if there be factions, it is good to side a man's self<sup>5</sup> whilst he is in the rising, and to balance himself when he is placed. Use the memory of thy predecessor fairly and tenderly; for if thou dost not, it is a debt will sure be paid when thou art gone. If thou have colleagues, respect them, and rather call them when they look not for it, than exclude them when they have reason to look to be called. Be not too sensible<sup>6</sup> or too remembering of thy place in conversation and private answers to suitors; but let it rather be said, "When he sits in place he is another man."

Endnotes

- Note 1: "When you aren't what you were, there's no reason to live" (Cicero, Familiar Letters 7.3).Return to reference 1
- Note 2: "The shadow" of retirement, out of the glare of public life.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: "Death lies heavily on him who, while too well known to everyone else, dies unknown to himself" (Seneca, Thyestes 401–03).Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Be able.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Consciousness.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Actions in the world.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: "And God saw every thing that he had made, and, behold, it was very good" (Genesis 1:31).Return to reference 7
- Note 8: World.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Blaming.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Defaming. "Bravery": ostentation.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: To their original form.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Without debate, as a matter of course.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Docility, too great obligingness.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: That is, do not carry on different businesses at the same time.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Change your mind without its being noticed.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: In his master's confidence.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Secret.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Irrelevant considerations.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Compare Proverbs 28:21.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: "Everyone would have thought him a good ruler, if he had not ruled" (Histories 1.49).Return to reference 2
- Note 3: "Of all the emperors, only Vespasian changed for the better" (slightly misquoted from Histories 1.50).Return to reference 3

- Note 4: That is, whom promotion improves. "Sufficiency": abilities. "Affection": disposition. Return to reference 4
- Note 5: For a man to take sides. Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Sensitive. Return to reference 6

Of Superstition<sup>1</sup>

It were better to have no opinion of God at all than such an opinion as is unworthy of him. For the one is unbelief, the other is contumely;<sup>2</sup> and certainly superstition is the reproach of the deity. Plutarch saith well to that purpose: "Surely" (saith he) "I had rather a great deal men should say there was no such man at all as Plutarch, than that they should say that there was one Plutarch that would eat his children as soon as they were born"—as the poets speak of Saturn.<sup>3</sup> And as the contumely is greater towards God, so the danger is greater towards men. Atheism leaves a man to sense, to philosophy, to natural piety, to laws, to reputation, all which may be guides to an outward moral virtue, though religion were not. But superstition dismounts all these, and erecteth an absolute monarchy in the minds of men. Therefore atheism did never perturb states, for it makes men wary of themselves as looking no further;<sup>4</sup> and we see the times inclined to atheism (as the time of Augustus Caesar) were civil times. But superstition hath been the confusion of many states, and bringeth in a new primum mobile, that ravisheth all the spheres of government.<sup>5</sup> The master of superstition is the people, and in all superstition wise men follow fools, and arguments are fitted to practice in a reversed order. It was gravely said by some of the prelates in the council of Trent, where the doctrine of the schoolmen bare great sway, that the schoolmen were like astronomers, which did feign eccentrics and epicycles and such engines of orbs to save the phenomena, though they knew there were no such things;<sup>6</sup> and in like manner that the schoolmen had framed a number of subtle and intricate axioms and theorems to save the practice of the church.

The causes of superstition are: pleasing and sensual rites and ceremonies; excess of outward and pharisaical holiness;<sup>7</sup> overgreat reverence of traditions, which cannot but load the church; the stratagems of prelates for their own ambition and lucre; the favoring too much of good intentions, which openeth the gate to conceits<sup>8</sup> and novelties; the taking an aim at divine matters by human, which cannot but breed mixture of imaginations; and lastly barbarous times, especially joined with calamities and disasters. Superstition without a veil is a deformed thing, for as it addeth deformity to an ape to be so like a man, so the similitude of superstition to religion makes it the more deformed. And as wholesome meat corrupteth to little worms, so good forms and orders corrupt into a number of petty observances. There is a superstition in avoiding superstition, when men think to do best if they go furthest from the superstition formerly received; therefore care would be had that (as it fareth in ill purgings) the good be not taken away with the bad, which commonly is done when the people is the reformer.<sup>9</sup>

1612, 1625

Endnotes

- Note 1: Irrational religious practices founded on fear or ignorance.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Contempt.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Saturn (Cronos), god of time (among other things), was reputed to have eaten all his children, as time does. Many of the sentiments in Bacon's essay come from Plutarch's essay "On Superstition."Return to reference 3
- Note 4: That is, not looking beyond their own personal lifetimes. The rule of Augustus Caesar (following) was marked by general peace and civil quiet (that is, civilized). In this period of Roman history, many members of the elite no longer believed in the pagan gods, though they participated in the forms of state religion.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: The prime mover (primum mobile) was supposed to control the motions of the other heavenly spheres; superstition is a second (and contrary) mover.Return to reference 5

- Note 6: "Save the phenomena" means "explain appearances," as did the elaborate theories of pre-Copernican astronomers (epicycles, trepidation, and such concepts). So with the Scholastic philosophers ("schoolmen").Return to reference 6
- Note 7: The Pharisees were the strict party among the Jews of Christ's time; they taught precise observance of the letter of Mosaic law.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Fancies.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: The final sentence is directed against Puritan reformers, who loathed ceremonies, traditions, liturgy, and images, which they considered "superstitions."Return to reference 9

Of Plantations<sup>1</sup>

Plantations are amongst ancient, primitive, and heroical works. When the world was young it begat more children; but now it is old it begets fewer: for I may justly account new plantations to be the children of former kingdoms. I like a plantation in a pure soil; that is, where people are not displanted to the end to plant in others. For else it is rather an extirpation than a plantation. Planting of countries is like planting of woods; for you must make account to leese<sup>2</sup> almost twenty years profit, and expect your recompense in the end. For the principal thing that hath been the destruction of most plantations hath been the base and hasty drawing of profit in the first years. It is true, speedy profit is not to be neglected, as far as may stand<sup>3</sup> with the good of the plantation, but no further. It is a shameful and unblessed thing to take the scum of people, and wicked condemned men, to be the people with whom you plant; and not only so, but it spoileth the plantation, for they will ever live like rogues, and not fall to work, but be lazy, and do mischief, and spend victuals, and be quickly weary, and then certify over<sup>4</sup> to their country, to the discredit of the plantation. The people wherewith you plant ought to be gardeners, plowmen, laborers, smiths, carpenters, joiners,<sup>5</sup> fishermen, fowlers, with some few apothecaries, surgeons, cooks, and bakers.

In a country of plantation, first look about what kind of victual the country yields of itself to hand, as chestnuts, walnuts, pineapples, olives, dates, plums, cherries, wild honey, and the like, and make use of them. Then consider what victual or esculent<sup>6</sup> things there are which grow speedily and within the year, as parsnips, carrots, turnips, onions, radish, artichokes of Jerusalem,<sup>7</sup> maize, and the like. For wheat, barley, and oats, they ask<sup>8</sup> too much labor; but with peas and beans you may begin, both because they ask less labor and because they serve for meat<sup>9</sup> as well as for bread.

And of rice likewise cometh a great increase, and it is a kind of meat. Above all, there ought to be brought store of biscuit, oatmeal, flour, meal, and the like in the beginning, till bread may be had. For beasts or birds, take chiefly such as are least subject to diseases, and multiply fastest, as swine, goats, cocks, hens, turkeys, geese, house doves, and the like. The victual in plantations ought to be expended almost as in a besieged town; that is, with certain<sup>1</sup> allowance. And let the main part of the ground employed to gardens or corn be to<sup>2</sup> a common stock, and to be laid in and stored up and then delivered out in proportion; besides some spots of ground that any particular person will manure<sup>3</sup> for his own private. Consider likewise what commodities the soil where the plantation is doth naturally yield, that they may some way help to defray the charge of the plantation (so it be not, as was said, to the untimely prejudice of the main business), as it hath fared with tobacco in Virginia. Wood commonly aboundeth but too much, and therefore timber is fit to be one. If there be iron ore and streams whereupon to set the mills, iron is a brave commodity, where wood aboundeth.<sup>4</sup> Making of bay-salt, if the climate be proper for it, would be put in experience.<sup>5</sup> Growing silk likewise, if any be, is a likely commodity. Pitch and tar, where store of firs and pines are, will not fail; so drugs and sweet woods, where they are, cannot but yield great profit. Soap ashes likewise, and other things that may be thought of. But moil<sup>6</sup> not too much underground, for the hope of mines is very uncertain, and useth to make the planters lazy in other things.

For government, let it be in the hands of one, assisted with some counsel; and let them have commission to exercise martial laws, with some limitation. And above all, let men make that profit of being in the wilderness, as they have God always, and his service, before their eyes. Let not the government of the plantation depend upon too many counselors and undertakers<sup>7</sup> in the country that planteth, but upon a temperate number; and let those be rather noblemen and gentlemen than merchants, for they look ever to the present gain. Let there be freedoms from custom<sup>8</sup> till the plantation be of strength; and not only freedom from custom, but freedom to carry their commodities where they may make their best of them, except there be some special cause of caution. Cram not in people by sending too fast, company after company, but rather harken how they waste,<sup>9</sup> and send supplies proportionably, but so as the number may live well in the plantation, and not by surcharge<sup>1</sup> be in penury.

It hath been a great endangering to the health of some plantations, that they have built along the sea and rivers, in marish<sup>2</sup> and unwholesome grounds. Therefore, though you begin there, to avoid carriage and other like discommodities,<sup>3</sup> yet build still rather upwards from the streams than along. It concerneth likewise the health of the plantation that they have good store of salt with them, that they may use it in their victuals when it shall be necessary. If you plant where savages are, do not only entertain them with trifles and jingles, but use them justly and graciously, with sufficient guard nevertheless; and do not win their favor by helping them to invade their enemies, but for their defense it is not amiss. And send oft of them over to the country that plants, that they may see a better condition than their own, and commend it when they return. When the plantation grows to strength, then it is time to plant with women as well as with men, that the plantation may spread into generations and not be ever pieced from without. It is the sinfulness thing in the world to forsake or destitute a plantation once in forwardness; for besides the dishonor it is the guiltiness of blood of many commiserable<sup>4</sup> persons.

1625

Endnotes

- Note 1:
The planting of colonies had been a standard topic of political theory since Plato, with attention focused on such matters as the choice of site, the best mix of population, and the treatment of Indigenous peoples. Sir Thomas More considered the matter in his Utopia, and it took on increased practical importance in the narratives of English explorers such as Sir Walter Raleigh, and especially in the early 17th century, When English colonists first settled permanently settler colonies in the New World. Bacon's essay largely avoids the most acute moral issues English colonization was posing: English participation in the brutal African slave trade, and the stocking of "plantations" in Ireland with Scottish Presbyterian settlers (to supplement genocidal policies that were starving the indigenous Roman Catholics). These policies sowed the seeds of slavery in America and civil war in Ireland.

Return to reference 1

- Note 2: Lose. Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Be consistent. Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Report. Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Workers in fine carpentry. Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Edible. Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Jerusalem artichokes, a species of sunflower having an edible root. "Jerusalem" is a mistranslation of the Italian word for sunflower, girasole. Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Require. "For": as for. Return to reference 8
- Note 9: That is, as a main dish. Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Fixed. Return to reference 1
- Note 2: For. "Corn": grain. Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Cultivate. Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Waterpower and wood fires were required for getting iron out of ore. "Brave": excellent. Return to reference 4
- Note 5: That is, should be tried. "Bay-salt" is a coarse salt obtained by evaporating seawater. "Growing silk" (next sentence): vegetable silk. Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Labor. "Soap ashes": ashes used for making soap. Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Investors holding shares in the enterprise. Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Customs duties. Return to reference 8
- Note 9: That is, observe at what rate the population declines. Return to reference 9

- Note 1: That is, by being overpopulated.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Marshy.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Disadvantages, inconveniences.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Worthy of compassion. "Destitute": abandon.Return to reference 4

Of Negotiating

It is generally better to deal by speech than by letter, and by the mediation of a third than by a man's self. Letters are good when a man would draw an answer by letter back again, or when it may serve for a man's justification afterwards to produce his own letter, or where it may be danger to be interrupted or heard by pieces. To deal in person is good when a man's face breedeth regard, as commonly with inferiors, or in tender<sup>1</sup> cases, where a man's eye upon the countenance of him with whom he speaketh may give him a direction how far to go; and generally, where a man will reserve to himself liberty either to disavow or to expound. In choice of instruments, it is better to choose men of a plainer sort, that are like to do that that is committed to them, and to report back again faithfully the success,<sup>2</sup> than those that are cunning to contrive out of other men's business somewhat to grace themselves, and will help the matter in report for satisfaction sake. Use also such persons as affect<sup>3</sup> the business wherein they are employed, for that quickeneth much; and such as are fit for the matter, as bold men for expostulation, fair-spoken men for persuasion, crafty men for inquiry and observation, froward and absurd men for business that doth not well bear out itself.<sup>4</sup> Use also such as have been lucky, and prevailed before in things wherein you have employed them; for that breeds confidence, and they will strive to maintain their prescription.<sup>5</sup> It is better to sound a person with whom one deals afar off, than to fall upon the point at first, except you mean to surprise him by some short question. It is better dealing with men in appetite,<sup>6</sup> than with those that are where they would be. If a man deal with another upon conditions, the start or first performance is all, which a man cannot reasonably demand,<sup>7</sup> except either the nature of the thing be such which must go before, or else a man can persuade the other party that he shall still need him in some other thing, or else that he be counted the honestest man. All practice is to discover or to work.<sup>8</sup> Men discover themselves in trust, in passion, at unawares, and of necessity, when they would have somewhat done and cannot find an apt pretext. If you would work any man, you must either know his nature and fashions, and so lead him; or his ends, and so persuade him; or his weakness and disadvantages, and so awe him; or those that have interest in him, and so govern him. In dealing with cunning persons, we must ever consider their ends, to interpret their speeches; and it is good to say little to them, and that which they least look for. In all negotiations of difficulty, a man may not look to sow and reap at once, but must prepare business, and so ripen it by degrees.

1597, 1625

Endnotes

- Note 1: Delicate.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Result.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Like.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: That is, when your business is less than honest, use an ill-tempered or foolish person.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Keep up their reputation.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Who are hungry; that is, ambitious men.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: You cannot reasonably make special conditions favorable to you, except in the circumstances noted.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: All sharp bargaining aims to find out what men are up to or to make use of them. "Discover" (next sentence): reveal.Return to reference 8

Of Masques and Triumphs

These things are but toys to come amongst such serious observations; but yet, since princes will have such things, it is better they should be graced with elegancy, than daubed with cost. Dancing to song is a thing of great state and pleasure. I understand it that the song be in choir, placed aloft, and accompanied with some broken music,<sup>1</sup> and the ditty fitted to the device. Acting in song, especially in dialogues, hath an extreme good grace; I say acting, not dancing (for that is a mean and vulgar thing);<sup>2</sup> and the voices of the dialogue would be strong and manly (a bass and tenor, no treble), and the ditty high and tragical, not nice or dainty. Several choirs, placed one over against another, and taking the voices by catches anthem-wise, give great pleasure. Turning dances into figure<sup>3</sup> is a childish curiosity; and, generally, let it be noted, that those things which I here set down are such as to naturally take the sense, and not respect petty wonderments. It is true, the alterations of scenes, so it be quietly and without noise, are things of great beauty and pleasure for they feed and relieve the eye before it be full of the same object. Let the scenes abound with light, specially colored and varied; and let the masquers, or any other that are to come down from the scene,<sup>4</sup> have some motions upon the scene itself before their coming down; for it draws the eye strangely, and makes it with great pleasure to desire to see that it cannot perfectly discern. Let the songs be loud and cheerful, and not chirpings or pulings; let the music, likewise, be sharp and loud, and well placed. The colors that show best by candlelight<sup>5</sup> are white, carnation, and a kind of seawater green; and oes or spangs,<sup>6</sup> as they are of no great cost, so they are of most glory. As for rich embroidery, it is lost and not discerned. Let the suits of the masquers be graceful, and such as become the person when the vizors are off; not after examples of known attires, Turks, soldiers, mariners, and the like. Let antimasques<sup>7</sup> not be long; they have been commonly of fools, satyrs, baboons, wild men, antics, beasts, sprites, witches, Ethiopes, pigmies, turquets,<sup>8</sup> nymphs, rustics, Cupids, statues moving, and the like. As for angels, it is not comical enough to put them in antimasques; and anything that is hideous, as devils, giants, is, on the other side, as unfit; but, chiefly, let the music of them be recreative, and with some strange changes. Some sweet odors suddenly coming forth, without any drops falling, are, in such a company as there is steam and heat, things of great pleasure and refreshment. Double masques, one of men, another of ladies, addeth state and variety; but all is nothing, except the room be kept clear and neat.

For jousts, and tourneys, and barriers,<sup>9</sup> the glories of them are chiefly in the chariots, wherein the challengers make their entry; especially if they be drawn with strange beasts, as lions, bears, camels, and the like; or in the devices of their entrance, or in the bravery of their liveries, or in the goodly furniture of their horses and armor. But enough of these toys.

1625

Endnotes

- Note 1: Part-music, for different voices and different kinds of instruments.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Bacon's emphasis on dialogue and song (as opposed to dance) is in keeping with the increased emphasis on dialogue in later Jacobean and Caroline masques; dance, however, remains at the center of both early and late masques.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Patterns with allegorical or numerological significance.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: To unmask at the end and come onto the floor, so as to take part in the general dancing (the revels) with members of the court.Return to reference 4

- Note 5: The Banqueting Hall at Whitehall, the site of many court masques, was lit only by candlelight; viewers complained that some masques were hard to see.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Spangles shaped like the letter "O."Return to reference 6
- Note 7: The antic dances (presented by professionals) that preceded the main masque dances and represented the vices, follies, or disorders that are to be dispelled with the arrival of the main masques (royal and noble personages).Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Turkish dwarfs.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: One form of masque was the "joust," "tourney" (tournament), or "barrier," which chiefly involved knights, who represented allegorical qualities, tilting lances against each other.Return to reference 9

Of Studies

[1597 version]<sup>1</sup>

Studies serve for pastimes, for ornaments, and for abilities. Their chief use for pastime is in privateness<sup>2</sup> and retiring; for ornament, is in discourse; and for ability, is in judgment. For expert men<sup>3</sup> can execute, but learned men are fittest to judge or censure. To spend too much time in them is sloth; to use them too much for ornament is affectation; to make judgment wholly by their rules is the humor<sup>4</sup> of a scholar. They perfect nature, and are perfected by experience. Crafty men condemn them, simple men admire them, wise men use them, for they teach not their own use; but that<sup>5</sup> is a wisdom without them, and above them, won by observation. Read not to contradict nor to believe, but to weigh and consider. Some books are to be tasted, others to be swallowed, and some few to be chewed and digested; that is, some books are to be read only in parts; others to be read but cursorily; and some few to be read wholly, and with diligence and attention. Reading maketh a full man, conference<sup>6</sup> a ready man, and writing an exact man. And therefore, if a man write little, he had need have a great memory; if he confer little, he had need have a present wit;<sup>7</sup> and if he read little, he had need have much cunning, to seem to know that<sup>8</sup> he doth not. Histories make men wise; poets, witty;<sup>9</sup> the mathematics, subtle; natural philosophy,<sup>1</sup> deep; moral,<sup>2</sup> grave; logic and rhetoric, able to contend.

Endnotes

- Note 1: This version of the essay illustrates Bacon's early epigrammatic, aphoristic style, featuring balance, parallelism, disjunction between sentences, and a curtness that is occasionally cryptic. The 1625 version keeps some aphoristic elements unchanged but provides more connectives and transitions, resulting in a smoother, more flowing style.Return to reference 1

- Note 2: Private life.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Men of experience.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Disposition, implying folly.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: That is, the knowledge of how to use them. “Without” (following): outside.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Conversation.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Lively intelligence.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: That which.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Clever.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Science.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Moral philosophy.Return to reference 2

Of Studies

[ 1625 version ]

Studies serve for delight, for ornament, and for ability. Their chief use for delight is in privateness<sup>1</sup> and retiring; for ornament, is in discourse; and for ability, is in the judgment and disposition of business. For expert men<sup>2</sup> can execute, and perhaps judge of particulars, one by one; but the general counsels, and the plots and marshaling of affairs, come best from those that are learned. To spend too much time in studies is sloth; to use them too much for ornament is affectation; to make judgment wholly by their rules is the humor<sup>3</sup> of a scholar. They perfect nature, and are perfected by experience; for natural abilities are like natural plants, that need pruning by study; and studies themselves do give forth directions too much at large, except they be bounded in by experience. Crafty men contemn studies, simple men admire them, and wise men use them, for they teach not their own use; but that<sup>4</sup> is a wisdom without them, and above them, won by observation. Read not to contradict and confute, nor to believe and take for granted, nor to find talk and discourse, but to weigh and consider. Some books are to be tasted, others to be swallowed, and some few to be chewed and digested; that is, some books are to be read only in parts; others to be read, but not curiously;<sup>5</sup> and some few to be read wholly, and with diligence and attention. Some books also may be read by deputy and extracts made of them by others, but that would be only in the less important arguments and the meaner sort of books; else distilled books are like common distilled waters,<sup>6</sup> flashy things. Reading maketh a full man, conference<sup>7</sup> a ready man, and writing an exact man. And therefore, if a man write little, he had need have a great memory; if he confer little, he had need have a present wit;<sup>8</sup> and if he read little, he had need have much cunning, to seem to know that<sup>9</sup> he doth not. Histories make men wise; poets, witty;<sup>1</sup> the mathematics, subtle; natural philosophy,<sup>2</sup> deep; moral, grave; logic and rhetoric, able to contend. Abeunt studia in mores.<sup>3</sup> Nay, there is no stond or impediment in the wit but may be wrought out by fit studies, like as diseases of the body may have appropriate exercises. Bowling is good for the stone and reins,<sup>4</sup> shooting for the lungs and breast, gentle walking for the stomach, riding for the head, and the like. So if a man's wit be wandering, let him study the mathematics; for in demonstrations, if his wit be called away never so little, he must begin again. If his wit be not apt to distinguish or find differences, let him study the schoolmen, for they are cumini sectores.<sup>5</sup> If he be not apt to beat over matters<sup>6</sup> and to call up one thing to prove and illustrate another, let him study the lawyer's cases. So every defect of the mind may have a special receipt.<sup>7</sup>

Endnotes

- Note 1: Private life.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Men of experience.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Folly.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: That is, the knowledge of how to use them. "Without" (following): outside.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Attentively.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Used as home remedies, without real value.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Conversation.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Lively intelligence.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: That which.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Clever.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Science. "Moral" (following): that is, moral philosophy.Return to reference 2

- Note 3: "Studies culminate in manners" (Ovid, Heroides 15.83).
"Stond" (following): stoppage.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Gallstone and kidneys.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: "Dividers of cuminseed"; that is, hairsplitters.
"Schoolmen": Scholastic philosophers.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Discuss a subject thoroughly.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Cure, prescription.Return to reference 7

From The Advancement of Learning

[THE ABUSES OF LANGUAGE]<sup>1</sup>

Martin Luther, conducted (no doubt) by an higher providence, but in discourse of reason finding what a province he had undertaken against the bishop of Rome<sup>2</sup> and the degenerate traditions of the church, and finding his own solitude being no ways aided by the opinions of his own time, was enforced to awake all antiquity and to call former times to his succor to make a party against the present time, so that the ancient authors both in divinity and in humanity which had long time slept in libraries began generally to be read and revolved.<sup>3</sup> This by consequence did draw on a necessity of a more exquisite travail in the languages original wherein those authors did write,<sup>4</sup> for the better understanding of those authors and the better advantage of pressing and applying their words. And thereof grew again a delight in their manner of style and phrase, and an admiration of that kind of writing, which was much furthered and precipitated by the enmity and opposition that the propounders of those (primitive but seeming new) opinions had against the schoolmen, who were generally of the contrary part, and whose writings were altogether in a differing style and form, taking liberty to coin and frame new terms of art to express their own sense and to avoid circuit of speech, without regard to the pureness, pleasantness, and (as I may call it) lawfulness of the phrase or word.<sup>5</sup> And again, because the greatest labor then was with the people (of whom the Pharisees were wont to say, Execrabilis ista turba, quae non novit legem<sup>6</sup>) for the winning and persuading of them there grew of necessity in chief price and request<sup>7</sup> eloquence and variety of discourse, as the fittest and forciblest access into the capacity of the vulgar sort. So that these four causes concurring (the admiration of ancient authors, the hate of the schoolmen, the exact study of languages, and the efficacy of preaching) did bring in an affectionate study of eloquence and copy<sup>8</sup> of speech, which then began to flourish. This grew speedily to an excess, for men began to hunt more after words than matter, and more after the choiceness of the phrase, and the round and clean composition of the sentence, and the sweet falling of the clauses, and the varying and illustration of their works with tropes and figures<sup>9</sup> than after the weight of matter, worth of subject, soundness of argument, life of invention, or depth of judgment. Then grew the flowing and watery vein of Osorius, the Portugal bishop, to be in price. Then did Sturmius spend such infinite and curious pains upon Cicero the orator and Hermogenes the rhetorician, besides his own books of periods and imitation and the like.<sup>1</sup> Then did Carr of Cambridge and Ascham with their lectures and writings almost deify Cicero and Demosthenes, and allure all young men that were studious unto that delicate and polished kind of learning.<sup>2</sup> Then did Erasmus take occasion to make the scoffing echo, Decem annos consumpsi in legendo Cicerone, and the echo answered in Greek, one, Asine.<sup>3</sup> Then grew the learning of the schoolmen to be utterly despised as barbarous. In sum, the whole inclination and bent of those times was rather towards copy than weight.<sup>4</sup>

Here therefore is the first distemper of learning, when men study words and not matter, whereof though I have represented an example of late times, yet it hath been and will be secundum maius et minus<sup>5</sup> in all time. And how is it possible but this should have an operation to discredit learning, even with vulgar capacities, when they see learned men's works like the first letter of a patent or limned<sup>6</sup> book, which though it hath large flourishes, yet it is but a letter? It seems to me that Pygmalion's frenzy<sup>7</sup> is a good emblem or portraiture of this vanity, for words are but the images of matter, and except they have life of reason and invention, to fall in love with them is all one as to fall in love with a picture.

But yet notwithstanding, it is a thing not hastily to be condemned to clothe and adorn the obscurity even of philosophy itself with sensible and plausible elocution. For hereof we have great examples in Xenophon, Cicero, Seneca, Plutarch, and of Plato also in some degree; and hereof likewise there is great use, for surely to the severe inquisition of truth and the deep progress into philosophy it is some hindrance, because it is too early satisfactory to the mind of man, and quencheth the desire of further search before we come to a just period; but then if a man be to have any use of such knowledge in civil occasions of conference, counsel, persuasion, discourse, or the like, then shall he find it prepared to his hands in those authors which write in that manner. But the excess of this is so justly contemptible that as Hercules, when he saw the image of Adonis, Venus' minion, in a temple, said in disdain, Nil sacri es;<sup>8</sup> so there is none of Hercules' followers in learning, that is, the more severe and laborious sort of inquirers into truth,<sup>9</sup> but will despise those delicacies and affectations as indeed capable of no divineness.

1605

Endnotes

- Note 1: Among the "three distempers of learning" that Bacon proposes to cure in this work, the most important involves "vain imaginations, vain altercations, and vain affectations"; to help explain these he offers a concise history of changes in the language of learned discourse since the Reformation.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: The pope. "Province": task.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Considered. Luther (1483–1546) indeed looked back to the original languages of the Bible and to ancient authors in "divinity" (chiefly Augustine), but he was not involved in the efforts of the humanists (including Erasmus and Sir Thomas More) to revive the classical languages and authors.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Classical Greek and Latin, and biblical Hebrew. "Exquisite travail": careful work.Return to reference 4

- Note 5: The Scholastic philosophers (“schoolmen”) used the living Latin of the Middle Ages, wrenching the language yet further from classical norms in applying it to subtle philosophical matters; the humanists denounced the Scholastics’ Latin as barbarous and sought instead to imitate classical models, especially Cicero.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: “This people who knoweth not the law are cursed” (John 7:49).Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Worth and demand.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Copiousness. “Affectionate”: affected.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Figurative language.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Jeronimo Osorio (1506–1580) wrote a history of Portuguese conquests in a flowing style that caused him to be known as the Portuguese Cicero. His contemporary, Johann Sturm, edited texts of Cicero and the Greek rhetorician Hermogenes; his “book of periods” was a rhetorical handbook.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Nicholas Carr was professor of Greek at Cambridge; Roger Ascham was tutor to Queen Elizabeth and author of The Schoolmaster. Both admired the rhetorical polish of the Roman orator Cicero and the Greek orator Demosthenes.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: “I spent ten years in reading Cicero.” Echo answers, “Ass!” The joke is in the Colloquies of Erasmus.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Elegant phrasing rather than profundity.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: More or less, depending on circumstances.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Illuminated that is illustrated, as with elaborate initial capitals. Royal grants (“patents”) were also engrossed with fancy initial letters.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Pygmalion’s “frenzy” (delirium) was to fall in love with a statue he had carved of a beautiful woman.Return to reference 7

- Note 8: “You’re nothing holy.” Adonis was the lover (“minion”) of Venus, deified after his death while boar hunting.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Hercules early in life was offered a choice between a life of ignoble ease and sensory delights and one of strenuous virtue. He chose the latter, and so do his followers in learning.Return to reference 9

From Novum Organum*<sup>1</sup>

19

There are and can be only two ways of searching into and discovering truth. The one flies from the senses and particulars to the most general axioms, and from these principles, the truth of which it takes for settled and immovable, proceeds to judgment and to the discovery of middle axioms.<sup>2</sup> And this way is now in fashion. The other derives from the senses and particulars, rising by a gradual and unbroken ascent, so that it arrives at the most general axioms last of all.<sup>3</sup> This is the true way, but as yet untried.

* * *

22

Both ways set out from the senses and particulars, and rest in the highest generalities, but the difference between them is infinite. For the one just glances at experiment and particulars in passing, the other dwells duly and orderly among them. The one, again, begins at once by establishing certain abstract and useless generalities, the other rises by gradual steps to that which is prior and better known in the order of nature.

* * *

38

The idols and false notions which are now in possession of the human understanding and have taken deep root therein, not only so beset men's minds that truth can hardly find entrance, but even after entrance is obtained, they will again in the very instauration<sup>4</sup> of the sciences meet and trouble us, unless men being forewarned of the danger fortify themselves as far as may be against their assaults.

* * *

41

The Idols of the Tribe have their foundation in human nature itself, and in the tribe or race of men. For it is a false assertion that the sense of man is the measure of things. On the contrary, all perceptions as well of the sense as of the mind are according to the measure of the individual and not according to the measure of the universe. And the human understanding is like a false mirror, which, receiving rays irregularly, distorts and discolours the nature of things by mingling its own nature with it.

42

The Idols of the Cave are the idols of the individual man. For everyone (besides the errors common to human nature in general) has a cave or den of his own, which refracts and discolours the light of nature, owing either to his own proper and peculiar nature, or to his education and conversation with others, or to the reading of books, and the authority of those whom he esteems and admires; or to the difference of impressions, accordingly as they take place in a mind preoccupied and predisposed or in a mind indifferent and settled, or the like. So that the spirit of man (according as it is meted out to different individuals) is in fact a thing variable and full of perturbation, and governed as it were by chance. Whence it was well observed by Heraclitus<sup>5</sup> that men look for sciences in their own lesser worlds, and not in the greater or common world.

43

There are also idols formed by the intercourse and association of men with each other, which I call Idols of the Marketplace, on account of the commerce and consort of men there. For it is by discourse that men associate, and words are imposed according to the apprehension of the vulgar. And therefore the fit and unfit choice of words wonderfully obstructs the understanding. Nor do the definitions or explanations wherewith in some things learned men are wont to guard and defend themselves, by any means set the matter right. But words plainly force and overrule the understanding, and throw all into confusion, and lead men away into numberless empty controversies and idle fancies.

44

Lastly, there are idols which have immigrated into men's minds from the various dogmas of philosophies, and also from wrong laws of demonstration. These I call Idols of the Theater, because in my judgment all the received systems are but so many stage plays, representing worlds of their own creation after an unreal and scenic fashion. Nor is it only of the systems now in vogue or only of the ancient sects and philosophies that I speak; for many more plays of the same kind may yet be composed and in like artificial manner set forth, seeing that errors the most widely different have nevertheless causes for the most part alike. Neither again do I mean this only of entire systems, but also of the many principles and axioms in science, which by tradition, credulity, and negligence have come to be received.

* * *

59

But the Idols of the Marketplace are the most troublesome of all: idols which have crept into the understanding through the alliances of words and names. For men believe that their reason governs words; but it is also true that words react on the understanding; and this it is that has rendered philosophy and the sciences sophistical and inactive. Now words, being commonly framed and applied according to the capacity of the vulgar, follow those lines of division which are most obvious to the vulgar understanding. And whenever an understanding of greater acuteness or a more diligent observation would alter those lines to suit the true divisions of nature, words stand in the way and resist the change. Whence it comes to pass that the high and formal discussions of learned men end oftentimes in disputes about words and names; with which (according to the use<sup>6</sup> and wisdom of the mathematicians) it would be more prudent to begin, and so by means of definitions reduce them to order. Yet even definitions cannot cure this evil in dealing with natural and material things; since the definitions themselves consist of words, and those words beget others;<sup>7</sup> so that it is necessary to recur to individual instances, and those in due series and order; as I shall say presently when I come to the method and scheme for the formation of notions and axioms.

60

The idols imposed by words on the understanding are of two kinds. They are either names of things which do not exist (for as there are things left unnamed through lack of observation, so likewise are there names which result from fantastic suppositions and to which nothing in reality corresponds), or they are names of things which exist, but yet confused and ill-defined, and hastily and irregularly derived from realities. Of the former kind are Fortune, the Prime Mover, Planetary Orbits, Element of Fire, and like fictions which owe their origin to false and idle theories.<sup>8</sup> And this class of idols is more easily expelled, because to get rid of them it is only necessary that all theories should be steadily rejected and dismissed as obsolete.<sup>9</sup>

But the other class, which springs out of a faulty and unskillful abstraction, is intricate and deeply rooted. Let us take for example such a word as humid; and see how far the several things which the word is used to signify agree with each other; and we shall find the word humid to be nothing else than a mark loosely and confusedly applied to denote a variety of actions which will not bear to be reduced to any constant meaning. For it both signifies that which easily spreads itself round any other body; and that which in itself is indeterminate and cannot solidize; and that which readily yields in every direction; and that which easily divides and scatters itself; and that which easily unites and collects itself; and that which readily flows and is put in motion; and that which readily clings to another body and wets it; and that which is easily reduced to a liquid, or being solid easily melts. Accordingly when you come to apply the word—if you take it in one sense, flame is humid; if in another, air is not humid; if in another, fine dust is humid; if in another, glass is humid. So that it is easy to see that the notion is taken by abstraction only from water and common and ordinary liquids, without any due verification.

There are however in words certain degrees of distortion and error. One of the least faulty kinds is that of names of substances, especially of lowest species and well-deduced (for the notion of chalk and of mud is good, of earth bad); a more faulty kind is that of actions, as to generate, to corrupt, to alter; the most faulty is of qualities (except such as are the immediate objects of the sense), as heavy, light, rare, dense, and the like. Yet in all these cases some notions are of necessity a little better than others, in proportion to the greater variety of subjects that fall within the range of the human sense.

* * *

62

Idols of the Theater, or of systems, are many, and there can be and perhaps will be yet many more. For were it not that now for many ages men's minds have been busied with religion and theology; and were it not that civil governments, especially monarchies, have been averse to such novelties, even in matters speculative, so that men labor therein to the peril and harming of their fortunes, not only unrewarded, but exposed also to contempt and envy; doubtless there would have arisen many other philosophical sects like to those which in great variety flourished once among the Greeks. For as on the phenomena of the heavens many hypotheses may be constructed, so likewise (and more also) many various dogmas may be set up and established on the phenomena of philosophy. And in the plays of this philosophical theater you may observe the same thing which is found in the theater of the poets, that stories invented for the stage are more compact and elegant, and more as one would wish them to be, than true stories out of history.

In general, however, there is taken for the material of philosophy either a great deal out of a few things, or a very little out of many things; so that on both sides philosophy is based on too narrow a foundation of experiment and natural history, and decides on the authority of too few cases. For the rational school of philosophers snatches from experience a variety of common instances, neither duly ascertained nor diligently examined and weighed, and leaves all the rest to meditation and agitation of wit.<sup>1</sup>

There is also another class of philosophers, who having bestowed much diligent and careful labor on a few experiments, have thence made bold to educe and construct systems; wresting all other facts in a strange fashion to conformity therewith.

And there is yet a third class, consisting of those who out of faith and veneration mix their philosophy with theology and traditions; among whom the vanity of some has gone so far aside as to seek the origin of sciences among spirits and genii.<sup>2</sup> So that this parent stock of errors—this false philosophy—is of three kinds: the sophistical, the empirical, and the superstitious.

* * *

68

So much concerning the several classes of idols, and their equipage: all of which must be renounced and put away with a fixed and solemn determination, and the understanding thoroughly freed and cleansed; the entrance into the kingdom of man, founded on the sciences, being not much other than the entrance into the kingdom of heaven, whereinto none may enter except as a little child.

Endnotes

- Note 1:
Novum Organum, or “The New Instrument of Learning,” was written not in English but in Latin, for an international scholarly audience. Nonetheless it requires our attention here, as it is the keystone of Bacon’s vast project to reform the structure of human learning from the ground up. His reform called for careful observation of all aspects of nature and controlled experiment, but the first part of the book analyzes the stumbling blocks in the way—among them, famously, the various “idols,” or delusive images of truth, that lead people away from the exact knowledge of science.
Return to reference 1
- Note 2: The deductive method, associated with Aristotle and the Scholastic philosophers.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: The inductive method that Bacon here champions.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Renovation, renewal.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Greek philosopher (active ca. 500 B.C.E.) who considered knowledge to be based on perception by the senses and thought that everything was in flux.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Custom.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Bacon’s mistrust of words helped prompt the Royal Society (founded in 1645) to cultivate a plain prose style for scientific communication.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: The “Prime Mover” was a transparent sphere on the outside of the universe, supposed to move all the other spheres; the “Element of Fire” was an area of pure, invisible fire, supposed to exist above the atmosphere. By “Planetary Orbits” Bacon may be referring to the old notion of crystalline spheres in which the planets were supposed to be set. Obviously, these concepts could be based on no observation.Return to reference 8

- Note 9: Bacon means “theories” not in the inclusive modern sense, but “abstractions loosely invoked to explain particular facts.”Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Bacon’s enthusiasm for experiment at times led him to denigrate the value of reason, but what he chiefly opposes here is the excessive concern with logic he finds in the Scholastic philosophers.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Guardian spirits of a place.Return to reference 2

From The New Atlantis*<sup>1</sup>

[SOLOMON'S HOUSE]

We came at our day and hour, and I was chosen by my fellows for the private access.<sup>2</sup> We found him in a fair chamber, richly hanged, and carpeted under foot, without any degrees to the state.<sup>3</sup> He was set upon a low throne richly adorned, and a rich cloth of state over his head, of blue satin embroidered. He was alone, save that he had two pages of honor, on either hand one, finely attired in white. His undergarments were the like that we saw him wear in the chariot;<sup>4</sup> but instead of his gown, he had on him a mantle with a cape of the same fine black, fastened about him. When we came in, as we were taught, we bowed low at our first entrance, and when we were come near his chair, he stood up, holding forth his hand ungloved and in posture of blessing; and we every one of us stooped down, and kissed the hem of his tippet.<sup>5</sup> That done, the rest departed, and I remained. Then he warned the pages forth of the room, and caused me to sit down beside him, and spake to me thus in the Spanish tongue:

"God bless thee, my son; I will give thee the greatest jewel I have. For I will impart unto thee, for the love of God and men, a relation of the true state of Solomon's House. Son, to make you know the true state of Solomon's House, I will keep this order. First, I will set forth unto you the end of our foundation. Secondly, the preparations and instruments we have for our works. Thirdly, the several employments and functions whereto our fellows are assigned. And fourthly, the ordinances and rites which we observe.

"The end of our foundation is the knowledge of causes, and secret motions of things; and the enlarging of the bounds of human empire, to the effecting of all things possible.

"The preparations and instruments are these. We have large and deep caves of several depths: the deepest are sunk six hundred fathom; and some of them are digged and made under great hills and mountains; so that if you reckon together the depth of the hill and the depth of the cave, they are, some of them, above three miles deep. For we find that the depth of a hill, and the depth of a cave from the flat, is the same thing; both remote alike from the sun and heaven's beams, and from the open air. These caves we call the Lower Region, and we use them for all coagulations, indurations,<sup>6</sup> refrigerations, and conservations of bodies. We use them likewise for the imitation of natural mines, and the producing also of new artificial metals, by compositions and materials which we use, and lay there for many years. We use them also sometimes (which may seem strange) for curing of some diseases, and for prolongation of life in some hermits that choose to live there, well accommodated of<sup>7</sup> all things necessary, and indeed live very long; by whom also we learn many things.

"We have burials in several earths, where we put divers cements,<sup>8</sup> as the Chinese do their porcelain. But we have them in greater variety, and some of them more fine. We have also great variety of composts and soils, for the making of the earth fruitful.

"We have high towers, the highest about half a mile in height, and some of them likewise set upon high mountains, so that the vantage of the hill, with the tower, is in the highest of them three miles at least. And these places we call the Upper Region, accounting the air between the high places and the low as a Middle Region. We use these towers, according to their several heights and situations, for insolation,<sup>9</sup> refrigeration, conservation, and for the view of divers meteors—as winds, rain, snow, hail; and some of the fiery meteors<sup>1</sup> also. And upon them, in some places, are dwellings of hermits, whom we visit sometimes, and instruct what to observe.

"We have great lakes, both salt and fresh, whereof we have use for the fish and fowl. We use them also for burials of some natural bodies, for we find a difference in things buried in earth, or in air below the earth, and things buried in water. We have also pools, of which some do strain fresh water out of salt, and others by art do turn fresh water into salt. We have also some rocks in the midst of the sea, and some bays upon the shore, for some works wherein is required the air and vapor of the sea. We have likewise violent streams and cataracts, which serve us for many motions; and likewise engines for multiplying and enforcing<sup>2</sup> of winds to set also on going divers motions.

"We have also a number of artificial wells and fountains, made in imitation of the natural sources and baths, as tinted upon<sup>3</sup> vitriol, sulphur, steel, brass, lead, niter, and other minerals; and again, we have little wells for infusions of many things, where the waters take the virtue<sup>4</sup> quicker and better than in vessels or basins. And amongst them we have a water which we call Water of Paradise, being by that we do to it, made very sovereign<sup>5</sup> for health and prolongation of life.

"We have also great and spacious houses, where we imitate and demonstrate meteors—as snow, hail, rain, some artificial rains of bodies and not of water, thunders, lightnings; also generations of bodies in air—as frogs, flies, and divers others.

"We have also certain chambers, which we call Chambers of Health, where we qualify<sup>6</sup> the air as we think good and proper for the cure of divers diseases and preservation of health.

"We have also fair and large baths, of several mixtures, for the cure of diseases and the restoring of man's body from arefaction;<sup>7</sup> and others for the confirming of it in strength of sinews, vital parts, and the very juice and substance of the body.

"We have also large and various orchards and gardens, wherein we do not so much respect beauty as variety of ground and soil, proper for divers trees and herbs, and some very spacious, where trees and berries are set, whereof we make divers kinds of drinks, besides the vineyards. In these we practice likewise all conclusions<sup>8</sup> of grafting and inoculating, as well of wild trees as fruit trees, which produceth many effects. And we make (by art) in the same orchards and gardens trees and flowers to come earlier or later than their seasons, and to come up and bear more speedily than by their natural course they do. We make them also by art greater much than their nature; and their fruit greater and sweeter, and of differing taste, smell, color, and figure, from their nature. And many of them we so order as they become of medicinal use.

"We have also means to make divers plants rise by mixtures of earths without seeds, and likewise to make divers new plants, differing from the vulgar,<sup>9</sup> and to make one tree or plant turn into another.

"We have also parks and enclosures of all sorts of beasts and birds; which we use not only for view or rareness, but likewise for dissections and trials,<sup>1</sup> that thereby we may take light what may be wrought upon the body of man. Wherein we find many strange effects: as continuing life in them, though divers parts, which you account vital, be perished and taken forth; resuscitating of some that seem dead in appearance; and the like. We try also all poisons and other medicines upon them, as well of chirurgery<sup>2</sup> as physic. By art likewise, we make them greater or taller than their kind is, and contrariwise dwarf them and stay their growth; we make them more fruitful and bearing than their kind is, and contrariwise barren and not generative. Also, we make them differ in color, shape, activity, many ways. We find means to make commixtures and copulations of different kinds, which have produced many new kinds,<sup>3</sup> and them not barren, as the general opinion is. We make a number of kinds of serpents, worms, fishes, flies, of putrefaction, whereof some are advanced (in effect) to be perfect creatures, like beasts or birds, and have sexes, and do propagate. Neither do we this by chance, but we know beforehand of what matter and commixture what kind of those creatures will arise.

"We have also particular pools where we make trials upon fishes, as we have said before of beasts and birds.

"We have also places for breed and generation of those kinds of worms and flies which are of special use; such as are with you your silkworms and bees."<sup>4</sup>

* * *

"For the several employments and offices of our fellows, we have twelve that sail into foreign countries under the names of other nations (for our own we conceal), who bring us the books and abstracts and patterns of experiments of all other parts. These we call Merchants of Light.

"We have three that collect the experiments which are in all books. These we call Depredators.

"We have three that collect the experiments of all mechanical arts, and also of liberal sciences, and also of practices which are not brought into arts. These we call Mystery-men.

"We have three that try new experiments, such as themselves think good. These we call Pioneers or Miners.

"We have three that draw the experiments of the former four into titles and tables, to give the better light for the drawing of observations and axioms out of them. These we call Compilers.

"We have three that bend themselves, looking into the experiments of their fellows, and cast about how to draw out of them things of use and practice for man's life and knowledge, as well for works as for plain demonstration of causes, means of natural divinations, and the easy and clear discovery of the virtues and parts of bodies. These we call Dowry-men or Benefactors.

"Then after divers meetings and consults of our whole number, to consider of the former labors and collections, we have three that take care out of them to direct new experiments, of a higher light, more penetrating into nature than the former. These we call Lamps.

"We have three others that do execute the experiments so directed, and report them. These we call Inoculators.

"Lastly, we have three that raise the former discoveries by experiments into greater observations, axioms, and aphorisms. These we call Interpreters of Nature.

"We have also, as you must think, novices and apprentices, that the succession of the former employed men do not fail; besides a great number of servants and attendants, men and women. And this

we do also: we have consultations, which of the inventions and experiences which we have discovered shall be published, and which not; and take all an oath of secrecy for the concealing of those which we think fit to keep secret; though some of those we do reveal sometimes to the State, and some not.<sup>5</sup>

"For our ordinances and rites, we have two very long and fair galleries: in one of these we place patterns and samples of all manner of the more rare and excellent inventions; in the other we place the statues of all principal inventors. There we have the statue of your Columbus, that discovered the West Indies; also the inventor of ships; your monk that was the inventor of ordnance and of gunpowder;<sup>6</sup> the inventor of music; the inventor of letters; the inventor of printing; the inventor of observations of astronomy; the inventor of works in metal; the inventor of glass; the inventor of silk of the worm; the inventor of wine; the inventor of corn and bread; the inventor of sugars; and all these by more certain tradition than you have. Then we have divers inventors of our own, of excellent works, which since you have not seen, it were too long to make descriptions of them; and besides, in the right understanding of those descriptions you might easily err. For upon every invention of value we erect a statue to the inventor, and give him a liberal and honorable reward. These statues are some of brass, some of marble and touchstone,<sup>7</sup> some of cedar and other special woods gilt and adorned; some of iron, some of silver, some of gold.

"We have certain hymns and services, which we say daily, of laud and thanks to God for his marvelous works; and forms of prayer, imploring his aid and blessing for the illumination of our labors, and the turning of them into good and holy uses.

"Lastly, we have circuits or visits of divers principal cities of the kingdom; where, as it cometh to pass, we do publish such new profitable inventions as we think good. And we do also declare natural divinations of diseases, plagues, swarms of hurtful creatures, scarcity, tempests, earthquakes, great inundations, comets, temperature of the year, and divers other things; and we give counsel thereupon, what the people shall do for the prevention and remedy of them.”

And when he had said this he stood up; and I, as I had been taught, kneeled down; and he laid his right hand upon my head, and said, “God bless thee, my son, and God bless this relation which I have made. I give thee leave to publish it, for the good of other nations; for we here are in God’s bosom, a land unknown.” And so he left me; having assigned a value of about two thousand ducats for a bounty to me and my fellows. For they give great largesses, where they come, upon all occasions.

The rest was not perfected.

1627

Endnotes

- Note 1:
Thomas More’s Utopia (1516) set a fashion for accounts of imaginary communities with more or less ideal forms of government. Bacon’s imaginary community has at its center an account of a research establishment, Solomon’s House, that could exist in any society; indeed a version of it was established in England in 1662 as the Royal Society. Bacon’s title alludes to the legendary island and ideal commonwealth in the Atlantic Ocean described by Plato in Critias; in the 17th century it was sometimes located in the New World. Bacon places his island, Bensalem, in the Pacific, roughly where the Solomon Islands had been discovered in 1568. After an imaginary journey the nameless narrator and his shipmates discover an island cut off from Hebrew and Greek civilization (though given a special revelation of Christianity) and thereby freed to focus on the development of science.

Return to reference 1

- Note 2: Audience with one of the scientific “Fathers” of Solomon’s House.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Without stairs leading up to the dais.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: He had made a triumphal entry into the city the previous day, wearing an undergarment of white linen and a black robe.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Scarf.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Hardenings.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Provided with.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Clays and pottery mixtures.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Exposure to the sun.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Anything that fell from the sky was, in Renaissance terminology, a meteor.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Reinforcing, strengthening.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Tinctured with.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Property (of the substances put into water).Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Efficacious.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Modify.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Drying up.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Experiments.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Ordinary.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Experiments.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Surgery.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Species. It was commonly supposed that all hybrids were sterile (see following).Return to reference 3
- Note 4: The narrator continues to describe the various bakeries, vineyards, breweries, and kitchens operated by Solomon’s House. He enumerates the medicines discovered there, as well as various experiments with heat. The researchers study light, sound, perfumes, mechanics, mathematics, and all ways of deceiving the senses.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Bacon allows his scientists considerable autonomy in relation to the state.Return to reference 5

- Note 6: Tradition credited Roger Bacon, a 13th-century monk, with the discovery of to gunpowder.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: A hard basaltic-type rock.Return to reference 7

GEORGE HERBERT

1593–1633

George Herbert's style in his volume of religious poetry, The Temple, is deceptively simple and graceful, especially compared to the learned, witty style of his friend John Donne. But it is also marked by self-irony, a remarkable intellectual and emotional range, and an artistry evident in the poems' tight construction, exact diction, perfect control of tone, and enormously varied stanzaic forms and rhythmic patterns. These poems reflect Herbert's struggle to define his (or his speaker's) relationship to God through biblical metaphors invested with the tensions of relationships familiar in his own society: king and subject, lord and courtier, master and servant, landlord and tenant, father and child, bridegroom and bride, and friends of unequal status. None of Herbert's secular English poems survives, so his reputation rests on this single volume, which was published posthumously. The Temple contains a long prefatory poem, "The Church-Porch," and a long concluding poem, "Church Militant," which together enclose a collection of 177 short lyrics titled The Church, among which are sonnets, songs, hymns, laments, meditative poems, dialogue poems, acrostic poems, emblematic poems, and more. Herbert describes his collection as "a picture of the many spiritual conflicts that have passed between God and my soul." Herbert's early biographer Izaak Walton reports that Herbert gave the manuscript to his friend Nicholas Farrar, head of a quasi-monastic community at Little Gidding, with instructions to publish it if he thought it would “turn to the advantage of any dejected poor soul” and otherwise to burn it. Fortunately, Farrar chose to publish, and The Temple became the major influence on the religious lyric poets of the Caroline age, including Henry Vaughan, Richard Crashaw, Thomas Traherne, Hester Pulter, and the American colonial poet Edward Taylor.

The fifth son of an eminent Welsh family, Herbert (and his nine siblings) had an upbringing carefully monitored by his mother, Magdalen Herbert, patron and friend of Donne and several other scholars and poets. Herbert was educated at Westminster School and at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he subsequently held a fellowship and wrote Latin poetry: elegies on the death of Prince Henry (1612), witty epigrams, poems on Christ’s Passion and death, and poems defending the rites of the English church. In 1620 he was appointed “public orator,” the official spokesman and correspondent for the university. This was a step toward a career at court or in public service, as was his election as the member of Parliament from Montgomery in 1624. But that route was closed off by the death of influential patrons and the change of monarchs. Like Donne, Herbert hesitated for some years before being ordained, but in 1630 he took up pastoral duties in the small country parish at Bemerton in Wiltshire. Whereas Donne preached to monarchs and statesmen, Herbert ministered to a few cottagers, and none of his sermons survive. His small book on the duties of his new life, A Priest to the Temple; or, The Country Parson, testifies to the earnestness and joy but also the aristocratic uneasiness with which he embraced that role. In chronic bad health, he lived only three more years—assiduously performing pastoral duties, writing and revising his poems, playing music, and listening to the organ and choir at nearby Salisbury Cathedral.

Herbert locates himself in the church through many poems that treat church liturgy, architecture, and art—for example, “Church Monuments” and “The Windows”—but his primary emphasis is always on the soul’s inner architecture. Unlike Donne, Herbert does not voice fears about his salvation or about his desperate sins; his anxieties center rather on his relationship with Christ. Many poems register the speaker's distress over the vacillations and regressions in this relationship, over his lack of "fruition" in God's service, and over the instability of his own nature. In several dialogic poems the speaker's difficulties are alleviated by the voice of a divine friend heard within or recalled through scripture (as in "The Collar"). In one memorable line, the speaker compares his thoughts to "a case of knives." In poem after poem he has to come to terms with the fact that his relationship with Christ is always radically unequal, that Christ must both initiate it and enable his own response. The final poem in "The Church," "Love (3)," stages this agonistic drama with unmatched, compact power. Herbert also struggles with the paradox that, as the work of a Christian poet, his poetry ought to give fit praise to God but cannot possibly do so—an issue explored in "The Altar," the two "Jordan" poems, "Easter," "The Forerunners," and many others.

The motto of this emblem by George Wither, "The Sacrifice, God loveth best, / Are Broken-hearts, for Sin, opprest," is also the subject of Herbert's "The Altar."

---

Herbert's recourse is to develop a biblical poetics that renounces conventional poetic styles—"fictions" and "false hair"—to depend instead on God's "art" wrought in his own soul and displayed in the language and symbolism of the Bible. He makes scant use of Donnean learned imagery, but his scriptural allusions carry profound significances. A biblical metaphor provides the unifying motif for the volume: the New Testament temple in the human heart (1 Corinthians 3:16). Another recurring biblical metaphor represents the Christian as plant or tree or flower in God's garden, in need of pruning, rain, and nurture. Herbert was profoundly influenced by the genre of the emblem, which typically associated mysterious but meaningful pictures and mottoes with explanatory text. Shaped poems like "The Altar" and "Easter Wings" present image and picture at once; others, like "The Windows," resemble emblem commentary. Other poems allude to typological symbolism, which interprets people and events in the Hebrew Bible (to Christians, the "Old Testament") as types or foreshadowings of Christ. Often, as in "The Bunch of Grapes," Herbert locates both type and antitype in the speaker's soul.

FROM THE TEMPLE<sup>1</sup>

Endnotes

- Note 1: The title of Herbert's volume sets his poems in relation to David's psalms for the Temple at Jerusalem; his are "psalms" for the New Testament temple in the heart. All of the following poems come from this volume, published in 1633.Return to reference 1

The Altar<sup>2</sup>

A broken ALTAR, Lord, thy servant rears,
Made of a heart, and cemented with tears:
Whose parts are as thy hand did frame;
No workman's tool hath touched the same.<sup>3</sup>

5                   A   HEART   alone
Is such a stone,
As nothing but
Thy power doth cut.
Wherefore each part
Of my hard heart
10               Meets in this frame,
To praise thy Name:
That, if I chance to hold my peace,
These stones to praise thee may not cease.<sup>4</sup>
Oh let thy blessed SACRIFICE be mine,
15       And sanctify this ALTAR to be thine.

Endnotes

- Note 2: A variety of emblem poem. Emblems customarily have three parts: a picture, a motto, and a poem. This kind collapses picture and poem into one, presenting the emblem image by its very shape. Shaped poems have been used by authors from Hellenistic times to Susan Howe. Return to reference 2
- Note 3: A reference to Exodus 20:25, in which the Lord enjoins Moses to build an altar of uncut stones, not touched by any tool, and also to Psalm 51:17: "a broken and a contrite heart, O God, thou wilt not despise." Return to reference 3
- Note 4: A reference to Luke 19:40: "I tell you that, if these should hold their peace, the stones would immediately cry out."

Herbert's poems obtain much of their resonance from their biblical echoes. Return to reference 4

Redemption<sup>1</sup>

Having been tenant long to a rich lord,
Not thriving, I resolvèd to be bold,
And make a suit unto him, to afford
A new small-rented lease, and cancel th' old.<sup>2</sup>

5 In heaven at his manor I him sought:
They told me there that he was lately gone
About some land which he had dearly bought
Long since on earth, to take possession.

10 I straight<sup>o</sup> returned, and knowing his great birth,
Sought him accordingly in great resorts—
In cities, theaters, gardens, parks, and courts:
At length I heard a ragged noise and mirth
Of thieves and murderers; there I him espied,
Who straight, "Your suit is granted," said, and died.

Endnotes

- Note 1: Literally, "buying back." In this beautifully concise sonnet Herbert figures God as a landlord, himself as a discontented tenant.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: That is, to ask him for a new lease, with a smaller rent; the figure points to the New Testament supplanting the Old.Return to reference 2

Notes

- <sup>o</sup>: at onceReturn to reference <sup>o</sup>

Easter<sup>1</sup>

Rise, heart, thy lord is risen. Sing his praise
Without delays,
Who takes thee by the hand, that thou likewise
With him may'st rise;
5 That, as his death calcinèd<sup>o</sup> thee to dust,
His life may make thee gold, and, much more, just.

Awake, my lute, and struggle for thy part
With all thy art.
The cross taught all wood to resound his name
Who bore the same.
10 His stretchèd sinews taught all strings what key
Is best to celebrate this most high day.

Consort, both heart and lute, and twist<sup>2</sup> a song
Pleasant and long;
15 Or, since all music is but three parts vied<sup>3</sup>
And multiplied,
Oh let thy blessèd spirit bear a part,
And make up our defects with his sweet art.

The Song

I got me flowers to straw<sup>o</sup> thy way,<sup>4</sup>
I got me boughs off many a tree;
20 But thou wast up by break of day
And brought'st thy sweets along with thee.

The sun arising in the east,
Though he give light and th' east perfume,
If they should offer to contest

25 With thy arising, they presume.
Can there be any day but this,
Though many suns to shine endeavor?
We count three hundred, but we miss:°
30 There is but one, and that one ever.

Endnotes

- Note 1: The first three stanzas work out the poetics of writing hymns; then comes the hymn itself.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Weave. "Consort": harmonize.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Increased by repetition. Harmony is based on the triad, the chord.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: This evokes the scene of Christ's entry into Jerusalem (Matthew 21:8).Return to reference 4

Notes

- °: burned to powderReturn to reference °
- °: strewReturn to reference °
- °: misunderstandReturn to reference °

Easter Wings<sup>1</sup>

Lord, who createdst man in wealth and store,<sup>o</sup>
Though foolishly he lost the same,
Decaying more and more
Till he became
Most poor:
5 With thee
O let me rise
As larks, harmoniously,
And sing this day thy victories:
10 Then shall the fall further the flight in me.<sup>2</sup>
My tender age in sorrow did begin:
And still with sicknesses and shame
Thou didst so punish sin,
That I became 15 Most thin.
With thee
Let me combine,
And feel this day thy victory;
For, if I imp<sup>3</sup> my wing on thine,
20 Affliction shall advance the flight in me.

Endnotes

- Note 1: Another emblem poem whose shape presents the emblem picture; the lines, increasing and decreasing, imitate flight, and also the spiritual experience of falling and rising. Early editions printed the poem with the lines running vertically, making the wing shape more apparent. Return to reference 1

- Note 2: A reference to the “Fortunate Fall,” which brought humankind so great a redeemer.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: In falconry, to insert feathers in a bird’s wing.Return to reference 3

Notes

- °: abundanceReturn to reference °

Affliction (1)<sup>1</sup>

When first thou didst entice to thee my heart,
I thought the service brave:<sup>o</sup>
So many joys I writ down for my part,
Besides what I might have 5 Out of my stock of natural delights,
Augmented with thy gracious benefits.

I lookèd on thy furniture so fine,
And made it fine to me;
Thy glorious household stuff did me entwine,
And 'tice<sup>o</sup> me unto thee.
10 Such stars I counted mine: both heaven and earth
Paid me my wages in a world of mirth.

What pleasures could I want,<sup>o</sup> whose king I served,
Where joys my fellows were?
Thus argued into hopes, my thoughts reserved
15 No place for grief or fear;
Therefore my sudden soul caught at the place,
And made her youth and fierceness seek thy face.

At first thou gav'st me milk and sweetnesses;
I had my wish and way:
20 My days were strawed<sup>o</sup> with flowers and happiness;
There was no month but May.
But with my years sorrow did twist and grow,
And made a party unawares<sup>o</sup> for woe.

My flesh began unto<sup>o</sup> my soul in pain,
25 Sickneses cleave<sup>o</sup> my bones;
Consuming agues<sup>o</sup> dwell in every vein,

And tune my breath to groans.
Sorrow was all my soul; I scarce believed,
Till grief did tell me roundly, that I lived.

30

When I got health, thou took'st away my life,
And more; for my friends die:
My mirth and edge was lost: a blunted knife
Was of more use than I.

35

Thus thin and lean without a fence or friend,
I was blown through with every storm and wind.

Whereas my birth and spirit rather took
The way that takes the town,
Thou didst betray me to a lingering book,
And wrap me in a gown.◊

40

I was entangled in the world of strife,
Before I had the power to change my life.

Yet, for I threatened oft the siege to raise,
Not simpering all mine age,
Thou often didst with academic praise
Melt and dissolve my rage.

45

I took thy sweetened pill, till I came where
I could not go away, nor persevere.

Yet lest perchance I should too happy be
In my unhappiness,
Turning my purge◊ to food, thou throwest me
Into more sicknesses.

50

Thus doth thy power cross-bias me,◊ not making
Thine own gift good, yet me from my ways taking.

Now I am here, what thou wilt do with me
None of my books will show:
I read, and sigh, and wish I were a tree,
For sure then I should grow

55

60 To fruit or shade; at least, some bird would trust
Her household to me, and I should be just.

Yet, though thou troublest me, I must be meek;
In weakness must be stout.
Well, I will change the service, and go seek
Some other master out.

65 Ah, my dear God! though I am clean forgot,
Let me not love thee, if I love thee not.

Endnotes

- Note 1: Herbert sometimes used the same title for several poems, thereby associating them; editors distinguish them by adding numbers. Return to reference 1

Notes

- °: splendid Return to reference °
- °: entice Return to reference °
- °: lack Return to reference °
- °: strewn Return to reference °
- °: unwittingly Return to reference °
- °: started complaining to Return to reference °
- °: penetrate Return to reference °
- °: fevers with convulsions Return to reference °
- °: priest's garb Return to reference °
- °: laxative Return to reference °
- °: turn me from my aim Return to reference °

Prayer (1)<sup>1</sup>

Prayer, the church's banquet; angels' age,
God's breath in man returning to his birth;
The soul in paraphrase,<sup>2</sup> heart in pilgrimage;
The Christian plummet,<sup>3</sup> sounding heaven and earth;

5 Engine against th' Almighty, sinner's tower,
Reversed thunder, Christ-side-piercing spear,
The six-days' world transposing<sup>4</sup> in an hour;
A kind of tune which all things hear and fear:

10 Softness and peace and joy and love and bliss;
Exalted manna,<sup>5</sup> gladness of the best;
Heaven in ordinary,<sup>6</sup> man well dressed,
The milky way, the bird of paradise,

Church bells beyond the stars heard, the soul's
blood,
The land of spices; something understood.

Endnotes

- Note 1: This extraordinary sonnet is a series of epithets without a main verb, defining prayer by metaphor.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Clarifying by expansion.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: A weight used to measure ("sound") the depth of water.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: A musical term indicating sounds produced at another pitch from the original.Return to reference 4

- Note 5: The food God supplied to the Israelites in the wilderness (Exodus 16:4–35); it became a Christian symbol for the Eucharist.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: That is, everyday heaven.Return to reference 6

Jordan (1)<sup>1</sup>

Who says that fictions only and false hair
Become a verse? Is there in truth no beauty?
Is all good structure in a winding stair?
May no lines pass, except they do their duty<sup>o</sup>
5       Not to a true, but painted chair?<sup>2</sup>

Is it no verse, except enchanted groves
And sudden<sup>3</sup> arbors shadow<sup>o</sup> coarse-spun lines?
Must purling<sup>o</sup> streams refresh a lover's loves?
Must all be veiled,<sup>4</sup> while he that reads, divines,
10       Catching the sense at two removes?

Shepherds<sup>5</sup> are honest people: let them sing;
Riddle who list,<sup>o</sup> for me, and pull for prime:<sup>6</sup>
I envy no man's nightingale or spring;
Nor let them punish me with loss of rhyme,
15       Who plainly say, My God, My King.<sup>7</sup>

Endnotes

- Note 1: The river Jordan, which the Israelites crossed to enter the Promised Land, was also taken as a symbol for baptism. Return to reference 1
- Note 2: It was the custom for men to bow before a throne, whether it was occupied or not (see Donne, "Satire 3," lines 47–48, p. 907), but to require bowing before a throne in a painting would be ridiculous. Return to reference 2
- Note 3: That is, that appear unexpectedly (an artificial effect much sought after in landscape gardening). Return to reference 3

- Note 4: As in allegory.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Conventional pastoral poets.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: To draw a lucky card in the game of primero. "For me": as far as I am concerned.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: An echo of Psalm 145:1: "my God, O king."Return to reference 7

Notes

- °: pay reverenceReturn to reference °
- °: shadeReturn to reference °
- °: ripplingReturn to reference °
- °: wishesReturn to reference °

Church Monuments<sup>1</sup>

While that my soul repairs to her devotion,
Here I entomb my flesh, that it betimes<sup>o</sup>
May take acquaintance of this heap of dust
To which the blast of death's incessant motion,
Fed with the exhalation of our crimes,
5 Drives all at last. Therefore I gladly trust

My body to this school, that it may learn
To spell his elements and find his birth
Written in dusty heraldry and lines<sup>o</sup>
Which dissolution sure doth best discern,
10 Comparing dust with dust and earth with earth.<sup>2</sup>
These laugh at jet and marble,<sup>3</sup> put for signs

To sever the good fellowship of dust
And spoil the meeting. What shall point out them<sup>4</sup>
When they shall bow and kneel and fall down flat
15 To kiss those heaps which now they have in trust?
Dear flesh, while I do pray, learn here thy stem
And true descent, that, when thou shalt grow fat

And wanton in thy cravings, thou mayest know
That flesh is but the glass<sup>o</sup> which holds the dust 20 That measures all our time, which also shall Be crumbled into dust. Mark here below
How tame these ashes are, how free from lust,
That thou mayest fit thyself against thy fall.

Endnotes

- Note 1: The earlier, manuscript version of the poem does not divide it into stanzas.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: An allusion to Genesis 3:19: “for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return.”Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Jet (black basalt) and marble are used for tomb monuments. “These”: that is, dust and earth.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: The inhabitants of the tombs.Return to reference 4

Notes

- °: while time remainsReturn to reference °
- °: engraving, genealogyReturn to reference °
- °: hourglassReturn to reference °

The Windows<sup>1</sup>

Lord, how can man preach thy eternal word?
He is a brittle, crazy<sup>o</sup> glass,
Yet in thy temple thou dost him afford
This glorious and transcendent place,
To be a window through thy grace.

5

But when thou dost anneal<sup>2</sup> in glass thy story, Making thy life to shine within
The holy preachers, then the light and glory
More reverend grows, and more doth win,
Which else shows wat'rish, bleak, and thin.

10

Doctrine and life, colors and light, in one
When they combine and mingle, bring
A strong regard and awe; but speech alone
Doth vanish like a flaring thing,
And in the ear, not conscience, ring.

15

Endnotes

- Note 1: From his little parish at Bemerton, Herbert used to walk twice a week across Salisbury Plain to the great cathedral, where he delighted not only in the music but in the stained glass windows. This poem explores how the preacher himself may become such a window.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Heat in order to color.Return to reference 2

Notes

- °: flawed, distortingReturn to reference °

Denial

When my devotions could not pierce
Thy silent ears,
Then was my heart broken, as was my verse;
My breast was full of fears
And disorder;<sup>1</sup>
5

My bent thoughts, like a brittle bow,
Did fly asunder:
Each took his way; some would to pleasures go,
Some to the wars and thunder
Of alarms.
10

As good go anywhere, they say,
As to benumb
Both knees and heart in crying night and day,
Come, come, my God, O come!
But no hearing.
15

O that thou shouldst give dust a tongue
To cry to thee,
And then not hear it crying! All day long
My heart was in my knee,
But no hearing.
20

Therefore my soul lay out of sight,
Untuned, unstrung;
My feeble spirit, unable to look right,
Like a nipped<sup>o</sup> blossom, hung Discontented.
25

O cheer and tune my heartless breast;

Defer no time,
That so thy favors granting my request,
They and my mind may chime,°
And mend my rhyme.

30

Endnotes

- Note 1: Unrhymed, as are the concluding lines of each stanza except the last. Return to reference 1

Notes

- °: frostbitten Return to reference °
- °: ring together, agree Return to reference °

Virtue

Sweet day, so cool, so calm, so bright,
The bridal of the earth and sky:
The dew shall weep thy fall tonight,
For thou must die.

5 Sweet rose, whose hue, angry and brave,<sup>1</sup>
Bids the rash gazer wipe his eye:
Thy root is ever in its grave,
And thou must die.

10 Sweet spring, full of sweet days and roses,
A box where sweets<sup>o</sup> compacted lie;
My music shows ye have your closes,<sup>2</sup>
And all must die.

15 Only a sweet and virtuous soul,
Like seasoned timber, never gives;
But though the whole world turn to coal,<sup>3</sup>
Then chiefly lives.

Endnotes

- Note 1: Splendid. "Angry": having the hue of anger, red.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Concluding cadences in music. This poem has often been set to music.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Will be reduced to a cinder at the Last Judgment.Return to reference 3

Notes

- °: perfumes Return to reference °

Man

My God, I heard this day
That none doth build a stately habitation,
But he that means to dwell therein.
What house more stately hath there been,
5 Or can be, than is man? to<sup>1</sup> whose creation
All things are in decay.

For man is every thing
And more; he is a tree, yet bears more<sup>2</sup> fruit;
A beast, yet is or should be more;
Reason and speech we only bring.<sup>3</sup>
10 Parrots may thank us, if they are not mute:
They go upon the score.<sup>4</sup>

Man is all symmetry,
Full of proportions, one limb to another,
And all to all the world besides;<sup>5</sup>
15 Each part may call the farthest, brother;
For head with foot hath private amity,
And both with moons and tides.

Nothing hath got so far
But man hath caught and kept it as his prey.
20 His eyes dismount<sup>o</sup> the highest star:
He is in little all the sphere.<sup>o</sup>
Herbs gladly cure our flesh; because that they Find their acquaintance there.

For us the winds do blow,
25 The earth doth rest, heav'n move, and fountains
flow;

Nothing we see but means our good,
As our delight, or as our treasure.
The whole is either our cupboard of food,
Or cabinet of pleasure.

30

The stars have us to bed;
Night draws the curtain which the sun withdraws,
Music and light attend our head.
All things unto our flesh are kind<sup>o</sup>
In their descent and being; to our mind

35

In their ascent and cause.

Each thing is full of duty.
Waters united are our navigation,
Distinguished,<sup>o</sup> our habitation;
Below, our drink; above, our meat;<sup>6</sup>

40

Both are our cleanliness. Hath one such beauty?
Then how are all things neat!

More servants wait on man
Than he'll take notice of; in every path,
He treads down that<sup>7</sup> which doth befriend him,

45

When sickness makes him pale and wan.
O mighty love! Man is one world, and hath Another to attend him.

Since then, my God, thou hast
So brave<sup>o</sup> a palace built, O, dwell in it,

50

That it may dwell with thee at last!
Till then, afford us so much wit,
That, as the world serves us, we may serve thee,
And both thy servants be.

Endnotes

- Note 1: Compared to. Return to reference 1

- Note 2: A textual variant is “no.”Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Man has a vegetable, an animal, and a spiritual nature; he is the only creature that speaks and reasons.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Parrots are indebted to us for speech.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: The notion is of man as microcosm, whose parts all correspond to features of the great world. Compare Donne, Holy Sonnet 5, p. 911.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Oceans are valuable for navigation; the earth was created by dividing waters from waters (Genesis 1:6–7); on earth water is drink; from above it provides rain to grow our food (“meat”).Return to reference 6
- Note 7: The herb that will cure him when he’s sick.Return to reference 7

Notes

- °: bring down to earthReturn to reference °
- °: the universeReturn to reference °
- °: akinReturn to reference °
- °: separatedReturn to reference °
- °: splendidReturn to reference °

Jordan (2)<sup>1</sup>

When first my lines of heavenly joys made mention,
Such was their luster, they did so excel,
That I sought out quaint words and trim invention;
My thoughts began to burnish,<sup>o</sup> sprout, and swell,
Curling with metaphors a plain intention,
5 Decking the sense, as if it were to sell.<sup>o</sup>

Thousands of notions in my brain did run,
Offering their service, if I were not sped:<sup>o</sup>
I often blotted what I had begun;
This was not quick<sup>o</sup> enough, and that was dead.
10 Nothing could seem too rich to clothe the sun,
Much less those joys which trample on his head.<sup>2</sup>

As flames do work and wind when they ascend,
So did I weave myself into the sense;
But while I bustled, I might hear a friend
15 Whisper, "How wide<sup>3</sup> is all this long pretense!
There is in love a sweetness ready penned:
Copy out only that, and save expense."

Endnotes

- Note 1: Compare "Jordan (1)" (p. 1186), and Sidney, Astrophil and Stella 1 (p. 541).Return to reference 1
- Note 2: The "joys which trample on" the sun's head are heavenly joys (line 1).Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Irrelevant, wide of the mark.Return to reference 3

Notes

- °: burgeonReturn to reference °
- °: for saleReturn to reference °
- °: supplied, satisfiedReturn to reference °
- °: livelyReturn to reference °

Affliction (4)

Broken in pieces all asunder,<sup>o</sup>
Lord, hunt me not,
A thing forgot,
Once a poor creature, now a wonder,<sup>o</sup>
A wonder tortured in the space
5 Betwixt this world and that of grace.

My thoughts are all a case of knives,
Wounding my heart
With scattered smart,<sup>o</sup>
10 As wa'ring pots give flowers their lives.
Nothing their fury can control,
While they do wound and pink<sup>1</sup> my soul.

All my attendants are at strife,
Quitting their place
Unto my face:
15 Nothing performs the task of life:
The elements are let loose to fight,
And while I live, try out their right.

Oh help, my God! let not their plot
Kill them and me,
20 And also thee,
Who art my life: dissolve<sup>o</sup> the knot,
As the sun scatters by his light
All the rebellions of the night.

Then shall those powers which work for grief,
25 Enter thy pay,
And day by day

Labor<sup>o</sup> thy praise and my relief:
With care and courage building me,
Till I reach heav'n, and much more, thee.

30

Endnotes

- Note 1: To pierce or perforate, so as to reveal a contrasting lining (a term from fencing). Return to reference 1

Notes

- °: separate from each other Return to reference °
- °: marvel, miracle Return to reference °
- °: pain Return to reference °
- °: undo Return to reference °
- °: labor for Return to reference °

The Bunch of Grapes<sup>1</sup>

Joy, I did lock thee up;<sup>o</sup> but some bad man
Hath let thee out again,
And now methinks I am where I began
Sev'n years ago: one vogue<sup>o</sup> and vein,
One air of thoughts usurps my brain.
5 I did towards Canaan draw, but now I am
Brought back to the Red Sea, the sea of shame.<sup>2</sup>

For as the Jews of old by God's command
Traveled, and saw no town,
So now each Christian hath his journeys spanned;<sup>o</sup>
10 Their story pens and sets us down.<sup>3</sup>
A single deed is small renown.
God's works are wide, and let in future times;
His ancient justice overflows our crimes.

Then have we too our guardian fires and clouds;
15 Our Scripture-dew<sup>o</sup> drops fast;
We have our sands and serpents, tents and shrouds;
<sup>o</sup>
Alas! our murmurings come not last.
But where's the cluster? where's the taste
Of mine inheritance? Lord, if I must borrow,
20 Let me as well take up their joy as sorrow.

But can he want<sup>o</sup> the grape who hath the wine?
I have their fruit and more.
Blessèd be God, who prospered Noah's vine<sup>4</sup>
And made it bring forth grapes good store.
25 But much more him I must adore
Who of the Law's sour juice<sup>5</sup> sweet wine did make,

Even God himself being pressed for my sake.

Endnotes

- Note 1: When the children of Israel had almost lost hope in the wilderness, God inspired Moses to send forth scouts, who returned to report that Canaan was a land of milk and honey. They brought back a bunch of grapes so big they had to carry it between them on a pole (Numbers 13:23).Return to reference 1
- Note 2: The Red Sea's color suggests blushing for shame. Because the Israelites complained about their long ordeal in the wilderness after leaving Egypt, God drove them back toward the Red Sea.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: The wandering of the Israelites in the wilderness toward the land of Canaan was taken to be a type (prefiguration) of the Christian's trials on the path of salvation.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Noah's vine (Genesis 9) was taken as a type of the earth replenished by God after the Flood.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: The severe rules of the Old Testament as contrasted with the sweeter and more liberal covenant of the New Testament, which Christ's crucifixion established.Return to reference 5

Notes

- °: hold you fastReturn to reference °
- °: tendencyReturn to reference °
- °: measured outReturn to reference °
- °: mannaReturn to reference °
- °: temporary sheltersReturn to reference °
- °: lackReturn to reference °

The Holdfast<sup>1</sup>

I threatened to observe the strict decree
Of my dear God with all my power and might.
But I was told by one, it could not be;
Yet I might trust in God to be my light.

5 Then will I trust, said I, in him alone.
Nay, ev'n to trust in him, was also his;
We must confess, that nothing is our own.
Then I confess that he my succor is.

10 But to have naught is ours, not to confess
That we have naught. I stood amazed at this,
Much troubled, till I heard a friend express,
That all things were more ours by being his.
What Adam had, and forfeited for all,
Christ keepeth now, who cannot fail or fall.

Endnotes

- Note 1: An allusion to Psalm 73:27 in the Book of Common Prayer: "It is good for me to hold me fast by God." The poem dramatizes the entire reliance on grace—and the abnegation of any human capacity to cooperate with it or claim any merit—that was a cornerstone of Calvinist theology. Return to reference 1

The Collar<sup>1</sup>

I struck the board<sup>2</sup> and cried, "No more;
I will abroad!
What? Shall I ever sigh and pine?
My lines and life are free, free as the road,
Loose as the wind, as large as store.
5 Shall I be still in suit?<sup>3</sup>
Have I no harvest but a thorn
To let me blood, and not restore
What I have lost with cordial<sup>o</sup> fruit?
Sure there was wine
10 Before my sighs did dry it; there was corn<sup>o</sup>
Before my tears did drown it.
Is the year only lost to me?
Have I no bays<sup>4</sup> to crown it,
No flowers, no garlands gay? All blasted?
15 All wasted?
Not so, my heart; but there is fruit,
And thou hast hands.
Recover all thy sigh-blown age
On double pleasures: leave thy cold dispute
20 Of what is fit and not. Forsake thy cage,
Thy rope of sands,
Which petty thoughts have made, and made to thee
Good cable,<sup>5</sup> to enforce and draw,
And be thy law,
25 While thou didst wink and wouldst not see.
Away! Take heed;
I will abroad.
Call in thy death's-head<sup>6</sup> there; tie up thy fears.
He that forbears

The Pulley<sup>1</sup>

When God at first made man,
Having a glass of blessings standing by,
“Let us,” said he, “pour on him all we can:
Let the world’s riches, which dispersèd lie,
5 Contract into a span.”<sup>2</sup>

So strength first made a way;
Then beauty flowed, then wisdom, honor, pleasure.
When almost all was out, God made a stay,
Perceiving that, alone of all his treasure,
10 Rest<sup>o</sup> in the bottom lay.

“For if I should,” said He,
“Bestow this jewel also on my creature,
He would adore my gifts instead of me,
And rest in Nature, not the God of Nature;
15 So both should losers be.

“Yet let him keep the rest,<sup>o</sup>
But keep them with repining restlessness:
Let him be rich and weary, that at least,
If goodness lead him not, yet weariness
20 May toss him to my breast.”

Endnotes

- Note 1: The poem inverts the legend of Pandora’s box, which released all manner of evils when opened but left Hope trapped inside.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: The short time during which a person lives.Return to reference 2

Notes

- °: reposeReturn to reference °
- °: remainder; reposeReturn to reference °

The Flower

How fresh, O Lord, how sweet and clean
Are thy returns! even as the flowers in spring,
To which, besides their own demesne,<sup>o</sup>
The late-past frosts tributes of pleasure bring.
Grief melts away
5 Like snow in May,
As if there were no such cold thing.

Who would have thought my shriveled heart
Could have recovered greenness? It was gone
Quite underground; as flowers depart
10 To see their mother-root, when they have blown,<sup>o</sup>
Where they together
All the hard weather,
Dead to the world, keep house unknown.

These are thy wonders, Lord of power,
15 Killing and quickening, bringing down to hell
And up to heaven in an hour,
Making a chiming of a passing-bell.<sup>1</sup>
We say amiss
This or that is:
20 Thy word is all, if we could spell.<sup>o</sup>

O that I once past changing were,
Fast in thy Paradise, where no flower can wither!
Many a spring I shoot up fair,
Offering<sup>o</sup> at heaven, growing and groaning thither;
25 Nor doth my flower
Want a spring shower,<sup>o</sup>

My sins and I joining together.

30 But while I grow in a straight line,
Still upwards bent,o as if heaven were mine own,
Thy anger comes, and I decline:
What frost to that? What pole is not the zone
Where all things burn,
When thou dost turn,
35 And the least frown of thine is shown?<sup>2</sup>

And now in age I bud again,
After so many deaths I live and write;
I once more smell the dew and rain,
And relish versing. O my only light,
40 It cannot be
That I am he
On whom thy tempests fell all night.

These are thy wonders, Lord of love,
To make us see we are but flowers that glide;o
Which when we once can find and prove,o
45 Thou hast a garden for us where to bide;
Who would be more,
Swelling through store,
Forfeit their Paradise by their pride.

Endnotes

- Note 1: The “passing-bell,” intended to mark the death of a parishioner, is tolled in a monotone; a “chiming” bell offers pleasant variety.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: That is, compared with God’s wrath, what polar chill would not seem like the heat of the equator?Return to reference 2

Notes

- °: domain, demeanorReturn to reference °
- °: bloomedReturn to reference °
- °: readReturn to reference °
- °: aimingReturn to reference °
- °: tears of contritionReturn to reference °
- °: directedReturn to reference °
- °: slip silently awayReturn to reference °
- °: experienceReturn to reference °

The Forerunners

The harbingers are come: see, see their mark;
White is their color,<sup>1</sup> and behold my head.
But must they have my brain? Must they dispark<sup>o</sup>
Those sparkling notions which therein were bred?
Must dullness turn me to a clod?
5 Yet have they left me "Thou art still my God."<sup>2</sup>

Good men ye be to leave me my best room,
Even all my heart and what is lodged there:
I pass not,<sup>o</sup> I, what of the rest become,
10 So "Thou art still my God" be out of fear.
He will be pleased with that ditty;
And if I please Him, I write fine and witty.

Farewell, sweet phrases, lovely metaphors:
But will ye leave me thus? When ye before
Of stews<sup>o</sup> and brothels only knew the doors,
15 Then did I wash you with my tears, and more,
Brought you to church well-dressed and clad:
My God must have my best, even all I had.

Lovely enchanting language, sugarcane,
Honey of roses, whither wilt thou fly?
20 Hath some fond lover 'ticed<sup>o</sup> thee to thy bane?<sup>o</sup>
And wilt thou leave the church and love a sty?
Fie! thou wilt soil thy 'broidered coat,
And hurt thyself and him that sings the note.

Let foolish lovers, if they will love dung,
25 With canvas, not with arras,<sup>o</sup> clothe their shame:
Let Folly speak in her own native tongue.

True Beauty dwells on high; ours is a flame
But borrowed thence to light us thither:
Beauty and beauteous words should go together.

30

Yet, if you go, I pass not;° take your way.
For "Thou art still my God" is all that ye
Perhaps with more embellishment can say.
Go, birds of spring; let winter have his fee;°
Let a bleak paleness chalk the door,
So all within be livelier than before.

35

Endnotes

- Note 1: Harbingers rode ahead of a royal traveling party to requisition lodgings, marking the doors with chalk.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: An echo of Psalm 31:14: "But I trusted in thee, O Lord: I said, Thou art my God."Return to reference 2

Notes

- °: turn outReturn to reference °
- °: care notReturn to reference °
- °: whorehousesReturn to reference °
- °: enticed Return to reference °
- °: poisonReturn to reference °
- °: fine clothReturn to reference °
- °: care notReturn to reference °
- °: dueReturn to reference °

Discipline

Throw away thy rod,
Throw away thy wrath:
O my God,
Take the gentle path.

5 For my heart's desire
Unto thine is bent:
I aspire
To a full consent.

Not a word or look
I affect<sup>o</sup> to own,
10 But by book,<sup>1</sup>
And thy book alone.

Though I fail, I weep:
Though I halt<sup>o</sup> in pace,
15 Yet I creep
To the throne of grace.

Then let wrath remove;
Love will do the deed:
For with love
20 Stony hearts will bleed.

Love is swift of foot;
Love's a man of war,<sup>2</sup>
And can shoot,
And can hit from far.

25 Who can 'scape his bow?
That which wrought on thee,

Brought thee low,
Needs must work on me.

30      Throw away thy rod;
          Though man frailties hath,
                  Thou art God:
          Throw away thy wrath.

Endnotes

- Note 1: That is, in a set manner, by command, or like an actor who follows his playbook. Return to reference 1
- Note 2: The jubilant song sung by Moses in Exodus 15 calls the Lord “a man of war,” but Herbert also alludes to Cupid, another divine archer. Return to reference 2

Notes

- °: wish, pretend Return to reference °
- °: limp Return to reference °

Death

Death, thou wast once an uncouth, hideous thing,
Nothing but bones,
The sad effect of sadder groans:
Thy mouth was open, but thou couldst not sing.

5 For we considered thee as at some six
Or ten years hence,
After the loss of life and sense,
Flesh being turned to dust and bones to sticks.

We looked on this side of thee, shooting short,
Where we did find
10 The shells of fledge-souls left behind—
Dry dust, which sheds no tears, but may extort.<sup>1</sup>

But since our Savior's death did put some blood
Into thy face,
15 Thou art grown fair and full of grace,
Much in request, much sought for as a good.

For we do now behold thee gay and glad
As at doomsday,
When souls shall wear their new array,
20 And all thy bones with beauty shall be clad.

Therefore we can go die as sleep, and trust
Half that we have
Unto an honest faithful grave,
Making our pillows either down or dust.

Endnotes

- Note 1: Souls that have left the body and gone to heaven are like fledgling chicks that have left the shell behind; that corpse ("dry dust") sheds no tears but may draw ("extort") tears from the survivors. Return to reference 1

Love (3)

Love bade me welcome: yet my soul drew back,
Guilty of dust and sin.
But quick-eyed Love, observing me grow slack<sup>o</sup>
From my first entrance in,
5 Drew nearer to me, sweetly questioning
If I lacked anything.<sup>1</sup>

"A guest," I answered, "worthy to be here":
Love said, "You shall be he."
"I, the unkind, ungrateful? Ah, my dear,
I cannot look on thee."
10 Love took my hand, and smiling did reply,
"Who made the eyes but I?"

"Truth, Lord; but I have marred them; let my shame Go where it doth deserve."
"And know you not," says Love, "who bore the 15 blame?"
"My dear, then I will serve."
"You must sit down," says Love, "and taste my meat."
So I did sit and eat.<sup>2</sup>

Endnotes

- Note 1: The first question of tavern waiters to an entering customer would be "What d'ye lack?" (that is, want).Return to reference 1
- Note 2: In addition to the sacrament of Communion, the reference is especially to the banquet in heaven, when the Lord

“shall gird himself, and make them to sit down to meat, and will come forth and serve them” (Luke 12:37). Return to reference 2

Notes

- °: hesitant Return to reference °

HENRY VAUGHAN

1621–1695

Born to a family with deep roots in Wales, Henry Vaughan was educated at Oxford and the Inns of Court but returned to his native county of Breconshire at the outbreak of the English Civil War and spent the rest of his life there. He served as secretary to the Welsh circuit courts until 1645; briefly fought for King Charles at Chester, just over the English border; and in his later years took up the practice of medicine without much formal study. In a volume of verse published in 1651, Olor Iscanus (The Swan of Usk), he drew attention to his heritage by terming himself “the Silurist”: the Silures were an ancient tribe from southeast Wales. Some features of Vaughan’s poetry derive from the rich Welsh-language poetic tradition: the frequency of assonance, consonance, and alliteration; the multiplication of comparisons and similes (dyfalu); and the sensitivity to nature, especially the countryside around the Usk River.

Some of Vaughan’s poetry is secular—Poems with the Tenth Satire of Juvenal, Englished (1646), Olor Iscanus (1651), and a late-published collection of earlier Latin verse, Thalia Rediviva (1678). Vaughan’s modern reputation, though, rests almost entirely on his religious poetry. In 1650 Vaughan published his major collection of religious verse, Silex Scintillans (The Flashing Flint), expanding it in 1655 to include an additional book. A conversion experience may have prompted Vaughan’s turn to religious themes: the title of the book is explicated by the emblem of a flintlike heart struck by a bolt of lightning from the hand of God.

While Vaughan's secular poetry recalls Ben Jonson's, the religious poetry overtly models itself on George Herbert's. In the preface to Silex Scintillans, Vaughan refers to himself as one of Herbert's "pious converts." Some twenty-six poems appropriate their titles from The Temple, several owe their metrical form to Herbert, and many begin by quoting one of Herbert's lines (compare Vaughan's "Unprofitableness" with Herbert's "The Flower"). Yet no one with an ear for poetry will mistake Vaughan's long, loose poetic style for Herbert's artful precision. Vaughan's religious sensibility also differs markedly from Herbert's. Unable to locate himself in a national Church of England, now dismantled by war, he wanders unaccompanied through a landscape at once biblical, emblematic, and contemporary, mourning lost innocence. One unifying motif of the poems in Silex Scintillans is pilgrimage, though the arrival at the destination is typically deferred. Vaughan seems unable to experience Christ as a friend or supporter in present trials, as Herbert so often does; instead, he longs for a full relationship with the divine yet to come, at the Last Day. Despite his restless solitude, however, Vaughan finds vestiges of the divine everywhere. "I saw eternity the other night," he begins his most famous poem, "The World," situating the "ring of pure and endless light" in a specific, quotidian moment of illumination. Eternity hovers tantalizingly over the human world of strife, pain, and exploitation, apparently entirely detached from that world but in fact accessible to God's elect, who soar from earthly shadows into the light. Vaughan's twin brother, Thomas, introduced him to Hermetic philosophy, an esoteric brand of Neoplatonism that found occult correspondences between the visible world of matter and the invisible world of spirits. The influence of this philosophical system, so congenial to Vaughan's sensibility, is most apparent in the poem "Cock Crowing."

FROM SILEX SCINTILLANS

Regeneration<sup>1</sup>

A ward, and still in bonds,<sup>2</sup> one day
I stole abroad;
It was high spring, and all the way
Primrosed<sup>3</sup> and hung with shade;
Yet was it frost within,
5 And surly winds
Blasted my infant buds, and sin
Like clouds eclipsed my mind.

Stormed thus, I straight perceived my spring
Mere stage and show,
10 My walk a monstrous, mountained thing,
Roughcast with rocks and snow;
And as a pilgrim's eye,
Far from relief,
Measures the melancholy sky,
15 Then drops and rains for grief,

So sighed I upwards still; at last
'Twixt steps and falls
I reached the pinnacle, where placed
I found a pair of scales;
20 I took them up and laid
In th' one, late pains;
The other smoke and pleasures weighed,
But proved the heavier grains.<sup>4</sup>

With that, some cried, "Away!" Straight<sup>o</sup> I 25 Obeyed, and led
Full east, a fair, fresh field could spy;
Some called it Jacob's bed,<sup>5</sup>

30           A virgin soil which no
              Rude feet ere trod,
Where, since he stepped there, only go
              Prophets and friends of God.

              Here I reposed; but scarce well set,
              A grove descried<sup>o</sup>
35       Of stately height, whose branches met
              And mixed on every side;
              I entered, and once in,
              Amazed to see 't,
40       Found all was changed, and a new spring<sup>6</sup>
              Did all my senses greet.

              The unthrift sun shot vital gold,
              A thousand pieces,
              And heaven its azure did unfold,
              Checkered with snowy fleeces;
45       The air was all in spice,
              And every bush
              A garland wore; thus fed my eyes,
              But all the ear lay hush.<sup>o</sup>

              Only a little fountain<sup>7</sup> lent
              Some use for ears,
50       And on the dumb shades language spent
              The music of her tears;
              I drew her near, and found
              The cistern full
55       Of divers stones, some bright and round,
              Others ill-shaped and dull.<sup>8</sup>

              The first, pray mark, as quick as light
              Danced through the flood;
              But the last, more heavy than the night,
              Nailed to the center stood.

60 I wondered much, but tired
 At last with thought,
 My restless eye that still desired
 As strange an object brought:

65 It was a bank of flowers, where I descried,
 Though 'twas midday,
 Some fast asleep, others broad-eyed
 And taking in the ray;
 Here musing long, I heard
 A rushing wind
 70 Which still increased, but whence it stirred Nowhere I could not find.

I turned me round, and to each shade
 Dispatched an eye
 To see if any leaf had made
 75 Least motion or reply;
 But while I listening sought
 My mind to ease
 By knowing where 'twas, or where not,
 80 It whispered, "Where I please."<sup>9</sup>

"Lord," then said I, "on me one breath,
 And let me die before my death!"

"Arise O North, and come thou South wind, and blow upon my garden, that the spices thereof may flow out."<sup>1</sup> 85

1650

Endnotes

- Note 1: The poem allegorizes in rather precise Calvinist terms the experience of God's grace calling the elect and distinguishing between the regenerate and the unregenerate.Return to reference 1

- Note 2: He begins as “a ward” (in his minority under the law of the Hebrew Bible) and “in bonds” (in the Pauline “spirit of bondage” caused by fear of damnable sin).Return to reference 2
- Note 3: An allusion to the adage that the “primrose path” leads to perdition.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: He climbs Mount Sinai (tries to live by the Hebrew Bible) but finds his sins and follies far outweigh that effort.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Jacob slept in an open field, where he had a vision of a ladder leading to heaven (Genesis 28:11–19); that place, Bethel, was taken as a type or figure for the church. Vaughan’s poem “Jacobs Pillow, and Pillar” works out this allegory.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Imagery in the following lines—spring, perfumes, flowers—alludes to the Song of Solomon in which the bride is traditionally allegorized as the church or the beloved soul.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: In the Song of Solomon 4:15 the “fountain of waters, a well of living waters” was traditionally allegorized as Christ.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: An allusion to 1 Peter 2:5, which refers to the faithful as “lively stones.” The different sorts of stones and flowers here suggest the elect and the reprobate.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: John 3:8: “The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth, so is every one that is born of the Spirit.”Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Vaughan identifies this verse as Canticles (Song of Solomon) 5:17; it is properly 4:16.Return to reference 1

Notes

- °: immediatelyReturn to reference °

- °: perceived Return to reference °
- °: quiet Return to reference °

The Retreat

Happy those early days! when I
Shined in my angel infancy.
Before I understood this place
Appointed for my second race,<sup>1</sup>
Or taught my soul to fancy aught<sup>o</sup>
5 But a white, celestial thought;
When yet I had not walked above
A mile or two from my first love,
And looking back, at that short space,
Could see a glimpse of His bright face;
10 When on some gilded cloud or flower
My gazing soul would dwell an hour,
And in those weaker glories spy
Some shadows of eternity;
Before I taught my tongue to wound
15 My conscience with a sinful sound,
Or had the black art to dispense
A several<sup>o</sup> sin to every sense,
But felt through all this fleshly dress
Bright shoots of everlastingness.
20 O, how I long to travel back,
And tread again that ancient track!
That I might once more reach that plain
Where first I left my glorious train,
From whence th' enlightened spirit sees
25 That shady city of palm trees.<sup>2</sup>
But, ah! my soul with too much stay<sup>o</sup>
Is drunk, and staggers in the way.
Some men a forward motion love;
But I by backward steps would move,
30 And when this dust falls to the urn,

In that state I came, return.

1650

Endnotes

- Note 1: The poem alludes throughout to the Platonic doctrine of preexistence, in conjunction with Christ's words (Mark 10:15): "Whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child, he shall not enter therein."Return to reference 1
- Note 2: The New Jerusalem, the Heavenly City (identified with Jericho, the "city of Palm Trees," Deuteronomy 34:3).Return to reference 2

Notes

- °: anythingReturn to reference °
- °: differentReturn to reference °
- °: delayReturn to reference °

Silence, and Stealth of Days!

Silence, and stealth of days! 'tis now
Since thou art gone<sup>1</sup>
Twelve hundred hours, and not a brow<sup>2</sup>
But clouds hang on.
As he that in some cave's thick damp,
5 Locked from the light,
Fixeth a solitary lamp
To brave the night,
And walking from his sun, when past
That glimmering ray,
10 Cuts through the heavy mists in haste
Back to his day,<sup>3</sup>
So o'er fled minutes I retreat
Unto that hour
Which showed thee last, but did defeat
15 Thy light and power;
I search and rack my soul to see
Those beams again,
But nothing but the snuff<sup>4</sup> to me
Appeareth plain,
20 That dark and dead sleeps in its known
And common urn;
But those<sup>5</sup> fled to their maker's throne,
There shine and burn.
O could I track them! but souls must 25 Track one the other,
And now the spirit, not the dust,
Must be thy brother.
Yet I have one pearl,<sup>6</sup> by whose light
30 All things I see,

And in the heart of earth and night,
Find heaven and thee.

1648 Endnotes

1650

- Note 1: As indicated in lines 27–28, the poem is on the loss of Vaughan’s brother—not his twin brother, Thomas, the Hermetic philosopher, who did not die until 1666, but his younger brother, William, who died in July 1648.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Mountain ridge, or forehead.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: The miner fixes his lamp halfway down the dark shaft, ventures a little beyond it, but then beats a hasty retreat.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: The burned wick of the lamp or candle.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: The “beams” (line 18).Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Probably the Bible. The reference is to Matthew 13:45–46, to the merchant who sold all he had to buy a pearl of great price, there likened to the Kingdom of Heaven.Return to reference 6

Corruption

Sure it was so. Man in those early days
Was not all stone and earth;
He shined a little, and by those weak rays
Had some glimpse of his birth.
5 He saw heaven o'er his head, and knew from whence
He came, condemnèd, hither;
And, as first love draws strongest, so from hence
His mind sure progressed thither.
Things here were strange unto him: sweat and till,
10 All was a thorn or weed:<sup>1</sup>
Nor did those last, but (like himself) died still
As soon as they did seed.
They seemed to quarrel with him, for that act
That felled him foiled them all:
15 He drew the curse upon the world, and cracked
The whole frame with his fall.
This made him long for home, as loath to stay
With murmurers and foes;
He sighed for Eden, and would often say,
20 "Ah! what bright days were those!"
Nor was heaven cold unto him; for each day
The valley or the mountain
Afforded visits, and still Paradise lay
In some green shade or fountain.
25 Angels lay lieger<sup>2</sup> here; each bush and cell,
Each oak and highway knew them;
Walk but the fields, or sit down at some well,
And he was sure to view them.
Almighty Love! where art thou now? Mad man Sits down and freezeth on;

30       He raves, and swears to stir nor fire, nor fan,
           But bids the thread<sup>o</sup> be spun.
       I see, thy curtains are close-drawn; thy bow<sup>3</sup>
           Looks dim, too, in the cloud;
 35       Sin triumphs still, and man is sunk below
           The center, and his shroud.
       All's in deep sleep and night: thick darkness lies
           And hatcheth o'er thy people—
       But hark! what trumpet's that? what angel cries,
 40       "Arise! thrust in thy sickle"?<sup>4</sup>

1650

Endnotes

- Note 1: God's curse on Adam for eating the forbidden fruit included a curse on the earth: "Thorns also and thistles shall it bring forth to thee" (Genesis 3:18).Return to reference 1
- Note 2: As resident ambassadors (from heaven).Return to reference 2
- Note 3: The rainbow, God's covenant with Noah after the Flood (Genesis 9:13).Return to reference 3
- Note 4: An allusion to Revelation 14:15: "And another angel came out of the temple, crying with a loud voice to him that sat on the cloud, 'Thrust in thy sickle, and reap, for the harvest of the earth is now.' "Return to reference 4

Notes

- <sup>o</sup>: thread of FateReturn to reference <sup>o</sup>

Unprofitableness

How rich, O Lord! how fresh thy visits are!<sup>1</sup>
'Twas but just now my bleak leaves hopeless hung,
    Sullied with dust and mud;
Each snarling blast shot through me, and did share<sup>o</sup> 5      Their youth and beauty; cold showers nipped and wrung
        Their spiciness and blood.
But since thou didst in one sweet glance survey
Their sad decays, I flourish, and once more
    Breathe all perfumes and spice;
10      I smell a dew like myrrh, and all the day
Wear in my bosom a full sun; such store
    Hath one beam from thy eyes.
But, ah, my God! what fruit hast thou of this?
What one poor leaf did ever I let<sup>2</sup> fall
15      To wait upon thy wreath?
Thus thou all day a thankless weed dost dress,
And when th' hast done, a stench or fog is all
    The odor I bequeath.

1650

Endnotes

- Note 1: Compare Herbert's "The Flower" (p. 1195).Return to reference 1
- Note 2: The original printed text reads "yet," emended here.Return to reference 2

Notes

- °: shear off Return to reference °

The World

I saw eternity the other night,
Like a great ring of pure and endless light,
    All calm as it was bright;
And round beneath it, Time, in hours, days, years,
    Driven by the spheres,<sup>1</sup>
5     Like a vast shadow moved, in which the world
    And all her train were hurled.
The doting lover in his quaintest<sup>o</sup> strain
    Did there complain;
Near him, his lute, his fancy, and his flights,<sup>o</sup>
10     Wit's sour delights,
With gloves and knots,<sup>o</sup> the silly snares of pleasure,
    Yet his dear treasure,
All scattered lay, while he his eyes did pour
    Upon a flower.
15     The darksome statesman hung with weights and
    woe
Like a thick midnight fog moved there so slow
    He did nor stay nor go;
Condemning thoughts, like sad eclipses, scowl
    Upon his soul,
20     And clouds of crying witnesses<sup>2</sup> without Pursued him with one shout.
Yet digged the mole,<sup>3</sup> and, lest his ways be found,
    Worked underground,
Where he did clutch his prey. But one did see 25     That policy:<sup>o</sup>
Churches and altars fed him; perjuries
    Were gnats and flies;
It rained about him blood and tears; but he

30 Drank them as free.<sup>4</sup>

The fearful miser on a heap of rust
Sat pining all his life there, did scarce trust
His own hands with the dust;
Yet would not place<sup>o</sup> one piece above, but lives
In fear of thieves.

35 Thousands there were as frantic as himself,
And hugged each one his pelf:
The downright epicure placed heaven in sense,<sup>o</sup>
And scorned pretense;
While others, slipped into a wide excess,

40 Said little less;
The weaker sort slight, trivial wares enslave,
Who think them brave<sup>o</sup>
And poor, despised Truth sat counting by<sup>o</sup>
Their victory.

45 Yet some, who all this while did weep and sing,
And sing and weep, soared up into the ring;
But most would use no wing.
"O fools!" said I, "thus to prefer dark night
Before true light!

50 To live in grots and caves, and hate the day
Because it shows the way,
The way which from this dead and dark abode
Leads up to God,
A way where you might tread the sun and be

55 More bright than he!"
But as I did their madness so discuss,
One whispered thus:
"This ring the bridegroom did for none provide,
But for his bride."<sup>5</sup>

60

John Chap. 2. ver. 16, 17

All that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world.

And the world passeth away, and the lusts thereof,
but he that doth the will of God abideth forever.

1650

Endnotes

- Note 1: The concentric spheres of Ptolemaic astronomy.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: In Hebrews 12, the “clouds of witnesses” testified to God’s truth in past times. Here, these champions of faith accuse one whose actions deny God.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: That is, the “darksome statesman” (line 16).Return to reference 3
- Note 4: That is, as freely as they rained.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: An allusion to Revelation 19:7–9, the marriage of the Lamb and his Bride, allegorized as Christ and the church or Christ and the regenerate soul: “Blessed are they which are called unto the marriage supper of the Lamb.”Return to reference 5

Notes

- °: most ingeniousReturn to reference °
- °: capricesReturn to reference °
- °: love knotsReturn to reference °
- °: strategyReturn to reference °
- °: investReturn to reference °
- °: the sensesReturn to reference °
- °: fine, showyReturn to reference °
- °: recordingReturn to reference °

Cock-Crowing<sup>1</sup>

Father of lights! what sunny seed,<sup>2</sup>
What glance of day hast thou confined
Into this bird? To all the breed
This busy ray thou hast assigned;
5            Their magnetism works all night,
             And dreams of Paradise and light.

          Their eyes watch for the morning hue,
          Their little grain expelling night
          So shines and sings, as if it knew
          The path unto the house of light.
10           It seems their candle, howe'r done,
             Was tinned<sup>o</sup> and lighted at the sun.

          If such a tincture,<sup>3</sup> such a touch,
          So firm a longing can impower,
15           Shall thy own image<sup>4</sup> think it much
          To watch for thy appearing hour?
             If a mere blast so fill the sail,
             Shall not the breath of God<sup>5</sup> prevail?

          O thou immortal light and heat!
          Whose hand so shines through all this frame,<sup>o</sup>
20           That by the beauty of the seat,
          We plainly see, who made the same.
             Seeing thy seed abides in me,
             Dwell thou in it, and I in thee.

25           To sleep without thee, is to die;
          Yea, 'tis a death partakes of hell:
          For where thou dost not close the eye

It never opens, I can tell.
In such a dark, Egyptian border,
The shades of death dwell and disorder.<sup>6</sup>

30

If joys, and hopes, and earnest throes,
And hearts, whose pulse beats still for light
Are given to birds; who, but thee, knows
A love-sick soul's exalted flight?
Can souls be tracked by any eye
But his, who gave them wings to fly?

35

Only this veil<sup>7</sup> which thou hast broke,
And must be broken yet in me,
This veil, I say, is all the cloak
And cloud which shadows thee from me.
This veil thy full-eyed love denies,
And only gleams and fractions spies.

40

O take it off! Make no delay,
But brush me with thy light, that I
May shine unto a perfect day,
And warm me at thy glorious eye!
O take it off! or till it flee,
Though with no lily,<sup>8</sup> stay with me!

45

1655

Endnotes

- Note 1: The poem calls on the Hermetic notion of sympathetic attraction between earthly and heavenly bodies—for example, the cock whose crowing announces the sun's rising because it bears within itself a "seed" of the sun. Vaughan finds here an analogy for the attraction the soul has for its Maker.Return to reference 1
- Note 2:

The opening lines recall a passage from Henry's brother, the Hermetic philosopher Thomas Vaughan: "For she [the Anima or Soul] is guided in her operations by a spiritual metaphysical grain, a seed or glance of light . . . descending from the Father of lights." That term for God is from James 1:17. "Seed," "glance," "ray," and "grain" in line 8 are almost synonymous Hermetic terms for the bit of the sun implanted in the rooster. "Magnetism" (line 5) refers to the attraction between the rooster's "seed" and its source, the sun.

Return to reference 2

- Note 3: Alchemical term for a spiritual principle whose quality may be infused into material things. Return to reference 3
- Note 4: An allusion to Genesis 1:27: "So God created man in his own image." Return to reference 4
- Note 5: An allusion to Genesis 2:7: "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul." Return to reference 5
- Note 6: An allusion to Exodus 10:21: brought Moses bringing down the plague of "darkness over the land of Egypt, even darkness which may be felt." Return to reference 6
- Note 7: See Hebrews 10:20: "By a new and living way, which he [Christ] hath consecrated for us, through the veil, that is to say, his flesh." Return to reference 7
- Note 8: See Song of Solomon 2:16: "My beloved is mine, and I am his: he feedeth among the lilies." Return to reference 8

Notes

- °: kindled Return to reference °
- °: universe Return to reference °

The Waterfall

With what deep murmurs through time's silent stealth
Doth thy transparent, cool, and watery wealth
Here flowing fall,
And chide, and call,
As if his liquid, loose retinue stayed
5 Ling'ring, and were of this steep place afraid,
The common pass
Where, clear as glass,
All must descend,
Not to an end,
10 But quickened by this steep and rocky grave,
Rise to a longer course more bright and brave.°

Dear stream! dear bank! where often I
Have sat and pleased my pensive eye—
Why, since each drop of thy quick° store
15 Runs thither whence it flowed before,
Should poor souls fear a shade or night,
Who came, sure, from a sea of light?
Or since those drops are all sent back
So sure to thee that none doth lack,
20 Why should frail flesh doubt any more
That what God takes he'll not restore?
O useful element and clear!
My sacred wash and cleanser here,
My first consigner° unto those
25 Fountains of life where the Lamb goes!¹
What sublime truths and wholesome themes
Lodge in thy mystical deep streams!
Such as dull man can never find

30 Unless that Spirit lead his mind
 Which first upon thy face did move
 And hatched all with his quickening love.<sup>2</sup>
 As this loud brook's incessant fall
 In streaming rings restagnates<sup>o</sup> all 35 Which reach by course the bank, and then
 Are no more seen, just so pass men.
 Oh my invisible estate,
 My glorious liberty,<sup>3</sup> still late!
 Thou art the channel my soul seeks,
 40 Not this with cataracts and creeks.

1655

Endnotes

- Note 1: See Revelation 7:17: "For the Lamb . . . shall lead them unto living fountains of waters."Return to reference 1
- Note 2: An allusion to Genesis 1:2: "And the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters." The Latin Vulgate version, incubabant, is closer to Vaughan's "hatched" than to "moved."Return to reference 2
- Note 3: An allusion to Romans 8:21, promising deliverance "from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God."Return to reference 3

Notes

- °: resplendentReturn to reference °
- °: livingReturn to reference °
- °: in baptismReturn to reference °
- °: makes still againReturn to reference °

Quickness

False life! a foil and no more, when Wilt thou be gone?
Thou foul deception of all men
That would not have the true come on.

5      Thou art a moon-like toil; a blind
                                Self-posing state;
A dark contest of waves and wind;
A mere tempestuous debate.

Life is a fixed, discerning light,
                                A knowing joy;
No chance, or fit, but ever bright,
And calm and full, yet doth not cloy.°

                                'Tis such a blissful thing, that still Doth vivify,
15      And shine and smile and hath the skill
To please without eternity.

Thou art a toilsome mole,° or less,
                                A moving mist.
But life is what none can express,
20      A quickness° which my God hath kissed.

1655

Notes

- °: obstructReturn to reference °
- °: hardworkingReturn to reference °
- °: life, vital principleReturn to reference °

RICHARD CRASHAW

ca. 1613–1649

Steps to the Temple (1646, 1648), the title of Richard Crashaw's collection of sacred poetry, clearly acknowledges George Herbert's primacy among devotional poets. Yet Crashaw is no mere imitator. A Roman Catholic convert, Crashaw was profoundly influenced by the Counter-Reformation, which reacted against Protestant austerity by linking heightened spirituality to vivid bodily experiences. He is the only major English poet in the tradition of the Continental baroque, a movement in literature and visual art that developed out of the Counter-Reformation. Baroque style is exuberant, sensuous, and elaborately ornamented, and it deliberately strains decorum, challenging formal restraints and generic limitations. Crashaw's favorite subjects are typical of baroque art: the infant Jesus surrounded by angels and cherubs; the crucified Savior, streaming blood; the sorrowful Virgin; the tearfully penitent Mary Magdalen; saintly martyrs wracked with ecstasy and pain. Although some consider his images grotesque, Crashaw is alone among English poets in rendering the experience of rapture and religious ecstasy.

The son of a bibliophile and anti-Catholic Church of England polemicist, Crashaw was educated at Pembroke College, Cambridge, where he became an adherent of Laudian Anglicanism. In 1636 he was elected a fellow of Peterhouse, another Cambridge college. By 1639 he had become a priest of the Church of England, curate of Little St. Mary's, and a college lecturer. A contemporary wrote that his sermons “ravished more like poems,” but apparently none survive. Crashaw called Peterhouse his “little contentful kingdom”: his friends included the poet Abraham Cowley and George Herbert’s literary executor Nicholas Ferrar, the founder of the Anglican monastic community Little Gidding. In 1643 the Puritans occupied Cambridge, violently disrupting Crashaw’s life there. He fled to Paris and to the English court in exile, becoming a Roman Catholic in 1645. He was saved from destitution by obtaining various minor posts through the influence of Queen Henrietta Maria, the last one at Loreto—thought to be Jesus’s house at Nazareth, miraculously transported to Italy.

Crashaw’s Latin epigrams, published as Epigrammatum Sacrorum Liber (1634), were much influenced by Jesuit epigram style. In their Latin and later English versions, they are characterized by puns, paradoxes, and startling—even bizarre—metaphors. In one poem, Crashaw compares Christ’s pierced side to a “purple wardrobe” in which Christians can find the proper garments for clothing themselves. In 1646 Crashaw published the first version of Steps to the Temple, along with a secular collection of poems titled Delights of the Muses, with the royalist publisher Humphrey Moseley. (Moseley published Milton’s Poems [1645], among many other works.) A second edition appeared in 1648.

Crashaw constantly revised his religious poems. His posthumous volume, Carmen Deo Nostro (Hymn to Our Lord, 1652), includes emblems he may have executed himself, including the padlocked heart prefixed to a poem urging the Countess of Denbigh to convert to Catholicism. Especially notable are the final versions of several hymns, particularly the praise of St. Theresa in “The Flaming Heart.”

FROM* STEPS TO THE TEMPLE

Divine Epigrams

Acts 8. On the Baptized Aethiopian<sup>1</sup>

Let it no longer be a forlorn hope
To wash an Ethiop:
He's washed, his gloomy skin a peaceful shade
For his white soul is made:
And now, I doubt not, the eternal dove,<sup>o</sup>
5 A black-faced house will love.

1646

Endnotes

- Note 1:
This epigram and the four that follow were originally written in Latin in a volume of "sacred epigrams," and then rendered by Cranshaw in English versions. Epigrams are brief, pithy, witty poems with, as was often said, "A sting in the tail." This poem refers to Acts 8, when Philip meets "an eunuch of great authority under the queen of the Ethiopians, who had the charge of all her treasure, and had come to Jerusalem to worship" (Acts 8:27). Philip baptizes the Ethiopian (Acts 8:38). Crashaw combines this biblical story with the proverb about washing the Ethiopian white (see the illustration on p. 1213).
Return to reference 1

Notes

- °: Holy SpiritReturn to reference °

To the Infant Martyrs<sup>1</sup>

Go, smiling souls, your new-built cages<sup>o</sup> break:
In heaven you'll learn to sing, ere here to speak.<sup>2</sup>
Nor let the milky fonts that bathe your thirst
Be your delay;
The place that calls you hence is, at the worst,
Milk all the way.<sup>3</sup>

5

1646

"Baptized Aethiopian." Geoffrey Whitney's emblem "Aethiopem lavare" ("to wash an Ethiop"), from A Choice of Emblems (1586), was a proverb for impossibility. Crashaw refers to this proverb in "On the Baptized Aethiopian."

---

Endnotes

- Note 1: This poem addresses the Holy Innocents, the infants murdered by Herod in an effort to destroy the newborn Jesus, who was honored as King of the Jews by the Magi (Matthew 2:16–18). Return to reference 1

- Note 2: “Infant” comes from the Latin infans, meaning “unable to speak.”Return to reference 2
- Note 3: The Milky Way will replace their mothers’ milk.Return to reference 3

Notes

- °: their bodiesReturn to reference °

I Am the Door<sup>1</sup>

And now th' art set wide ope, the spear's sad art,
Lo! hath unlocked thee at the very heart;
    He to himself (I fear the worst)
    And his own hope
5 Hath shut these doors of heaven, that durst
    Thus set them ope.

1646

Endnotes

- Note 1: "I am the door; by me if any man enter in, he shall be saved" (John 10:9). Return to reference 1

Luke 11.[27]<sup>1</sup> Blessed be the paps which Thou hast sucked

Suppose he had been tabled at thy teats,
Thy hunger feels not what he eats:
He'll have his teat e're long (a bloody one)<sup>2</sup>
The Mother then must suck the Son.

1646

Endnotes

- Note 1: The verse (Luke 11:27) identifies the addressee: "And it came to pass, as he [Jesus] spake these things, a certain woman of the company lifted up her voice, and said unto him, 'Blessed is the womb that bare thee, and the paps which thou hast sucked.' "Return to reference 1
- Note 2: The wound in Christ's side, making his breast (the fountain of all graces) bloody.Return to reference 2

On the Wounds of Our Crucified Lord

O these wakeful wounds of thine!
Are they mouths? or are they eyes?
Be they mouths, or be they eyne,<sup>1</sup>
Each bleeding part some one supplies.<sup>2</sup>

5 Lo! a mouth, whose full-bloomed lips
At too dear a rate are roses.
Lo! a bloodshot eye! that weeps
And many a cruel tear discloses.

10 O thou that on this foot hast laid
Many a kiss and many a tear,
Now thou shalt have all repaid,
Whatsoever thy charges were.

15 This foot hath got a mouth and lips
To pay the sweet sum of thy kisses;
To pay thy tears, an eye that weeps
Instead of tears such gems as this is.

20 The difference only this appears
(Nor can the change offend),
The debt is paid in ruby-tears
Which thou in pearls didst lend.

1646

Endnotes

- Note 1: Eyes (an old plural form).Return to reference 1
- Note 2: That is, each wound of Christ is either an eye or a mouth.Return to reference 2

On Our Crucified Lord Naked and Bloody

Th' have left thee naked, Lord, O that they had;
This garment too I would they had denied.
Thee with thy self they have too richly clad,
Opening the purple wardrobe of thy side.<sup>1</sup>
O never could be found garments too good
For thee to wear, but these, of thine own blood.

5 1646

Endnotes

- Note 1: In the Gospels, the soldiers dress Jesus in a purple robe and crown of thorns on the way to his crucifixion, and divide his clothes among themselves after he is dead. In John 19:34, one of the soldiers pierces the crucified Jesus's side with a spear, and blood and water come out. Return to reference 1

CARMEN DEO NOSTRO

The Flaming Heart St. Teresa of Avila, a sixteenth-century Spanish mystic and founder of an ascetic order of barefoot Carmelite nuns, was one of the great figures of the Catholic Reformation. Her autobiography, popular throughout Europe and translated into English in 1642 as The Flaming Heart, describes not only her practical problems in establishing her order but also a series of ecstatic trances and visitations that represent union with the divine in sensual, indeed erotic, imagery. The Italian sculptor and architect Gianlorenzo Bernini portrayed a mystical experience described in the autobiography in a stunning baroque statue still in the church of Santa Maria della Vittoria, in Rome. It shows the saint in an attitude of ecstatic, swooning abandonment while a juvenile seraph stands over her, about to plunge a golden arrow into her heart. Crashaw may or may not have seen this statue while Bernini was at work on it (it was installed after Crashaw's death), but his poem—published posthumously in Carmen Deo Nostro (Hymn to Our Lord, 1652)—addresses a painter who produced a picture of this episode conceived much as Bernini presented it.

THE FLAMING HEART UPON THE BOOK
AND Picture of the seraphical saint TERESA,
(AS SHE IS USUALLY EX -pressed with a SERAPHIM beside her.)<sup>1</sup>

Well-meaning readers! you that come as friends,
And catch the precious name this piece pretends,<sup>o</sup>
Make not too much haste to admire
That fair-cheeked fallacy of fire.
That is a seraphim, they say,
5 And this the great Teresia.
Readers, be ruled by me, and make
Here a well-placed and wise mistake:
You must transpose the picture quite
And spell<sup>o</sup> it wrong to read<sup>o</sup> it right;
10 Read him for her and her for him,
And call the saint the seraphim.
Painter, what didst thou understand,
To put her dart into his hand!
See, even the years and size of him
15 Shows this the mother seraphim.
This is the mistress-flame; and duteous he,
Her happy fireworks here comes down to see.
O most poor-spirited of men!
Had thy cold pencil kissed her pen<sup>2</sup>
20 Thou couldst not so unkindly err
To show us this faint shade for her.
Why, man, this speaks pure mortal frame,
And mocks with female frost love's manly flame.
One would suspect thou meant'st to paint
25 Some weak, inferior, woman saint.

But had thy pale-faced purple took
Fire from the burning cheeks of that bright book,
Thou wouldst on her have heaped up all
That could be found seraphical:
30 Whate'er this youth of fire wears fair,
Rosy fingers, radiant hair,
Glowing cheek and glistening wings,
All those fair and flagrant<sup>o</sup> things,
But before all, that fiery dart
35 Had filled the hand of this great heart.
Do then as equal right requires,
Since his the blushes be, and hers the fires,
Resume and rectify thy rude design,
Undress thy seraphim into mine.
40 Redeem this injury of thy art,
Give him the veil, give her the dart.
Give him the veil, that he may cover
The red cheeks<sup>o</sup> of a rivaled lover,
Ashamed that our world now can show
45 Nests of new seraphims here below.<sup>3</sup>
Give her the dart, for it is she (Fair youth) shoots both thy shaft and thee.
Say, all ye wise and well-pierced hearts
That live and die amidst her darts,<sup>o</sup>
50 What is 't your tasteful spirits do prove<sup>o</sup>
In that rare life of her and love?
Say and bear witness. Sends she not
A seraphim at every shot?
What magazines of immortal arms there shine!
55 Heaven's great artillery in each love-spun line.
Give then the dart to her who gives the flame,
Give him the veil who kindly takes the shame.
But if it be the frequent fate
Of worst faults to be fortunate;
60 If all's prescription,<sup>4</sup> and proud wrong

Hearkens not to an humble song,
For all the gallantry of him,
Give me the suffering seraphim.<sup>5</sup>
His be the bravery<sup>o</sup> of all those bright things, 65 The glowing cheeks, the glistening wings,
The rosy hand, the radiant dart;
Leave her alone the Flaming Heart.
Leave her that, and thou shalt leave her
Not one loose shaft, but love's whole quiver.
70 For in love's field was never found
A nobler weapon than a wound.
Love's passives are his activ'st part,
The wounded is the wounding heart.
O heart! the equal poise of love's both parts,
75 Big alike with wounds and darts,
Live in these conquering leaves,<sup>6</sup> live all the same;
And walk through all tongues one triumphant flame.
Live here, great heart; and love and die and kill,
And bleed and wound; and yield and conquer still.
80 Let this immortal life, where'er it comes,
Walk in a crowd of loves and martyrdoms.
Let mystic deaths wait on 't, and wise souls be
The love-slain witnesses of this life of thee.
O sweet incendiary! show here thy art,
85 Upon this carcass of a hard, cold heart;<sup>o</sup>
Let all thy scattered shafts of light, that play
Among the leaves of thy large books of day,<sup>7</sup>
Combined against this breast, at once break in
And take away from me myself and sin!
90 This gracious robbery shall thy bounty be,
And my best fortunes such fair spoils of me.<sup>8</sup>
O thou undaunted daughter of desires!
By all thy dower of lights and fires;
By all the eagle in thee, all the dove;<sup>9</sup>
95 By all thy lives and deaths of love;

By thy large drafts of intellectual day,
And by thy thirsts of love more large than they;
By all thy brim-filled bowls of fierce desire,
By thy last morning's draft of liquid fire;
100 By the full kingdom of that final kiss
That seized thy parting soul, and sealed thee His;
By all the heavens thou hast in Him,
Fair sister of the seraphim,
By all of Him we have in thee,
105 Leave nothing of myself in me!
Let me so read thy life that I
Unto all life of mine may die!

1652

Endnotes

- Note 1: "Seraphim" is in fact the plural form of "seraph." This highest order of angels was thought to burn continuously in the fire of divine love.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: That is, if you had only been properly inspired by her book.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Teresa burns on earth in love, as seraphim do in heaven.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: That is, settled beforehand, by the decision of the artist.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: If Teresa can't be transformed into the angel, Crashaw prefers her as the "suffering" lover.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: That is, the leaves of St. Teresa's book.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Books filled with intellectual and spiritual light.Return to reference 7
- Note 8: That is, my best fortune will be to be despoiled in this way.Return to reference 8
- Note 9: The eagle suggests wisdom and power, for its lofty flight and ability to look into the sun's eye; the dove suggests mercy and gentleness. Compare Donne's "The Canonization," line 22 (p. 890). Return to reference 9

Notes

- °: puts forward Return to reference °
- °: read Return to reference °
- °: understand Return to reference °
- °: burning Return to reference °
- °: blushes Return to reference °
- °: her writings Return to reference °
- °: experience Return to reference °
- °: splendor Return to reference °
- °: Crashaw's heart Return to reference °

ROBERT HERRICK

1591–1674

Born in London the son of a goldsmith and apprenticed for some years in that craft, Herrick was educated at Cambridge and consorted in the early 1620s with Ben Jonson and his “tribe” of literary young men who met regularly to exchange and discuss their poetry. After his ordination in 1623, Herrick apparently served as chaplain to various noblemen and in that role joined the failed military expedition led by George Villiers, the Duke of Buckingham, to rescue French Protestants from La Rochelle in 1627. In 1630 he was installed as the vicar of Dean Prior in Devonshire. Expelled as a royalist in 1647, he probably lived in London until the Restoration, when he was reinstated at Dean Prior and remained there until his death.

Herrick’s single volume of poems, Hesperides (1648), with its appended book of religious poems, Noble Numbers, contains 1,400 short poems (1,129 in Hesperides, and 271 in Noble Numbers). Many are love poems on the carpe diem theme—seize the day, time is fleeting, make love now; a famous example is “To the Virgins, to Make Much of Time.” But Herrick’s range is wider than is sometimes recognized. He moves from the pastoral to the cynical, from an almost rococo elegance to vulgar epigrams. Certain motifs recur in his work. One is “times trans-shifting,” the transience of all natural things; another is traditional ceremonies, such as rural harvest festivals (“The Hock Cart”) or the May Day rituals described in what is perhaps his finest poem, "Corinna's Going A-Maying"; yet another is the classical but also perennial ideal of the "good life." For Herrick a good life involves love devoid of high passion (the several mistresses he addresses seem interchangeable and not very real); the pleasures of food, drink, and song; delight in the beauty of surfaces (as in "Upon Julia's Clothes"); and, above all, the creation of poetry as a bulwark against the ravages of time. Herrick knows Jonson's poetry well, but his epigrams and lyrics (like Jonson's) also show the direct influence of classical poets: Horace, Anacreon, Catullus, Tibullus, Ovid, and Martial.

Published just months before the execution of Charles I, Herrick's poems can seem merely playful and charming, almost oblivious to the catastrophes of the war. But they are not. Poems celebrating rituals of good fellowship reinforce the conservative values of social stability, tradition, and order threatened by Puritans and revolutionaries. Several poems that draw on the Celtic mythology of fairy folk make their feasts, temples, worship, and ceremonies stand in for the forbidden ceremonies of the Laudian church and a life governed by ritual. Still others, like "The Hock Cart" and "Corinna's Going A-Maying," extol the kind of rural festivals that were at the center of the culture wars between royalists and Puritans. Both James I and Charles I urged such activities in their Book of Sports as a means of reinforcing traditional institutions in the countryside and deflecting discontent, while Puritans vigorously opposed them as occasions for drunkenness and licentiousness.

FROM HESPERIDES<sup>1</sup>

Endnotes

- Note 1: In myth, the Hesperides, or Western Maidens, guarded an orchard and a garden, also called Hesperides, in which grew a tree bearing golden apples. Herrick's title suggests that his poems are golden apples from his residence in western Devonshire; the following poems are all from that volume, published in 1648.Return to reference 1

The Argument<sup>2</sup> of His Book

I sing of brooks, of blossoms, birds, and bowers,
Of April, May, of June, and July flowers.
I sing of Maypoles, hock carts, wassails, wakes,<sup>3</sup>
Of bridegrooms, brides, and of their bridal cakes.
I write of youth, of love, and have access
5 By these to sing of cleanly wantonness.
I sing of dews, of rains, and, piece by piece,
Of balm, of oil, of spice, and ambergris.<sup>4</sup>
I sing of times trans-shifting,<sup>o</sup> and I write
How roses first came red and lilies white.
10 I write of groves, of twilights, and I sing
The court of Mab and of the fairy king.<sup>5</sup>
I write of hell; I sing (and ever shall)
Of heaven, and hope to have it after all.

Endnotes

- Note 2: Subject matter, theme.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Festive, not funerary, occasions, to celebrate the dedication of a new church. "Hock carts" carried home the last load of the harvest, so they were adorned and celebrated. "Wassails" were Twelfth Night celebrations.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: A secretion of the sperm whale that is used in making perfume—hence it suggests something rare and delectable.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Mab was queen of the fairies and wife of their king, Oberon.Return to reference 5

Notes

- °: changingReturn to reference °

Upon the Loss of His Mistresses<sup>1</sup>

I have lost, and lately, these
Many dainty mistresses:
Stately Julia, prime of all;
Sappho next, a principal;
Smooth Anthea, for a skin
5 White and heaven-like crystalline;
Sweet Electra, and the choice
Myrrha, for the lute and voice;
Next Corinna for her wit
And the graceful use of it,
10 With Perilla; all are gone,
Only Herrick's left alone,
For to number sorrows by
Their departures hence, and die.

Endnotes

- Note 1: The ladies are imaginary, and their names are traditional in classical love poetry and pastoral poetry.Return to reference 1

The Vine

I dreamed this mortal part of mine
Was metamorphosed to a vine,
Which, crawling one and every way,
Enthralled my dainty Lucia.<sup>1</sup>
5 Methought, her long small legs and thighs
I with my tendrils did surprise;
Her belly, buttocks, and her waist
By my soft nervelets were embraced.
About her head I writhing hung,
10 And with rich clusters (hid among The leaves) her temples I behung,
So that my Lucia seemed to me
Young Bacchus ravished by his tree.<sup>o</sup>
My curls about her neck did crawl,
And arms and hands they did enthrall,
15 So that she could not freely stir
(All parts there made one prisoner).
But when I crept with leaves to hide
Those parts which maids keep unespied,
Such fleeting pleasures there I took 20 That with the fancy I awoke,
And found (ah me!) this flesh of mine
More like a stock<sup>o</sup> than like a vine.

Endnotes

- Note 1: For the sake of both rhyme and meter, the name of this lady is given three syllables here; in line 12 it has only two.Return to reference 1

Notes

- °: the grapevine Return to reference °
- °: hard stalk Return to reference °

Dreams

Here we are all, by day; by night, we're hurled
By dreams, each one into a several° world.

Notes

- °: separateReturn to reference °

Delight in Disorder<sup>1</sup>

A sweet disorder in the dress
Kindles in clothes a wantonness.
A lawn<sup>o</sup> about the shoulders thrown Into a fine distraction;
An erring<sup>o</sup> lace, which here and there
5 Enthralls the crimson stomacher;<sup>2</sup>
A cuff neglectful, and thereby
Ribbons to flow confusedly;
A winning wave, deserving note,
In the tempestuous petticoat;
10 A careless shoestring, in whose tie
I see a wild civility:
Do more bewitch me than when art
Is too precise<sup>3</sup> in every part.

Endnotes

- Note 1: One of several poems in this period in which women's dress is a means by which to explore the relation of nature and art.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: An ornamental covering of the chest, worn under the laces of the bodice.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: "Precise" and "precision" were terms used satirically about Puritans. Herrick, in praising feminine disarray, is at one level praising the sprezzatura, or careless grace, of Cavalier art.Return to reference 3

Notes

- °: fine linen scarfReturn to reference °

- °: wandering Return to reference °

Corinna's Going A-Maying

Get up! Get up for shame! The blooming morn
Upon her wings presents the god unshorn.<sup>1</sup>
See how Aurora throws her fair
Fresh-quilted colors through the air:<sup>2</sup>
Get up, sweet slug-a-bed, and see
5 The dew bespangling herb and tree.
Each flower has wept and bowed toward the east
Above an hour since, yet you not dressed;
Nay, not so much as out of bed?
When all the birds have matins<sup>o</sup> said,
10 And sung their thankful hymns, 'tis sin,
Nay, profanation<sup>o</sup> to keep in,
Whenas a thousand virgins on this day
Spring, sooner than the lark, to fetch in May.<sup>3</sup>

Rise, and put on your foliage, and be seen
15 To come forth, like the springtime, fresh and green,
And sweet as Flora.<sup>4</sup> Take no care
For jewels for your gown or hair;
Fear not; the leaves will strew
Gems in abundance upon you;
20 Besides, the childhood of the day has kept,
Against<sup>o</sup> you come, some orient pearls<sup>5</sup> unwept;
Come and receive them while the light
Hangs on the dew-locks of the night,
And Titan<sup>o</sup> on the eastern hill
25 Retires himself, or else stands still Till you come forth. Wash, dress, be brief in praying:
Few beads<sup>6</sup> are best when once we go a-Maying.

Come, my Corinna, come; and, coming, mark
How each field turns<sup>o</sup> a street, each street a park 30     Made green and trimmed with trees; see how Devotion gives each house a bough
      Or branch: each porch, each door ere this,
      An ark, a tabernacle is,<sup>z</sup>
      Made up of whitethorn neatly interwove,
35     As if here were those cooler shades of love.
      Can such delights be in the street
      And open fields, and we not see 't?
      Come, we'll abroad; and let's obey
      The proclamation<sup>8</sup> made for May,
40     And sin no more, as we have done, by staying;
      But, my Corinna, come, let's go a-Maying.

There's not a budding boy or girl this day
But is got up and gone to bring in May;
      A deal of youth, ere this, is come
45     Back, and with whitethorn laden, home.
      Some have dispatched their cakes and cream
      Before that we have left to dream;
      And some have wept, and wooed, and plighted
      troth,<sup>9</sup>
      And chose their priest, ere we can cast off sloth.
50     Many a green gown<sup>1</sup> has been given,
      Many a kiss, both odd and even;<sup>2</sup>
      Many a glance, too, has been sent
      From out the eye, love's firmament;<sup>o</sup>
      Many a jest told of the keys betraying
55     This night, and locks picked; yet we're not a-Maying.

Come, let us go while we are in our prime,
And take the harmless folly of the time.
      We shall grow old apace, and die

60        Before we know our liberty.
          Our life is short, and our days run
          As fast away as does the sun;
          And, as a vapor or a drop of rain,
          Once lost, can ne'er be found again,
65        So when or you or I are made
          A fable, song, or fleeting shade,
          All love, all liking, all delight
          Lies drowned with us in endless night.<sup>3</sup>
          Then while time serves, and we are but decaying, 70        Come, my Corinna, come, let's go a-Maying.

Endnotes

- Note 1: Apollo, the sun god; sunbeams are seen as his flowing locks.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Aurora is goddess of the dawn.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: On May Day morning, it was the custom to gather whitethorn blossoms and trim the house with them.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Flora, Italian goddess of the flowering of plants, had her festival in the spring.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Pearls from the Orient were especially lustrous, like drops of dew.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Rosary beads of the "old" Catholic religion; more generally, a casual term for prayers.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: The doorways, ornamented with whitethorn, are like the Hebrew Ark of the Covenant or the sanctuary that housed it (Leviticus 23:40–42: "Ye shall take you on the first day the boughs of goodly trees . . .").Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Probably a reference to Charles I's "Declaration to his subjects concerning lawful sports."Return to reference 8
- Note 9: Engaged themselves to marry.Return to reference 9
- Note 1: Made green because the wearer has rolled in the grass.Return to reference 1

- Note 2: Kisses are odd and even in kissing games.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Some echoes of the apocryphal book Wisdom of Solomon 2:1–8: “For the ungodly said . . . the breath of our nostrils is as smoke, and a little spark . . . and our life shall pass away as the trace of a cloud. . . . Come on therefore . . . Let us crown ourselves with rose buds before they be withered.” This carpe diem sentiment is a frequent theme in classical love poetry.Return to reference 3

Notes

- °: morning prayerReturn to reference °
- °: impietyReturn to reference °
- °: untilReturn to reference °
- °: the sunReturn to reference °
- °: turns intoReturn to reference °
- °: skyReturn to reference °

To the Virgins, to Make Much of Time

Gather ye rosebuds while ye may,
Old time is still<sup>o</sup> a-flying;<sup>1</sup>
And this same flower that smiles today,
Tomorrow will be dying.

5 The glorious lamp of heaven, the sun,
The higher he's a-getting,
The sooner will his race be run,
And nearer he's to setting.

10 That age is best which is the first,
When youth and blood are warmer;
But being spent, the worse, and worst
Times still succeed the former.

15 Then be not coy, but use your time,
And while ye may, go marry;
For having lost but once your prime,
You may forever tarry.

Endnotes

- Note 1: A translation of the Latin tempus fugit.Return to reference 1

Notes

- <sup>o</sup>: alwaysReturn to reference <sup>o</sup>

The Hock Cart,<sup>1</sup> or Harvest Home

to the Right Honorable Mildmay, Earl of Westmoreland

Come, sons of summer, by whose toil
We are the lords of wine and oil;<sup>2</sup>
By whose tough labors and rough hands
We rip up first, then reap our lands.
5   Crowned with the ears of corn,<sup>o</sup> now come
And, to the pipe, sing harvest home.
Come forth, my lord, and see the cart
Dressed up with all the country art.
See here a maukin,<sup>o</sup> there a sheet,
10   As spotless pure as it is sweet,
The horses, mares, and frisking fillies
Clad all in linen, white as lilies,
The harvest swains<sup>o</sup> and wenches bound
For joy to see the hock-cart crowned.
15   About the cart, hear how the rout
Of rural younglings raise the shout,
Pressing before, some coming after,
Those with a shout and these with laughter.
Some bless the cart, some kiss the sheaves,
Some prank them up<sup>o</sup> with oaken leaves;
20   Some cross the fill-horse,<sup>3</sup> some with great Devotion stroke the home-borne wheat;
While other rustics, less attent
To prayers than to merriment,
Run after with their breeches rent.
25   Well, on, brave boys, to your lord's hearth,
Glittering with fire; where, for your mirth,
Ye shall see first the large and chief

Foundation of your feast, fat beef;
 With upper stories, mutton, veal,
 30 And bacon,<sup>o</sup> which makes full the meal,
 With several dishes standing by,
 As here a custard, there a pie,
 And here all-tempting frumenty.<sup>o</sup>
 And for to make the merry cheer,
 35 If smirking<sup>o</sup> wine be wanting<sup>o</sup> here,
 There's that which drowns all care, stout beer:
 Which freely drink to your lord's health,
 Then to the plow (the common-wealth),
 Next to your flails, your fans,<sup>4</sup> your vats,
 40 Then to the maids with wheaten hats,
 To the rough sickle and crook'd scythe,
 Drink, frolic boys, till all be blithe.
 Feed, and grow fat; and, as ye eat,
 Be mindful that the lab'ring neat,<sup>o</sup>
 45 As you, may have their fill of meat.<sup>5</sup>
 And know, besides, ye must revoke<sup>o</sup>
 The patient ox unto his yoke,
 And all go back unto the plow
 And harrow, though they're hanged up now.
 50 And you must know, your lord's word's true,
 Feed him ye must whose food fills you,
 And that this pleasure is like rain,
 Not sent ye for to drown your pain
 But for to make it spring again.<sup>6</sup> 55

Endnotes

- Note 1: The last cart carrying home the harvest; hence the occasion for a rural festival, traditional throughout Europe. Mildmay Fane, Earl of Westmoreland (1628–1660), was one of Herrick's patrons.Return to reference 1

- Note 2: Wine and oil are the yields of Mediterranean farming, connecting the English harvest festival to classical pastoral.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: The fill-horse is harnessed between the shafts of the cart. Crossing the horse and kissing the sheaves suggest the persistence of pre-Reformation rituals in the countryside.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: “Flails” are threshing instruments; “fans” are used to winnow grain from chaff. The plow is the common source of everybody’s wealth. In line with the anti-Puritan sentiments of the whole poem, the word “commonwealth,” in this communal and earthy sense, invites a contrast with Puritan republican theories.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Food (grain or hay).Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Spring is heralded by rain, but the lines also point to the continual renewal of the agricultural worker’s pain and labor.Return to reference 6

Notes

- °: grainReturn to reference °
- °: scarecrowReturn to reference °
- °: young menReturn to reference °
- °: adorn themReturn to reference °
- °: porkReturn to reference °
- °: puddingReturn to reference °
- °: sparkling Return to reference °
- °: lackingReturn to reference °
- °: cattleReturn to reference °
- °: call backReturn to reference °

Upon the Nipples of Julia's Breast

Have ye beheld (with much delight)
A red rose peeping through a white?
Or else a cherry (double graced)
Within a lily center-placed?
Or ever marked◦ the pretty beam
5 A strawberry shows half drowned in cream?
Or seen rich rubies blushing through
A pure smooth pearl, and orient◦ too?
So like to this, nay all the rest,
10 Is each neat niplet of her breast.

Notes

- ◦: observed Return to reference ◦
- ◦: iridescent Return to reference ◦

Upon His Verses

What offspring other men have got,
The how, where, when I question not.
These are the children I have left;
Adopted some, none got by theft.
5 But all are touched (like lawful plate)<sup>1</sup>
And no verse illegitimate.

Endnotes

- Note 1: A special variety of quartz, known as basanite, was used to test gold and silver objects; the color of the smear left on the touchstone revealed its purity.Return to reference 1

Upon Julia's Clothes

Whenas in silks my Julia goes,<sup>o</sup>
Then, then, methinks, how sweetly flows
That liquefaction of her clothes.

5      Next, when I cast mine eyes and see
That brave<sup>o</sup> vibration each way free,
Oh, how that glittering taketh me!

Notes

- <sup>o</sup>: walksReturn to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: splendidReturn to reference <sup>o</sup>

Upon Prue, His Maid<sup>2</sup>

In this little urn is laid
Prudence Baldwin, once my maid,
From whose happy spark here let Spring the purple violet.

Endnotes

- Note 2: This is an odd epitaph, since Prudence Baldwin died four years after Herrick. Return to reference 2

To His Book's End<sup>3</sup>

To his book's end this last line he'd have placed:
Jocund° his muse was, but his life was chaste.

Endnotes

- Note 3: The last poem of Hesperides.Return to reference 3

Notes

- °: merry, sprightlyReturn to reference °

FROM* NOBLE NUMBERS

To His Conscience<sup>1</sup>

Can I not sin, but thou wilt be
My private protonotary?<sup>2</sup>
Can I not woo thee to pass by
A short and sweet iniquity?
I'll cast a mist and cloud upon
5 My delicate transgression
So utter dark as that no eye
Shall see the hugged<sup>o</sup> impiety.
Gifts blind the wise,<sup>3</sup> and bribes do please
And wind<sup>o</sup> all other witnesses:
10 And wilt not thou with gold be tied
To lay thy pen and ink aside?
That in the mirk<sup>o</sup> and tongueless night
Wanton I may, and thou not write?
It will not be; and therefore now
15 For times to come I'll make this vow,
From aberrations to live free,
So I'll not fear the Judge, or thee.

Endnotes

- Note 1: This and the following poem are from Noble Numbers, the collection of Herrick's religious poems that was bound together with Hesperides.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Chief recording clerk of a court.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: An echo of Deuteronomy 16:19: "a gift doth blind the eyes of the wise."Return to reference 3

Notes

- °: cherishedReturn to reference °
- °: pervertReturn to reference °
- °: black, murkyReturn to reference °

Another Grace for a Child

Here a little child I stand,
Heaving up my either hand;
Cold as paddocks<sup>o</sup> though they be,
Here I lift them up to thee,
For a benison<sup>o</sup> to fall
5 On our meat and on us all. Amen.

Notes

- <sup>o</sup>: frogs Return to reference <sup>o</sup>
- <sup>o</sup>: blessing Return to reference <sup>o</sup>

HESTER PULTER

1605–1678

Rediscovered in a university archive in 1996, Hester Pulter's Poems Breathed Forth by the Noble Hadassas—a single bound manuscript containing 120 poems and an incomplete romance—is a remarkable record of an intellectual life almost lost to literary history. Pulter composed her work when she and her royalist family were living in semi-exile during the Interregnum. She was born Hester Ley in Dublin, where her father was Chief Justice of Ireland, and her family came to London under the patronage of James I. Her husband, Arthur Pulter, was a lesser magistrate and wealthy estate owner in Hertfordshire, where they seem to have retired shortly after the English Civil Wars broke out.

Like Katherine Philips and Margaret Cavendish, Pulter wrote elegies for fallen royalist leaders, including Charles I; and her chosen name, "Hadassah," another name for the biblical Queen Esther (or Hester), who saved her people from oppression, hints at her self-conception as a defender of a cause. Her poetry shows a keen interest both in the "divine breath" that animates all matter and in the natural philosophies, ranging from astronomy and alchemy to vitalist materialism, that fired the imaginations of her peers, including John Donne and George Herbert, whose work she clearly admired.

Pulter's poems below demonstrate ambitious reworkings of literary traditions, particularly of conventional Petrarchan tropes such as the anatomical blazon. As she demands in one elegy on her daughter's death, "Tell me no more her cheeks excelled the rose." In "View But This Tulip," Pulter turns a philosophical discussion of "first principles" and "indivisibles" into a meditation on the resurrection of the flesh at the end of time. The formal simplicity of "Dear God, from Thy High Throne Look Down" shares with other seventeenth-century devotional poems an interest in what Herbert calls "the good fellowship of dust," but the poem is also infused with Pulter's interest in bodies tossed in a thousand "figures." Much like the poems of Margaret Cavendish, Pulter's verses invite speculation.

Upon the Death of My Dear and Lovely Daughter, Jane Pulter

All you that have indulgent parents been,
And have your children in perfection seen
Of youth and beauty: lend one tear to me,
And trust me, I will do as much for thee,
Unless my own grief do exhaust my store;
5 Then will I sigh till I suspire<sup>o</sup> no more.
Twice hath the Earth thrown Chloris's<sup>o</sup> mantle by,
Embroidered o'er with curious<sup>o</sup> tapestry,
And twice hath seemed to mourn unto our sight,
Like Jews or Chinese in snowy white,<sup>1</sup>
10 Since she laid down her milky limbs on earth,
Which, dying, gave her virgin soul new birth.
Yet still my heart is overwhelmed with grief,
And tears (alas) give sorrow no relief.
Twice hath sad Philomel<sup>2</sup> left off to sing
15 Her mortifying<sup>o</sup> sonnets to the spring.
Twice at the sylvan<sup>o</sup> choristers' desire
She hath lent her music to complete their choir,
Since all devouring Death on her took seizure,
And Tellus's<sup>o</sup> womb involved<sup>o</sup> so rich a treasure.
20 Yet still my heart is overwhelmed with grief,
And time, nor tears, will give my woes relief.
Twelve times hath Phoebe,<sup>3</sup> hornéd,<sup>o</sup> seemed to fight,
As often filled them with her brother's light,
Since she did close her sparkling diamond eyes;
25 Yet my sad heart, for her still pining,<sup>o</sup> dies.
Through the twelve houses<sup>o</sup> hath the illustrious sun
With splendency<sup>o</sup> his annual journey run.

Twice hath his fiery, furious horses hurled
His blazing chariot to the lower world,
30 Showing his luster to the wond'ring eyes
Of our (now so well known) antipodes,<sup>o</sup>
Since the brack<sup>o</sup> of her spotless virgin story
Which now her soul doth end in endless glory.
Yet my afflicted, sad, forsaken soul
35 For her in tears and ashes still doth roll.
O could a fever spot her snowy skin,
Whose virgin soul was scarcely soiled with sin?
Ay me, it did! So have I sometimes seen
Fair maidens sit encircled on a green,
40 White lilies spread when they were making poses,<sup>4</sup>
Upon them scatter leaves of damask roses,<sup>o</sup>
E'en so, the spots upon her fair skin shows
Like lily leaves sprinkled with damask rose,
Or, as a stately hart<sup>o</sup> to death pursued
45 By ravening hounds, his eyes with tears bedewed,
An arrow sticking in his trembling breast,
His lost condition to the life expressed,<sup>o</sup>
So trips he o'er the lawns on trodden snow,
And from his side his guiltless blood doth flow.
50 So did the spots upon her fair skin show
Like drops of blood upon unsullied snow.
But what a heart had I, when I did stand
Holding her forehead with my trembling hand.
My heart to heaven with her bright spirit flies
55 Whilst she (ah me!) closed up her lovely eyes.
Her soul being seated in her place of birth,
I turned a Niobe<sup>5</sup> as she turned earth.

ca. 1647

Endnotes

- Note 1: Traditional color of mourning in China and in Jewish traditions of burial and mourning.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: In classical myth, Philomela was raped by her brother-in-law Tereus, who tore out her tongue; the gods transformed her into a bird (in Ovid's version of the story, a nightingale).Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Goddess of the moon, and sister of the sun, Phoebus Apollo.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Posies: bouquets or bunches of flowers; figuratively, short verses.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: That is, dissolved into tears. In Greek myth, the gods Apollo and Artemis killed Niobe's six sons and six daughters after she bragged that she had more children than their mother, Leto; she was metamorphosed into a rock weeping for their loss.Return to reference 5

Notes

- °: breatheReturn to reference °
- °: goddess of springReturn to reference °
- °: artful, elaborate, delicateReturn to reference °
- °: fatal, self-denyingReturn to reference °
- °: forest-dwellingReturn to reference °
- °: goddess of the earth Return to reference °
- °: envelopedReturn to reference °
- °: crescent-shapedReturn to reference °
- °: yearningReturn to reference °
- °: of the ZodiacReturn to reference °
- °: splendorReturn to reference °
- °: opposite side of the worldReturn to reference °
- °: breach, ruptureReturn to reference °
- °: roses from DamascusReturn to reference °
- °: deerReturn to reference °
- °: exactly reproducedReturn to reference °

View But This Tulip

View but this tulip, rose, or gillyflower,<sup>o</sup>
And by a finite, see an infinite power.
These flowers into their chaos were retired
Till human art them raised and re-inspired 5 With beating, macerating,<sup>1</sup> fermentation, Calcining,<sup>o</sup> chemically, with segregation;<sup>2</sup>
Then, lest the air these secrets should reveal,
Shut up the ashes under Hermes's seal;<sup>3</sup>
Then, with a candle or a gentle fire,
10 You may reanimate at your desire
These gallant<sup>o</sup> plants; but if you cool the glass,
To their first principles<sup>4</sup> they'll quickly pass:
From sulfur, salt, and mercury they came;
When they dissolve, they turn into the same.
Then, seeing a wretched mortal hath the power
15 To recreate a Virbius of a flower,<sup>5</sup>
Why should we fear, though sadly we retire
Into our cause?<sup>o</sup> Our God will re-inspire
Our dormant dust, and keep alive the same
With an all-quick'ning,<sup>o</sup> everlasting flame.
20 Then, though I into atoms scattered be,
In indivisibles<sup>o</sup> I'll trust in Thee.
Then let this comfort me in my sad story:
Dust is but four degrees removed from glory
By Nature's paths,<sup>6</sup> but God from death and night
25 Can raise this flesh to endless life and light.
Then, my impatient soul, contented be,
For thou a glorious spring ere<sup>o</sup> long shalt see.
After these gloomy shades of death and sorrow,
Thou shalt enjoy an everlasting morrow.
30

As wheat in new-plowed furrows rotting lies,
Incapable of quick'ning till it dies,<sup>7</sup>
So into dust this flesh of mine must turn
And lie a while forgotten in my urn.
Yet when the sea, and earth, and Hell shall give 35 Their treasures up, my body too shall live:
Not like the resurrection at Grand Caire,<sup>8</sup>
Where men revive, then straight of life despair;
But, with my soul, my flesh shall reunite
And ne'er involv'd be with death and night,
40 But live in endless pleasure, love, and light.
Then hallelujahs will I sing to Thee,
My gracious God, to all eternity.
Then at thy dissolution patient be:
If man can raise a flower, God can thee.
45

ca. 1640–65

Endnotes

- Note 1: Softening by steeping in liquid.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: A reference to palingenesis, the (supposed) regeneration through alchemy of living organisms from ashes or putrefying matter.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: A hermetic seal, tight enough to exclude air; Hermes Trismegistus was the Greek name of the Egyptian god Thoth, regarded as the founder of alchemy.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: In alchemy, the substances composing all matter: mercury, salt, and sulfur; more generally, origins, constituent parts.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: In Greek myth, Hippolytus is unjustly killed because of his father's curse but brought back to life by Asclepius, the god of healing; he emigrated to Italy under the Latin name Virbius (from vir bis, "a man twice").Return to reference 5

- Note 6: Those paths derived from the four elements: earth, air, water, and fire.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Seeds need to be buried (and thus “die”) under soil in order to return to life (or “quicken”).Return to reference 7
- Note 8: Cairo, possibly referring to the ancient Egyptian custom of mummifying the dead in anticipation of resurrection (one the speaker presumes, in the next line, will be disappointing), or to travelers’ accounts of superstitious Egyptian beliefs about the annual rising of dead bones.Return to reference 8

Notes

- °: July flower, carnationReturn to reference °
- °: burning to ashReturn to reference °
- °: gorgeous or showyReturn to reference °
- °: original, formative elementsReturn to reference °
- °: all-enliveningReturn to reference °
- °: atomsReturn to reference °
- °: beforeReturn to reference °

Dear God, from Thy High Throne Look Down

Dear God, from Thy high throne look down,
And let my suff'rings have their crown:
I Thee implore.

5      Though grief calcine<sup>o</sup> my flesh to dust
Yet in Thy mercy still I trust
And Thee adore.

Should I to tears dissolvéd be
Yet will I still depend on Thee
Forevermore.

10      Or should I sigh away to air,
Though rarefied,<sup>o</sup> I'd not despair
But in Thee trust.

15      Though I to atoms am dispersed,
I in their dances am unversed,<sup>o</sup>
Yet shall no dust

Of my old carcass e'er be lost
Though in a thousand figures<sup>o</sup> tossed,
For Thou art just.

20      What mortal can or dares to look
Into Thy glorious blessed book?
Where written be

Of me, poor wretched me, each part,
E'en all my soul, my thoughts, my heart.
Thou plain may'st see

25

ca. 1640–65

- ◊: burn to ash; purify, refineReturn to reference ◊
- ◊: made less substantial; purifiedReturn to reference ◊
- ◊: inexperienced; not in verseReturn to reference ◊
- ◊: shapes; embodimentsReturn to reference ◊

RICHARD LOVELACE

1617–1657

The quintessential Cavalier, Richard Lovelace was described by a contemporary as “the most amiable and beautiful person that ever eye beheld.” Born into a wealthy Kentish family, he was educated at Oxford and fought for Charles I in Scotland (in both expeditions, 1639 and 1640). He shared with his king a serious interest in art, especially the paintings of Peter Paul Rubens, Anthony Van Dyck, and Peter Lely. He was imprisoned for a few months in 1642 for supporting the “Kentish Petition” that urged restoration of the king to his ancient rights; in “To Althea, from Prison,” he finds freedom from external bondage in the Cavalier embrace of sex, wine, and royalism. During 1643–46 he fought in the king’s armies in England and in Holland and France, where he was wounded. In a general roundup of known royalists in 1648 he was imprisoned for ten months. While in prison Lovelace prepared his poems for publication under the title Lucasta (1649), the name of his muse. Besides witty and charming love songs, the volume includes the plaintive ballad about the conflict between love and honor, “To Lucasta, Going to the Wars,” and also “The Grasshopper,” a poem celebrating the Cavalier ideal. Like that emblematic summer creature, the once-carefree Cavalier suffers in the Puritan “winter,” but Lovelace finds in the fellowship of Cavalier friends a nobler version of the good life. After 1649 he endured years of poverty, and was largely dependent on the generosity of his friend and fellow royalist, the poet Charles Cotton.

His remaining poems appeared in 1659 as Lucasta: Postume Poems.

FROM* LUCASTA

To Lucasta, Going to the Wars

Tell me not, sweet, I am unkind,
That from the nunnery
Of thy chaste breast and quiet mind
To war and arms I fly.

5 True, a new mistress now I chase,
The first foe in the field;
And with a stronger faith embrace
A sword, a horse, a shield.

10 Yet this inconstancy is such
As you too shall adore;
I could not love thee, dear, so much,
Loved I not honor more.

The Grasshopper<sup>1</sup>

To My Noble Friend, Mr. Charles Cotton

O thou that swing'st upon the waving hair
Of some well-fillèd oaten beard,<sup>o</sup>
Drunk every night with a delicious tear
Dropped thee from heav'n, where now th' art reared,

5 The joys of earth and air are thine entire,
That with thy feet and wings dost hop and fly;
And when thy poppy<sup>o</sup> works thou dost retire
To thy carved acorn bed to lie.

10 Up with the day, the sun thou welcom'st then,
Sport'st in the gilt-plats<sup>o</sup> of his beams,
And all these merry days mak'st merry men,
Thyself, and melancholy streams.<sup>2</sup>

15 But ah, the sickle! golden ears are cropped,
Ceres and Bacchus<sup>3</sup> bid goodnight;
Sharp frosty fingers all your flow'rs have topped,
And what scythes spared, winds shave off quite.

20 Poor verdant fool! and now green ice! thy joys,
Large and as lasting as thy perch of grass,
Bid us lay in 'gainst winter rain, and poise<sup>o</sup>
Their floods with an o'erflowing glass.

Thou best of men and friends! we will create
A genuine summer in each other's breast;
And spite of this cold time and frozen fate

Thaw us a warm seat to our rest.

25 Our sacred hearths shall burn eternally
As vestal flames;<sup>4</sup> the North Wind, he Shall strike his frost-stretched wings, dissolve, and fly
This Etna in epitome.<sup>5</sup>

30 Dropping December shall come weeping in,
Bewail th' usurping of his reign;
But when in showers of old Greek we begin,
Shall cry, he hath his crown again!<sup>6</sup>

35 Night as clear Hesper<sup>o</sup> shall our tapers whip
From the light casements where we play,
And the dark hag<sup>z</sup> from her black mantle strip,
And stick there everlasting day.

40 Thus richer than untempted kings are we,
That asking nothing, nothing need:
Though lord of all that seas embrace, yet he
That wants<sup>o</sup> himself is poor indeed.

1649

Endnotes

- Note 1: In Aesop's Fables the grasshopper lives in carefree idleness, in contrast with the industrious ant who lays up stores for the winter. The circumstances of the poem are those of the Interregnum, when a Puritan 'winter' seemed, to royalists, to be settling over England and obliterating their mode of life. The grasshopper may also allude to the recently executed king, Charles I. Return to reference 1
- Note 2: The three objects of "mak'st merry" are "men," "thyself," and "melancholy streams." Return to reference 2

- Note 3: Goddess of grain and god of wine. Return to reference 3
- Note 4: The Vestal Virgins, in Rome, were responsible for tending an eternal flame in the Temple of Vesta. Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Boreas, the north wind, folding up ("striking") his wings, flees the heat of the volcano within Mount Etna, a figure for the fires of friendship. Return to reference 5
- Note 6: Greek wine was favored in the classical world. "Crown" here has multiple associations: the crown worn by "King Christmas" at the festivities banned by Puritans, and the crown Cavaliers hoped would soon be restored to Charles II. Return to reference 6
- Note 7: Hecate, a daughter of Night. Return to reference 7

Notes

- °: head of grain Return to reference °
- °: opiate Return to reference °
- °: golden fields Return to reference °
- °: counterbalance Return to reference °
- °: the evening star Return to reference °
- °: lacks Return to reference °

To Althea, from Prison

When Love with unconfined wings
Hovers within my gates,
And my divine Althea brings
To whisper at the grates;
5 When I lie tangled in her hair
And fettered to her eye,
The gods<sup>1</sup> that wanton<sup>o</sup> in the air
Know no such liberty.

When flowing cups run swiftly round,
10 With no allaying Thames,<sup>2</sup>
Our careless heads with roses bound,
Our hearts with loyal flames;
When thirsty grief in wine we steep,
When healths and drafts go free,
15 Fishes that tipple in the deep
Know no such liberty.

When, like committed linnets,<sup>o</sup> I
With shriller throat shall sing
The sweetness, mercy, majesty,
And glories of my king;
20 When I shall voice aloud how good
He is, how great should be,
Enlargèd winds, that curl the flood,
Know no such liberty.

25 Stone walls do not a prison make,
Nor iron bars a cage;
Minds innocent and quiet take
That for an hermitage.

If I have freedom in my love,
And in my soul am free,
Angels alone, that soar above,
Enjoy such liberty.

Endnotes

- Note 1: Some versions read “birds” instead of “gods.” Return to reference 1
- Note 2: No mixture of water (as from the river Thames) in the wine. Return to reference 2

Notes

- °: play Return to reference °
- °: caged finches Return to reference °

La Bella Bona Roba<sup>1</sup>

I

I cannot tell who loves the skeleton
Of a poor marmoset,<sup>o</sup> naught but bone, bone.
Give me a nakedness with her clothes on.<sup>2</sup>

II

5 Such whose white satin upper coat of skin,
Cut upon velvet rich incarnadine,<sup>o</sup>
Has yet a body (and of flesh) within.

III

Sure it is meant good husbandry<sup>o</sup> in men,
Who do incorporate<sup>3</sup> with airy lean,<sup>o</sup>
To repair their sides, and get their rib again.<sup>4</sup>

IV

10 Hard hap<sup>o</sup> unto that huntsman that decrees
Fat joys for all his sweat, whenas he sees,
After his 'say,<sup>o</sup> naught but his keeper's fees.<sup>5</sup>

V

15 Then Love, I beg, when next thou takest thy bow,
Thy angry shafts, and dost heart-chasing go,
Pass rascal<sup>o</sup> deer, strike me the largest doe.

Endnotes

- Note 1: “Bona roba,” from the Italian for good dress or gear, was a term for a wanton woman or prostitute.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Well-fleshed.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Both take into the body and copulate.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: See Genesis 2:21–22 for Eve’s creation from Adam’s rib.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: The meager portion of a deer allotted to the gamekeeper.Return to reference 5

Notes

- °: wanton womanReturn to reference °
- °: flesh-colored, redReturn to reference °
- °: managementReturn to reference °
- °: insubstantial meatReturn to reference °
- °: fortuneReturn to reference °
- °: assay, attemptReturn to reference °
- °: inferior, meanReturn to reference °

A Black Patch on Lucasta's Face

Dull as I was, to think that a court fly<sup>1</sup>
Presumed so near her eye,
When 'twas th' industrious bee
Mistook her glorious face for paradise;
To sum up all his chemistry of spice,
5 With a brave pride and honor led,
Near both her suns<sup>o</sup> he makes his bed,
And though a spark struggles to rise as red;
Then emulates the gay
Daughter of day,
10 Acts the romantic phoenix's fate;<sup>2</sup>
When now, with all his sweets laid out in state,
Lucasta scatters but one heat,
And all the aromatic pills do sweat,
And gums calcined,<sup>o</sup> themselves to powder beat;<sup>3</sup>
15 Which a fresh gale of air
Conveys into her hair;
Then chaste he's set on fire,
And in these holy flames doth glad expire;
And that black marble tablet<sup>4</sup> there 20 So near her either sphere
Was placed; nor foil, nor ornament,
But the sweet little bee's large monument.<sup>o</sup>

John Bulwer's Anthropometamorphosis: Man Transform'd (1653) discusses the ways in which the English copied the fashions of other nations, including face patches.

Endnotes

- Note 1: An insect, as well as a (court) parasite or flatterer, and a patch for the face (from the French mouche): a small piece of black material, typically silk or velvet, cut into a decorative shape and worn either for adornment or to conceal a blemish. (See the illustration from Bulwer's Anthropometamorphosis, as well as John Donne's "The Flea.") A patch was also a fool. Return to reference 1
- Note 2: The phoenix was a mythic Arabian bird; only one existed at any time. After five hundred years it was consumed by fire, and another rose from its ashes. Return to reference 2
- Note 3: As the radiance of Lucasta's eyes cremates the bee, the bee's store of honey is secreted and then calcined. Return to

reference 3

- Note 4: That is, the mark left on Lucasta's face where the bee died in the fire of her eyes. A tablet was a small slab bearing a memorial inscription, as well as a writing surface.Return to reference 4

Notes

- °: eyesReturn to reference °
- °: reduced to powder by heatReturn to reference °
- °: memorial structure; sepulcherReturn to reference °

Love Made in the First Age.<sup>1</sup> To Chloris

In the nativity of time,
Chloris, it was not thought a crime
In direct Hebrew for to woo.<sup>2</sup>
Now we make love as all on fire,
Ring retrograde<sup>3</sup> our loud desire,
5 And court in English backward too.

Thrice happy was that golden age,
When compliment was construed rage,<sup>4</sup>
And fine words in the center hid;
When cursèd No stained no maid's bliss,
10 And all discourse was summed in Yes,
And naught forbade, but to forbid.

Love then unstinted, love did sip,
And cherries plucked fresh from the lip,
On cheeks and roses free he fed;
15 Lasses like autumn plums did drop,
And lads indifferently<sup>o</sup> did crop
A flower and a maidenhead.

Then unconfined each did tipple
Wine from the bunch, milk from the nipple;
20 Paps tractable as udders were;
Then equally the wholesome jellies
Were squeezed from olive trees and bellies,
Nor suits of trespass did they fear.

A fragrant bank of strawberries,
25 Diapered<sup>o</sup> with violet's eyes,
Was table, tablecloth, and fare;

No palace to the clouds did swell,
Each humble princess then did dwell
30 In the piazza<sup>5</sup> of her hair.

Both broken faith and th' cause of it,
All-damning gold, was damned to th' pit;
Their troth, sealed with a clasp and kiss,
Lasted until that extreme day
35 In which they smiled their souls away,
And, in each other, breathed new bliss.

Because no fault, there was no tear;
No groan did grate the granting ear,
No false foul breath their del'cate smell:
40 No serpent kiss poisoned the taste,
Each touch was naturally chaste,
And their mere sense a miracle.

Naked as their own innocence,
And unembroidered from offense<sup>6</sup>
45 They went, above poor riches, gay;
On softer than the cygnet's<sup>o</sup> down,
In beds they tumbled of their own;
For each within the other lay.

Thus did they live; thus did they love,
Repeating only joys above;
50 And angels were, but with clothes on,
Which they would put off cheerfully,
To bathe them in the galaxy,<sup>o</sup>
Then gird them with the heavenly zone.<sup>7</sup>

55 Now, Chloris, miserably crave<sup>o</sup>
The offered bliss you would not have,
Which evermore I must deny,
Whilst ravished with these noble dreams

And crownèd with mine own soft beams,
Enjoying of my self I lie.

60

1659

Endnotes

- Note 1: The Golden Age, described in Ovid's Metamorphoses.Return to reference 1
- Note 2: Hebrew, supposed to be the original human language, is read from right to left; we have reversed this.Return to reference 2
- Note 3: Backward, in reverse. The term also has musical connotations, perhaps referring here to a pattern of bell ringing.Return to reference 3
- Note 4: Passion. Compliments in the Golden Age were understood as ardent propositions.Return to reference 4
- Note 5: Arcade, hence an artful structure.Return to reference 5
- Note 6: That is, not ornamented to hide an offense.Return to reference 6
- Note 7: The zodiac of stars.Return to reference 7

Notes

- °: without preferenceReturn to reference °
- °: decorated, dappledReturn to reference °
- °: young swanReturn to reference °
- °: the Milky WayReturn to reference °
- °: begReturn to reference °

LUCY HUTCHINSON

1620–1681

Lucy Aspley was born in 1620 in the Tower of London, where her father was lieutenant. In a short autobiographical fragment, Hutchinson writes that her “genius was quite averse” from everything but her “book.” Hutchinson is best known for her Memoirs of the Life of Colonel Hutchinson, an account of the Civil Wars, particularly in Nottinghamshire, where her husband was governor of a parliamentary garrison. But she was also a poet, and the first person to translate Lucretius’s De rerum natura (On the Nature of Things) from Latin into English. Hutchinson also wrote a parody of the poet Edmund Waller’s panegyric to Oliver Cromwell, twenty-three elegies, and an epic poem on Genesis titled Order and Disorder. The first five cantos of the epic appeared anonymously in print in 1679; a manuscript of twenty cantos dating from the 1660s survives in the papers of Hutchinson’s cousin Anne Wilmot, Countess of Rochester, mother of the libertine poet John Wilmot, Earl of Rochester.

Hutchinson married John Hutchinson in 1638, and their estate in Owthorpe, Nottinghamshire became a significant political center even before the Civil Wars. Paired portraits by Robert Walker dating from the late 1640s or early 1650s show Lucy Hutchinson holding a laurel wreath, the emblem of poetic achievement, and Colonel Hutchinson wearing armor. Their complementary skills—hers with the pen, his with the sword—were central to their defense of a godly republic, voluntary Protestant congregations, and a heightened role for the gentry (as opposed to an oligarchic nobility) in political governance.

Hutchinson worked on her translation of Lucretius in the 1650s. While Hutchinson expressed concern about the poem's "Atheisms & impieties," she nonetheless gave a presentation copy of her translation to Arthur Annesley, Earl of Anglesey, sometime protector of the godly, and friend of John Milton. After the Restoration, Hutchinson saved her husband's life by forging a letter of recantation. The Hutchinsons lived at Owthorpe until John was arrested in 1663 for his alleged involvement in an uprising against Charles II. Following his death in prison, Hutchinson wrote her vindictory Memoirs, as well as a series of elegies expressing her grief and longing for her dead husband, her theological and political beliefs, and her refusal to capitulate to the Restoration regime. The elegy included here, "To the Garden at Owthorpe," uses the conventions of the country house poem both to mourn John Hutchinson and to celebrate the forms of order to which they had dedicated their lives.

Hutchinson's invocation of an explicitly Christian muse in Order and Disorder reflects her belief in the divine order, or "stupendous Providence," that will ultimately vindicate the "little Church" against "the World's larger State." While the Lucretian ideas Hutchinson officially rejects in the preface to Order and Disorder certainly inform the poem's account of creation, the scriptural references in its margins make its primary intertext clear. (Those references have been omitted here.) Presented in its entirety below, canto 5 offers an account of the Fall that is particularly attentive to the punishment meted out to women in Genesis 3:16; Hutchinson even occasionally writes in the collective voice of women, looking forward to a time when "we shall trample on the serpent's head" (emphasis added).

Lucy Hutchinson. This portrait by Robert Walker features Hutchinson with a laurel wreath in her lap. It was paired with a painting of her husband, Colonel John Hutchinson, in armor.

---

From De rerum natura<sup>1</sup>

From Book I

* * *

250 But since we now eternal matter<sup>o</sup> find,<sup>2</sup>
And principles<sup>o</sup> with different links combined,<sup>o</sup>
Each body,<sup>o</sup> while it equal strength retains
To its composure,<sup>o</sup> only firm remains.
Thus nothing into nothing turns, but so
Disjoined all back to their first bodies go.
255 Further when the paternal heaven powers
On the great mother earth engendering<sup>o</sup> showers
They perish in her womb, but thence comes out
The shining blade, plants grow, green branches sprout,
Thence doth she both wild beasts and mankind
260 nourish,
And thence with growing youth great cities flourish.
Thence do new birds the shady groves supply.
Hence while the herd in their rich pastures lie
And on rank<sup>o</sup> grass their weary limbs repose
White milk from their extended udders flows.
265 Hence sportful younglings<sup>o</sup> in the grounds we find Helping their weak joints with their vigorous mind.

Thus nothing perisheth that to our eyes
Appears, for nature makes new creatures<sup>o</sup> rise
From those which were dissolved,<sup>o</sup> and all that live 270 Their beings out of others' deaths receive.
Since things are not of nothing made, I've taught
They cannot be again to nothing brought.

* * *

From Book II

* * *

1055

*The reason of this world may persuade us
there are more worlds springing from the same causes*<sup>5</sup>

What greater miracle can mortals frame
Then the pure azure sky, the glorious flame
Of every star, which wanders there, the bright
Orb of the moon, the sun's refulgent<sup>o</sup> light,
Which were they yet unknown, how would men gaze
On such strange objects, how would they amaze
The sense of vulgar<sup>o</sup> men, who scarce would dare
To credit that such things in nature were,
Who now cloyed<sup>o</sup> with the frequent sight despise
The glorious view of the bright arched skies.
No longer then, with strangeness terrified,
Let reason be your thoughts access denied;<sup>3</sup>
But with strict judgment weigh the whole dispute
And if't be true assent, if not confute.<sup>o</sup>

Here then the mind enquires, by reason's
light,
Since space<sup>4</sup> beyond the world is infinite,
What those vast regions are, what they can show,
Where the free mind desires so much to go?

1650s

* * *

1996

Endnotes

- Note 1: Hutchinson was the first person to translate Lucretius's De rerum natura (On the Nature of Things) into English.Return to reference 1
